Or the leader may begin by asking a question of some one, and the person answering correctly asks the next question of anyone she pleases.

Try it and have some live meetings!

"Quiz" Popular With W. C. T. U. Workers

Below are statements of some of our leaders about the "Quiz":

I think the "Quiz" will be very helpful, especially to local presidents, and next month I plan to call attention to it and urge the unions to use it at their regular meetings. New York will do its best to increase its subscription list for we know full well the value of the paper. —MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, president New York W. C. T. U.

I think the "Quiz" excellent and shall doubtless recommend it to the unions of our state.—MRS. KATHARINE L. STEVENSON, President Massachusetts W. C. T. U.

I think the "UNION SIGNAL Quiz" is fine. We are going to adopt it in our meetings, and I believe it will stimulate interest in the paper and the cause for which it stands. I shall call attention to the "Quiz" in my next letter to the White Ribbon Journal.—MRS. MARY H. ERSKINE, Mitchell, South Dakota.

I am writing this morning especially to thank you for the "Quiz" you have had of late. I do hope it will be continued. It is so good thus to clinch what one has read. I, who read from cover to cover, like to examine myself to see if I remember what I have read the previous week. The "Quiz" is especially good for unions whose leaders are new to the work. I read THE UNION SIGNAL, fountain pen in hand, and my numbers show many marks which help me when I need material for various meetings.—MRS. D. C. ROBERTS, Cocoanut Grove, Florida.

CAMPAIGN YARNS

A pertinent illustration is oftentimes a most convincing argument

PROHIBIT THE SNAKE FROM BITING

A constituent wrote to Lieutenant-Governor Morgan, of Kansas, during the recent session of the legislature of that state, indignantly protesting against the "bone-dry" bill then pending, says the Christian Science Monitor. "What will we do if this measure is passed, in case of snake bite?" the letter inquired. "I have yours," wrote the lieutenant-governor by return mail, "and I fully agree with you that the contingency to which you refer calls for my earnest attention. Let me assure you that it will have my most serious thought. In fact, I am now considering a measure which is intended to prohibit snakes from biting."

HE WOULD PAY GEORGE'S PART

The necessity of raising money for the expense of paving a city already overburdened with taxes pressed hard upon a certain community about to enter a prohibition campaign. A citizen asked of one of his fellow citizens, "If we do away with the saloon, who is going to pay for the improvement of the streets of our city." The answer was prompt: "My dear brother, I have only one boy of whom I am intensely fond and for whom his mother would give her life. If you want to say to me that my George must stand the chance of becoming a common drunkard in order that this city may get the money with which to pave its streets, you just tell me now how much George's part is and I will give you a check for it, but SAVE ME THE BOY."

INFORMING THE PUBLISHERS OF LIFE

The demoralizing effects on a newspaper of liquor advertising is illustrated in the case of Life. Since the passage in various states of anti-liquor advertising laws this periodical has issued two editions, the regular and the "dry state." In the latter edition the space which in the regular edition is given to liquor advertising contains the following curiosity stimulator: "Are you curious to know what is in this space in the regular edition of Life? We cannot tell you here. It is against the law." This violation of the spirit of the prohibitory law of the territory into which the publication goes is a challenge to every law-abiding citizen, and we hope the publishers of Life have heard from many of them. One of these protests comes to us through the Evanston News-Index, and if the consciences of the publishers and editors of Life have not entirely atrophied, they must have been touched by the pathos of the following letter, prompted by the advertisement:

"When I open the pages of Life the first advertisement my eyes rest upon begins, 'Are you curious to know what is in this space in the regular edition of Life? We can not tell you here. It's against the law in this state.'

"I am not curious; I know.

"For sixteen drab years I was the wife of a drunkard. We are childless. I gave birth to one living child that died in infancy; then came one stillborn, and after that years of suffering. I have heard my husband rave like a madman, drivel like an idiot. I have known hunger; have felt the blow of a drunkard's fury.

"Six years ago a change came; he drinks no longer, and is today a sober man.

"You offer a prize of $500 for a criticism of Life. Not for $5,000 would I forego the satisfaction of telling you how I loathe a magazine that will publish a liquor advertisement. Not for $5,000,000 would I go back to the day when your bold headlines, 'Are you curious?' would have the power to lure my husband on to drink, drink, drink.

"AN ALABAMA WOMAN."

Susanna Cocroft's
Physical Culture for the Face

will make the outline of your face, neck and chin graceful—relieve wrinkles, sagging muscles and facial blemishes—make your skin clear and soft, your eyes bright. You can make your hair glossy and abundant—your hands smooth and white—your feet comfortable, through definite directions which will take only a few minutes at home each day.

Write for information and our free booklet giving many valuable hints.

Grace-Mildred Culture Course
Dept. 16, 624 So. Michigan Blvd. Chicago

ENGLAND'S HERO AFRAID OF DRINK!

We are sometimes taunted with being afraid of a little alcoholic drink. No one had more courage than the Duke of Wellington, a man who brought more luster on the flag of England than any other man who has ever lived, and yet he was afraid of drink. On one occasion, when he was marching his victorious army across the Peninsula, he halted the whole army. Why? Simply because news had been brought to him that an immense store of Spanish wine lay directly in his line of march. He halted the whole victorious British army until he had sent on his sappers to blow every single barrel to pieces. He was not a coward, he was not afraid; he saw the danger; he knew the foul, fascinating power of this drug upon both mind and body, and he took measures against his soldiers being exposed to temptations.—From Canon Wilberforce in the Christian Herald.

$2.50 PER DAY SALARY PAID ONE PERSON in each town to distribute FREE circulars, and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring. Non-alcoholic. Big demand, steadily increasing. J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7G, E. Harrison St., Chicago.

HELP TO INFORM YOUR VOTERS
by mailing to each in a follow-up system
THE PROSPERITY POST CARDS

What Every Merchant Knows.
Of Interest to Wage Earners.
Of Interest to Taxpayers.
Of Interest to Bankers.
Prosperity Statistics.

This series of post cards has been prepared in English, German, Italian, Norwegian, Polish, Spanish, and Swedish.

Price, per dozen, 15 cents; per hundred, $1.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., APRIL 26, 1917 | No. 17

IMPERATIVE NEED OF WAR PROHIBITION MEASURE

TELEGRAPH PRESIDENT WILSON

The following call has been sent out to all state W. C. T. U. presidents by the National W. C. T. U. president and National W. C. T. U. Legislative superintendent:

"Please wire immediately in behalf of state membership to President Wilson, urging prohibition of the liquor traffic as a war emergency measure. Emphasize mothers' appeal for sons. Telegraph city unions; write all local unions, urging thousands of immediate telegrams to President Wilson from fathers and mothers and influential citizens. Prompt action imperative.

"ANNA A. GORDON, President National W. C. T. U.

"MARGARET D. ELLIS, Legislative Superintendent National W. C. T. U."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

PRESIDENT WILSON AND HIS CABINET CONSIDERING WAR PROHIBITION
THOUSANDS OF TELEGRAMS SHOULD GO TO THE PRESIDENT AT ONCE

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

The great war revenue bill has become a verity. The House on April 14, after two days' discussion, by a vote of 388 to 2 (41 not voting), declared for a $7,000,000,000 bond issue to finance the war. The Senate, after only seven hours' discussion in which there was no note of protest, by a vote of 88 to 0, authorized this, the biggest war chest in all history. Of this vast amount, $3,000,000,000 will be loaned to the allies and will become immediately available for their use. All the twelve Senators absent, most of them because of illness, recorded themselves in favor of the proposed measure. Few Senators participated in the discussion, which was totally devoid of partisan expression.

During the discussion in the House, it was brought to the attention of members that one hundred and forty years ago, when our credit was gone and it cost $150 of American currency to buy a bushel of corn and $2,000 to buy a suit of clothes, France loaned to the impoverished young republic of the western world millions for her treasury at the request of Benjamin Franklin, without any discussion and without any debate. She also sent her fleet and her armies, which led to the surrender of Yorktown and to the end of the long war. Now America has the opportunity to reciprocate and is very anxious to do so.

The big business interests of the country, as represented by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, have pledged their co-operation and aid in floating the $7,000,000,000 bond issue. The Bureau of Printing and Engraving is all ready for the command of Uncle Sam to "go ahead" with the gigantic task of printing these bonds. In normal times the printing of the 16,000,000 sheets necessitated by the issue would call for six months' work by nine hundred people. Each sheet requires five printings. Now, however, but three months are expected to elapse before the completion of the big piece of work. One thousand employes will be working in two shifts of five hundred each.

Proposal Carried at Democratic Caucus to Prohibit Sale and Manufacture of Liquor During War

Last evening, Thursday, April 19, the Democrats of the House held a caucus, during which Representative Decker of Missouri introduced a resolution providing for the consideration of a measure to authorize the President of the United States to prohibit the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquor during the war. Amid great applause, this proposal was carried by a vote of 87 to 60. At this juncture, the New York Democrats began to protest, declaring they would not be bound by such action. After a heated discussion, Chairman Kitchin proposed a resolution that only legislation recommended by the President be taken up at this special session; if the President indicated his willingness for such prohibitive legislation as a war measure, it would then be considered.

Representative Smith of New York, who was secretary to Tammany Hall before he was elected to Congress a short time ago, introduced as his first bill one to prohibit the sale of liquor to any soldier, sailor, or marine while on duty, or in uniform.

Representative Hayden of Arizona introduced a bill to prohibit the using of any corn, wheat, barley, or other grain or material capable of being manufactured into, or used for food, for making or producing intoxicating liquor during the war.

Senator Gronna of North Dakota also introduced in the Senate a bill to conserve the agricultural food products and to prohibit their manufacture into alcoholic liquor.

Senator Jones of Seattle, Wash., introduced a bill to prohibit the supplying of intoxicating liquors to any place whatsoever that is being used as a training station, or the sale to any officer or man in uniform, or any one in the employ of the Army or Navy.

Another bill introduced is to prohibit the keeping or setting up of houses of ill-fame within ten miles of any military camp, fort, post, etc., during the war.

Representative Howard of Georgia introduced a bill for absolute prohibition during the war and to give the President authority to stop the manufacture and sale of liquor during that period of time.

CAUCUS LEAVES QUESTION OF WAR PROHIBITION IN HANDS OF PRESIDENT AND CABINET

Latest word received from the Capitol declares that the question of prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicants as a war measure has by action of caucus, been left in the hands of the President and his Cabinet. There should be thousands of telegrams from fathers and mothers to the President demanding protection from the saloon and the brothel for their sons and other boys who have enlisted or may enlist to fight for their country.

War Prohibition Would Close 1,332 Breweries and 605 Distilleries

According to Federal reports for the fiscal year 1916, "war prohibition" would mean the closing of 1,332 breweries and 605 distilleries. The National Defense Council, made up of six members of the Cabinet, believes, it is reported, more and more strongly that the nation's imperative need is to conserve the 6,000,000,000 pounds of food-stuffs that now go into the manufacture of liquor.

Mr. Gillett of Massachusetts has reintroduced his bill to prohibit the exportation of rum, or other intoxicants, to Africa.

The new Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. Gerry, is owner of a fine steam yacht that he desires to present to the Navy Department for the duration of the war. When it came to entering into an agreement with the Department it was found that because of his being a United States' Senator, he was precluded by statute from doing this and that, if he allowed the government to take the yacht, he would be guilty of a felony. In consequence, a separate bill was introduced in the Senate, permitting Senator Gerry to enter into an agreement with the Secretary of the Navy for the use of the yacht during the war.

The Congressional Directory for the Sixty-fifth Congress is just at hand. It is very interesting, as it contains the autobiography of many Senators and Representatives. Some give their own age and sometimes the age of their parents and grandparents and enter into minute details; for instance, one member states that he was "born in a storm and on Friday." The most concise and clearest record of the entire five hundred is that of Jeannette Rankin, who says concerning herself, "Jeannette Rankin, Republican, Missoula." Wise woman!

National Legislative Council Holds First Meeting.

The National Legislative Council held its first meeting at Hotel Lafayette, Washington, D. C., Tuesday, April 17. This was certainly a remarkable gathering. Twenty temperance, reform and church representatives were present and, during the entire day, discussed and planned legislative matters. The spirit of unanimity was truly delightful. Here were all shades of religious belief, from the Quaker to the Roman Catholic. There were all sorts and kinds of temperance advocates, forming a group of forty men and women, strong and earnest, each with a vision of a blessed future, when this land of ours, the land we "love the most," may be free from the curse of alcohol, all personal preferences being put aside in the spirit of brotherly kindness. It was good to be there. Miss Gordon and Mrs. Munns came on from Evanston to attend, as did Mrs. Boole from New York and Mrs. Yost from West Virginia. Rev. Howard Russell was elected chairman, Miss Gordon vice chairman, and D. Leigh Colvin, secretary. The wise words uttered that day by these brave men and women would make most interesting reading. Among those present were Daniel Poling, Joshua Levering, Clinton Howard, Dr. Crafts, and Wayne Wheeler who straightened out the legal tangles, and many others equally well known.

Resolutions relating to prohibition as an emergency war measure were presented. A committee on Legislation was appointed, Hon. William S. Bennet of New York, chairman; also a committee on an address to Congress; one on an address to the people; one on a statement to the press and one on organization.

During the luncheon hour, we were surprised and delighted to have Hon. William Jennings Bryan come in. He spoke to us of the great opportunity opening up along temperance lines and of the victories already achieved.

It was a day of days and one long to be remembered. In the evening the general officers of the District W. C. T. U. met at our headquarters to talk over with Miss Gordon, Mrs. Boole and Mrs. Munns, three general officers of the National W. C. T. U., plans for the National Convention, to be held here in December, 1917.

We have been requested to give a form of petition against an increase of tax on intoxicating liquor and suggest the following:

The undersigned, believing that the time has come for the government to dissolve partnership with the liquor traffic, are unalterably opposed to any increase of tax, directly or indirectly, on the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors for raising revenue for the Federal government.

National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, Washington, D. C., April 20, 1917

Michigan, Rhode Island, Nebraska and Nova Scotia Score Suffrage Victories

The women of Michigan and Rhode Island have been granted by their respective legislatures presidential suffrage; and a measure allowing the women of Nebraska to vote for all offices not specifically prohibited in the state constitution has passed the Nebraska legislature. Nova Scotia, which by unanimous vote has just given women full suffrage and the right to practice law, is the sixth Canadian province to enfranchise its women since January 1, 1916.

NEBRASKA PASSES "BONE DRY" MEASURE

Special Correspondence

Our legislature has finally passed a "bone dry" bill. The senate acted favorably on the measure at the forenoon session, April 18. With a few minor amendments it is the same bill the house passed some time ago, and which the senate attempted to defeat by attaching one hundred amendments. In that form the house would not accept it. A conference committee of six was then appointed, three from the house and three from the senate. Only one of the senate members concurred with the house members, who were in favor of a "bone dry" bill. An agreement of the majority of the conference committee was reached at the forenoon session, April 17, and the house voted favorably on the bill at the afternoon session with only four against it.

MAYOR GILL OF SEATTLE ACQUITTED OF BRIBERY CHARGES BROUGHT BY LIQUOR MEN

A recent instance of the desire of Seattle liquor interests to embarrass a city administration that is making prohibition prohibit was a suit brought by Logan and Fred Billingsley, former bootleggers, against Mayor Hiram C. Gill, Charles Beckingham, chief of police, and four city detectives. The charges were bribery in connection with the importation of liquor. The Federal jury at Seattle pronounced Mayor Gill and his brother officials not guilty.

ALL-NIGHT SALOONS OF NEW YORK CITY TO BE CLOSED FROM 1 TO 6 A. M. TILL WAR ENDS

Mayor Mitchel of New York City has issued a decree forbidding the sale of intoxicants between the hours of one and six a. m., beginning May 1. By the new rule Healy's, Reisenweber's, the Midnight Follies, the Cocoanut Grove and other places of this character will close at one o'clock instead of two as formerly, and all saloons and restaurants which have had all night licenses will close at one o'clock. Sixty-five licenses are said to have been affected.

"This action I have taken," the mayor's statement reads, "because our country is now engaged in war, and at such a time it would seem not only lacking in good taste, but in a proper sense of the present crisis, for these places to remain open for dancing and drinking as heretofore."

HONOR ROLL

—of—

PROHIBITION STATES AND TERRITORY AND DATE OF GOING INTO EFFECT

Maine			1851
Kansas			1880
North Dakota			1889
Oklahoma			1907
Georgia			1908
North Carolina			1909
Mississippi			1909
Tennessee			1909
West Virginia			1914
Alabama			1915
Arizona			1915
Virginia			1916
Colorado			1916
Oregon			1916
Washington			1916
Arkansas			1916
Iowa			1916
Idaho			1916
South Carolina			1916
Nebraska	*May	1,	1917
South Dakota	*July	1,	1917
Utah	†Aug.	1,	1917
Dist. of Columbia	†Nov.	1,	1917
Alaska	†Jan.	1,	1918
Indiana	†April	2,	1918
Michigan	*April	30,	1918
Montana	*Dec.	31,	1918
New Hampshire	†May	1,	1918

*Enacted 1916. †Enacted 1917.

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1917

Iowa†† Ohio New Mexico

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1918

Utah†† Missouri Florida
Minnesota Wyoming Nevada

††Now have statutory prohibition. Will vote on constitutional amendment.

ILLINOIS TOWNS OUTLAW THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

400 Saloons Put Out of Business

Following the example of Springfield, the state capital of Illinois, which on April 3 voted out the saloons of the city, at an election two weeks later fourteen wet cities and towns voted against the liquor traffic, the largest being Danville, the county seat of Vermilion county, which will lose sixty-eight saloons on May 1 when the prohibition law goes into effect. Other cities and towns, newly dry, are Andalusia, Auburn, Effingham, Fairfield, Harris, Henry, Johnston City, Lacon, Lebanon, Litchfield, Morris, White Ash and Wamac. As a result of the two April elections it is estimated that over 400 saloons have been put out of business in Illinois.

VERMONT AIMS A BLOW AT SALE OF LIQUOR DURING THE WAR

Governor Graham of Vermont has signed the bill preventing the carrying away of liquor, sold in bottles, from the place of purchase during the time the United States is at war or is threatened with war.

GENERAL PERSHING IN FAVOR OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION

At a dinner given by the citizens of San Antonio, Tex., in honor of Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, who was visiting there, Major-General John J. Pershing declared himself to be in favor of woman suffrage, and "if it means bringing national prohibition I am more in favor of it."

NEW YORK ASSEMBLY PASSES LOCAL OPTION BILL

By a vote of 85 to 58 the lower house of the New York legislature, on April 11, passed the Hill-Wheeler bill extending local option to the cities of the state. Advocates of the measure claim sufficient favorable votes in the senate to pass the bill.

Five cities of Long Island, New York, voted on the liquor question at the April 3 election. Shelter Island, Southold and Easthampton went wholly dry, closing thirty-three saloons and hotel bar rooms and one bottle house. Southampton, which includes Sag Harbor, voted out saloons and bottle houses, giving a majority of 7 votes against saloons and 88 against bottle houses. Drug store licenses and hotel licenses were retained. North Hempstead, the fifth town, voted to retain all liquor licenses.

NEW HAMPSHIRE THE TWENTY-SIXTH PROHIBITION STATE

MEASURE PRAYED THROUGH THE LEGISLATURE

ELLEN R. RICHARDSON, President New Hampshire W. C. T. U.

Praise the Lord who helped us, New Hampshire has gone dry! Congratulations are coming in from all over the state and the joy bells are ringing in our hearts for this wonderful victory, which is all the more remarkable because of the fact that our governor, while expressing his unqualified support of national prohibition, in his inaugural address plainly stated that he considered our present local option law satisfactory for the state. Both the president of the senate and the speaker of the house opposed state prohibition and favored the license law.

In the very beginning of the session the temperance men of the legislature were called together by Rev. J. H. Robbins, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, and organized to work for this bill which not only prohibits the sale, but also the manufacture of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes after May 1, 1918. While efforts have been made at every session of the legislature, since the local option law was enacted in 1903, to repeal the measure, never before has there been such wide-spread interest in any effort for state prohibition as was shown this year in the Lewis bill. Prominent business men from various parts of the state came to the hearings which were held before the house committee for several weeks in February and told of the effects of the saloon upon their employes. A largely attended public hearing was held in legislative hall, February 27, addressed by Hon. Wayne B. Wheeler and others.

The first vote in the house, on March 21, was on the substitution of the report of the minority of the liquor laws committee, "inexpedient to legislate," for the report of the majority, "ought to pass." The motion to substitute was lost by a vote of 192 to 172 and the New Hampshire legislature, for the first time since the enactment of the license law, went on record in favor of state-wide prohibition.

As we listened to the roll-call and remembered the vote two years ago when a majority of 82 was registered against state-wide prohibition a prayer of thanksgiving went up for the change in public sentiment.

The old Granite State still has some "men to match her mountains" and, thank God, they were in the majority in the 1917 legislature. It is impossible to adequately express our appreciation of the efforts of the leaders in the house, Rev. J. S. Lewis of Antrim, who introduced the bill, and Rev. J. T. Alton of Lincoln. Many others spoke for the bill and helped in its passage, but these two men of God not only prayed fervently and pleaded earnestly, but worked unceasingly throughout the session.

At the close of the roll-call surprise and consternation were evident in the forces opposed to the bill. A motion to reconsider at some future time was immediately put. Mr. Lewis made the counter motion that it be reconsidered NOW, if at all, and the motion to reconsider was lost by an emphatic NO. The bill was then referred to the appropriation committee, as it provides for a state commissioner of law enforcement to be appointed by the governor, compensation to be paid by the state. In one week it was reported back to the house without recommendation. Then the liquor interests moved it be indefinitely postponed. This was voted down by another roll-call, and the bill put on a third reading and passed by a viva voce vote, with only a little tremolo of nays when the question was put. Later two hearings were held before the senate committee on revision of statutes. At that time the senate chamber was crowded, many standing. A large delegation from Portsmouth was present to oppose the bill and most of the cities sent speakers for the same purpose. It was fully expected the measure would be voted upon in the senate the following day, but it did not come up until a week later. On April 11, while the state W. C. T. U. executive committee was in session in Manchester, the vote was taken. At the noontide service every member of the board voiced a prayer for our senators who were then debating this momentous question. On our return to the parlor after luncheon the joyful news was received from Concord, "The senate has passed the Lewis prohibition bill, 14 to 9." We sprang to our feet and tried to sing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow" but, as we realized all that this means to New Hampshire, the state we love so well, and for which some of us have worked the larger part of our lives, our voices trembled, especially as we remembered "ye heavenly host" who laid the foundation, who sowed the seed now bearing fruitage. Again prayer was voiced, this time in thanksgiving for the glorious victory, with a petition that we may be more faithful co-workers with Him.

If ever a bill was prayed through a legislature, this measure was. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union not only sent in petitions, but from the very beginning of the legislative session held many special prayer services. Concord union, after a special prayer service, went in a body to a hearing before the committee. From churches all over the state petitions have been sent in and special prayer has been offered. Pastors, prominent business men, and white ribboners from many towns crowded committee rooms and the galleries when this important bill was under consideration. The temperance forces are greatly indebted to Senator Martin who led the successful fight in the senate, making one of the finest speeches for state prohibition ever delivered before a legislative body.

The leading daily of New Hampshire, The Manchester Union, attributes this remarkable victory, aside from comprising a reflex of the dry sentiment which is sweeping the country, to two influences: The lesser of these is the recent enactment of the Reed amendment to the Federal postoffice bill, and the major cause, the imminence of war. While both were, no doubt, a great help to New Hampshire in the struggle for emancipation from the bondage of the licensed liquor traffic, and remind us that "All things work together for good," we feel that God has given us the victory. He has heard our supplications, to Him be all the glory.

THE BIG LEAGUE SEASON OPENS WITH A BANG

—Manchester (N. H.) Union

Safe!

DRINKING OFFICIALS CLASSIFIED AS TRAITORS

"Men in public life who are boozers are traitors to their constituencies," said Rev. J. D. McGuire, at the Father Matthew anniversary celebration of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union in Chicago recently. "In our country," said Rev. J. D. Maguire, who is spiritual director of the temperance society named, "when we elect a man to office we take him into partnership for the faithful performance of official duties. When the office holder indulges in spirituous liquors, he encroaches on the partnership by endangering his faculties. This makes him a traitor to his constituency. If he fails as a citizen, he fails as a father. When he lays his affection aside and drinks, he disrupts his home."

PROHIBITION BILL PASSES HAWAIIAN SENATE

A measure submitting the question of prohibition to a vote of the people has passed the senate of the Ninth legislature of Hawaii.

"TOPERS" MADE ALASKA DRY

Prohibition is bound to prove a boon to the Alaskan people, is the statement of George J. Love, United States Commissioner of Valdez, Alaska, as quoted in a Portland paper. It was the votes of many "topers" that swung the election for the drys, he claims.

TEMPORARY PROHIBITION IN DENMARK

Temporary prohibition is in force in Denmark, it is reported, pending the decision of the government as to the best method for dealing with the liquor traffic. All holders of stocks of spirits and spirituous liquors have been asked to report the amount of such stock on hand.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION AS A WAR MEASURE

OPINIONS OF PROMINENT PEOPLE CONCERNING IT

AN AID TO GOOD GOVERNMENT

THOMAS E. CAMPBELL, Governor of Arizona

I am satisfied there is urgent need for the passage by Congress of a nation-wide prohibition measure to govern the nation during the period of the present war.

A NECESSARY CONSERVATION MEASURE

SIDNEY J. CATTS, Governor of Florida

There is urgent need for a nation-wide prohibitory law as a war measure and I hope that it will be passed by Congress. The "old countries" which have been forced to cut out alcoholic stimulants from the army provide a precedent whereby we can be guided.

REQUISITE FOR EITHER WAR OR PEACE

THEODORE G. BILBO, Governor of Mississippi

I consider that there is urgent need for the passage by Congress of a nation-wide prohibitory law as a war measure. Such a law would be not only a good war measure but also a necessary peace measure. I am in favor of national prohibition and the sooner we get it the better off we will be, as individuals and as a nation.

PROHIBITION GREATEST ECONOMIC PRINCIPLE KNOWN

MOSES ALEXANDER, Governor of Idaho

The experience of Idaho has demonstrated that the greatest economic principle ever adopted is prohibition of the liquor traffic; all government authorities, as well as all war experts, agree that during the war upon which we have just been forced to enter, there will be the utmost need for the application of every economic device in order to insure the success of our armies and in order to provide food for our allies. It therefore seems to me that absolute prohibition of the liquor traffic is a necessity.

REMOVE TEMPTATION FROM OUR HUSBANDS AND SONS

CATHERINE W. McCULLOCH

When our husbands and sons go to war we women want to know that the temptation of intoxicating liquors is removed from them. We who do not go will need all our strength for great industrial and agricultural burdens which must be shouldered and our efficiency must not be lessened by the use of liquors. We shall need so much of the grains and fruits that none can safely be wasted in the distillery and the brewery. We shall need our greatest spiritual and mental strength to surmount the terrors, the agonies, the destruction which accompany war, and if we in the army or at home are ordained to death by our government, let us die sober. We need a national prohibitory law.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION A NATIONAL IMPERATIVE

DANIEL A. POLING, in Christian Endeavor World

Stop this waste! Hard-driven commerce needs these vast industries, their buildings, and their equipment!

Stop this waste! The country needs the labor so poorly employed.

Stop this waste! Society must have released the inspectors, the secret agents, the officers of the law engaged in holding back the crime flood of this traffic.

Stop this waste of raw material and money.

Stop this waste of lives.

Again we say it: "America needs every man at his best today. The liquor traffic will give to the armies of our national progress trembling limbs, blinded eyes, deafened ears, palsied arms, poverty of purse and of soul, hearts that are too frail to pump the blood of mighty deeds."

National prohibition is a national imperative.

The challenge of the hour is the challenge of highest patriotism.

GREATEST VICTORY FOR MANKIND

FRANK L. HOUX, Acting Governor, Wyoming

I consider that there is urgent need for the passage by Congress of a nation-wide prohibitory law as a war measure. I emphatically believe that it would be one step towards not only victory for the people in the war, but the greatest victory for mankind that I can conceive.

ACTION OF EUROPEAN COUNTRIES A SAFE PRECEDENT

HARRY OLSEN, Judge Municipal Court, Chicago

"Many of the European nations which at peace interfered scarcely at all with the sale of intoxicating beverages, at war have found it advisable to prohibit or restrict it," said Judge Harry Olsen, of the Municipal court of Chicago, in reply to an inquiry as to his position. "Many of the states of the union at peace have found it advisable to prohibit such sale. Now, when the nation is at war, the government should not hesitate to follow the example of some of the European nations."

FROM A BANKER'S VIEWPOINT

FRANK A. VANDERLIP, President National City Bank of New York, in Chicago Herald

"I believe that if we really recognized the test that this country is facing; if we were in the heroic mood to meet it properly, we would keep our grain out of the brewery and distillery. By saving the grain we would be adding more to our national efficiency than by any other thing we could do.

"I would like to see complete national prohibition. If that is one outcome of the war we can well afford to suffer a great deal to bring it about."

PROHIBITION A VITAL CONSERVATION MEASURE

GIFFORD PINCHOT

"Booze or bread—which?"

Gifford Pinchot, conservationist, put this question after he had addressed an audience of clubwomen which met at the New Century Club of Philadelphia, last week, to discuss means to eliminate waste in the nation's food consumption, says the North American of that city.

"Last year," he said, "we produced 638,000,000 bushels of wheat. In the same year the distilleries of the United States used 600,000,000 bushels of all grains.

"This is the simple question that confronts us. Do we want booze or bread?"

The address, delivered before the Monday Conference, representing more than seventy women's clubs, was an appeal for economy on the part of the housewife and co-operation with the farmer.

The farmer will do his part to produce more food, said Mr. Pinchot, but the housewife must do her part toward eliminating waste. One of the first wastes to be eliminated, he added, is the use of the nation's cereal food for making the nation drunk.

"Rye, barley and other grains that are now selling at high prices," he said, "are needed as food. We are short of food. We shall be shorter still unless we take proper and vigorous action. Shall we, therefore, keep on turning into drink an amount of grain almost the equivalent of the nation's wheat crop?"

PROHIBITION FOR PREPAREDNESS

ELIZABETH TILTON in The Survey

Social workers, you must all know what liquor means in war time—leakage in health, leakage in efficiency, more prostitution and consequently more disease. I have just come from making a survey of four cities under prohibition, Charleston, Richmond, Columbia and Savannah. Forced against their will to go dry, these cities are now making such a remarkable showing in reduction of wreckage that, with the exception of Charleston, they are strong for prohibition.

But I found women distressed that their boys were to be ordered North into wet states. "The North is full of preparedness talk, but does it really think hundreds of open saloons make for preparedness?" was their question to me.

Social workers of dry states, you should ask the governors of the twenty-six dry states to call on the twenty-two wet states to close the saloons.

Social workers of wet states, you should not lose a minute in demanding that your state immediately close its saloons.

Prohibition in war time is a well-proven bit of preparedness. It means more health, more efficiency, less prostitution in the field and infinitely better conditions in the home.

Up to now you have not really done your part against the saloon. But now is your great chance. I beg of you to be leaders in prohibition preparedness.

BOOZE OR BREAD?

America's "Big Push" for Food May Wipe Out Her Breweries and Distilleries

"'Booze or bread?' is the issue that has been put squarely up to the people and government of the United States by the partial failure of the winter wheat crop and the shortage of labor for the planting of spring wheat." This is the statement of Louis J. Kolb, head of the Kolb Bakery Company of Philadelphia, one of the largest distributors of bread in the country.

Mr. Kolb, who is an authority on grain conditions throughout the country, made this statement, in an interview, to a representative of the North American of Philadelphia on the threatened shortage of wheat.

"Passing all the arguments against booze as a destroyer of health and homes," said Mr. Kolb, "the best thing that can be said for it is that it is a luxury. As such there is absolutely no comparison between the value of grain in rum and in bread to the nation.

"If there is any food value in rum, it is but a minute percentage of that in bread. Therefore, the nation is faced with the simple question of deciding whether it wants to run short of one of its most valuable staples of food, or do without a luxury during the life of the war."

PROHIBITION AS A WAR MEASURE

AROUSE TO THE PERILS OF A WET NATION AT WAR

DR. STEWART-COGILL of Philadelphia

"Preparedness From the Medical Side" is treated by Dr. Lida Stewart-Cogill, a prominent woman physician of Philadelphia, in the North American of that city. She says:

"Let us be both a sober and prepared nation NOW. A nation in peril of war should most certainly be a sober nation, because science has proved, as those who have kept in touch with the reports of laboratory research work know, that the use of alcohol, even in small amounts, impairs vision, memory, judgment, keenness, alertness—in other words, general acumen and efficiency. Moreover, users are more prone to disease and accident, and their resistance to fatigue is lessened. Therefore, if at any time, surely not in war time should there be allowed to exist a condition which plays so great a part in lessening the efficiency and increasing the expense of the nation.

"War is almost, if not already here. If we must fight in order to save our country and honor, let us keep ourselves in the best physical and mental condition possible, and, while preparing let us not neglect the most important part of the preparation, the passing of a bill by this Congress, now in session, favoring the abolishment of the manufacture of alcoholic beverages. Citizens of this great United States, I, as a physician, beg of you, arouse yourselves to the perils of a wet nation at war and demand the passage of such a bill.

"Let us insist that this be a 'bone dry' nation NOW. If war we must, then let us make it a short and a decisive one—by being at our highest point of efficiency."

"The grain that would be saved by closing the beer and whisky plants would be sufficient to feed the whole nation for a month," declared United States Senator Sheppard of Texas.

MAKE THE BREWERIES AND DISTILLERIES AN ASSET

"Enact prohibition for the war. Use the distilleries to make munition alcohol as a source of power fuel. Use the breweries to pack meat, to pack fruits, to make vinegar, ice, and serve other useful ends." This is the idea of Rev. Dr. Clarence True Wilson, general secretary of the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals of the M. E. church. Dr. Wilson argues that many thousands of young men, many of them from prohibition states, will be concentrated in mobilization camps, a large number of which will be in license territory.

"As in the past, we will see soldiers exploited by the breweries and saloons. There will be education in the vice of drinking. There will be drunkenness. There will be disease more fatal than German shells," Dr. Wilson contends.

MAKE THE COUNTRY SAFE FOR THE SOLDIERS

In the March number of the Unitarian World and Work, the monthly bulletin of the American Unitarian Association, the Alliance of Unitarian Women, Young People's Religious Union and the Unitarian Temperance Society, there appears the following statement:

"Should war come, which Heaven forbid, the saloons of the nation should be closed. Let every Unitarian living in a dry state ask his governor to demand that the boys of his state shall go only into dry states. The governors of the twenty-five states that have already voted dry could and should demand a dry nation during war time. Anything less is being thoroughly behind the times."

The Detroit (Mich.) Pastors' Union has passed a resolution asking the legislature to close all the saloons of Michigan by May 1, 1917, as a war measure, and calling upon Michigan Senators and Representatives in Congress to further the movement for the enactment of an immediate prohibition measure.

FOOD AND BEER SITUATION IN GREAT BRITAIN

A special correspondent of the Sun, New York, gives an illuminating view of the food and beer situation in Great Britain. A great campaign of economy is on and in the government's effort to conserve food supplies the beer business is very apt to get a black eye. England must have food but the experience of other nations demonstrates that she can live without intoxicating liquors. It is stated that the saving of grain effected by the recent order of Premier Lloyd George, which lopped off about 10,000,000 barrels of beer, is sufficient to provision the country for a month. Before the war England was making and using 36,000,000 barrels of beer a year and a corresponding quantity of spirits. Conversion into food of the grains used in the production of this vast output of intoxicants might easily mean England's victory in the war. Concerning the action taken by the government in curtailing the drink supply, and likewise the attitude of the people the Sun says:

"If Great Britain goes dry it will be the accomplishment of the submarines. It may well be doubted whether anything less than a prospect of actual food shortage would have induced the Government to take such a revolutionary step. Yet, powerful as is the liquor trade in this country and devoted as are the people to their distinguished personal right to drink its product, it is simply wonderful to observe with what equanimity the public regards the possibility of having its drink supply shut off.

"If it is necessary to win this war they will do without all of their drink and part of their food, and a good deal of other things that they had come to regard as necessaries of life. There is not the least notion of surrendering their purpose to win the war."

Campaign of Economy

In an effort to educate the people concerning the stupendous waste caused by drink a strenuous campaign is being conducted along economic lines. Says the Sun:

"All over the cities of the kingdom one is constantly stared in the face by huge posters announcing the amount of the annual drink bill and proclaiming that if this money were saved it would largely if not entirely pay for the war. The direct saving, assuming that it would really all be saving, would in fact pay about one-half the cost of the war on the present scale of expenditure. The prohibitionists, or abolitionists, as they are called here, declare that the indirect saving represented by the increased stocks of foodstuffs available, the utilization of plants, horses, human labor and everything else now devoted to the liquor business would represent the other half."

Notwithstanding all their power and influence the brewers are beginning to realize the possibility of their business falling into the discard and are holding conferences among themselves to discuss plans for pooling their issues, closing a large number of saloons and otherwise submitting to the restrictions proposed, in the hope that in this way they may prevent the government from taking over the business entirely or abolishing it completely. However, certain difficulties have to be faced by the brewers and not the least of these is the change in social conditions. Again we quote from the Sun:

"Meantime the reduced production and consumption of liquor is having a marked effect on social conditions. Convictions for drunkenness were reduced more than half during the past year as compared with previous years, and this has been to a considerable extent the reason why police forces in cities have been cut down without serious effect to the public safety. London in darkness might be expected to be a London full of crime and disorder, but as a matter of fact London in darkness sees less crime than it knew in the days when it was the brightest night spot on the map this side of Broadway."

A study of the following figures also presented by the Sun might well give basis for the remark that England's greatest enemy is strong drink. Had not John Barleycorn wielded the scepter Great Britain might ere this have closed the war and compelled peace with honor. May it not be possible that before she conquers foreign foes she must overcome the enemy at home? The figures give some indication of conditions:

"Figures on the convictions for drunkenness in London and forty other cities and towns in the kingdom with population exceeding 100,000 were recently presented in Parliament as follows:

	1913.	1914.	1915.	1916.
Men	119,000	115,000	88,000	53,000
Women	40,000	41,000	38,000	24,000
Total	159,000	156,000	126,000	77,000

"The total volume of absolute alcohol consumed during these years was approximately:

	Gallons.
1913	92,000,000
1914	89,000,000
1915	81,000,000
1916	73,000,000

"In a representative southern area, 40 per cent of the causes of drunkenness were due to beer, ale or stout, 43 per cent to spirits, 10 per cent to beer and spirits mixed, 4 per cent to other drinks, including wine."

Baby Week Procession —Baltimore Evening Sun

BABY WEEK CAMPAIGN

MAY 1-6

The Children's Bureau of the department of Labor has designated May 1-6 as Baby Week, with the hope of promoting in the United States the movement for conservation of human life. There have already appeared in The Union Signal plans and suggestions for the observance of the week. (See April 5, 1917, "The W. C. T. U. in the Baby Week Campaign," by Carolyn P. Lindsay, National superintendent Fairs and Open Air Meetings.)

On page 15 will be found a list of leaflets for Child Welfare Week. For other information write to the Children's Bureau of the Labor department of the Federal government for its bulletin on the subject. The Educational Exhibition Co., 26 Custom House St., Providence, R. I., has for rent or sale a great variety of exhibit material for Baby Week.

IF BABY COULD TALK HE WOULD SAY:

Do not kiss me on the mouth.

Do not let the sun shine in my eyes nor the wind fill them with dust.

Do not sneeze or cough in my face, for I may take cold; and that would be bad for me.

Do not expose me to whooping cough or measles or other catching diseases, or I may get sick and die.

Do not pick me up by the arms. Be careful how you handle me and lay me down.

Do not give me candy or other things which are not good for me.

Do not give me a dirty pacifier to suck nor allow me to suck my thumb, for it will spoil the shape of my mouth.

Do not rock me to sleep nor teach me other bad habits.

Do not take me to the motion-picture show nor keep me up nights, for it robs me of my sleep and makes me cross.

DO NOT DOSE ME WITH PATENT MEDICINES OR NASTY MIXTURES.

DO NOT GIVE ME WINE, BEER, OR WHISKY, COFFEE OR TEA, FOR I WANT TO KEEP WELL.

Do not jolt me nor trot me on your knee when I cry.

I want the right things to eat and I want my meals on time.

I want some pure cold water to drink between meals, for I get very thirsty.

Joseph Beaven Platt, grandson of Mrs. Margaret B. Platt, former president West Washington W. C. T. U.

I want a bath every day and plenty of clean clothes.

I want my own bed, a comfortable room with the windows open, and plenty of time for sleep, for I must have it in order to grow.

I want to be taken out of doors every day for the fresh air.

I want mother to love me and always be gentle with me.

I want to be a good baby.

—From Special Baby Week Bulletin of Kansas State Board of Health.

BABY WEEK PROGRAMS

Last year some communities celebrated the whole week; in others baby week lasted from one day to seven days. The seven-day programs usually ran about as follows: Flag day, baby Sunday, school day, fathers' day, outing day, visiting day, and birth-registration day. Baby Sabbath was also celebrated in many cities.

This general program was varied in some towns by a tag day; one featured a rural mothers' day, one a merchants' baby booster day, one a recognition day (when business houses put out flags and everyone interested was asked to wear a flower), and one had a baby button day. In North Dakota the general plan was to call flag day advertising day, and concentrate that day on letting everybody know what was coming. The program of a middle western city was: Baby Sunday, daddy's day, mother's day, the baby's day, home day, welfare day, parade day.

WHAT DOES THE BABY ASK OF YOU?

What does the baby ask of you,
  Passer-by in the street?
Only the gift of a thought from you,
Only the gift of a look from you
  At the road before his feet;
Is it smooth and clean and fit, say you,
  Fit for a baby's feet?

What does the baby say to you,
  You who pay no heed?
He begs for the right of living with you,
Begs for the help of a hand from you—
  What he begs is but his meed.
Will the hand and the help be ready from you,
  Serving the baby's need?

What does the baby give to you,
  Men whose vision is dim?
He gives you sun to lighten your way;
He gives you hope for each dark day;
  Have you paid your debt to him?
Have you smoothed his path and guided his way,
  Guarded and shielded him?

What does the baby keep for you—
  You whose need is vast?
He keeps faith and hope and joy for you,
Comfort and love and home for you
  In his tiny hand held fast.
Are you earning the gifts he is keeping for you,
  You who are going past?

(Dedicated to Baby Week, Washington, D. C.)

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under. THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston Illinois, April 26, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

Mrs. Margaret C. Munns, National treasurer, returned to National Headquarters Friday, April 20, from Washington, D. C., where with Miss Gordon, she has been for the past week in attendance upon a conference of the representatives of the allied temperance forces. Miss Gordon remains in Washington.

BABY WEEK A PATRIOTIC OCCASION

It is significant tbat the first day of Baby Week, May 1-6, in many communities is to be named Flag Day, and every household that is the proud possessor of a baby will display in window or over doorway a little American flag, telling to passersby the story, "Here lives a potential patriot, the conservation of whose health and welfare is of paramount importance to America." The object of Baby Week is to further a movement to remove all handicaps from the path of babies. It is an opportune time to call attention to the enormous loss of child life caused by the liquor evil. Alcoholism in either or both parents jeopardizes the physical and mental health of the offspring, and is almost certain to deprive them of proper home environment during the years of childhood and adolescence. Every boy and every girl has an inalienable right to be born into a home, a neighborhood and a nation that is free from the outstanding temptations of the liquor traffic and of commercialized vice. Let us work enthusiastically to make Baby Week Campaign a stimulator of thought along these lines, and thus help to give to all the little people of America a fair chance to grow to sober and virtuous manhood and womanhood.

WHAT CAN I DO TO HELP?

How most effectively to convert their patriotic enthusiasm into practical effort is the thought uppermost in the minds of American women today. Virtually every organization of women is diligently at work on some self-appointed task either in co-operation with the Red Cross Society or independently. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is fortunate in having certain departments especially organized and equipped for relief work, as well as for service in the utilizing of vacant land by cultivating food-producing plants, and for Americanization work among foreign-speaking women.

First and foremost, however, attention should be given to the imperative call of our National W. C. T. U. president to secure the sending by fathers, mothers and influential citizens of telegrams and letters to President Wilson, urging the enactment without delay of a prohibition law as a war emergency measure. It is fitting that "organized mother-love" should take the lead in these telegraphic petitions for the protection of the boys who are being recruited for the nation's defense, and sent to training camps and mobilization centers in license cities where unspeakable liquor and vice conditions surround them.

The work for soldiers, sailors and marines and for general relief, under Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, National W. C. T. U. superintendent, is from now on to be standardized by Red Cross rules. Every local union and every individual member of every local union will claim the privilege of having a part in this work. Among the enterprises to be carried on under the department are the installation of electric fans, the furnishing of fruit and delicacies for army base hospitals, social welfare work at army training camps and mobilization centers, and the serving of light refreshments to soldiers as they entrain.

Let every community and state study the conditions in its vicinity and adapt its service to the needs. It has been suggested that packages containing jellies, marmalade, grape juice, games, puzzles, recent magazines, scrap books of jokes, song books, "home papers for home troops," and the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL, would be acceptable. They should be sent, charges prepaid, to the nearest Army Depot Quartermaster, as follows:

Army Depot Quartermasters

Washington, D. C.	Boston, Mass.
Philadelphia, Pa.	New York City, N. Y.
Chicago, Ill.	St. Paul, Minn.
Omaha, Neb.	Jefferson, Ind.
Seattle, Wash.	San Francisco, Cal.
Kansas City, Mo.	Portland, Ore.
New Orleans, La.

It might be well for the W. C. T. U. in some communities to plan to get into personal touch in some distinctive way with troops when entraining, mobilizing, or in training camps. Recognition of military discipline demands, of course, that permission must always be obtained before anything of this nature is inaugurated. This is absolutely necessary. It is possible that in some communities the location of a rest room in the neighborhood of these temporary camps might be welcomed.

Thousands of comfort bags, which our white ribboners from long experience know so well how to make, are needed. The Illinois W. C. T. U., through Miss Helen L. Hood, president, is arranging to open a room in one of the large office buildings in Chicago, as a comfort bag clearing house. Material for the bags—khaki colored cloth cut according to Red Cross measurements—is to be given out to the women of the county and state, who may, if they desire, take it to their homes to make into bags. These bags are to be presented to soldiers stationed at Fort Sheridan, and the sailors at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, both a few miles north of Chicago. Fort Sheridan is to be one of the great training camps of the United States. On May 8, the two camps at that place, each having a capacity of 2,500, will be filled with soldiers.

Knit Your Patriotism Into Sweaters

Knitted sweaters, blankets, underwear, socks and handkerchiefs are acceptable to the boys who are responding to the call to the colors. In acknowledging a gift of articles of this kind sent recently to the Great Lakes Naval Training Station by a woman's organization, Captain W. A. Moffett of that station, said: "Some of these articles are being kept to be used permanently here. Most of them, however, are being retained by the men and will be taken to sea with them, where they will be of great use on board ship and when they are on exposed duty."

Where there is a Red Cross unit in a city, white ribboners will of course find it advisable to co-operate with it in the preparation of hospital supplies, and if there is no unit, get in communication with the nearest one in a neighboring city.

"Nail a Flag to Your Hoe"

In harmony with the suggestion of President Wilson and the Federal Agricultural Department, the W. C. T. U. has shown itself very alert in inaugurating and pushing plans for the cultivation of vacant lots. An official communication was published in last week's paper from Miss Lella M. Sewall, National superintendent of the Flower Mission and Relief department, urging white ribboners to "cultivate all vacant lots" in their towns and to interest the school children in such enterprises. We publish this week, on page 10, a telegraphic message to the same effect from Mrs. Lucia F. Additon, superintendent of the Temperance and Labor department. We note with interest that as a result of agitation by Mrs. Susan McWhirter Ostrom, National superintendent of the Press department, there is a probability that the grounds of the state house at Indianapolis will be converted into a model vegetable garden as a help to solving the problem of increased food production in that state.

It is certainly unnecessary to remind the thoughtful, patriotic women of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the appeal of President Wilson to all housewives to demonstrate their patriotism by eliminating all wastefulness and extravagance in their respective households, remembering that if "waste in times of peace is a sin, in this time of national stress it is a crime."

MEMBERSHIP WEEK—MAY 6-13

White ribboners in every state are planning for special meetings during the week of May 6-13 with the thought of increasing the membership of the W. C. T. U. For this purpose there has been prepared by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union a souvenir card, a reproduction of which appears on page 14 of this issue. One of these cards, tied with a dainty white ribbon, may be given to every new member as a souvenir. Orders for the cards, which are furnished at cost price, should be sent in promptly. In no more direct way can we help to secure National Constitutional Prohibition than by adding to the membership of our organization.

THE PRESIDENT'S APPEAL

PRESIDENT WILSON'S appeal to the various divisions of the great "service army" can be summarized thus:

To farmers: Increase the production of your land and co-operate in the sale and distribution of your products.

To men and boys: "Turn in hosts to the farms," to help cultivate and harvest the vast crops imperatively needed.

To middlemen: "Forego unusual profits" and organize and expedite shipments of supplies.

To railway men: See to it that there shall be no "obstruction of any kind, no inefficiency or slackened power" of the "arteries of the nation's life."

To merchants: Take for your motto, "Small profits and quick service."

To shipbuilders: Speed construction for ships, for "the life of the war depends upon you."

To miners: If you "slacken or fail, armies and statesmen are helpless."

To manufacturing men: Speed and perfect every process, for your "service is absolutely indispensable" to the nation.

To gardeners: By creating and cultivating gardens you can help "greatly to solve the problem of the feeding of the nations."

To housewives: Eliminate wastefulness and extravagance.

To editors and advertising agencies: Give widespread circulation and repetition to this appeal.

—North American of Philadelphia

GOVERNOR BROUGH PREDICTS "BONE DRY" AMERICA IN TWO YEARS

Governor Charles H. Brough of Arkansas is making the prediction that America will be "bone dry" within two years. "The success Arkansas and other dry states have won under prohibition furnishes a substantial foundation for a dry America," says Governor Brough. "I have talked with many men of national prominence in political affairs, and the prevailing opinion among this class is that America will adopt prohibition several years earlier than the time generally expected.

"Arkansas has prospered under the 'bone dry' act. Liquor activities have died down to a whisper. What little intoxicants are being peddled by blind tigers are sold at exorbitant rates. No liquor is being shipped into the state, and few people have it.

"With the decrease in drinking came proportionate impetus to agricultural, commercial and industrial activities. It is the rarest sight in Arkansas to see a man under the influence of intoxicants."

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do You Know the Answers to These Questions? They May Be Found in THE UNION SIGNAL of April 19

Ten questions, the answers to which will be found in the preceding number of THE UNION SIGNAL, will appear each week. The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. Have the liquor interests any reasonable grounds for claiming compensation?

2. What are five of the indications that the days of the liquor traffic are numbered, as given by an ex-liquor-speaker?

3. Name four special reasons why there should be a popular demand for a prohibition war measure.

4. What three methods of securing prohibition through Congress as a war measure are being considered?

5. Through what departments of the National W. C. T. U. is the organization now carrying on war relief work?

6. Which is the latest state to come into the prohibition ranks and what has been its prohibition history?

7. How has Seattle refuted the predictions of the liquor interests regarding the effects of prohibition?

8. Does the testimony of representatives of labor in Colorado, Washington and other prohibition states corroborate the statements of the liquorites that prohibition is a detriment to the workingman?

9. Is there any truth in the statements of the brewers that beer is a tissue building food? Give authority for facts stated.

10. What anti-liquor war measures have been introduced in Congress since the opening of the special session?

PROHIBITION SAVES KANSAS NEARLY $29,000,000 ANNUALLY

Even before the enactment of a "bone dry" law the state of Kansas saved nearly $29,000,000 annually on its liquor bill, according to the findings of Dean Frank W. Blackmar of the University of Kansas, who has just made an exhaustive study of the effect of prohibition in his state. This is the reason Kansas can spend twenty-five million dollars a year on new automobiles, player pianos and other luxuries. According to Dean Blackmar's figures the average per capita consumption in Kansas is 2.61 gallons per year. If the liquor consumption in Kansas were up to the national average the drink bill would be $33,000,000.

Dean Blackmar reports that Ohio, with a population only three times as large as Kansas, spends twenty-five times as much for liquor as does Kansas, or eight times as much per capita. The people of the United States spend 1.66 times as much for liquor as for meat. Kansas spends five times as much for meat as for liquor. The average United States citizen spends five times as much for liquor as for bread.

"The survey shows the old fallacy," says Professor Blackmar in his report, "that alcohol in one form is taken to keep you warm and in another to keep you cool. The consumption of beer was highest in July and lowest in January, while the consumption of whisky was highest in December and lowest in May. The survey also shows that the consumption of liquor is heavier among the foreign than among the native born."

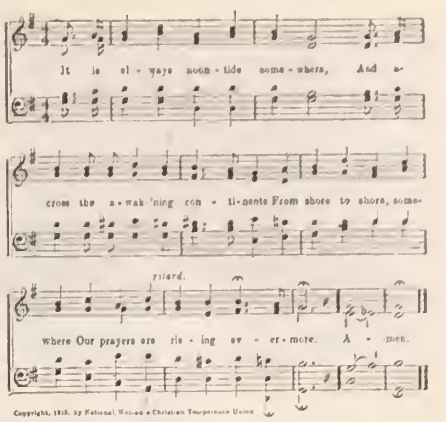
TOO MANY FLAGS

Little Dorothy, aged six, had been told at school that she must salute the flag. That noon she was almost an hour late in coming home for lunch, and her parents were anxiously watching for her. "Dorothy, why are you so late?" was the first query as the child came up the front walk. "Teacher said we must salute the flag," replied the small patriot, "and I have been saluting them all the way home, 'cause there was one on pretty nearly every house."

IT SHOULD HAVE BEEN 500

Mrs. Ella B. Black, National superintendent of Work among Foreign-Speaking People, in an article on "Americanization" in the April 5 issue of THE SIGNAL, is quoted as saying that there were fifty applicants for naturalization in Chicago in one day. The number should have been 500.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



FLAG OF THE FREE

Oh, raise the starry banner high,
And let it wave o'er land and sea;
It stands for truth which cannot die,
The glorious emblem of the free.
Secure beneath its sheltering sway,
In safety let the people dwell,
That coming generations may
Its glory to their children tell.

Oh, raise the banner of the free,
Above the schoolhouse and the home,
And in the islands of the sea,
Across the mighty ocean's foam;
But only when in justice strong
Should freedom's banner ever wave,
It never should protect the wrong,
It never should the free enslave.

But soon we'll hail the better day
Of which our fathers never dreamed;
The dramshop outlawed, swept away,
A spotless flag, a land redeemed.
Then shall the glory of our land
Be blest to nations far abroad;
We'll give this world a helping hand,
And uplift mankind toward God.

—Matthew T. Lindsay

A NEW BANNER WAVES

On the first day of Baby Week many communities will ask all households which are the fortunate possessors of a baby to display a small American flag.

A new banner waves in our city today,
A banner just newly unfurled;
But the message it brings
On its blue and white wings,
Is as old as the dawn of the world.

Joyful the tidings this banner proclaims:
"A baby lives here" is its song.
To his presence give heed;
Take account of his need:
Make right for him all that is wrong.

From the dawn of the world to the dawn of today
Man's hope in a baby has lain.
For the smile on his face
Is the goal of the race—
Through darkness and infinite pain.

We hail you—the babes of our city, today,
And pledge you our faith to the end!
Whatever your need,
With thought and with deed,
Your uttermost realm to defend.

We record here the name of a comrade and friend who has recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. OLIVE POND AMIES, Secane, Pa., for nineteen years recording secretary of the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U., and for many years president of the Philadelphia county union. Mrs. Amies was a veteran temperance crusader well known throughout the state and nation.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

May 6-13—Membership week
May 13—Mothers' Day

SUPERINTENDENTS

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK

MRS. STELLA B. IRVINE

One of the very important lines of work of the Sunday School department is the observance of Anti-Cigaret Sunday. Lest we forget, let it once more be recorded that we are indebted to Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, ex-National superintendent of the Anti-Narcotics department of the W. C. T. U. for the idea of having one Sunday of the year observed as Anti-Cigaret Sunday.

The second Temperance Sunday of the year has been fixed by the International Sunday School Association as Anti-Cigaret Day. This year the date is May 20 and workers should begin at once to arrange for the observance of the day.

One plan which has met with great favor is the anti-cigaret medal contest which is held as an opening or closing program in the Sunday school. The department provides Sunday school contest programs and the selections are made by the National superintendent of the Medal Contest department and are taken from her contest books. These are suited to the Junior and Intermediate grades of the school. For the programs send to me and for the medals to Mrs. A. E. Carman, 5414 Broadway, Chicago, Ill.

We strongly recommend an anti-cigaret rally on the afternoon of Anti-Cigaret Day. Let there be a program which will partake of the nature of a contest. Each school participating may provide a feature of the program and the prize will be awarded to the school presenting the best feature. The department publishes anti-cigaret rally programs which contain most interesting and instructive exercises. These with samples of all of our anti-cigaret and anti-tobacco literature, will be found in our anti-cigaret package. Price 25 cents postpaid. This is a valuable equipment.

Rev. Harry Adams Hersey, Caribou, Maine, publishes an excellent anti-cigaret poster. Send 10 cents for sample and if possible supply all Sunday schools, as it furnishes a striking lesson and could be used as the basis of a good talk by the superintendent.

Program points and suggestions are given in the leaflet entitled "Anti-Cigaret Day." We supplement with the following:

"Messengers of Truth," pupils of the Junior grades, may appear in turn and give telling facts about tobacco which may be gleaned from many sources but are readily secured from the literature of our department. A short dialogue will get the attention of the school as something is done as well as said. Send for the dialogue entitled, "Anti-Cigaret Bonfire," price 2 cents. It is suited to pupils of the Intermediate grades and girls are the speakers.

An anti-tobacco symposium may be given by pupils of the Senior grades. Topic: "The Enemy, Tobacco." Speaker's topics: "Enemy of Life and Health," "Enemy of Morality," "Enemy of Posterity," "Enemy of Prosperity," "Enemy of the Nation." These topics are treated briefly in the leaflet entitled, "Three Enemies."

Testimony against tobacco may be given by adult members of the school. A teacher could show the effect of tobacco on school work. A physician could relate instances where tobacco had ruined health. A teacher could compute the amount spent on tobacco in a year or in the average life-time, if six cigars at five cents each were smoked each day. Mention could be made of what that sum would buy. This could be in the nature of a blackboard problem.

Why not have an anti-tobacco pledge-signing crusade in every church and Sunday school? This could be under the direction of the Temperance department or Temperance secretary of the Sunday school. Let every man and boy (and girl too) be asked to sign the anti-tobacco pledge.

Anti-Cigaret Day is an opportune time when the pastor and Sunday school superintendent could investigate the teaching force of the school and prevail upon tobacco users to give up the habit for the sake of the pupils they teach. That there are such teachers is a matter of great regret and they should be told that their example counteracts their teaching and that only such teachers are desirable whose example in life is safe and good for the child to follow.

There should be a seed-sowing of anti-tobacco literature in the homes represented by the members of the school. Every child should be given a telling short leaflet to take home to read to his father—and who can estimate the harvest of such seed-sowing?

The usual helps for teachers and officers are found in the quarterly Budget. Price, 15 cents, or 50 cents per year in advance. New material and up-to-date statistics and revised leaflets are included in the budget.

The quarterly temperance lesson of the International Lesson Series is found in Isaiah 28:1-13. The title of the lesson is "The Importance of Self-control. The Golden Text is 1 Cor. 9:25. Every man that striveth in the games exercises self-control in all things.

This lesson is well adapted to Anti-Cigaret Day.

Let us work for a great temperance Sunday on May 20.

115 Walnut Street, Riverside, California

TEMPERANCE AND LABOR

Mrs. Lucia F. H. Additon, National superintendent of the department of Temperance and Labor, sends by telegram the following urgent appeal to white ribboners:

"We have urged work for human conservation in the past. Let us now translate our theories into deeds. Cultivate every foot of land to provide food stuffs. Organize canning clubs to increase the food supply. Do something toward helping to feed the nation. The time is short. We must serve now. Let us act promptly and report."

NATIONAL LECTURER HELPS MAKE WISCONSIN DRY

Mrs. Lulu Loveland Shepard, National lecturer, has just completed a four weeks' campaign in Wisconsin where, on April 3, some one hundred towns and villages voted on local option with splendid victories. Wisconsin, considering the amount of wet territory in the state, is making a wonderful advance in prohibition sentiment and the wave is sweeping the state like a Kansas cyclone. For five years Mrs. Shepard has made an annual visit to Wisconsin, and this year's successful trip has demonstrated what white ribboners everywhere could do if all plans were as carefully made as they have been in Wisconsin. In spite of bad weather during the entire month, with terrific blizzards which tied up trains for days and detained many speakers, Mrs. Shepard was enabled to fill every appointment. She seemed to live a charmed life. Often the train she took would be the last to reach a given point for several days. Mrs. E. W. Follett, head of the Speakers' Bureau of Wisconsin, had planned the itinerary so carefully and so many months beforehand that everything moved smoothly. In some places the theater had been engaged and paid for as early as last August in order to avoid possible disappointment. In other places where the theater could not be secured because of the opposition of the brewery interests the women secured the "movie" house or armory. Music was a great feature at each meeting. High school orchestras, glee clubs, boys' choruses and such attractions drew immense crowds and at many points people were turned away for lack of standing room.

What does it all mean? Simply this, that Wisconsin is going dry. Nothing can stop it. Prohibition will probably be submitted to the voters, and in that event the good men of the state will pile up such a vote as will surprise the people of this nation.

Moreover, white ribboners have led in creating this temperance sentiment. They have gotten out petitions, arranged meetings, distributed literature, served meals at the polls, pushed essay contests in the schools, educated and agitated, and to them must be given the credit in the great day of final victory.

OREGON LEGISLATURE ACTS IN ACCORDANCE WITH BALLOT BOX SENTIMENT

Special Correspondence

Oregon has accepted its "bone dry" law in a very matter-of-fact way. The legislature passed the measure without any great opposition, the senate unanimously and the house with only a "soppy seven" voting against it. This unanimity of vote does not mean that all the members were personally dry men. The people had spoken at the November election, and an Oregon legislature is very careful to follow the expressed opinion of the citizenry. The law became effective five days after being signed, February 2, by Governor Withycombe. Mrs. Adah Wallace Unruh received the pen which was used.

Brewery Now Making Condensed Milk

We are now informed, through our leading Portland dailies, that one large brewery is being transformed into a condensed milk factory, and that about one thousand five hundred acres of hop fields are being given over to the cultivation of sugar beets and others to loganberries as much more profitable. Former saloon locations are occupied by thriving business concerns. In a few years the last trace of the liquor traffic in Oregon will be eliminated. No word of regret for the passing of John Barleycorn is heard. Prohibition has promoted prosperity and is exceedingly popular in business circles.

That the legislative work of the Oregon women might be made more effective the Federation of Women's Clubs, Mothers' Congress and Parent-Teacher Association, and the Consumers' League joined with the state Woman's Christian Temperance Union to form a Woman's Legislative Council. This council held many meetings before the opening of the legislature, carefully studying the different measures brought forward by their organizations and other reform legislation they were asked to endorse. The Secretary of State set aside a room in the law library of the supreme court building as headquarters for the Woman's Legislative Council during the legislative session and Mrs. Jennie M. Kemp, president of the Oregon W. C. T. U., was placed in charge. Many bills endorsed by the women voters of the state became laws. The W. C. T. U. proposed an anti-cigaret bill which would totally have eliminated the cigaret from the state. The tobacco interests sent an experienced lobby and in spite of a determined fight the bill was modified to make it apply only to minors. Next time we will ask the people to speak at the polls. When they say, "Banish the cigaret" the legislature will "register delight" in obeying the mandate.

Constructive Legislation Endorsed by the W. C. T. U.

The fourth Friday in October was designated as Frances Willard day in our public schools. This, also, was our measure. The third bill we introduced was to make women eligible to jury service but it was defeated, largely because of the opposition of the wives of some of the legislators. The women's organizations are all officially behind this measure and effort will be continued until it becomes a law.

Other measures passed raised the minimum school year from six to eight months, provided for free kindergartens, for medical and surgical attention to indigent crippled children, and for sterilization of the feebleminded, criminals and sexual perverts and modified and improved the mothers' pension law.

Mrs. Alexander Thompson, the one woman member of the 1917 legislature, won high honors for the efficiency of her service. She was a hard worker, keen in debate, wise in judgment and the joy and pride of her associates and of every woman lobbyist and visitor. She asked no favors because she was a woman and expected that she and her measures should stand on their own merits. She presided over the house when called by the speaker to the chair. Because of her efficiency it will be easier to elect other women as members of succeeding legislatures.

Mrs. Alexander Thompson
Only Woman Member of the Oregon Legislature

Much interest has been taken in Umatilla, Oregon, which now has an entire city government of women. The women planned their campaign so quietly that the men did not even know there were women candidates until the votes were cast. The wife of the former mayor defeated her husband, who was a candidate for re-election. Canyonville is another Oregon city officered by women and from press reports there seems no question as to the efficient business administration in both cities.

In common with other states the war overshadows everything else. Our boys —boys in very truth—are marching away. The W. C. T. U. will do its "bit" in helping to prepare hospital supplies, looking after moral conditions surrounding, in camp and field, these sons of loving mothers, many of them from Christian homes. We also will join the other women of the state in increasing and conserving the food supply, and will be ready to render any other patriotic service in our power.

A very successful bazaar was held at state headquarters recently. Nearly 600 articles, useful and ornamental, were donated by the women of the state. Umatilla county sent a generous contribution which was arranged in a very attractive booth in charge of Mrs. J. C. Woodworth, the charming and efficient county president. Multnomah county served noon luncheon in an adjoining room and both state and county were happy over the financial returns. As some articles were left unsold and others are still in preparation, another bazaar will be held in connection with the state convention at Albany the first week in October.

Plans are now being made for the second annual state-wide observance of white ribbon week, May 7-13. Schools will be visited, house-to-house invitations to membership given, one day devoted to mothers' meetings, a day to prayer and meditation, and public meetings will be held in which honorary members take part. A food sale will be held to raise money. A children's meeting and a union mass meeting on Sunday with a thank offering collection for a dry Oregon will close the week's efforts.

The 1917 meeting of the National Education Association will be held in Portland in July. The W. C. T. U. is represented on the committee which is making the plans to entertain this great meeting by Mrs. Kemp and Mrs. Lucia F. Additon.

The regular work of the unions goes steadily on. Mrs. G. L. Buland, state superintendent of the S. T. I. department, enjoys the co-operation of the state superintendent of Public Instruction. With his help every teacher in the state has been asked to carry on the essay contests in the schools, being furnished with helpful information. Newberg recently tendered a reception and banquet to the teachers at which over one hundred and fifty people were present. Mrs. Kemp was a guest of honor and the principal speaker.

The spring institute season is at hand and many county and local institutes will soon be held. Multnomah county holds an all-day institute each month of the year.

State Capitol, Salem, Oregon

HIS FLAG, AND THE COUNTRY FOR WHICH IT STANDS*

MINERVA L. GUTHAPFEL

Copyrighted by the author, 1914
By Courtesy Christian Herald

A sudden, solemn hush fell upon the room. Eight hundred pair of mostly black eyes gazed in awe-struck interest at the sweet-faced Teacher—capital "T" for Teacher, please, in this school.

"It is with sorrowful hearts we take up our lessons this morning. We have no flag-bearer. Our little Geta, who died yesterday of the fever, was a good girl and, because she prayed to God, must be with Him today. We also should try to be good, that it may be well with us when we, too, come to die."

A sharp in-taking of the breath by eight hundred little throats answered the teacher's "when we, too, come to die." It was lonely without the little Geta, who carried the flag so proudly. But "when we, too, come to die" was not so pleasant to listen to. That was a cause for worriment. Hence the gasp in unison.

The teacher noted, and went on more cheerily. "We are not going to die for a long time, I hope, so now we will select another child to carry our flag. As we go in turns, our flag-bearer must now be a little boy."

Her eyes roved around the chapel of the Five Points Mission of New York city. About four hundred pair of eyes looked back only mildly interested. They belonged to girls, "this time—a boy," hence the calmness.

But eight hundred other eyes, belonging to four hundred boys, glowed and burned and peered eagerly at "Teacher." "If only I might do it, there is still almost the whole month left of Geta's turn. That was indeed a nice little Geta who, since she must die, kindly did so at the beginning of her month of flag carrying. If only I might be the one," and four hundred little hearts beat high with hope.

No, I am wrong, not four hundred hearts, only three hundred and ninety-nine of them, one heart was in a poor miserable little emaciated body; its owner did not even dare to hope he would be called to carry the brilliant red, white and blue.

He sat on the last seat, his face and hands were clean, and the somewhat worn clothing given him by the Mission deaconess was still comparatively clean, but he was sore and tired. He was glad it was school-time, it made him forget that he was hungry and had received a beating at midnight, because he had unsuccessfully begged and given but little to his cruel, drunken father.

Little Marcus had been sent to school by order of the probation officer of the police court, much dreaded by the father; but in the long hours from the time school closed until midnight, he was ordered on the streets to beg, dodging the police and probation officers, afraid to tell lest the father would beat harder and starve him even more. No mother in the home now, she had carried little Marcus down the gang-plank at Ellis Island one short year ago; one year of little food and cruel blows from the drunken shoemaker husband, one short year of homesickness for the girlhood home in Greece—and death mercifully gave rest.

But the teacher is speaking—"We will let our newest scholar finish little Geta's time, to show him that he is welcome in our midst. Come, Marcus, you are the flag-bearer. Rise, children, and stand at 'attention' as the flag-bearer comes to his new post of duty."

Seven hundred ninety-nine pair of feet held the owners erect, seven hundred ninety-nine little figures stood at "attention" as the Teacher walked to the end of the room and helped the dazed Marcus to his feet, starting him down the aisle to the front of the room, and —"the flag."

Marcus couldn't believe it was true, he must be dreaming in his cellar at home, and would soon awaken to dismal reality. Not until his hand was placed around the flag staff and his eyes caught sight of the waving red, white and blue of Uncle Sam's country, did he come to life. One swift glance at the flag, another at the seven hundred ninety-nine figures at "attention," and he rose to the occasion, stretched himself at least two inches higher and, turning as the music started, faced the platform. "One," said the piano, two little attendants of the flag-bearer stepped into one aisle, "two," commanded the music, two more attendants stepped into the other aisle, "three," directed the instrument again, four attendants stepped in unison to the front, "four," said the piano, the attendants stepped to their places, and the march began.

Forward first, then to the right, down one aisle, up the next, eight hundred little voices chanting the "stars and stripes forever," as the flag wended its way, carried aloft by a starry-eyed joyously happy boy, while four small "attendants" trotted protectingly before and behind. The march accomplished, the proud carrier paused, and once more faced the school.

"Salute the flag," called the teacher, "Ready—one." Seven hundred ninety-nine hands answered correctly, and at "two" stood with right hand touching the temple, palm outward, "three," the hand extended to the right in salute, while the entire eight hundred voices chanted, "I pledge allegiance to my flag and the country for which it stands, one nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

A pause, then "one," called the piano, "two," "three;" the return march followed until the flag once more rested in its accustomed place.

A new boy sat down in the last seat, a new boy marched to the class room, a new boy recited lessons as in a dream, a new boy forgot all his troubles and went forth to beg the long hours away, caring for nothing, for his heart was aglow and always he saw, before his mind's eye, a strip of red, white and blue, and a boy that looked like himself marching, and constantly before admiring eyes, saluting the "flag," HIS flag, and "the country for which it stands."

Marcus awoke early the next day, and stepped breakfastless into the street, after a hasty ablution.

"What time make-a de clock?" he queried of a passing workman.

"Time, you Guinea kid," answered the man, "what will ye be doing with the time so airly in the marnin'? Sure, if ye must know, it's wantin five minutes till sivin o'clock, and the shop four blocks away yit. Be gone wid ye, I'll be late sure."

Marcus wisely stepped aside and wandered on. He had one penny which his father had donated as supper money a couple of days before, but a kind neighbor had asked him to hold her baby, and had fed him quite bountifully when she returned from her errand. The penny was quite welcome now, it bought a roll at a lunch counter and, for some reason, the owner of the lunch counter, looking into the glowing dark eyes set in the pitifully thin face, hastily pushed toward him a full cup of coffee just poured for himself. "Here, kid," he said, "see if it's flavored right."

Marcus drank it hungrily, ate his roll, and pronounced it "right," adding, "Tanks, mister, I sweep-a de pavement?" "Sure, if you want to," said the man. The boy swept the pavement and swept it well. "Come around any morning you like, kid; you'll find the coffee and bun, and never mind the penny if you work like that after you've eaten them."

Highly gratified, and feeling much refreshed, Marcus stepped from the shop and sauntered on and on. He finally reached Broadway, and again asking the time, was told it was eight-fifteen. He had walked for over an hour, and the school house was ten blocks away. Down the nearest street he sped, his heart beating wildly. What if he should be late the second morning of his position as "flag-bearer?" The thought was torture. Block after block he ran, dodging under horses' hoofs, dashing in front of automobiles at the peril of his life.

He finally paused, panting, within one block of the school building and, asking the time of a newsboy, was told it was only eight-twenty-five, and he could not get into the hallowed presence of the "flag" until eight-forty-five. He stopped in front of an apartment house that even at this early hour teemed with life. Leaning against a lamp post to get his breath, he idly watched a woman scrubbing the front steps. She was janitor of the apartment house, her name was Mrs. Bridget O'Flannigan, and she weighed two hundred forty-six and one-half pounds, and was proud of it. She feared no one, neither allowed any to dispute her will. She surely was the last person in the world you would have thought would be the victim of a case of "assault and battery with an intent to kill," but such a victim she that day became.

It happened this way.

As Marcus' breath returned, he unconsciously watched Mrs. O'Flannigan wielding her brush vigorously over the steps, then returning it to the bucket, draw forth the cloth to wipe up the suds. Suddenly IT happened.

A dash, as a small boy, in a wild rage, swept across the intervening space and with one bound landed in front of the industrious Mrs. O'Flannigan; a frantic hand clutched at the scrub rag in her hand, a foot kicked the bucket and it turned over, two fists shot out and landed in Mrs. O'Flannigan's face and chest. The blows acted like a sledge hammer upon her, for they caught her unprepared, as, with a wild shriek, she toppled backward and sat down heavily upon the pavement, while the bucket merrily dripped its contents over her.

A crowd gathered at once, a policeman came running and, pushing to the front, saw the prostrate woman dripping with dirty water and wildly calling on all the saints to defend her, for she was "kilt entirely."

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

*NOTE: This story is printed in leaflet form and also as an exercise for public school children. It may be obtained of the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Illinois.
Price: story leaflet, 5 cents; exercise, 7 cents.

PROHIBITION DAY A RED LETTER OCCASION AT CHAUTAUQUA OF THE SOUTH

MRS. AUGUST BURGHARD

March 31, Prohibition Day of the first annual session of the Chautauqua of the South, was marked with a red letter on Georgia's prohibition calendar because of the widespread interest, representatives from many sections being in attendance; because the removal of intemperance is a patriotic part of the National preparedness necessary at this time, as unless it is well done very little else worth while can be lastingly done; because the principle of prohibition has proved to be the only safe and certain remedy against the treachery of intemperance; because of the young lives, the college men and women, the leaders of tomorrow, consecrated to prohibition and patriotism in the fight against our country's dangerous foe, alcohol; because of the jubilee over Georgia's "bone-dry" law about which Governor N. E. Harris said, holding out his right hand: "On the twenty-eighth of March, just passed, this hand signed the most drastic prohibition measure that has ever been adopted in any state since the American Union began. Georgia takes the lead and challenges her sisters to follow her in the good work which her people hope will eventuate in the passage of the amendment to the Federal Constitution putting in operation prohibition in every state of this, the richest and greatest nation on earth."

Macon, Permanent Home of Chautauqua of the South

The day was celebrated in Macon, geographically the central city of the Empire State of the South. Macon is rich in its history, as in its present attainments, and its bright future. It is a religious and educational center, the home of Wesleyan Female College, the first college in the world to confer a diploma and degrees on women; of Mercer University, and a splendid public school system; the home of the poet, Sydney Lanier, who was also the world's greatest flute player; of Georgia's "bone-dry" Governor, Hon. Nathaniel E. Harris; the home of our peerless Mary Harris Armor, loved and honored all over the nation as a temperance evangel of the first magnitude.

One generous citizen has donated four hundred and fifty acres of land, excellently located, upon which the Chautauqua of the South, a part of the Mother Chautauqua of New York, will be located.

Prohibition Day Committee

It is significant that Prohibition Day was selected, without solicitation, as one of the special days of the Chautauqua's three weeks' sessions. The committee to arrange for it was composed of three ministers, leaders in their denominations, the editor of a large daily, the judge of the City court, a successful business man, the president of a great college, a popular University student, and four white ribboners officially connected in the W. C. T. U. with the platform, scientific temperance instruction, literature, and publicity departments—all working in harmony with Dr. A. P. Bourland, Chautauqua director.

Who Were Present?

Who were present? White ribboners from many sections of the state and from other states, prohibitionists of all professions and walks in life, college faculties and many preachers, large delegations from temperance and church organizations, from the leading Georgia Methodist college for young women and the one for young men, the leading Baptist college for young women, and the one for young men, from the Great State Normal and Industrial College, the Georgia-Alabama Business College located at Macon, and others.

Seated on the platform with the speakers were about one hundred and fifty prominent people, prohibitionists, including a number of white ribboners. Underneath a large American flag of electric lights and surrounded by national emblems was placed a conspicuous runner bearing the message of the hour, "National Constitutional Prohibition. We shall win."

The Prohibition Conference

The program was appropriate to the importance of the occasion. Rev. W. N. Ainsworth, D. D., pastor of Wesley Memorial church of Savannah, in the opening address on "The History of Prohibition in Georgia: What Should be the next Step?" pointed out that Georgia was virtually the mother of prohibition in the United States as the first governor-general, James Edward Oglethorpe, decreed that no rum should be brought to this colony and Georgia remained dry the first nine years of its existence.

"Georgia owes a debt of gratitude to General Oglethorpe," said Dr. Ainsworth. "Today she offers a testimonial to him in a citizenship unstained by the dregs of alcohol."

Prohibition is so popular here that everybody claims to be a prohibitionist. The speaker gave the timely warning applicable to many states, "There are prohibitionists for principle and prohibitionists for politics. The day was when Washington said, 'Let only Americans stand guard,' I want to warn the prohibitionists to welcome all the over-night converts, but keep the veterans in charge."

Great Speeches by Mrs. Armor and Mrs. Atkins

Mrs. Mary Harris Armor and Mrs. Florence Ewell Atkins, National W. C. T. U. lecturers, were at their best. Mrs. Armor's subject was "Practical Plans for Teaching the Harm in the Moderate Use of Alcohol," while Mrs. Atkins told of "The Value of Scientific Temperance Instruction in Schools." The striking truths so eloquently uttered by these women were received with enthusiasm. Mrs. Lella A. Dillard, president of the Georgia W. C. T. U., made a motion that

(Continued on Page Fourteen)

HIS FLAG AND THE COUNTRY FOR WHICH IT STANDS

(Continued from Page Twelve)

In front of her, fairly dancing up and down in hysterical rage and crying out unintelligible things was Marcus. In his hand he clutched the scrub rag, but at the appearance of the policeman he stuffed it, all dripping wet, into the pocket of his coat, an act which no one seemed to notice.

The officer of the law helped the prostrate woman to her feet with soothing words while an obliging bystander held the quivering boy at the officer's request.

Mrs. O'Flannigan righted and soothed, the officer grabbed the collar of the boy and, turning him to his victim, said, "Sure, and what's all this about?"

Silence on the part of the boy, whose breast still heaved with convulsive sobs. Mrs. O'Flannigan, however, poured forth an incoherent story about the wild foreign trash and her desire to see them eliminated from the earth. The officer scratched his head; he could make nothing of the case. Shaking Marcus from time to time, he sought to extract some information from him, but Marcus was dumb. The wild, blind rage had passed away, but the officer's uniform and the clutch on his collar told Marcus two things: first, that he was in the dread clutches of the law, and, second, that it must be eight-forty-five, the school door was open and in fifteen minutes the beautiful flag, of which he was the appointed bearer, would be carried by someone else. Oh, why had he not stopped to think; he must get away and get there.

His efforts along that line brought an extra shake and a fierce command from the officer to "stand still, no nonsense now, or I'll have ye hung for this." Marcus subsided in terror profound, but his brain continued its wild working. Yes, better be hung than be disgraced by arrest. The Teacher would never again let him carry the beautiful flag after he had been put in jail and, besides, (oh, awful thought), they might put him in for a month and his allotted time for flag-bearer would be over even if Teacher would forgive. Yes, he was quite sure now, he wished to be hung at once.

All this time Mrs. O'Flannigan's story was being poured forth, but he heard it not. The officer heard, but could not understand. Finally he managed to ask, as the lady paused for breath, "And what will ye be charging up to this silent Guinea kid? We'll tell the magistrate the rist, sure."

"Well, Mr. Hooligan," she said, conscious of her audience, "I charge the bye with assault and battery wid intint to kill." The crowd gasped. Things looked serious. "Will ye be going wid me now to the station-house, Mrs. O'Flannigan?"

"And I will not, Mr. Hooligan, wid the dirty water a-drippin' from me clothes, and me wid the mess to clane up. Oh, ye spalpeen, I'll fix ye. I'll come by and by, Mr. Officer. Just hold him on the charge I name, and I'll be along. Oh, may the saints presarve us, me eye will be black sure, and not a bit of beefsteak in the house to put to it."

Neighbors volunteered to supply the needed piece of meat, and the "victim" entered her home, while the officer led the boy away, saying, "Come on wid ye. Ye've got no tongue at all. Well, I think ye'll find your tongue when His Honor gets hold of ye. Come on now. It's nine o'clock and me time's up. I want to get home, ye troublesome baggage."

Nine o'clock! Marcus gasped and twisted suddenly, but the officer's hold was firm and it was useless. Doggedly he walked, or was dragged by the hurrying officer. He saw not the crowds that hooted, he saw only a beautiful, beautiful piece of red, white and blue bunting.

It glowed and burned in his mind's eye, as it stood in its corner. It called him, and beckoned him and looked reproachfully at him. He actually stretched out his hands to take it, but he clasped only empty air. "Here, what are ye doin'?" said the officer. "Sure, the kid's a lunatic intirely, graspin' at the air about him." Marcus did not hear. He saw the flag being lifted from its place by the clutch of Tony's hands, Tony, the meanest boy in school, his enemy. Tony carried the flag, the piano was calling for it, and Tony took it to the front, the march was beginning, and Tony walked beneath HIS flag—it was too much—and the boy fainted in the arms of the officer, who caught him as he fell and carried him into Magistrate Cannon's office.

They worked on him and he came to life with a sigh, but it was some moments before he could understand where he was, then terror possessed him, until he caught sight of a little American flag fastened to the wall over the desk. The sight of it brought back his misery—he was no longer terrified, only hopeless.

(Continued next week)

Become a Nurse

WE have trained thousands of women in their own homes to earn $10 to $25 a week as nurses. Send for "How I Became a Nurse"—248 pages with actual experiences. 48 illustrated lesson pages free.
Sixteenth Year
The Chautauqua School of Nursing
513 Main St., Jamestown, N. Y.

HELP TO INFORM YOUR VOTERS

by mailing to each in a follow-up system

THE PROSPERITY POST CARDS

What Every Merchant Knows.
Of Interest to Wage Earners.
Of Interest to Taxpayers.
Of Interest to Bankers.
Prosperity Statistics.

This series of post cards has been prepared in English, German, Italian, Norwegian, Polish, Spanish, and Swedish.

Price, per dozen, 15 cents; per hundred, $1.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois

PROHIBITION DAY A RED LETTER OCCASION AT CHAUTAUQUA OF THE SOUTH

(Continued from Page Thirteen)

the Georgia legislature be asked to set aside a special temperance day in the schools. The motion was unanimously adopted.

From State Superintendent of Public Instruction

Prof. M. L. Brittain, the head of the department of Education in Georgia, spoke on "The Status of Scientific Temperance Instruction in the Schools of Georgia." He said, in part: "In urging the act passed by the General Assembly in 1901 the W. C. T. U. was responsible for legislation affecting every public school in Georgia. It was directly due to the inspiration and efforts of these ladies as expressed in this measure that every Georgia pupil must be taught the effect of alcoholic drinks upon the human system. As the head of the state department of Education, it is a pleasure to testify to you that this provision of our laws is being carried out, both in the letter and in spirit, in every county of this commonwealth. In all likelihood it was due to this fact that prohibition forces of the state have been able to go forward in their victorious progress. It is also due to this daily instruction in our schools that I feel I can prophesy with safety that we shall never take a backward step in temperance legislation. From every standpoint it is the part of prudence and wisdom to begin with temperance teaching at home and school during the early years of childhood."

Miss Julia Goodall of Macon, musical director of the largest W. C. T. U. in the state, sang two Georgia songs, the audience joining in the chorus of the last one, sung to the tune of "Dixie" as flags were waved:

"Prohibition's on in Georgia,
It is! It is!
From mountain top to sandy plain
Prohibition's sure to reign.
It is! It is!
Away down South in Georgia."

Credit Given Organized Mother Love

Every speaker at both sessions, no matter what phase of the subject was under discussion, gave credit to the help of the W. C. T. U. in recognition of the praiseworthy results obtained through "organized mother love." Many young people at the conference used pencils and pads for notes to be used in writing scientific temperance instruction essays.

1,500 in College and Young People's Prohibition Procession

A remarkable prohibition procession of delegations from colleges and young people's organizations, each displaying its colors and pennants, flags and prohibition banners, marched from the city hall down the principal business thoroughfares to the Chautauqua auditorium, where each "pulled off a prohi. stunt," as one young enthusiast expressed it. This splendid demonstration was in charge of Mrs. Lella A. Dillard, college secretary of the Georgia W. C. T. U. and H. L. Driscoll, president of the Georgia Intercollegiate Prohibition Association.

Scientific temperance is studied in practically every Georgia college, either through the Young People's Branch of the W. C. T. U., the temperance committee of the Y. W. C. A., Y. M. C. A. or the I. P. A.

From the following colleges finding it impracticable to have adequate, or any, representation on Prohibition Day came messages expressing full accord with the purpose of prohibition work: Emory University, through Bishop Warren A. Candler, chancellor; Georgia School of Technology, President K. G. Matheson; Georgia Military College, Col. O. R. Horton.

College Students on Platform

The two-minute prohibition songs, speeches, yells and rally cries by more than one thousand college students made a program unique, effective, inspiring and full of promise. It was good to watch the earnest faces and hear the clear notes of the Wesleyan girls as the words rang out, "A Saloonless Nation in 1920 This Land Shall Be."

"Bone Dry" Governor Receives Ovation

Governor Harris, who called the extra session of the legislature to pass the "bone dry" law was accorded an ovation. "You have touched my heart again and again at this meeting," said the governor, "and I am not ashamed to admit that tears have rolled down my cheeks. I will never forget this day."

Nothing seemed to please him more, or called for greater enthusiasm from

(Continued on Page Fifteen)

SPECIAL SOUVENIR CARD FOR MEMBERSHIP WEEK

To Women of America!

It is a sacred privilege to count one in the ranks of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union—to become an inheritor of its radiant past, a participant in its luminous present and a builder in its brightening future. No matter how numerous or how varied the great interests that may claim a Christian woman's time and sympathy, she should have abundant room in her heart for the temperance reform and give it some of her best activities.

President National W. C. T. U.

Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Short Telling Leaflets FOR General Distribution

For Your Son — Which?
Our Boys.
Words That Count.
The Avalanche Will Come.
Wanted.
For the License Voter.
Guideposts to Prohibition.
A Good Substitute for Drink.
The Saloon in Our Town.
A Model Prescription Blank.
Wanted — A Father: A Little Boy's Plea.
A Strong Arm of the State.
Drinking Up Farms.
Drink Costs Wages.
As Others Heard Him.
It Saves the Boys.
A Warning That Thrilled.
Alcohol a Poison.
To the Christian Church Everywhere.
Danger to Seamen.
Laboring Men, Stop and Think!
National Prohibition the Logical Goal.
The Trail of the Little White Hearse.
"Can't Be Stopped."
An Appeal to Our Catholic Friends.
Responsibility of the Church Member.
"A Little Child Shall Lead Them."
What Is Alcohol?
The Liquor Traffic and Child Labor.
Plea from a Saloonkeeper's Daughter.
Why Kansas Is Committed to Prohibition.
No Food Value in Alcohol.
Higher Standards for Army Men.
What Money Spent for Drink Would Buy.
Did the Towns Decline?
Seven Reasons for Prohibition.
Two Ballots.
Benediction on the Home.
Liquor Must Go.
Before and After Prohibition.
A Thought for the Christian Voter.
Maine's Great Achievement.
Thirty-Three Years of Prohibition.
A True Conservation Policy.
When You Open Your Purse, Remember.
Consumption of Liquor Decreasing.
Drink and Divorce.
To the Voter. (Illustrated.)
What Prohibition Will and Will Not Do Economically.
The Children Who Followed My Example.

Envelope size. Price, per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Books for Mothers

A Great Mother, Frances E. Willard. Price $1.50.
Alcohol a Dangerous and Unnecessary Medicine, Martha M. Allen.
How to Tell Stories to Children, Sarah Cone Bryant.
Price, each, $1.10.
Almost a Man, Dr. Mary Wood Allen.
Almost a Woman, Dr. Mary Wood Allen
Talks to Boys. Eleanor Hunter.
Talks to Girls, Eleanor Hunter.
Price, each, 50 cents.
Child Confidence Rewarded, Rose Woodallen Chapman.
Moral Problem of the Children, Rose Woodallen Chapman.
Price, each, 25 cents.
Confidences (talks with a girl), Dr. Edith Lowry.
Truths (talks with a boy), Dr. Edith Lowry.
Price, each, 55 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

BABY WEEK CAMPAIGN

MAY 1-6

LEAFLETS

For Distribution

Save the Babies
Give No Alcohol to Children
Alcohol and Nursing Mothers
Price per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents.

Safeguard the Babies
Booze and Babies (Cartoon)
What Mother and the Children Get (Cartoon)
Physicians Not Using Liquor
How Drunkards Are Sometimes Started
Booze and Babies
Price, 2 cents each; per 50, 15 cents; per 100, 25 cents

Do You Love Babies?
Price, 2 cents each; per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents

POSTER

The Nation
Which Does Not Protect Its Children
Is Doomed

Price 10 cents; three for 25 cents

"Baby's Health Nation's Wealth"

SOUVENIR

A tag with face of beautiful child and the words, "The Home versus Saloon"

Price per 100, 25 cents

DECORATIONS

Prohibition Fans with prohibition map and list of prohibition states on one side and the slogan, "Protect Our American Youth by Prohibiting the Liquor Traffic," on the reverse side. One side of the fan is in blue, the other white, so that by placing these alternately a very pretty effect is obtained and a silent lesson in prohibition given.

Price per dozen, 35 cents; per 100, $2.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

Evanston, Illinois

PROHIBITION DAY A RED LETTER OCCASION AT CHAUTAUQUA OF THE SOUTH

(Continued from Page Fourteen)

the audience, than the "Bone Dry Song," written by Mrs. E. R. Hines, a teacher at the G. N. & I. College, and sung to the tune of "Dixie" by the 285 delegates from that famous college, the words being as follows:

Away down south in Georgia land
We for prohibition stand—
We do, we do.
Away down south in Georgia
We have a gov'nor who's "bone-dry,"
Just the same as you and I—
Yes sir, yes sir.
That extra session put us through
And said, "John Barleycorn, 'skiddoo' "—
Yes sir, yes sir.
Away down south in Georgia,
Hurrah! Hurrah!
For dear old "bone-dry" Georgia!

Dr. Landrith Charms Young People

Dr. Ira M. Landrith, National field secretary of the National Christian Endeavor Society, candidate for Vice-President on the Prohibition ticket in 1916, caught and held the attention of the young people and the entire audience in a forceful national prohibition address. "We are witnessing the last four years of the liquor traffic," said Dr. Landrith. "If it please God to allow President Woodrow Wilson to live to serve out his present term, he will sign the greatest emancipation bill ever drawn and free men from the domination of King Alcohol. The United States Senate and House are now so dry that Sahara looks like a watering place compared to the Capitol at Washington. A politician can get religion in four minutes but it usually takes a party four years. However, the time is soon coming when you cannot get a drink in the United States, no matter what kind of a bird or beast you are. Not even the Elks or the Moose or the Owls or the Eagles or the Buzzards will be able to have their lockers."

Pointing to the large wet and dry map, loaned by the National W. C. T. U., a wonderful object lesson of prohibition's progress, Dr. Landrith said: "Look at the map of your country now. You can start at the north pole and go through the United States without being able to get a drink until you get into Mexico and find Villa, and nobody seems able to find him. You can go from the Atlantic to the Pacific through dry territory. Ninety per cent of the United States is now dry and the dry dog is tired of being wagged by the wet tail. I am in favor of local self-government, provided the people vote dry, but against it if they do not."

Miss Gordon in Washington

The absence of Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National W. C. T. U., was a disappointment. The call for the extra Congressional session necessitated her presence at the Capitol in the interests of National Constitutional Prohibition. Rev. Brooks Lawrence, field secretary of the Georgia Anti-Saloon League, who was to speak, was also called to Washington. Mrs. Armor read the following telegram from Miss Gordon: "Congratulations to Governor Harris, to friends in legislature and state and to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union on Georgia's splendid prohibition progress. We rejoice in the splendid Prohibition Day of your Southern Chautauqua and express to the management our appreciative thanks. Deeply regret that vitally important business holds me in Washington."

Generations to come will rejoice in reaping the harvests whose seed were sown on Prohibition Day.

AMONG OUR WORKERS

Preceding a diamond medal contest at Tampa, Florida, recently Mrs. Maude Carman Cathcart, associate National superintendent of the Medal Contest department, gave the illustrated story of "Two." Mrs. Cathcart also planned the contest and coached the contestants. A chorus of one hundred children took part in the program on this interesting occasion.

Mrs. Fannie A. Drummond, National organizer and general secretary of the Ohio Y. P. B., in a recent tour of Montgomery county, Ohio, in the interest of the Young People's Branch, addressed sixteen schools in two days. Eight of these were in the country and were reached in one day by auto in company with the township superintendent of schools and the county superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction. Mrs. Drummond also appeared on the program of the recent state convention of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association held at Delaware.

A franchise institute under the auspices of the Cook county (Ill.) W. C. T. U. was held recently at the Trinity Methodist Episcopal church, Chicago, Mrs. Iva G. Wooden, leader. The program included an interesting address by Mrs. Alice C. O'Neal; a suffrage symposium conducted by Mrs. Villa Cole Case representing the suffrage states, Alaska and the Danish West Indies; a forceful address by Mrs. Ella S. Stewart on the "Status of Suffrage and Temperance Legislation," and an address on patriotism by Bishop Samuel Fallows in which he said, "This nation has never gone to war for conquest, aggrandizement, or gain. We will win because we fight for right and against oppression. Our flag will win, our nation will win!" An illustrated lecture on scientific temperance by Miss Maude Newman was an interesting number. A resolution was passed urging the necessity for national prohibition as a war measure.

A boys' medal contest was recently held by the Houston Heights (Tex.) W. C. T. U. at which Hugh Lee Price won the silver medal for excellent delivery of the selection, "Jeremiah and His Pa." An informing address on medal contest work was given by Mrs. Mihills.

A distinctly novel suggestion for a local union meeting comes from the federated W. C. T. U. of Long Beach, California, which on a recent occasion toured the white states and territories of the country in a "White Ribbon Special." Passengers to the number of 250 made the trip. After the guests were seated in the train and had been introduced by the receiving hostess, Mrs. Hattie Corline Young, president of the federated union, gave a hearty address of welcome. Each stop on the route elicited much interesting information concerning the history, past and present, of the temperance movement. Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, president of the Southern California W. C. T. U., was one of the party and en route she welcomed to the ranks of the W. C. T. U. four white ribbon recruits. A welcome diversion was the announcement by the conductor of the train, "twenty minutes for refreshments." At the conclusion of the trip the installation of officers occurred, and Mrs. Irvine paid tribute to Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, whose birthday was being observed at this meeting.

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year
Club rate for ten or more subscriptions, 25c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

INCREASE YOUR UNION SIGNAL SUBSCRIPTION LIST

Suggestions for Special Demonstrations

VIDA THOMPSON, Manager Circulation Department

One of the following ideas may prove helpful for a UNION SIGNAL demonstration, but your own surroundings and circumstances will have to be considered and the suggestions can, of course, be amplified or changed as conditions warrant:

Union Signal Quiz

Two strong local unions may hold a UNION SIGNAL "Quiz" contest, or sides may be chosen as for an oldfashioned spelling match in which the "Quiz" is used. This would be very helpful in showing how THE UNION SIGNAL adds to the information of an organization and should be followed by a definite endeavor to secure new subscriptions, as that is the aim of the demonstration.

Model Meeting

Set the stage for a special meeting. Use THE UNION SIGNAL "Quiz" in this meeting either as suggested above or in any way desired. For example, write questions on slips of paper and hand them out at random to the women taking part in the model meeting. Each question should be clearly read and the answer given briefly. In this, as in the case of a contest, great pains must be taken to have the answers given clearly, briefly and in an interesting manner. Select questions with care. Such questions as the following, which is taken from the "Quiz" in the issue of March 29, are excellent: "Give seven reasons why prohibition is becoming increasingly popular in Colorado." Do not make the exercise too long. Follow immediately with an appeal for new subscriptions, which ought to be easily secured if the "Quiz" has been well given.

In Appreciation of the "Quiz"

THE UNION SIGNAL "Quiz" is very good. I am glad that there is something of this kind in the paper especially for local union meetings. It ought to help us to get new subscribers.

MARY F. HARRINGTON,
President Lafayette Union, St. Louis, Mo.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

When You Send Us Money

In sending money to the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union or to THE UNION SIGNAL, please either send a draft on Chicago or New York, a postoffice money order, or add ten cents to pay cost of exchange on personal checks. Cashier's or certified checks are not exempt from this charge, which is made necessary by the ruling of the Chicago Clearing House, through which all checks sent to us pass for collection.

$2.50 PER DAY SALARY PAID ONE PERSON in each town to distribute FREE circulars, and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring. Non-alcoholic. Big demand, steadily increasing. J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7G, E. Harrison St., Chicago.

W. C. T. U. ACTIVITIES

The W. C. T. U. of the Fifth district, South Idaho, held a most inspiring and helpful institute at Greenleaf, March 29-30, with Mrs. Lottie Hannon, Oregon state organizer, as institute helper. Mrs. Nettie Chipp, president of the South Idaho W. C. T. U., was in attendance at one of the evening meetings and gave many helpful suggestions. In a rousing address on patriotism Mrs. Hannon brought home to her hearers the fact that Idaho women have been so absorbed in eliminating the liquor traffic that other important things have been neglected. Although the state is dry there is still a great work for the W. C. T. U. Many of the problems of law enforcement and departmental work were presented and discussed and plans made for special work leading up to anti-cigaret legislation. Special educational work in the Anti-Narcotic and Medical Temperance department was outlined. Mrs. Alice Thompson, state vice-president, who is also president of the district, presided.

Chautauqua county (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. has come down to stern realities with a dull thud. Unions that had never before realized the importance of the Young People's Branch are taking up this work, and those that before had only given it slight consideration are specializing in it. It was the privilege of Chautauqua county to have Mrs. Maude B. Perkins, state Y. P. B. secretary, and National field secretary, the first week in April. Mrs. Perkins conducted a Y. P. B. school of methods at the Jamestown Y. W. C. A. Friday, April 6, and a Y. P. B. rally the following day. Both of these meetings were well attended. On Sunday she addressed the Baptist Sunday school and Italian mission, and at 6:30 p. m. a mass meeting of young people in the First Baptist church. She was received with much enthusiasm at every point. Plans are under way for Mrs. Perkins' return to the county for special work in the schools, and the young people have assured her of an enthusiastic reception. "Mrs. Perkins is a woman of beautiful Christian character, a consecrated worker, and she has the gift of holding the undivided interest of her listeners," writes our correspondent.

The Fowlerville (Mich.) W. C. T. U., which was re-organized in April, 1916, with a membership of twenty, before the close of the year secured thirty additional members. Among the activities of the year was the entering of a float in the Independence day parade which was awarded the first prize of ten dollars.

Sanitary Drinking Fountains

Also Drinking Fountains for Man and Beast.

Special prices to W. C. T. U. and all Charitable Societies.

This Fountain was erected by the W. C. T. U. of Luray, Va.

Write for Catalogue

J. W. Fiske Iron Works
56 & 58 Park Place
NEW YORK

Mrs. Amy C. Weech, National W. C. T. U. organizer, has completed a successful itinerary in Georgia and Alabama.

Bridgeville, Del., on March 15, was the scene of a fine gathering of county and local workers. On this occasion Mrs. Lena Messick, state W. C. T. U. president, told of the prohibition victories secured through the recent legislature. Prof. John I. Wentz, principal of the high school, and a strong advocate of temperance, attended a portion of the morning session, accompanied by the teachers and school children of Bridgeville from the tots of the primary grades to high school seniors. As each grade reached the front of the auditorium headed by its teacher, the children halted and the clear childish voices answered with enthusiasm "I, I, I," to the question, "Who wants Delaware Dry?" After all the children had thus pledged themselves, Mr. Wentz led them in the singing of "No Saloons in Delaware."

At the afternoon session Mrs. Victor DuPont, of Wilmington, gave a forceful address in which she contrasted conditions in wet and dry territory, and aroused in her hearers a renewed desire for National Constitutional Prohibition. Other speakers were: Mrs. Laura Pollard, who portrayed vividly the horrors of white slavery; Dr. L. E. Barrett, whose address was entitled, "Shut that Door"; Mrs. Waters, principal of the colored school, who made an inspiring appeal for her race. In connection with the address of Mrs. Waters six little colored girls, each holding a glass, sang "We'll Turn Our Glasses Upside Down."

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

¶We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.
¶Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
118-120 Fifth Ave., New York
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works
Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., MAY 3, 1917 | No. 18

Fathers and Mothers of This Country, Appeal to the President for Your Boys!

SEND immediately telegrams or brief letters to President Wilson appealing to him to protect from the legalized liquor traffic and its twin evil, the house of shame, your sons who go at his call to fight for their country. A few straggling letters or telegrams will amount to nothing, but an avalanche of appeals will make even the wheels of our great government stop.

This call is for you. Heed it in the fear of God.

MARGARET DYE ELLIS
National W. C. T. U. Legislative Superintendent.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

PROHIBITION DURING WAR TIME LIVE TOPIC—D. A. R. COMES OUT FOR ABOLISHMENT OF DRINK IN PRESENT CRISIS

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

The most important event of the week was the arrival in Washington on Sunday, April 22, of Great Britain's War Commission to the United States, composed of the Right Hon. Arthur J. Balfour, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and a corps of distinguished governmental representatives. Official announcement of the hour of arrival of the British party having been published, residents of Washington from every walk of life began in the early afternoon to wend their way to Union Station, until thousands of people filled every available spot. Directly in front of the station, facing the Plaza, stand three great Venetian flagstaffs, from which floated the American flag, the British Jack, and the French tri-color, the Stars and Stripes being in the center. The distinguished guests were met by Secretary of State Lansing and other dignitaries. The crowd was most enthusiastic in its welcome, cheering the Britons as long as their auto cars were in sight.

Formal calls on the President at the White House and the Vice-President at the Capitol, and other functions, occupied Monday. In the evening the President entertained at dinner a very notable company of British and American statesmen.

Wednesday morning the French War Mission to the United States, headed by Hon. Viviani, Minister of Justice for France, and Marshal Joseph Joffre (pronounced Joff), hero and popular idol of the French people, arrived. The streets were lined with cheering multitudes and the tri-color, with the American flag and the British emblem, were in evidence on every side. Among the French commissioners is Marquis de Chambrun, great-grandson of Lafayette.

Thursday evening the entire French party dined at the White House. During the ensuing days there will be diplomatic conferences and consultations concerning war plans, which will probably mean much for the future of the world.

Marshal Joffre has suggested that the United States send a few thousand skilled men to France who could do valuable work behind the lines. He mentioned railroad operators, chauffeurs, teamsters, mechanics of all kinds, packers, storekeepers, accountants, telegraph and telephone experts, linemen, motorcyclists, etc. This would be a practical way of helping France in her extremity.

Speech Making on Military Bill Order of the Day.

In both Houses of Congress the military bill is being discussed, with conscription as the objective point, and speech making is the order of the day. Senator Reed of Missouri discoursed four hours yesterday and the other Senators are taking almost as much time. The most telling speech of the day in the House on Wednesday was by Speaker Clark who, from the floor, with remarkable earnestness and eloquence, spoke for the volunteer system. For an hour and a quarter he kept the House and packed galleries in a tumult of enthusiasm, part of the time in a gale of laughter, often followed by a hurst of pathetic eloquence that brought the tears. At the close of his address he referred to his only living son who is "going into the army in any capacity in which he can be useful, either as an officer or as a private. Should he fall, I want the privilege of carving on his tombstone the words, 'This man, a Missouri volunteer, died fighting for his country.'" Speaker Clark, blinded by his tears, was led away and the great throng wept with him.

For the past two evenings, till ten o'clock, and through the days, the speech making has continued and the crowds are still there. At this date, April 27, it is altogether uncertain when the vote on conscription will be taken in either House.

There are three separate bills pending in the Senate and in the House proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States for National Constitutional Prohibition, besides nine hearing directly on protection for the soldiers from the saloons, and several for the conservation of foodstuffs. Especially does the latter subject appeal to every thoughtful person. Approximately 135,000,000 bushels of grain are worse than wasted every year. Surely this enormous amount of grain turned into food for the hungry would save many a life and this fact is being brought home to members of Congress by letters, telegrams, petitions, etc.

FLOOD THEM WITH TELEGRAMS KEEP THE WIRES HUMMING

A flood of telegrams should be sent from the states from which these men come, protesting against an increase of the tax on whisky and beer. In no way, however, should we lessen our efforts in our appeal to the President for prohibition as a war measure to conserve food and to protect our soldiers from liquor.

HOUSE WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE

Claude Kitchin, of North Carolina
Henry T. Rainey, of Illinois
Lincoln Dixon, of Indiana
Cordell Hull, of Tennessee
John N. Garner, of Texas
James W. Collier, of Mississippi
Clement C. Dickinson, of Missouri
William A. Oldfield, of Arkansas
Charles R. Crisp, of Georgia
Guy T. Helverling, of Kansas
George F. O'Shaughnessy, of Rhode Island
John F. Carew, of New York
George White, of Ohio
Joseph W. Fordney, of Michigan
Augustus P. Gardner, of Massachusetts
J. Hampton Moore, of Pennsylvania
William R. Green, of Iowa
Charles H. Sloan, of Nebraska
Ebenezer J. Hill, of Connecticut
Nicholas Longworth, of Ohio
George W. Fairchild, of New York
John A. Sterling, of Illinois
Whitmell P. Martin, of Louisiana

At this writing the subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee is in session, wrestling with a proposition to increase the revenue by placing a higher tax on whisky and beer, as well as on other things. Everyone knows that by this ruse the liquor men seek to show that whisky and beer are needed to help support the government and, in consequence, they can lay claim to protection. Fifty-five years ago, during the dark days of the Civil War, a liquor tax was inaugurated as a war measure and this fastened the liquor trade upon us up to this time. We know the present demand for revenue, which in all probability will increase as time goes on, and the distiller and brewer, always active and arrogant in politics, will become more so and declare "the government could not get along without it."

As is well known, word has gone out to state presidents, both by telegram and letter, from the National president, Miss Gordon, and the writer, as National superintendent of Legislation, urging that our splendid machinery immediately be set in motion for appeals to the President that he recommend to Congress prohibition legislation, not only for the conservation of food products, but for the safeguarding of our boys. Fathers and mothers all over this country should send a telegram or a brief letter to the President, saying just what is in the heart to say. It should not be rhetorical, nor an argument, but an appeal to protect from the legalized saloon and its twin evil, the house of shame, our sons, who will go out at the call of the President to fight for their country. A few straggling letters or telegrams will amount to nothing, but an avalanche of such appeals will make even the wheels of this great government stop. This call is for you. Heed it in the fear of God!

D. A. R. Comes Out for Prohibition as War Measure

The Daughters of the American Revolution held its annual congress in its beautiful Memorial Continental Hall last week, with the largest delegation in its history present, over a thousand registering. Its new president-general, Mrs. George T. Guernsey of Kansas, is a temperance woman and, for the first time, the D. A. R., as an organization, came out in a declaration for temperance. It follows:

"Whereas, the use of alcoholic drink is now universally recognized by modern medical science as injurious to health, as reducing the power of physical resistance and as impairing efficiency, and

"Whereas, the European nations now at war have either greatly reduced or entirely abolished the use of drink during the period of the war; and

"Whereas, our own country is now feeling a crisis in its history which will doubtless require the concentration and conservation of all its most vital forces and the elimination of all that could injure or reduce the efficiency of its people; and

"Whereas, the manufacture of alcoholic drink diverts to injurious use vast quantities of essential foodstuffs necessary to the life of the people, such as malt, wheat, corn, sugar, etc; therefore, be it

"Resolved, that we, the Daughters of the American Revolution, in Twenty-sixth Congress assembled, do hereby go on record as most earnestly recommending to the Congress of the United States the enactment of such legislation as shall abolish the sale and use of alcoholic drink during the period that the United States shall be engaged in the present war."

The National Mothers' Congress, which at this time is holding its annual convention in Washington, also has declared in its resolutions for prohibition during the war.

These are most hopeful indications of advance in sentiment along the line of total abstinence. Women in every walk of life realize the need of absolute prohibition when dangerous conditions confront us.

MEMBERSHIP WEEK, MAY 6-13

SWEDEN BARS LIQUOR SALE DURING MAY LABOR RALLY

The retail sale of all distilled liquors has been forbidden throughout Sweden from April 24 to May 12, according to the Associated Press reports. While it is not admitted officially, there is reason to believe that the order has a connection with the May day labor demonstration planned by the unions.

FLORIDA'S ANTI-LIQUOR LEGISLATION

Special Correspondence

Florida is rejoicing over the passage by the legislature of a referendum measure providing for a vote on a prohibition constitutional amendment in the fall of 1918. It is confidently expected that the state at that time will roll up an overwhelming majority for prohibition.

But we are not content to wait until 1918 to make Florida as dry as possible. Bills have been passed which will help to "clean up the state," namely, the Bryan Bill, the Wells Bill, and the amendment to the Davis Package Law. According to the provisions of these measures, no liquor can be shipped into dry territory—at least, only one quart per month is allowed, and that must be delivered to the head of the family. The express companies are made the bookkeepers, and their records must be open for investigation at any time. No clubs of any kind may serve liquor, even in wet counties.

The sentiment in the state has changed wonderfully in the last few years. One of the most notable illustrations of this fact is that a senator who for fourteen years had headed the liquor interests in the legislature, this year, at the request of a majority of the registered voters in his county—a county long considered hopelessly wet, took his place among those working for prohibition.

Only eight counties of Florida are now wet, and of these five are holding wet-and-dry elections this spring, with very good prospects of outlawing saloons.

More than that, woman suffrage is coming to the front most hopefully. Florida is going to be wholly up-to-date and progressive very soon. And the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is one of the strongest factors in all this change of sentiment.

GOVERNOR SIGNS COLORADO'S DRY BILL

The Horton bill, providing for restrictions on liquor importation, has been passed by both houses of the Colorado legislature and signed by the governor.

HONOR ROLL

—of—

PROHIBITION STATES AND TERRITORY AND DATE OF GOING INTO EFFECT

Maine		1851
Kansas		1880
North Dakota		1889
Oklahoma		1907
Georgia		1908
North Carolina		1909
Mississippi		1909
Tennessee		1909
West Virginia		1914
Alabama		1915
Arizona		1915
Virginia		1916
Colorado		1916
Oregon		1916
Washington		1916
Arkansas		1916
Iowa		1916
Idaho		1916
South Carolina		1916
Nebraska	*May	1, 1917
South Dakota	*July	1, 1917
Utah	†Aug.	1, 1917
Dist. of Columbia	†Nov.	1, 1917
Alaska	†Jan.	1, 1918
Indiana	†April	2, 1918
Michigan	*April	30, 1918
Montana	*Dec.	31, 1918
New Hampshire	†May	1, 1918

*Enacted 1916. †Enacted 1917.

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1917

Iowa†† Ohio New Mexico

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1918

Utah††	Missouri	Florida
Minnesota	Wyoming	Nevada

††Now have statutory prohibition. Will vote on constitutional amendment.

RUSSIAN LIQUOR LAWS MODIFIED

The provisional government of Russia has modified the rules governing the sales of alcoholic drinks by the introduction of the following regulations, according to the Associated Press reports:

1. The sale of alcoholic drinks containing a percentage of alcohol in excess of one and one-half degrees is prohibited throughout Russia.

2. Export to foreign countries of grape wines of every kind is permitted regardless of their percentage of alcohol.

3. In wine-growing districts the sale of wines produced locally and not containing a percentage of alcohol in excess of twelve degrees is permitted. Sales of these wines outside of the wine-growing districts is only permitted in towns and may be prohibited by the municipal authorities.

MRS. NELLE BURGER TO LEAD W. C. T. U. CAMPAIGN IN PORTO RICO

Mrs. Nelle Burger, president of the Missouri W. C. T. U., has been appointed by the National W. C. T. U., to lead the W. C. T. U. forces in the prohibition campaign in Porto Rico. She is planning to leave for Porto Rico as soon as it is considered safe to make the sea voyage.

Porto Rico is alive with prohibition enthusiasm, and there seems to be every reason to expect that the island will vote against liquor at the election in July. Mrs. Edith Wardell Hildreth, vice-president of the Porto Rico W. C. T. U., writes of a very successful demonstration recently held in one of the Y. M. C. A.'s. The audience was large and very responsive. Uncle Sam, the twenty-six dry states and the District of Columbia, were featured. A small native boy, in tears, took the part of Porto Rico, and in response to a question from Uncle Sam he replied, "I want to get in on this, too." Great applause greeted the words of the child.

The natives do not want any more rum, says Mrs. Hildreth, and she gives the credit to the splendid efforts of the missionaries who have been in the island for nineteen years and the organizing work of Miss Annie Robbins, National organizer, and president of the Porto Rico W. C. T. U., who spent some months in Porto Rico in 1916, with excellent results.

PERU OUTLINING CAMPAIGN FOR NATION-WIDE PROHIBITION

Intemperance has become so serious an evil in Peru that the government is planning a campaign to eliminate liquors. One step in the movement was the award offer recently mentioned in THE UNION SIGNAL of $500 for the best temperance text book to be used in the public schools. According to Porfirio Adan, a business man of Lima, and a member of the council of that city, as quoted in the Christian Science Monitor, the government is planning for nation-wide prohibition. "Strict laws are to be passed forbidding the making or the importation of drinks containing more than one and one-half of one per cent of alcohol," says Mr. Adan. "Eventually these also will be eliminated, and the government is even now experimenting with the production of non-alcoholic drinks which gradually can be substituted for the harmful drinks. It is estimated that nearly 75 per cent of the adult population of the republic, both men and women, are addicted to alcoholic drinks."

ALASKA AND FLORIDA PASS ANTI-LIQUOR ADVERTISING LAWS

From the far northwest and the far southeast, the territory of Alaska and the state of Florida, comes the news of the passage by their respective legislatures of anti-liquor advertising laws.

MAINE LEGISLATURE DISTINGUISHES ITSELF BY PASSAGE OF PROHIBITION AND SUFFRAGE MEASURES

SUFFRAGE CAMPAIGN IN FULL SWING

Special Correspondence

Maine is fortunate not only in her noble governor, but also in the character of the men who have composed the legislature, just adjourned.

The legislature exceeded all others in recent years in the passage of drastic measures against infractions of the prohibitory liquor law. The measures include the imposition of straight jail sentences in single sale, common seller, search and seizure, drinking houses and tippling shops, nuisance, illegal possession and transportation and importation of liquor into the state for illegal sale. These acts make it mandatory upon a judge to give a jail sentence in a liquor case with no alternative, but a judge may use his discretion in the case of sickness or for any other reason. The legislature besides passing the resolution providing for the removal of sheriffs enacted a law which would remove county attorneys for failure to enforce the prohibitory law, passed an act providing for the seizure and forfeiture of automobiles and other vehicles used in the transportation of liquor and made a stiff penalty to hit the pocket peddlers, so-called, and those who loiter about saloons and give information as to the approach of the officers.

An act was passed broadening injunction proceedings, which makes the owners of buildings liable where liquor is sold after due notice and also an act prohibiting transportation companies from delivering liquor at any other place than the regular place of business of the consignee.

Three resolutions proposing amendments to the constitution were passed and the people will vote on them at a special election which will be held next September: They are:

Granting suffrage to women upon equal terms with men, giving the governor and council the power to remove sheriffs, who are derelict in their duty, and empowering the legislature to authorize towns to divide into polling districts for the purpose of holding elections.

Mrs. Althea G. Quimby, president of the Maine W. C. T. U., has been in close touch with the leaders at Augusta and has been a frequent visitor at the legislature. She has spoken before the various committees as the bills having a bearing on temperance and reform have been under consideration.

Immediately on the passage of the suffrage referendum bill, Mrs. Quimby sent to each local union carefully arranged plans for a vigorous campaign. The first state-wide movement was the observance of March 20 as Poster Day, combining suffrage with temperance.

The unions are holding local and public suffrage meetings and quantities of suffrage literature are being distributed. A systematic study of suffrage and the conditions that have resulted from woman's vote in other states is being carried on, that our women may be prepared to meet any inquiries that may be made, either in the home or in public. Later it is planned to secure out-of-state speakers. At present prominent Maine people are being heard with interest on this state question. Among them are Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Lawrence, who have heartily entered into the campaign. Mrs. Lawrence is one of our popular National W. C. T. U. lecturers and Mr. Lawrence is giving valuable aid to the campaign in many ways.

Mrs. Gertrude Stevens Leavitt, the brilliant and capable daughter of our promoted leader, is devoting her many talents and unbounded energies to the cause. She is speaking often and through the Star in the East is making suffrage a popular topic. Mrs. M. K. House, state Franchise superintendent, is doing valiant and efficient work. Matrons' medal contests are in progress.

At a recent state executive a plan was launched to place one or two flying squadrons (automobile) in each county during the summer. These squadrons will be equipped with speakers and musicians and will distribute large quantities of literature. Congressmen and other public men have consented to speak for the W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Deborah K. Livingston, National Franchise superintendent, has been employed by the National Suffrage Association to conduct the campaign for that association in the state. Surrounded by a large and efficient corps of helpers she is leading the suffrage forces with her usual energy and ability. Her logical platform addresses are winning many votes for the cause.

The W. C. T. U. is co-operating with the Suffrage Association in circularizing the women of Maine with petitions, assisting locally in arranging for their speakers and rendering all possible aid for the success of the campaign generally.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION AS A WAR MEASURE

OPINIONS OF PROMINENT PEOPLE CONCERNING IT

GRAINS AND OTHER FOOD PRODUCTS WORSE THAN WASTED IN PRODUCTION OF ALCOHOLIC LIQUORS

Governor Lynn J. Frazier of North Dakota has expressed his views on prohibition as a war measure in the following message to President Wilson:

"President Woodrow Wilson,
"Washington, D. C.

"Believing that nation-wide prohibition would be a means of conserving a large amount of grains and other food products that are now worse than wasted in the production of alcoholic liquors, I respectfully urge that you recommend to Congress the immediate enactment of national prohibition.

"LYNN J. FRAZIER,
"Governor."

PROHIBITION AS A WAR MEASURE, A PEACE MEASURE, AND FOR ALL TIME

F. V. FITZGERALD, Secretary to Governor Simon Bamberger of Utah

Governor Bamberger is very much in favor of nation-wide prohibition, not only as a war measure but also as a peace measure. He is a very strong believer in prohibition and recently signed a bill making the state of Utah dry. He feels that some law should be passed which would take over the liquor producing and liquor selling interests and make them a part of the government machinery for food production at this critical time. Furthermore, the governor feels that such nation-wide prohibition should not be merely for the period of the war, but for all time.

CONGRESS OF MOTHERS URGES NATIONAL PROHIBITION

Nation-wide prohibition was urged at the opening meeting of the annual conference of the National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Association, meeting at Washington, D. C., by Mrs. Frederick Schoff, the president. Mrs. Schoff paid tribute to President Wilson and urged mothers to stand loyally behind him.

"Russia has given up vodka, China has abolished opium," she said, "and now that we are in the war, why should we not give up liquor?" Thirty-three states were represented at the conference and action was taken in favor of national prohibition.

DRY CHICAGO FEDERATION ASKS MAYOR OF CITY TO ISSUE PROCLAMATION FOR TOTAL ABSTINENCE DURING WAR DAYS

The Dry Chicago Federation, Rev. Philip Yarrow superintendent, has formally suggested to the mayor of the city that he issue a proclamation calling upon all people voluntarily to stop drinking. "Let the city council place on the city hall an electric sign, reading, 'Stop Drinking.' Let every priest, rabbi and minister, every school principal, every club president, every social, religious and labor leader cry out against the shameful iniquity of the drink evil. It should also be regarded as a mark of dishonor for any patriotic club or home to serve intoxicating liquors in these war days."

WE NEED A SOBER ARMY

TOM C. RYE, Governor of Tennessee

The deleterious effect of intoxicating liquors upon manhood being well known, and its demoralizing influence in civil life being fully understood, I do certainly favor the prohibition of the use of liquor in a crisis like the present. If we are to enter upon a righteous war, we should certainly have a sober army; and especially is the young man who goes from home influences entitled to be protected from the temptation of drink, not only for the sake of his efficiency as a soldier, but because the liquor habit will lessen his ability to properly fight the great battle of life when the war is over. These, in brief, are my reasons for favoring a nation-wide prohibitory law against the use and traffic in intoxicating liquors at this time.

FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES WIRES PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, representing thirty denominations having a membership of 18,000,000, in session in New York City on April 22, sent a message to the President and Congress urging the passage of a nation-wide prohibition bill as a war measure.

ENLIST NOW—MEN AND WOMEN—NO AGE LIMIT

DRINK AND BE PATRIOTIC

You Needn't Give Up Booze to Help Your Country—Just Sign This Pledge

Grain Conservers' Association of the United States

Whereas, I cannot do without booze; and

Whereas, Intoxicating liquors are made largely from grain that might otherwise be used for food; and

Whereas, Those who love their country more than they love booze are pledging themselves to do without drink during the war in order to relieve the food shortage; and

Whereas, Though I love booze more than my country, I still desire to show some patriotism and help my country in her fight for world freedom; and

Whereas, I consume my share of the country's grain in alcoholic liquors; therefore,

I hereby gladly promise, on my honor as a patriotic American citizen, that FOR THE DURATION OF THE WAR (AND AS LONG THEREAFTER AS THE SHORTAGE OF FOOD SHALL PERSIST), I WILL NOT EAT, BUY, SELL OR GIVE AWAY ANY BREAD OR OTHER FOOD MADE OF WHEAT, RYE, CORN OR OTHER GRAINS USED IN THE MANUFACTURE OF LIQUOR.

(Sign here).....

Persons interested in the perpetuation of the liquor traffic are urged to join this movement and help to give booze some little character. After the war is over when the manufacturers and sellers of intoxicating liquors will try to have prohibition rescinded, they will need every argument possible to convince the country that it needs the booze traffic in peace time. If all liquor dealers, manufacturers and drinkers were to sign and keep the above pledge, it would serve as a defense for the traffic and might prove the basis of an argument to restore the business to the ante-war basis.—North American of Philadelphia.

PROHIBITION AS A WAR MEASURE

With but one dissenting vote the Philadelphia County Medical Society, representing more than 1,000 of the city's most prominent physicians, recently went on record against the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages during the period of the war. This is the first time in the history of the society that action has been taken against the use of alcohol.

The Minnesota public safety commission, the war board of the state, in the interest of public safety, has ordered thirty-eight saloons and thirteen poolrooms in Minneapolis closed, and has established a dry zone of two and one-half miles around Fort Snelling military reservation.

There is a movement on foot to have the Michigan prohibition law go into effect immediately instead of in 1918, as the measure enacted provides. Such a petition to the legislature, circulated recently in Petoskey, was signed by practically every man to whom it was presented.

"You inquire whether I am in favor during the war of turning the grain now used for making liquor into food for the family. My reply without reservation is 'yes.'"

This was the somewhat surprising reply of Governor Cox of Ohio to a telegraphic inquiry as to his stand on national prohibition as a war measure.

The Chicago Methodist Social union, at a banquet which had as guests sixty representative ministers from cities in all sections of the United States, wired President Wilson in favor of prohibition as a war measure.

"I believe that the Federal government should immediately prohibit the manufacture of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes," says Charles W. Bryan, Mayor of Lincoln, Neb. "The people of the United States will need the foodstuffs that are wasted in the manufacture of liquor. We cannot continue to undermine the physical and moral manhood of the country and continue to reduce the efficiency both of the producers and the defenders of the country if we hope to bring to a speedy and successful termination the tremendous conflict which the nation is engaged in. Congress should act at once."

"Whatever action the Federal government takes in the matter of war-time prohibition to save the grain will meet with my endorsement," said Governor Burnquist of Minnesota. He added that he was already taking steps to conserve his state's grain and food supplies.

"I favor war prohibition to conserve the grain supply, as well as for other considerations," said Governor M. G. Brumbaugh of Pennsylvania. "Grain conservation was one of the impelling reasons which led me to telegraph President Wilson that 'every consideration of health and economy' warranted me in urging war prohibition."

The churches of Philadelphia, representing a membership of more than 150,000, passed resolutions urging Congress to stamp out the liquor business during the war.

"WE'RE MOBILIZING TURNIPS, TOO"

Open Letter to Prexy Wilson

Oh, Woody, dear, and did ye hear
The noise that's going round?
We are rising by ten thousands
And we're ploughin' of the ground!
We are droppin' in the corns and beans,
We are plantin' wheat for all,
We are mobilizin' turnips, too,
An' answerin' the call!

Your Auntie Sam is makin' jam
For all the boys to eat,
And when she gets her dander up,
You know she can't be beat!
She's bossin' all the folks about,
The farm's no home at all!—
It's just a mobilizin' camp
For answerin' the call!

So, Woody, dear, ye need not fear,
The country's coming strong,
You can hear the factories' whistles,
You can hear the dummy's gong,
You can hear the crops a-sproutin',
You can hear the seedlings say,
"We're pushing up for freedom, too,
We'll do our bit today!"

Your Uncle Sam says, "Here I am!"
We're marching everywhere;
We are plantin' beets an' bayonets,
O, we've hayseeds in our hair!
But we're marchin' to the music
Of a lasting peace for all—
With our reapers and our muskets
We are answering the call!

—A. C. in Chicago Tribune

A Chicago Sunday Evening Club audience numbering more than 2,500 applauded to the echo the appeal for prohibition during the war by Sherwood Eddy, director of Y. M. C. A. work in the prison camps and trenches of Europe.

"A million of our boys soon will be called to the trenches," said Mr. Eddy. "What are we going to do for them? Russia wiped out drink in a day. Others did not and suffered. Let us not make the same mistake."

Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, in Chicago Examiner: "When we are threatened with a shortage of foodstuffs and when it is our duty to supply food to our allies to our utmost ability, we should see that needed grain for food necessities is not diverted from its proper usage to the manufacture of intoxicants. Most of the belligerent nations in Europe have settled this problem. Let us begin at once."

A crusade to drive liquor from the United States has been started by the University of Kansas. More than 3,500 students and members of the faculty have petitioned President Wilson and the United States Congress to enact legislation to stop the use of food products for the manufacture of intoxicating liquors. "With the present shortage of foodstuffs," said Dean Templin, in discussing the question, "national prohibition is a duty. We are facing a situation in which economy is necessary and the first thing to cut down on should be the harmful use of foodstuffs."

The directors of the Kansas City (Mo.) Board of Trade have adopted a resolution asking Congress to prohibit the use of cereals for manufacturing whisky, and authorizing the secretary to request other boards of trade to take similar action.

Saloonkeepers in Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, have been forbidden by Judge James McF. Carpenter and Judge A. B. Reid, sitting in license court, to sell liquors to soldiers.

The committee of 10,000, of Chicago, a non-partisan organization for civic improvement, has wired to Congressman James R. Mann urging him to support war prohibition.

THOUSAND LEADING AMERICANS APPEAL TO CONGRESS FOR ENACTMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION

MEN AND WOMEN OF ALL CLASSES AND CREEDS UNITE IN REQUEST

When the history of the passing of alcohol shall be written, the 1917 memorial for National Prohibition presented April 24 to Congress will be given a place among the most important documents of that movement.

This memorial asks for nothing less than Federal action looking to the prohibition in the United States of the manufacture, sale, import, export and transport of alcoholic liquors.

It bases its appeal on the colossal injury drink is doing the country, on the failure of all forms of regulation and on the ripeness of public sentiment for drastic action.

Rarely if ever has a petition attracted more varied and more representative signatures.

The thousand come from places of leadership in all walks of life. Scientists, railroad presidents, university leaders, capitalists, socialists, men of letters, big industrials, leaders at the bar and in medicine are all to be found in the list.

Harvard, Yale, Columbia, Princeton, Johns Hopkins, Michigan, Chicago, Leland Stanford and almost every other important university and college in the country contributes each its quota.

Practically every state in the Union is represented.

The collection of signatures was made by correspondence, without organization, under the direction of a sub-committee of the Committee of Sixty, led by ex-Governor Foss of Massachusetts and Professor Fisher of Yale.

The names chosen from this document give some indication of the extent to which the public mind is turning to National Prohibition for the solution of the alcohol question.

That there is a great body of opinion favorable to prohibition which does not here come to expression is clear from the correspondence of the Memorial. Again and again have heads of corporations, while declining signature, expressed their sympathy with the movement. "If this were a matter involving my personal interest I would not hesitate for a moment because I am in favor of prohibition, but I have to remember that any pronounced position in this respect (by me) as an official of the ———— Railroad acts injuriously on the Road." So writes the President of a great railroad in the Middle West, and the President of another great Western System in like vein: "The question of prohibition is one that borders too much on politics for us to take any sides on it or to appear prominently either for or against. We practice prohibition in that we forbid the use of alcohol by our employes so far as we are able to do so, but we cannot very well preach it without going counter to the opinions of some of our people as well as to the very decided opinions of many of our patrons."

Some in the Federal service also regret that their position makes participation in this demonstration impossible. A paragraph from the letter of a hygienist known to both hemispheres reads:

"As an officer of the military service it would not be proper for me to attempt directly in any way to influence legislation. The Army regulations are against it." So far the official typewriter. Then below, in personal handwriting: "I am in favor of prohibition."

* * * * * * * * * *

The letters which accompany the signatures show in many cases a surprising intensity of feeling. "At this holiday season no letter has reached my desk which has filled me with more pleasure than your circular relative to prohibition," writes a Western ship-builder and a powerful Indiana manufacturer; "I am ready and willing at all times to assist in any movement for the destruction of the liquor traffic." A Pittsburg steel manufacturer volunteers to secure signatures himself: "If the plans to secure one thousand names should be enlarged so as to take in a much larger number of business men, I know very many here who would be glad to join. At a little conference of about a dozen business men located in the neighborhood of our mill to consider other matters, this question came up. Every one of these men expressed themselves regarding the evil effects of the saloon on their business and in favor of national prohibition. I was surprised at the unanimity of sentiment as but two of them were abstainers."

The entire directorate of a large textile concern sign in a body and write: "We are very pleased to enclose our signatures to the Memorial for National Prohibition, —a splendid move and exactly in line with present business requirements." The President of a large Southern corporation strikes the same note: "It gives me great pleasure to comply with your letter. I am convinced that the time has arrived when there should be some broad national movement along the lines as outlined. I feel confident that the proper way to secure National Prohibition is through the influence and active interest of the business men of the nation. It should be disassociated from the reform element. The appeal should be made strictly upon business issues."

* * * * * * * * * *

This sense of the incompatibility of alcohol and efficiency is reflected in the willingness of professors in our great engineering schools to lend their names. The epigram of Edison that "Alcohol in man is like sand in an engine's bearings" seems to voice a general conviction. The age of electricity will be even less tolerant of alcohol than the age of steam. "There is probably no step which the country could take (more fitted) to insure its general well-being and effectiveness," writes Professor Kennelly, the electrician of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, himself in earlier days a chief assistant of Mr. Edison, "than the total abolition of alcohol. I wish the Memorial every success."

MEMORIAL FOR NATIONAL PROHIBITION

In view of the scientifically proved unfavorable effects of the use of alcoholic beverages even in small quantities:

And in view, therefore, of the colossal, physical, mental, moral, economic, social and racial evils which the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquor entail;

And in view of the inadequateness of all methods hitherto employed to check or regulate these evils;

And in view of the great and rapid growth of public knowledge and sentiment on this subject as shown by anti-alcohol agitation and legislation through most of our national area:

The undersigned believe the time has come for the federal government to take steps looking to the prohibition in the United States of the manufacture, sale, import, export, and transport of alcoholic liquors.

Following is a partial list of the signers of the Memorial:

Mr. Luther Burbank, Santa Rosa, Calif.

Dr. James Brown Scott, secretary of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace; editor-in-chief of the American Journal of International Law; special adviser to the Department of State; expert in International Law for the United States at the Second Peace Conference at The Hague, etc.

Judge Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the United States Steel Corporation.

Mr. John Burroughs, naturalist and author.

Hon. Wm. J. Bryan, ex-Secretary of State.

Mr. Raymond Robins, social worker, Chicago.

Mr. Darwin P. Kingsley, president of the New York Life Insurance Co.

Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., chairman of the Rockefeller Foundation, New York.

Mr. Mark Sullivan, editor of Colliers'.

Mr. F. A. Vanderlip, president of the National City Bank, New York; trustee of the Carnegie Foundation.

Dr. Thomas Nixon Carver, professor of economics, Harvard University; president of the American Economic Association.

Dr. Richard M. Pearce, professor of research medicine, University of Pennsylvania.

Dr. Charles B. Davenport, director of the Department of Experimental Evolution, Cold Spring Harbor, Long Island; secretary of the Eugenic Section, American Breeders' Association.

Mr. Harry M. Estabrook, president of the Barney & Smith Car Co., Dayton, Ohio.

Hon. Frederick Frelinghuysen, president of the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co., Newark, N. J.

Mr. Winston Churchill, novelist.

Judge C. C. Kohlsaat, United States Circuit Court of the Seventh Circuit, Chicago.

Dr. F. W. Taussig, professor of economics, Harvard University; member of the Federal Tariff Commission.

The Rev. Dr. Charles H. Brent, bishop of the Philippines; president of the International Opium Conference at The Hague, 1912.

Mr. George W. Cable, author of "Old Creole Days," etc.

Mr. Clark Howell, cditor of the Atlanta Constitution, Atlanta, Ga.

Dr. M. J. Rosenau, professor of Preventive Medicinc and Hygiene, Harvard University; director of the School for Health Officers of Harvard University and the Institute of Technology, etc.

Mr. David R. Forgan, president of the National City Bank, Chicago, Ill.

Prof. Charles Thaddeus Terry, profcssor of law, Columbia University; chairman of the New York state board of directors on Uniform Laws; chairman of the directors of the New York Civic League.

Mr. Orville Wright, aeronaut and invcntor, Dayton, Ohio.

Dr. Victor C. Vaughan, dean of the Medical School, University of Michigan, and ex-president of the American Medical Association.

Dr. John Graham Brooks, president of the National Consumers' League, Cambridge, Mass.

Hon. Gifford Pinchot, president of the National Conservation Association; professor of forestry, Yale University.

Dr. W. J. Mayo, surgeon, Rochester, Minn.; founder of the Mayo Foundation for Medical Research; ex-president of the American Surgical Association.

Mr. Warren S. Stone, grand chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers; member of the Industrial Peace Commission.

Hon. M. G. Brumbaugh, governor of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Robert Treat Paine, trustee, vice-president of the National Municipal League; president of the Massachusetts Public Opinion League.

Mr. Jack London, author of "The Call of the Wild," "White Fang," etc.

Dr. David Starr Jordan, chancellor of Leland Stanford University, California.

Nelson A. Miles, Lieutenant General U. S. Army.

President Henry C. King, president Oberlin College, Oberlin, O.; trustee of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching.

Hon. John Wanamaker, former Postmaster-general, merchant.

Mr. Lawrence F. Abbott, The Outlook, New York.

Mr. Ray Stannard Baker, author and former editor of McClure's and the American Magazine.

Mr. Gutzon Borglum, sculptor, New York.

Mr. Chas. S. Pillsbury, vice-president of the Pillsbury Flour Mills.

Mr. Owen R. Lovejoy, general secretary National Child Labor Committee, New York.

Mr. Ernest Thompson Seton, author of "Wild Animals I Have Known," "The Biography of a Grizzly," etc.

Miss Ellen F. Pendleton, president of Wellesley College.

Dr. P. P. Claxton, United States Commissioner of Education; member of the Council of the National Education Association; of the Rockefeller Sanitary Commission, etc.

Mr. Paul U. Kellogg, editor of the Survey; former Director of the Pittsburg Survey.

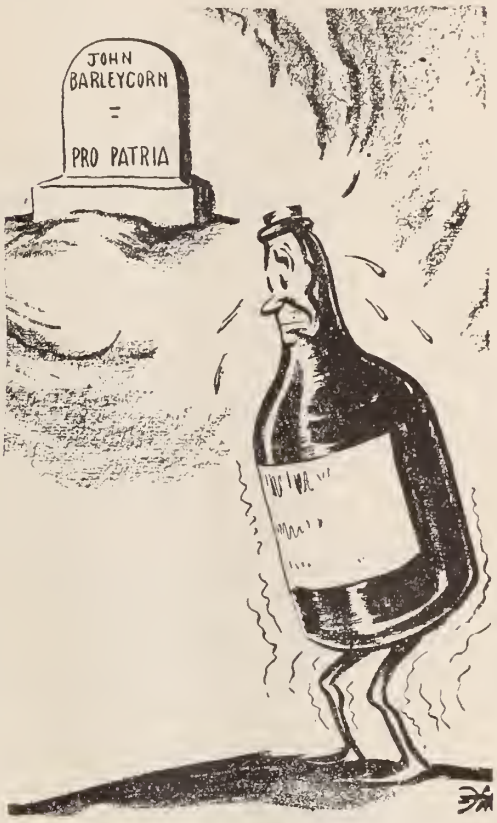
Mr. Bion J. Arnold, electrical engineer, Chicago; member of the Naval Consulting Board of the U. S. A.; ex-president of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers; chief engineer for the rebuilding of the Chicago Traction system; consulting engineer of the N. Y. Public Service Commission (subway construction); engineer in charge of the electrification of the N. Y. Central R. R. in and out of New York.

Ex-Governor Eugene N. Foss, executive chairman of the committee of sixty, in sending out a copy of the Memorial for National Prohibition, wrote as follows:

"In view of the widespread and increasing demand for war prohibition it may be of interest to your readers to learn that about eight hundred of these signers (99% of those replying to a telegram from us) have already put themselves on record for immediate enactment of prohibition as a military measure.

"The chief arguments for prohibition as a war measure are (1) food-saving, which in grain alone would afford a loaf of bread a day apiece for an army of 11,000,000 men; (2) protecting army and navy from venereal diseases so disastrous abroad; (3) promoting efficiency in the production of war materials."

SEEING THINGS



—St. Louis Post Dispatch

Dr. Shailer Mathews, Chicago University; president of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Gilman, author and social reformer, New York; editor of the Forerunner.

Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, chief chemist, U. S. Department of Agriculture, 1883-1912.

Dr. Howard A. Kelly, professor of gynecological surgery, Johns Hopkins University.

Mr. Robert A. Woods, social worker, The South End House, Boston.

Prof. M. V. O'Shea, professor of education, the University of Wisconsin, director of Home and School, the Mothers' Magazine, etc.

Dr. Cyrus Northrop, ex-president of the University of Minnesota.

Miss Jane Addams, head resident worker, Hull House, Chicago; author; chairman of the Woman's Peace Party.

Col. L. Mervin Maus, medical corps, U. S. Army, retired; secretary Tuberculosis Commission of Kentucky.

Prof. Dr. Max F. Meyer, professor of psychiatry, University of Missouri.

Dr. L. H. Murlin, president of Boston University.

Dr. Edward A. Ross, professor of sociology, University of Wisconsin.

Mr. James N. Gamble, Procter and Gamble, manufacturers of Ivory Soap, Cincinnati, O.

President Mary E. Woolley, Mt. Holyoke College, South Hadley, Mass.

The Rt. Rev. Walter T. Sumner, bishop of Oregon; secretary of the Church Association in the Interests of Labor; ex-chairman Chicago Municipal Vice Commission.

Dr. Edward A. Steiner, professor of Applied Christianity, Grinnell College, Ia.; author of "On the Trail of the Immigrant," etc.

Hon. Luke Lea, U. S. senator from Tennessee.

Dr. Irving Fisher, professor of economics, Yale University; president of the American Association for Labor Legislation.

Mr. John V. Farwell, John V. Farwell Co., Chicago.

Mr. Hamilton Holt, editor of the New York Independent; director of the World Peace Foundation.

Dr. W. A. Evans, editor of Health Dept., Chicago Tribune; former health commissioner of Chicago.

Dr. M. Carey Thomas, president of Bryn Mawr College, Bryn Mawr, Pa.

Mr. Booth Tarkington, novelist.

Dr. Katherine Bement Davis, former superintendent of the New York State Reformatory for Women, Bedford, N. Y.

Dr. Eugene L. Fisk, director of hygiene, Life Extension Institute, New York.

Mr. Homer Folks, social worker, secretary of the New York State Public Health Commission; president of the American Association for Study and Prevention of Infant Mortality, etc.

Ex-Governor Chester H. Aldrich, of Nebraska.

Dr. Frank L. McVey, president University of North Dakota; ex-professor economics University of Minnesota; chairman National Conference on Marketing and Farm Credits.

Mr. James Schermerhorn, editor of the Detroit Times, Detroit.

Prof. Walter Rauschenbusch, author of "Christianity and the Social Crisis."

Mr. Robert E. Speer, secretary Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church.

Miss Alice Stone Blackwell, editor of the Woman's Journal.

Mr. Charles W. Bryan, mayor of Lincoln, Neb.

Dr. Stratton D. Brooks, president of the University of Oklahoma.

Rev. Harry F. Ward, professor of social service, Boston University.

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, president of the International Woman Suffrage Alliance, New York.

Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Mr. Hamlin Garland, novelist and dramatist.

J. H. Kellogg, M. D., LL.D., director of the Battle Creek Sanitarium.

Rev. Charles Stelzle, social worker, New York.

Dr. Luther H. Gulick, director of department of Child Hygiene Sage Foundation, 1907-13; specialist in physical education.

Mrs. Maud Ballington Booth, head of prison work of the Volunteers of America.

Mr. S. S. McClure, editor McClure's Magazine and president of the S. S. McClure Co.

Mary Antin, author of "The Promised Land," etc.

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, May 3, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

ARE YOU DOING YOUR "BIT?"

The call to the colors in this war is for universal service. For every man, woman, and child there is a work. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has mobilized its forces and every member of every local union is claiming the privilege of helping to carry out the plans outlined in last week's UNION SIGNAL.

The president of the National W. C. T. U. has sent an urgent request to every great woman's organization in this country to co-operate with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in an appeal to President Wilson for the protection of the young men who are enlisting. Acting in harmony with the request of our National president, let every white ribboner use her influence immediately to interest the women's organizations in her own community. Note what Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis says in her Washington Letter concerning the necessity for prompt action.

As suggested last week, working through our Soldiers and Sailors department and in co-operation with the Red Cross Society, is probably the speediest and most effective way to assist in the furnishing of equipment for hospital service. Note the method by which the Illinois W. C. T. U. has associated itself with the Red Cross movement, and if there is in your vicinity a fort, naval training station or mobilization center, make inquiry concerning the needs of the men stationed there and do your best to supply them. Do not forget that official permission is necessary before undertaking such an enterprise.

Mobilize the children of the Loyal Temperance Legions and the schools into garden squads for the cultivation of vacant lots, or get them to take the responsibility of caring for a few Red Cross rows in the gardens of their fathers, the proceeds to be used for war relief work. Report what you are doing, or planning to do, to THE UNION SIGNAL, that your experience may inspire others to engage in similar work.

SOMETHING IN RETURN

One cannot fail to be imbued with a deep sense of responsibility and duty as one reflects upon President Wilson's appeal to all Americans to so think and speak and serve that we shall be enabled to meet with dignity and true patriotism the supreme test that comes to us in these trying days. The appeal of our Commander-in-Chief is addressed to the greatest army ever arrayed upon any battlefield, 100,000,000 American citizens, and the field upon which this army is marshalled is all American soil.

The President calls upon people of every class for their most loyal devotion. Every great division of our vast civil army is summoned to do its best. Especially does the call come with insistent force to the farmers and the women of America, for these constitute a mighty host whose loyalty will make our nation invincible, or whose dereliction will mean defeat. In the last analysis the nation's life depends upon these, a fact none can dispute. Transportation, commerce, armies, workmen—all are necessary, but back of these is a mighty reserve force, without which all else fails—the food producers and the mothers of men.

And the farmers of America will not be slackers in their sphere, and the women, in whose veins runs the red blood of patriotic ancestors, will be true to their type. The victory that depends upon them will under God be won. But the farmers and women of America are justly asking for something in return.

It is universally conceded that when women wield the ballot John Barleycorn goes out. The Illinois legislature defeated the suffrage referendum because with women voting the liquor interests dared not face the issue, and the liquor interests prevailed. The rural districts outlaw the saloon. The farmers do not want the liquor traffic anywhere. The men of the soil want a sober nation. They know the ruin drink brings to their boys—and girls—in town, or camp, or field, or home. The farmers want national prohibition.

None know better than do women the devastation drink has wrought. Women have suffered and wept, pleaded and endured. Now in the supreme hour of their country's need they stand ready to yield the last full measure of devotion for their country's sake, but in the name of American womanhood they ask for something in return—the protection of their best beloved from the vampires of drink and vice.

National prohibition of the drink traffic and national suppression of the vice districts which curse every camp and outpost and destroy more men than do the enemy's bullets—for this our American mothers of men make their appeal to our President. With supreme devotion they stand ready to respond to his appeal to give their best to their country. Will he not heed their cry—will he not grant their just request?

WILL HISTORY REPEAT ITSELF?

The widespread concern of the mothers of the nation over the vice conditions that prevail in connection with the liquor evil in places selected by the government as mobilization centers and the appeals to the President for legislation that will safeguard the young men who are enlisting, recalls an interesting bit of W. C. T. U. and national history which occurred not long after the Spanish-American war.

While the Philippine Commission, with Judge William Howard Taft at its head, was in control, it was learned that there existed in the islands and in the vicinity of the army camps an unspeakable condition of moral corruption and that with the consent of the army authorities houses of prostitution were being established, maintained and inspected for the use of the soldiers. When the National W. C. T. U. brought these facts to the attention of the proper Federal government officials they claimed ignorance but promised to investigate. Some time passed without attention being given to the matter and the National W. C. T. U. decided to send out, in an illustrated circular letter, facsimile pages of a pass book issued by "The Department of Inspection of Manila" with extracts from the Surgeon General's and General Miles' reports giving further conclusive proof that the National W. C. T. U. had protested none too strongly. This little "black book" contained the lithographed picture of a poor little Filipino girl, one of the victims, and four pages showing it was issued by the "Department of Inspection of Manila," with the American physicians' signatures and dates of weekly inspections. Thousands of copies of this circular were sent out over the country with the request that personal letters of protest be sent to President Roosevelt urging him to abolish the system of so-called regulation of vice in the Philippines. Shortly after these circulars went out Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis, then as now National Legislative superintendent, was summoned to the offices of the Insular Division of the War Department and asked if she knew anything concerning the circular. She admitted that she did. The head of the department inquired the membership of the organization that was back of the movement. When informed that it was about 300,000 he exclaimed that he thought it must have been a million by the number of protests the department had received. He complained that it had taken ten clerks to care for the mail that reached the War department as the result of the publicity given through the circular. "Can't you call those women of the W. C. T. U. off?" he begged. He then informed her that as a result of the appeal action had been taken by the War department and an order had been issued by direction of President Roosevelt saying, that there was so much agitation over the conditions in the Philippines, they called upon the officers to try by precept and by example to point out to the men under their control the inevitable misery and disaster which would follow upon intemperance and upon moral uncleanliness and vicious living.

If fifteen years ago the appeal of the women of one organization concerning vice conditions in the far-away Philippine Islands could prove effective, surely today the united voices of the mothers of America praying for the protection of their sons from the liquor traffic and commercialized vice in this country will not be denied.

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, 561 Thirty-third St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

BEER VS. BREAD

A Parable

There was once a city which, though its armies were victorious, was in dire straits for food.

The general officer in command and the civil authorities knew it would be revictualled in a certain number of months, but it was doubtful if they had food enough to last till the revictualling.

So they made strict search to ensure that nothing which could be used for food should be wasted.

Soon the general came upon a great store of barley and many barrels of sugar. "We are saved," said he; "here is enough barley and sugar to ensure our safety. We can hold out now till the revictualling. This barley mixed with corn will make excellent bread, and the sugar will save the children."

"Alas!" said the civil authorities, "you are mistaken. All this barley and sugar is going to be turned into beer. We dare not touch it."

At these words the general, who was a simple soldier and did not understand politics or agriculture, grew very angry. Said he: "You are not serious? Nobody can be allowed to turn into beer what might be made into bread and so save the city! This is a town of sane people and not a lunatic asylum!"

"You evidently don't understand the situation," said the civil authorities. "Even when it is a question between Beer and Bread, Beer will win."

"What, in war time, and when famine threatens? Nonsense!" said the general.

"You will find it's true all the same," said the civil authorities.

And so it proved. The barley was not used for bread. The city fell and the conquerors drank the beer.

Moral—When Beer comes before Bread, the people perish.—Ignotus, in Spectator

RED CROSS WORK FOR ILLINOIS WOMEN

The Illinois W. C. T. U. branch of the Red Cross movement is to be opened May 4 at state W. C. T. U. headquarters, 1118 The Temple, Chicago, Illinois. Miss Epha Marshall, state corresponding secretary, will be in charge of the work, with a paid helper to assist her.

Before inaugurating the work, Miss Helen L. Hood, president of the Illinois W. C. T. U., secured approval from Army and Navy Headquarters of a plan to supply comfort bags to soldiers at Fort Sheridan and sailors at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station. These bags are to be made of khaki, cut by the Red Cross pattern, but the filling is to be of the W. C. T. U. kind—Testaments and total abstinence pledge cards to be substituted for cigarets and playing cards. Khaki will be furnished from Army and Navy Headquarters at 17 cents per yard. A financial plan for meeting the expense of this Red Cross work is under consideration. Local unions can order the "cut-out" bags and do the sewing either in their meetings or in their homes. The finished bags are to be returned to 1118 The Temple, Chicago, Illinois, and after being filled there will be sent to Fort Sheridan or to the Naval Training Station. At Fort Sheridan, by May 8, there are to be 5,000 men in training for officers. The "Jackies" are being sent forward from the Naval Station as rapidly as they can be fitted for service. It is not possible at this time to estimate the number of boys who will be in training there this summer.

THE POSTER PRIZES

On April 15 the National W. C. T. U. poster contest closed. Thirty-five dollars were awarded in prizes as follows:

First, $15, Mrs. C. P. Lindsay, Albany, N. Y.

Second, $10, Miss W. S. Parks, Evanston, Ill.

Third, $2, Mrs. Edwin S. Small, Melrose, Mass.

Fourth, $2, Miss Edna C. Ganon, Binghamton, N. Y.

Fifth, $2, Miss Mogie Kate Mahoney, Atlanta, Tex.

Sixth, $2, Mrs. Daisy Phipps, Atlanta, Tex.

Seventh, $2, M. Humes, Moran, Kan.

Honorable Mention

Mrs. Lotta B. Huson, Ithaca, N. Y.
Miss Magdalene Walter, Princeton, Ill.
Mrs. Nellie M. Seibert, Bridgeton, N. J.
Mrs. Charline Abbott, Rochester, N. H.
Mr. Robert Champe, Evanston, Ill.

The committee on awards consisted of Mrs. Richmond Pearson Hobson, Mrs. Minnie B. Horning, Rev. Philip Yarrow, superintendent of the Dry Chicago Federation, and the National W. C. T. U. Committee on Publications.

ENLIST DRINKERS FOR EMERGENCY FARM WORK IN "BONE DRY" STATES

The women physicians of Philadelphia are working for the formation of a confidential bureau under the recently proposed labor clearing house at Washington through which men addicted to drink can be transferred upon their own application to "bone dry" states to take the places of farmers and laborers who have enlisted in the Army or Navy.

"There are many men, who because of their drinking habits and physical disability, would be debarred from active service, and yet who are anxious to work for their country," said Dr. Lida Stewart Cogill, who is one of the women behind the movement. "If these men could be given a chance to fill the places of men in dry states, they could make good, and at the same time be given a chance to overcome their weakness.

"The bureau should be confidential. It need not be necessary for any one to know the circumstances but the employer. Farmers and tradesmen in any line, who enlist from dry states, could apply for such men to take their places while they are gone. Many of them would make good, and come back at the end of the war broken of the drink habit."

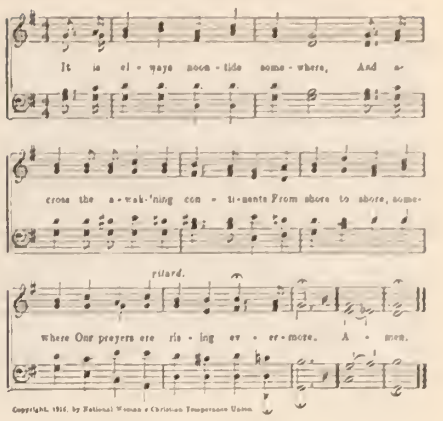
UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do You Know the Answers to These Questions? They May Be Found in THE UNION SIGNAL of April 26

Ten questions, the answers to which will be found in the preceding number of THE UNION SIGNAL, will appear each week. The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. By what immediate action can every white ribboner help the movement for a prohibition war measure?
2. Give three or four telling arguments that are being urged in favor of national prohibition during the war.
3. Name the special lines of war relief and conservation work white ribboners are engaging in. Give details.
4. Can the United States learn anything from a study of the food and beer situation in Great Britain? If so, what?
5. What special truths should be emphasized by the W. C. T. U. during the observance of Baby Week, May 1-6?
6. Why is the W. C. T. U. looking forward to the week of May 6-13 as one that will mark a great increase in its membership?
7. To what extent is prohibition impoverishing Kansas, according to the latest investigations?
8. Give the date of the next Temperance Sunday, and the topic to be considered.
9. Name the three latest suffrage victories.
10. How many breweries and distilleries is it estimated would be closed by a nation-wide prohibition law?

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



IN TIME OF WAR

O God, in whom our fathers trusted, be with us in our time of trial and our new endeavor to rebuild the world in righteousness. Let not sorrow or excitement teach our hearts to hate or turn us from ideals of love and brotherhood learned in companionship with Christ. Lord, in thy mercy shorten the days! but bring about, through sacrifice, freedom and righteousness and a final end of cruelty and war. Remember the sorrowing. Strengthen our hearts as we send forth those we love and sustain us in all experience of grief and loss. Remember thy servant, our President, and those who counsel with him, the makers of laws, the leaders of our armies. Be with us as we serve the nation's need in home and farm and factory; with sailors in perils of the deep, with soldiers in training and temptation and in the day of battle; with doctors and nurses in all their ministry to suffering. Give us, if it please thee, bountiful harvests, that we may eat with thankful hearts and feed the hungry of the world. In all thou sendest let thy kingdom come through the glory and rule of Christ. In his name. Amen.

—Isaac Ogden Rankin

THE SIN OF SILENCE

To sin by silence, when we should protest,
Makes cowards out of men.
The human race has climbed on protest;
Had no voice been raised against injustice, ignorance and lust,
The inquisition yet would serve the law,
And guillotines decide our least disputes.
The few who dare must speak and speak again
To right the wrongs of many.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

FLAG ETIQUETTE

The rules formulated for the use of the flag by the Sons of the American Revolution provide that it should not be hoisted before sunrise, nor left up after sunset. At "retreat" and sunset, civilian spectators should stand at attention and they should uncover during the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner." Military spectators are required by regulation to stand at attention and salute. When the national colors are passing on parade or in review, the spectator should, if walking, halt, and if sitting, arise and stand at attention and uncover. During the playing of the national hymn at "retreat," the flag should be lowered but not allowed to touch the ground. When the national flag and a state flag fly together, the national flag should be at the right. The flag is dropped to half mast as a sign of mourning, and is placed with the canton downward as a signal of distress.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

May 6-13—Membership week
May 13—Mothers' Day

SUPERINTENDENTS

MORAL EDUCATION AND RACE BETTERMENT

MARY E. BROWN

An encouraging feature of the work this year is the number of state superintendents who are actively propagating sentiment for better moral instruction generally. The letters received from some of these co-workers are very inspiring. Such seed sowing will bear a blessed harvest.

The extension loan package of leaflets and booklets for use by state superintendents will be sent out soon. It is hoped that local unions and individual members will make use of this opportunity to secure these helps, for temporary use, by payment of shipping charges.

The circulating library for the personal use of state superintendents is taking shape and the books will soon begin their round of visits. If those who desire the loan of a book for two weeks will send their name and address to me they will receive it with instructions for sending it on to the next user. Those superintendents who own books which they wish to donate to the circulating library will please send the same to me.

The attention of superintendents in wet states is called to the leaflet entitled, "Prohibition and Purity." It will be of help in arousing the interest of some who have not yet realized the relation of the liquor traffic to commercialized vice and clandestine immorality. It is so arranged that it can be used as a program. Send two cent stamp for sample.

Have you arranged a Moral Education program for your local union? One of the efforts of this year is to carry the discussion of one or more of the leaflets of this department into a meeting of the union and thus arouse increased interest in the work. Try it.

Do not fail to impress the importance and value of the use of literature. Scatter the helpful leaflets everywhere. This can be done at meetings of all sorts, by personal distribution, through the mails, and otherwise. Keep a good supply and send them out to do their silent service. Good returns will follow.

If you are not familiar with the leaflets of this department, send a stamp for postage and a sample package will be sent to your address.

3188 Arcade Bldg., Seattle, Wash.

PARLIAMENTARY USAGE

PLAN OF WORK

MRS. I. W. GLEASON

Let justice and equality to all be your motto, and prepare to better serve mankind by obtaining a knowledge of parliamentary law.

1. Be sure to have a state and county superintendent of Parliamentary Usage and a local superintendent for every union.
2. Study Mrs. Benjamin's Parliamentary Studies Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4.
3. Every member should own her own books and study lessons at home.
4. Give ten minutes or more at each meeting to parliamentary practice. Have parliamentary programs and hold a contest.
5. Each state superintendent is requested to institute the contest system within her state. Instruct each local union to hold a contest upon the year's study and send the winning contestant to the county convention to take part in a county parliamentary contest, the county winning contestant to be sent to the state convention to take part in a state parliamentary contest, the state winning contestant to be sent to the National convention.

Outline of Study

Prepare for the contest by studying all of Mrs. Benjamin's book No. 1 and the subsidiary or secondary motions in book No. 2.

First lesson. Study the introduction in No. 1 and make a U. S. D. A. M. V. R. chart on a main motion.

Second lesson. Study methods of voting.

Third lesson. Study the duties of officers.

Fourth lesson. Make a U. S. D. A. M. V. R. chart on the motion "To postpone indefinitely," and conduct drill upon the same.

Fifth lesson. Make U. S. D. A. M. V. R. chart on the motion "to amend."

Sixth lesson. Make U. S. D. A. M. V. R. chart on "To commit" and "To postpone definitely."

Seventh lesson. Make U. S. D. A. M. V. R. chart on "The previous question."

Eighth lesson. Make U. S. D. A. M. V. R. chart on "To table" or "Take from the table."

Ninth lesson. Study methods of election.

Tenth lesson. Hold contest upon the year's study.

Explanatory

U. S. D. A. M. V. R. stands for seven things to be remembered about every motion.

Chart on Main Motion

1. U—(use) To introduce business.
2. S—(second) (Does it require a second?) Yes.
3. D—(debatable) (Is it debatable?) Yes.
4. A—(amendable) (May it be amended?) Yes.
5. M—(motions in order) (What motions may be made while the main motion is pending?) Answer: Privileged, incidental and subsidiary motions.
6. V—(Vote required to carry?) Majority.
7. R—(Reconsider) (May it be reconsidered?) Yes.

Instructions

State superintendents should send the department "Plan of Work" and the "Report Blanks" to the county superintendents for distribution to the local unions, and should urge upon them to return the same in time to permit the reports to be compiled before the conventions; the local unions reporting to county superintendents, the county unions to state superintendents and the state to the National superintendent.

State, county and local superintendents are urged to offer appropriate prizes to the winning contestants at their respective contests.

Your National superintendent offers a prize to the state superintendent who holds a contest upon the year's study at the state convention, places the largest number of parliamentary books, and makes the greatest number of visits to organizations, giving lessons, drills or lectures in the interest of parliamentary law.

In competing for prizes, and in all reports on work accomplished, points will be computed as follows:

Two points for every ten minutes devoted to drill work or study of parliamentary usage in unions.

Five points for every parliamentary book placed.

Fifteen points for each hour contest with prize.

In contest work where "Robert's Rules of Order, Revised" conflicts with Mrs. Benjamin's ruling, answers based on either ruling will be accepted as correct, if stated.

A special reduction in price will be made on orders of 100 Studies, and states placing 50 or 100 during one year will receive special mention in the National report.

Mrs. Benjamin's Parliamentary Studies Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4, may be ordered from her, from the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill., or from the National superintendent, 1110 W. 30th St., Los Angeles, Calif.

Drink does not make good soldiers. It does not turn out good work. Its manufacture uses up good foodstuffs. A nation at war has no use for drink. Russia learned it, France learned it, England learned it. Shall we learn it first—or last?—The Independent.

WHY SHOULD WE JOIN THE W. C. T. U.?

MRS. F. M. HOWARD

The twentieth century is greatly addicted to clubs. Card clubs, social and literary clubs, their name is legion, and in view of their numbers a doubt as to their utility will sometimes intrude. Is the club woman who gives abundantly of her time and strength to the various organizations of which she is a member, sufficiently repaid for her devotion?

A club which might, with excellent reason, become yet more popular and better known is the W. C. T. U.—a temperance club. In joining a club of any kind most of us have some object in view beyond passing a social hour. The literary club delves into the past, and unearths the mysteries of ancient Rome, inquires into the morals of ancient Greece, and listens to abstruse papers on the myths of Norway and other regions, but in joining the temperance club, one has to do with subjects very much nearer home.

The Norwegians are leaving their myths behind them and coming to our shores, sturdy and self-reliant, yet needing an outstretched hand to help them become accustomed to our country, and awaken them to the duty they owe the government which is giving them a home. The manners and morals of the Greek of today, as he comes here and mingles in our social and political life, are of much more importance to us than those of his predecessors, and as for Rome, about all we have left of her pomp and glory is the admonition, "When in Rome do as the Romans do."

TEMPERANCE, spelled with big letters, is the main purpose of the W. C. T. U. It is fighting the saloon evil, first, last and all the time, and surely that is an object which should appeal to every woman in every community. The mothers should join this club to learn more of the evils which are tempting their boys, the sisters should become members to ascertain how best to help their brothers, the wives to gain a knowledge of the traps and pitfalls which are every day being set to entice their husbands. It is the serious object of the W. C. T. U. to learn these things, and having learned them, to use the knowledge for the good of others.

The careless and indifferent say, "It is none of my business how the saloons are run," but it is your business. If it is not today, it may be tomorrow. That boy of yours is getting to an age where the stool pigeons of the saloon are watching to coax him in—to form his taste and make a customer of him for the future.

Your daughter has made the acquaintance of a young man who drinks, only a little now and then on the sly, but she loves him, and some day may be a drunkard's wife. Yes, it is your business, and you need the W. C. T. U. to educate and reform your ideas, until you shall see your duty to yourself and your generation.

It has been our boast that our country was safe for a woman or a girl to travel in, from one end to the other; that the chivalry of men had made a wall of protection between them and danger, but it is true no longer. The white slave traffic rears its ugly head all over our land, and many pure, innocent girls simply disappear and are never seen or heard of again.

It is the province of the W. C. T. U. to be informed in regard to these evils and to expose them. The time is past for prudish modesty, which shunned the very mention of the social evil, and the cry, "To arms," resounds through the land. Your girl may be safe in the shelter of your home, but what of your neighbor's daughter who is not so sheltered. Join the W. C. T. U. and learn about the dangers which threaten her.

Tommy looks rather cute, some people think, when he learns to roll a cigaret—to puff out the smoke and strut off as father does, but do they know that the innocent looking little roll of white paper is carrying poison—soul and body poison—all through the system of the child, deadening his brain, dulling his conscience, and stunting every physical and mental faculty? We are horrified when we read of the Chinese den with its opium fiends, but our boys are just as surely being poisoned by cigarets. Join the W. C. T. U. and learn why it fights the cigaret habit with all the force which knowledge and experience can give.

As an organization the W. C. T. U. believes in equal suffrage. "But I don't want to vote," cries Mrs. Timorous. "The home is woman's sphere." Quite true, dear Madam, but you will not be obliged to vote, please remember. Equal suffrage will never force one woman to vote, against her will, but it will give the ballot to those who do desire it, and their votes will benefit you in spite of yourself. Your home is your sphere, but if a burglar should open your window and creep in, you would scream for the police outside of your sphere, wouldn't you? The saloon burglar is trying to enter your home and steal its brightest jewel, the social evil burglar is watching to catch the fair treasure of your daughter's honor, but outside are the forces which work for purity, and they are watching, too. They are casting votes for the laws which will protect your home; they are fighting the evils which are threatening the safety of the society in which you live. Come, Mrs. Timorous, and join the W. C. T. U. and you may learn that new old truth, "No man liveth for himself alone."

Expecting the ballot everywhere as women do so confidently, it would seem quite essential that they prepare themselves for intelligent voting. Most women are too busy to have gained much information as to civil service rules, or parliamentary usage, and know still less of the intricate wheels of the machine called politics. There is much to learn of law and its administration, or the very ends they wish to accomplish will be defeated by women's own ignorance. Education along these lines is needed, and the W. C. T. U. must be the school teacher, another most urgent reason why those who are not already members should join it.

PLANS AND SUGGESTIONS FOR INCREASING MEMBERSHIP

Membership week, May 6-13, is almost here and local unions everywhere are planning by special efforts to do their share in securing the twenty per cent membership gain for 1917, for which the state and National W. C. T. U. are working. The methods which some of the states have found helpful in gaining their apportionment may be suggestive to other workers.

Southern California local unions have already held membership contests of at least two weeks' duration, closing such contests with a reception to the president. Paid workers in these campaigns receive ten per cent of the first year's dues of the new members, provided one honorary member is secured for each group of four active members. Recognition receptions are a part of the programs of county and state conventions.

The District of Columbia W. C. T. U. is working for a much larger number of new members than the regular apportionment. As hostess of the next National Convention, it will make a special effort to secure many new members, because of the need of their co-operation for the great meeting in December.

Colorado local unions have in some instances already doubled their membership, and the state is well on its way to its required membership increase.

Kansas, which is working for 200 new unions and 2,000 new members, has, to date, organized 40 new unions, 31 Y. P. B.'s and four new county organizations. Eight workers are in the field at the present time. The Kansas W. C. T. U. is offering to any county president whose county makes a net gain of 200 members during the year $30 toward the expense of the trip to the National Convention. Each county which makes a gain of twenty-five in membership and has held a county convention will be upon the Recognition Night program of the state convention, and will be allowed $5 toward the expense of the county president to the convention.

Alabama is urging each local union to organize a new union.

A "Train Contest" is proving helpful in Northern California. Why not have such a contest and call it a trip to the National Convention? Find the number of miles from your city to Washington, D. C., and the important stops en route. Divide the membership into two sides, represented, possibly, by the White Ribbon Special and the W. C. T. U. Flyer. A certain number of new members gets these trains to Washington. For instance, ten new members might get either or both trains as far east as Denver, twenty to Chicago, thirty to Cincinnati. These figures and stops would have to be arranged in accordance with the desired gain and the location of the union. Northern California is planning to observe June 17, the birthday of Mrs. Sara J. Dorr, state president, as Organization and New Members' Day.

The Northern California W. C. T. U. is providing the members of all its local unions with slips reading as follows:

"I agree to give ——— hours of the week of May 6-13 endeavoring to secure new members for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of California.

"(Signed) .....

"I gave ..... hours to this work securing.....new members.

"(Signed) .....

"Member of.....Union."

A membership contest, conducted after the fashion of the old-time spelling bee, is the standby method in Georgia for securing membership increase.

Illinois is successfully using the group conference, comprising several counties, for arousing interest in organization. Two state officers attend each of these conferences. Standardization is also proving a popular rally cry, and means an increase in both membership and efficiency.

In Massachusetts the county officers are going afield during Membership Week. The state is asking for a 25 per cent increase in membership so as to allow a margin over the 20 per cent asked for by the National organization.

Michigan's paid field workers can be secured by local unions for collections, entertainment and $1.50 per day. Unor-

(Continued on Page Fourteen)

HIS FLAG, AND THE COUNTRY FOR WHICH IT STANDS*

MINERVA L. GUTHAPFEL
Copyrighted by the author, 1914
By Courtesy Christian Herald

(Continued from Last Week)

The magistrate looked kindly down on the poor, little form, and said, "Why, officer, what's the matter here; what are you doing with a sick boy?" The officer explained, ending, "and so, your honor, the lady, Mrs. O'Flannigan, charges him with 'assault and battery with intint to kill,' but the 'Why' of it all none of us knows. Sure, the bye will not or can not talk. Not a word has he said."

The magistrate looked over the desk and down into two big, dark eyes set like coals in a pale, wan face. "Why, bless his heart," he said under his breath, "he's all eyes, but they don't belong to a criminal." Aloud he said, "Got anything to say, my lad? Don't be afraid. What made you do all this?" No answer. "Call Mrs. O'Flannigan." He spoke rather sharply. "The boy must be made to speak when spoken to in court."

Mrs. O'Flannigan had just reached the court-room, and came bustling forward, one eye showing unmistakable signs of having come up against a foreign substance but, otherwise, the entire two hundred forty-six and one-half pounds of Mrs. O'Flannigan seemed intact. Called upon by the magistrate, she poured forth her story, ending with, "and now your Honor, I charge this bye wid assault and battery wid intint to kill." Mrs. O'Flannigan knew the law. It was not the first time she had been in court either charging or being charged with similar indictments.

"'Assault and battery with intent to kill,'" smiled the magistrate. "Why, you reckless, brutal piece of humanity, how dare you attempt such a thing upon the person of Mrs. O'Flannigan, when she is so small and defenceless, and you—so tremendous in size?" A titter went around the crowded court-room. Mrs. O'Flannigan looked sharply around, the point of the remark had been lost upon her. Silence and sober faces greeted her look. All looked at Marcus as the magistrate said, "Boy, what's your name?" "Marcus Polito."

As the boy spoke his name, the pleasant voice of a lady who had just entered, said: "Sir, one moment. I think I can get at this."

"Come, then, Miss West." The puzzled magistrate believed in the help of this social worker.

The crowd moved aside, the lady with a pleasant smile hurried forward and knelt on the floor beside the pitiful little figure. "Why, Marcus, what is it? Tell Miss West. You meant no wrong, I am sure. Tell me all about it quickly."

Before the boy could answer, Mrs. O'Flannigan started again with her story, but the magistrate stopped her, and quietly told Miss West the story as he had learned it. "Make him tell if you can, Miss West; we must get at the reason of all this."

"Marcus, quick, you must tell me why you did this."

"Missy West, I—, I—, oh, Missy West—the flag, the flag—Tony, too late for me—"

"Hush, Marcus, you must be calm and tell me slowly."

The court-room was silently listening as Marcus sobbed into the white bonnet-strings the whole miserable story. "I got it here, Missy West," he said at the close. "I got it here in my pocket." Miss West placed her hand in the designated pocket, and drew forth a much soiled scrub rag, running with water.

One glance, and she put it back into his pocket. "Marcus, listen," she said, "I want you to stand up here on a bench and tell them just this last part when I tell you to. Don't be afraid. It's for the sake of your flag, and the country for which it stands."

"Your Honor, a few words in explanation," as she rose to her feet. "Certainly, Miss West." The court-room listened breathlessly to the story she rapidly told of the drunken, cruel father, the begging, the order to go to school, the providing of the clothes, the forced continued begging in spite of the orders, the death of Geta, the selection of Marcus as flag-bearer, his joy, his morning walk waiting for the time to again carry the flag, the watching of Mrs. O'Flannigan at her scrubbing, and the quick, now regretted, feeling of rage and—the lady paused with husky voice and tear-wet eyes—"Magistrate Cannon, may Marcus tell the court and Mrs. O'Flannigan in his own way why he got angry?"

"Yes, bring him here to me," answered the Court, "the boy strangely attracts me. Let's hear it." "Sure," repeated the irrepressible, slightly softened victim of the tragedy, "it's time he was talkin' for himself."

The boy was gently led to the magistrate's side by Mr. Hooligan. "Now, Marcus," said Miss West, slowly and distinctly, "why did you get angry at this lady? Tell His Honor, and show them all why you did this."

The boy's sad eyes lifted, caught sight of the little flag over the desk, and fear was forgotten. "Why, cause-a de flag, my flag. I carry him. I do dis-a way to him." He saluted gravely the little flag at which he gazed. "Why, Jedge, she scrub-a de steps wid de flag we, all de children, do dis-a way to—see, Jedge," and his hand drew forth from his pocket a dirty scrub-rag. He flung it outward and behold! a ragged, dirty, one-time American flag was exposed to the eyes of all the court-room.

A gasp went round. The magistrate hurriedly got out his handkerchief, his action was imitated by the watchful crowd, while audible sniffs were heard. The silence was broken by Mrs. O'Flannigan, finally. "May the saints presarve us, an' I never wance noticed it was a flag. Ach, I called him a foreigner, too. I withdraw the charge, your Honor. I want the blessed bye an' the lady to come to me house. I'll give them a dinner that will put flesh on the darlin' child's bones, an' I'll wash the rag an' give it to him, an' he may kick me down me own steps agin if I iver again use the rid, white an' blue to do me work."

"One moment, Mrs. O'Flannigan"—the magistrate had found his voice.

"Marcus Polito, turn around and face the court. Here, hold this in your hand with the other piece." He handed Marcus the flag from behind the desk. Dazed, but not afraid, the boy, with eyes burning and glowing, looked at the judge for further orders. "All in the court stand," and the judge arose to his own feet, "and do as I tell you, on pain of contempt of court. Now, Marcus, show us how to salute the flag." Joyfully Marcus saluted, and recited the pledge of allegiance. "All present do the same to the two flags Marcus holds." Instantly hands were raised to foreheads, the salute was given while the magistrate led in the words, "I pledge allegiance to my flag, and the country for which it stands, one nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

"Amen," said the judge feelingly. "Amen," responded the audience, and forgot they were not at church.

"Sit down." All followed the Court in being seated. Marcus, to his own surprise, sat down on the judge's lap as "sentence" was pronounced on several people. "Mr. Hooligan, go get Polito. The court will pay the bill for the Keeley cure for him; we will make a citizen yet out of the father of a boy like this. Miss West," he went on with twinkling eyes, "I sentence you to be caretaker of Marcus Polito, while I pay the bills—and be sure they are not too small, let nothing be lacking until the father is fit to claim his own. Mrs. O'Flannigan, I sentence you to carry out the things you have mentioned—and if you ever scrub with the flag again, well—I don't believe you ever will. As for you, Marcus Polito, I sentence you to appear on the first day of each month in this court-room and lead us all in the saluting of 'our flag, and the country for which it stands.'"

Cheer after cheer rang out from the court-room, startling the passersby. A cheer for the flag, for the magistrate, for Miss West, the weeping Mrs. O'Flannigan, and last, but not least, for Marcus Polito, once of Greece, but always and forever a citizen of the United States of America.

But Marcus did not understand it all, only that he was free and belonged to Miss West. However, he had missed carrying the flag, and that was a thing to be sorry about. He whispered this to Miss West on the way to Mrs. O'Flannigan's for dinner. The whisper caused Miss West to stop in a drug store and hold a long conversation with "Teacher" at the Mission. Said teacher had sobbed so at the other end of the phone that she could scarcely talk, but she did manage to tell Miss West, whose own eyes were red, that Marcus was needed at the school at one-thirty p. m., to carry the flag for the daily drill. Then teacher had hurried to each room to tell all the children the whole story, and no one was mean enough to tell Marcus that his flag had been saluted that morning without him.

The first smile that Marcus' face had held that day appeared when Miss West brought the news of the need of the flag-bearer at school at one-thirty p. m. He radiated beams all during the stuffing of him by Mrs. O'Flannigan, whose tears alternated with hugs and kisses inflicted upon him as he ate. The said lady accompanied him as he and Miss West journeyed to the Mission, and sat on a front seat at one-thirty p. m., a decidedly chastened soul, as the piano, with an extra loud voice commanded, "One, two, three, four, march," and when the salute was being given you could hardly hear the words for the sobbing of Mrs. .O'Flannigan as she gazed on MARCUS, "HIS FLAG, AND THE COUNTRY FOR WHICH HE STOOD."

*Note: This story is printed in leaflet form and also as an exercise for public school children. It may be obtained of the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Illinois.

Price: story leaflet, 5 cents; exercise, 7 cents.

NED'S "STAR SPANGLED BANNER" GARDEN

EDNA SAXE

"Father, may I dig up the sod in the patch back of your garden and plant some 'Red Cross' rows?" In his excitement Ned's words were far from intelligible.

"'Red Cross rows'? What are 'Red Cross rows'?" asked the bewildered father.

"Teacher said everybody ought to help the United States, and the boys who aren't old enough to enlist can have a garden to help supply food for the country and the soldiers. The Red Cross society is asking that everybody put in some extra rows in their gardens and sell the produce for the Red Cross work for the wounded soldiers."

Mr. Hartley readily gave his consent and offered to help in the preparation of the ground, but Ned valiantly declined any assistance and ran off at once to get the spade.

Now Ned knew what some older people have forgotten, that work is much easier if you turn it into play, so as he put the spade into the sod as deeply as possible and turned the brown earth he pretended he was a soldier boy helping to dig a trench that had to be finished before night-fall, and as he worked he sang right lustily an improvised "Yankee Doodle" song:

"A Red Cross garden's just the thing
For any boy that's handy,
And if he tends it carefully,
He'll reap a crop that's dandy."

"Mother, have you seen Stub's 'Cross Rows' garden?" sang out Ned's older brother as the little gardener came in to supper, hungry as the proverbial bear. "Stub, here, thinks he is going to feed the United States army, and export a few shiploads of food to England from his two by four tomato patch."

"Why don't you plant a garden yourself?" demanded Ned. "There will be a little ground left. Do something for your country, and do it now."

Ned's enthusiasm never waned. The ground was soon ready for planting. Putting two sticks in the ground he stretched a string and planted his first row of seeds. Leaving room for a path, he planted the second row and then a third and fourth, with a path between each row. When half of the plot had been planted in long rows, Ned marked off a square at one end and made a path around it. Then he completed the long rows which now ended at the square. Next he planted the square plot of ground in the corner. Now do you see why it is called Ned's "Star Spangled Banner" Garden? It was all neatly laid out like a flag, with the long rows and paths alternating and the square patch at one corner, and at each corner he drove firmly into the ground a long stick to which he had nailed a flag.

"My Garden Won the Prize"

One evening as Ned was watering his garden and looking eagerly for tiny green shoots, a man passing by stopped to watch the boy. "I didn't know you had gone into the farming business, Ned," called the man. "It is a little early to judge, but I should think you would have a fine crop if you keep on as you have begun."

"Yes, sir. I mean to have a fine crop. It's a 'Red Cross' garden, you know, to help take care of the soldiers."

The next day the school where Ned went had an unusual visitor, no other than the president of the city bank, a man whom the boys all regarded with more or less awe.

"Maybe you children all know what a 'Red Cross' garden is," he said, addressing the school, after the teacher had smilingly given him permission to talk to the pupils. "I didn't know until last night, but I learned then something about a 'Red Cross' garden, and the more I think about it, the better I like the idea." Ned smiled gaily back at the banker as he glanced in his direction. "It was one of your own number who told me what I know about 'Red Cross' gardens, and I came down to see if there are others as interested as Ned Hartley is in helping to provide food for the country and the soldiers. I hope there are lots of you who are just as good farmers, but if you do not look carefully to your gardens his 'Star Spangled Banner' plot will be the finest one in town. I am so pleased with Ned's garden that I have decided to offer two prizes of ten and five dollars to the two children in the town who raise the best crop, through their own efforts. I will be glad to have the names of any of the children who will or have started a garden."

Many boys and girls raised their hands. Everybody, it appeared, wanted a garden. Some few had already started work and others promised to do so at once.

Thus it happened that it was a busy summer for the children of that town. Gardens flourished everywhere, some in the shape of the stars and stripes, others plain, carefully tended plots. And such tomatoes and beans and onions and corn as ripened during the late summer days, and such a troop of interested little gardeners you never saw before.

Ned had the satisfaction of not only marketing a fair crop of vegetables, the proceeds of which he gave to the Red Cross work, but he was able to add the amount of the first prize, $10, awarded him by the banker.

FUNNYGRAPHS

The Zeppelin raids are bringing about new friendships. One society woman is reported to have said to another of a mutual friend: "I can't understand it. A month ago you cut her dead, and now you can't be polite enough to her." "My dear, it's quite simple. She has the biggest cellar in the district."—London Opinion.

The tramp entered the diaconal council. He had on a long frock coat, fastened closely around his waist by a thorn, and from the flowing lap above oozed out the ends of a much soiled handkerchief. His closely fitting trousers, through numerous portals of which protruded his interesting self, seemed to run without any dividing line into the shoe and boot which respectively incased his feet. The deacons had time to note these peculiarities before the stranger broke the silence.

"Gentlemen," he began, "your pardon for disturbing you, but I am very sick."

He paused after this announcement to note the effect.

"I went to the doctor," he soon continued, "and he gave me the pills—see, the pills," and he held up to view a small bottle which he had in the palm of his hand.

"He said, take these pills, three after each meal, and I would like very much to have some assistance."

"Well, why don't you take your pills then, and not come bothering here?" interposed a deacon who was becoming tired.

"Gentlemen," replied the tramp with much unction, "I can not take the pills; I have no meal."

He got the meal.—Interior.

PROHIBITION ROBS PENITENTIARY

Business is getting dull at the Washington state penitentiary at Walla Walla and the blame is fastened on the state prohibition law, says the Spokane Chronicle. Four years ago there were 904 inmates at the prison; now there are only 662. From January to October, 1915, there were 311 commitments; during the same period last year there were only 188, according to the biennial report of the state board of control.

"Several causes contribute to this happy result, of which the present prohibition law is chief," the report says.

Leaflets for Mothers to Read

Helps to Use in Mothers' Meetings

Open Letter to Mothers and Teachers
Why Not? (On card playing)
Two Types of Families
The Ideal Mother
The Mother's Hour
A Mother's Prayer Answered
A Model Mothers' Meeting
Single copies, 2 cents; 50, 20 cents; 100, 35 cents.
Talks With a Child. No. 1. The Body and How to Protect It. Single copies, 3 cents; 50, 50 cents; 100, 90 cents.
Talks With a Child. No. 2. Motherhood. Single copies, 3 cents; 50, 40 cents; 100, 75 cents.

FOR WHITE RIBBON RECRUITS

Birthday Cards. 3 cents; per dozen, 25 cents.
Recruit Pins. 15 cents; per dozen, $1.60.
Certificates of Membership. 3 cents; per dozen, 25 cents.
Graduating Diploma. 10 cents.
Record Book. 10 cents.

FOR MOTHERS' DAY

The True Spirit of Mothers' Day
A Home Correspondence Course
Each, 3 cents; 50 for 50 cents; 100, 90 cents.
The Hand of a Child
Each, 2 cents; 50, 20 cents; 100, 35 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

SPECIAL SOUVENIR CARD FOR MEMBERSHIP WEEK

To Women of America!

It is a sacred privilege to count one in the ranks of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union—to become an inheritor of its radiant past, a participant in its luminous present and a builder in its brightening future. No matter how numerous or how varied the great interests that may claim a Christian woman's time and sympathy, she should have abundant room in her heart for the temperance reform and give it some of her best activities.

President National W. C. T. U.

Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

THE INSTITUTE SEASON IS HERE MAKE YOUR INSTITUTE VALUABLE

INSTITUTE LEAFLETS

Department Quiz
The Meeting of the Local Union
The Purpose and Plan of the Institute
How to Make the Institute Count
Single copies, 2 cents; 50, 20 cents; 100, 35 cents.
A Model W. C. T. U. Meeting. Singly, 3 cents; 50, 40 cents; 100, 75 cents.

The following sent for postage at 15 cents per 100:

The Literature Table
A Literature Demonstration
A Resurrected Union
She Read It; She Took It
Why Take the Union Signal

SUGGESTIONS FOR YOUR LITERATURE TABLE

Superintendent's Manual. 10 cents.
Liquor Traffic Must Go Pencils. 5 cents; dozen, 35 cents.
Seals. Liquor Traffic Must Go (Pennants). 100, 20 cents; 1,000, $1.50.
Tri-Colored Wall Shields. 25 cents.
Prohibition Fans. Dozen, 35 cents; 100, $2.
Popular Prohibition Songs. 5 cents; dozen, 50 cents.
Temperance Songster (paper). 15 cents; dozen, $1.80.
Blotters. Eight varieties. 50, 20 cents. 100, 35 cents.
Flower Mission Text Cards. 100, 12 cents.

BADGES

Loop Bow Pin, white enamel on sterling silver, with letters W. C. T. U. Price, 60 cents each; per dozen, $6.50.
Smaller Size, same style. Price, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.20.
Flat Bow Pin, white enamel on gilt, without letters. Price, 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.
Brooch Pin, white enamel on gilt. Price, 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.
Scarf Pin, white enamel on gilt. Price, 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

POSTERS ARE ALWAYS IN ORDER

Try These!

Old Glory
Drink Traffic and Revenue
A Business Proposition
Protect the Children
Size 28 x 42. Each, 10 cents; 3 for 25 cents; 100, $7.
Beware! (A beer poster in English or German)
Alcohol
Beer
Saloons Increase Taxes
Size 19 x 25. Each, 5 cents; 50, $2; 100, $3.50.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

PIONEER WORK OF NATIONAL W. C. T. U. ORGANIZER IN WESTERN FLORIDA

Miss Annie Robbins, National organizer, has closed a three months' canvass of the twelve western counties of Florida, speaking in every town of more than three hundred people. It was a campaign carried on under very great difficulties. Much of this territory is new to the W. C. T. U., as it is sparsely settled and routes are hard to arrange. Religious work is not very well established, and reform enterprises are little understood.

In many towns visited the speaker unaided was obliged to work up the meeting after her arrival. The weather was rainy and there were three spells during which it was too cold to use unheated buildings, but, in spite of these difficulties, Miss Robbins was able to make many friends for the organization, arouse interest in the campaign for state-wide prohibition and scatter literature and song books. Fifteen new unions and a number of L. T. L.'s were organized as the visible fruits of her work. The state president will hold district conventions in this new territory in May and every effort will be made to hold and build up these unions and to enthuse the workers to organize other unions.

METHODISTS OF KANSAS HONOR W. C. T. U.

The high regard in which the Methodist Episcopal church holds the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Kansas is shown by the following resolution adopted by the Kansas, the Southwest and the Northwest conferences of the Methodist church of Kansas:

"We commend the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to every community where our pastors labor, that their educational work along the basic lines of temperance effort, including the campaign for personal total abstinence, the fight against the cigaret evil and the training for parenthood, may be more widespread and more effective and thus help bring about more speedily the observance of the laws upon the statute books of our state."

Mrs. Lillian Mitchner, state W. C. T. U. president, attended the first of the three conferences mentioned, Miss Mary E. Dobbs, state corresponding secretary, the Southwest conference, and both Mrs. Mitchner and Miss Dobbs, the Northwest conference. They were given an opportunity to appear and speak on these occasions.

$2.50 PER DAY SALARY PAID ONE PERSON in each town to distribute FREE circulars, and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring. Non-alcoholic. Big demand, steadily increasing. J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7G, E. Harrison St., Chicago.

PLANS AND SUGGESTIONS FOR INCREASING MEMBERSHIP

(Continued from Page Eleven)

ganized places are asked to give collection and entertainment only. If the field worker's salary is not met by these amounts, the state pays the deficit; if there is more than the salary, the state has the surplus.

The Missouri W. C. T. U. secures the services of National workers, who are farmed out to the county president, allowing the county any surplus from collections and making it responsible for any deficit in the amount agreed upon. The worker sends an itemized statement of expenses in each county to the state corresponding secretary. As a rule, state speakers are paid a fixed salary and make their own routes.

In Nebraska local women are employed in certain communities, who are paid $1 a day and expenses. Inter-county rallies are a feature of the summer plans.

North Dakota sets a standard for "Banner Unions" and another for "Banner Districts." Increase in membership is included in the points to be made. The state is working for 1,000 new members, and white ribboners are asked to sign a resolution pledging this number, and then, by hand-picking, secure the necessary membership increase.

Tennessee is asking the western, middle and eastern sections of the state to each be responsible for one-third of the desired membership gain. To the section or sections securing 500 new members will be given the privilege of nominating a delegate to the National Convention in Washington, the state to pay the expenses of the trip.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

Mrs. Emeline Lyman, Loxley, Ala., an earnest worker for the cause of temperance and a warm friend of The Union Signal, for which she subscribed up to the time of her home-going, at the age of eighty-seven.

Martha Whitman, a white ribboner of Umatilla county, Oregon, for more than thirty years, and a former vice-president of the county organization. At the time of her home-going she was a member of the Pendleton union.

Mrs. Dora Liken, Flemington, Pa., corresponding secretary of Clinton county W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Sarah Clayton, Gridley, Calif., for many years president of the union at Ottawa, Ill.

Mrs. Julia Stacy Wiser, Gridley, Calif., who until four years ago was a white ribboner of Manly, Iowa. She was a fearless advocate of prohibition and all righteous causes.

Cecil Richmond, Newport, Oregon, daughter of Mrs. J. O. Richmond, state superintendent of the department of Mothers' Meetings.

Rev. John Frederick Hanson, of Oregon, Friends minister and long time temperance advocate. Mr. Hanson was a prominent worker in the cause of peace and was commissioned several times by the United States government as a delegate to secure peace in the case of Indian uprisings and to settle disputes among the Indians. At the time of the outbreak of the European war he was on a visit to Norway and Denmark where he was the chief figure in the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the temperance movement which he had started in those countries.

The sympathy of temperance workers in the United States goes out to the comrades in Canada who have suffered a great loss in the home-going of Mr. Francis S. Spence, a temperance and prohibition worker of first rank in the Dominion. Mr. Spence will be remembered by workers in this country as the editor of The Pioneer, of Toronto, the official organ of the Ontario Branch of the Dominion Alliance. During his last illness the Dominion Alliance, of which for years he was president and honorary president, met in convention to plan the campaign for dominion-wide prohibition. Great was the rejoicing at this meeting over the prohibition triumphs already achieved, victories largely due to the heroic service of Mr. Spence. A memorial meeting to this great leader was held the last night of the convention.

Patriotic Paragraphs

A strong advocate of the war prohibition move is Governor Boyle of Nevada. "I heartily approvo of tho plan to invoko national prohibition at this time, and I havc so wired the Prcsident. Our foodstuffs shouid all be applied to bencficial and not injurious uscs."

Every officer of the First Arizona Infantry, foliowing the example of the commander, Col. A. M. Tuthill, on March 28, signed a pledge to abstain from alcoholic liquors during his period of service.

A "Sow and Savc" Sunday has been endorsed by the Chicago pastors. At this time the nced of increasing food production and of exercising economy in expenditure will be urged. At a meeting at which this plan was decided upon the ministers were advised to foliow their own preaching and plant a garden.

The Amarillo (Texas) W. C. T. U., on Sunday, Aprii 22, distributed 1,500 post cards on which was printed an appeal to the Congressman for that district to use his influence and vote against "the use of food products in the manufacture of intoxicating liquors during the war." These post cards were placed in the hands of the citizens ready to be signed, stamped and mailed to Washington. At the same time the W. C. T. U. furnished the pastors of each of the city churches with the following concise information, asking them to emphasize from the pulpit the post card appeal:

135,000,000 bushels of grain consumed annually by distillers and brewers in the United States.

200,000,000 gallons of molasses consumed by same.

Herbert C. Hoover, head of American Food Board, demands that every man, woman and child forego, at least one loaf of wheat bread per week, because the available supply of grain for the Allies is only half the amount necessary.

We suggest that no more grain be used for making alcohol.

Alcohol needed for ammunition can be made from wood and waste.

EVERY LOCAL UNION

is urged to observe

MEMBERSHIP WEEK

May 6-13

Especially helpful in house-to-house calling, for enclosure in letters, or in social visiting, are the following leaflets:

The Relation of the W. C. T. U. to Other Organizations

Achievements of the National W.C.T.U.

Price, per fifty, 60 cents; per hundred, $1.00.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union a World Power and Why.

Price, per fifty, 50 cents; per hundred, 90 cents.

The What and Why of the W. C. T. U.
Hand Picking.
Why I Am a White Ribboner.
The Advantages of Organization.
Is It Right?
The Church and the W. C. T. U.
Busy Women and the W. C. T. U.

Price, per hundred, 35 cents; per fifty, 20 cents.

A special souvenir card containing quotation from Miss Gordon, vignette and facsimile signature, has been prepared for membership week.

Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents.

Sample of each leaflet and card will be forwarded postpaid for 10c.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois.

Become the woman you wish to be

REGAIN your health, poise and figure. I can help you. I know I can. Not one drop of medicine.

My way is the natural way—a scientific [system,] combining exercise, bath, diet, sleep and deep breathing.

In a few short weeks, thousands of my pupils have surprise[d] their families

80,000 Women Are My Friends

I have won theirf riendship and respect because I have made them well, taught them how to keep well, reduced and increased their weight, given them perfect figures—all in the privacy of their rooms—and I have kept their confidence. May I help you?

Physicians approve my work; their wives and daughters are my pupils. Medical magazines advertise my work.

These facts are cited modestly—with only a desire to prove that I can and will do all I promise. Remember,

You Can Be So Well! You Can Weigh What You Should!

It is easy to be free from nagging ailments. Even the most chronic afflictions, in nine cases out of ten, are vastly benefited by my help.

You thoroughly enjoy my simple directions and you feel so satisfied with yourself.

Write to me! Ask for my Booklet No. 24—sent you without charge. Let me tell you all about my wonderful experience! Then you will understand the great work I am doing for womankind and how I can help you.

If you have any of the following derangements, mark an X after it and send to me:
Excess flesh in any part of body	Lack of Reserve
Thin Bust, Chest, Neck or Arms	Nervousness
Round Shoulders	Irritability
Incorrect Standing	Constipation
Incorrect Walking	Indigestion
Poor Complexion	Dizziness
Poor Circulation	Weakness
Lame Back	Rheumatism
Headache	Colds
Sleeplessness	Torpid Liver
	Mal-assimilation

Susanna Cocroft, Dept. 37, 624 Michigan Ave., Chicago

One thousand five hundred young women students of the University of Chicago, at a patriotic mass meeting, pledged themselves to definite lines of work to aid the United States during the period of war.

If you want to serve your country, plant onions, is the suggestion given by the North American of Philadelphia, in a recent issue. Onions can be used in countless ways and a large yield is obtained from even a small patch.

Rev. Billy Sunday at the first afternoon meeting of his three months' evangelistic campaign in New York City, pledged to war relief work the free will offering to be given him at the end of his work in that city. This offering, which may reach $100,000, after the deduction of $4,000 or $5,000 to pay Mr. Sunday's share of the salaries of his helpers, it is reported, will be divided between the Red Cross and the army work of the Y. M. C. A.

Two hundred and fifteen occupants of the First National Bank Building, of Chicago, have signed and forwarded to President Wilson this petition:

"We are ready to give ourselves, our money, our boys, to answer our country's call. We insist that the criminal waste of grain for the making of drink to destroy our boys shall stop. The manufacture and sale of intoxicants must be prohibited, at least during the war."

In accordance with the policy outlined by the National W. C. T. U., the executive committee of the New Hampshire W. C. T. U., in recent session in Manchester, pledged to Governor Keyes, upon whom is the responsibility of defining New Hampshire's part in the war, the hearty support and co-operation of the state W. C. T. U., and expressed the desire of the membership to do all that they, as loyal citizens, can do in so grave an emergency. The committee also voted $25 for the purchase of an electric fan to be presented to the soldiers at Fort Bliss, Texas.

"BAR BOOZE FROM ARMY"

Concerning the changed attitude of a large portion of the press on the subject of prohibition, the following editorial from the Seattle Daily Times is quite illuminating. Compared with former utterances of the same paper in the near past, this declaration is startling—at least to those booze promoters who have long suffered from cold shivers at the mere thought of what might happen to "the trade" if the press should turn against it. We quote verbatim:

"Among the amendments to the army bill, due to be considered by the Senate in the near future, is one which would bar liquors from all camps where the new forces are to be stationed for instruction.

"This is one amendment, the passage of which should be assured from the hour that debate opens. Such restrictions are essential to the success of the government's plans for the mobilization and prompt training of the new recruits.

"Moreover, Congress can go a step further and still be in line with majority sentiment in this country, by decreeing that liquor shall be barred out of the entire military establishment when the country's forces take the field.

"The history of the European struggle makes it emphatically plain that modern warfare is a test of efficiency, with victory always going to the combatant who displays the greater capability in this regard.

"Civilian America, out of the plenitude of its own experience, knows that booze and efficiency never go hand in hand. It is the duty of Congress to make sure that the American soldier shall confront every emergency of the future not only with a complete physical equipment, but, as well, with steady nerves and a clear mind."

A Russian revolutionist pretty soon won't have any more of a job than an American prohibitionist.—Boston Transcript.

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year
Club rate for ten or more subscriptions, 25c a year
No other premium allowed.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

A VISIT TO THE CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

VIDA THOMPSON, Manager Circulation Department

The stage may be set with several tables or desks. At the front hangs a sign, "Circulation Department of THE UNION SIGNAL and The Young Crusader." At the first desk sits the manager of the department. Glancing up at the clock, she says, "Oh, dear, I do hope the girls won't be late. Yesterday the convention at ———— (give your own county or town) closed and I know we shall have a lot of new subscriptions." As the clock strikes eight, four or five girls come in and seat themselves ready for work. A mail man enters from the rear and lays a large number of letters in a basket by the manager's desk. She smiles and says, "Girls, lots of new subscriptions from that convention just as I told you," and begins to open the letters and to lay them in piles. She stops now and then to read aloud one or two sentences, such as the following:

"The Shawnee Willard union observed the birthday of Mrs. Stevens, which was also our oldest member's birthday. The latter was seventy-nine years old and the union gave her as a birthday present a year's subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL. We are having The Young Crusader sent to the library to be placed in the children's department."

The manager rises and places the letters on different desks and the girls, who had been turning over record books, etc., begin to copy, ready for the card index, the names and addresses of the new subscribers, and to file away the various communications.

While the manager's back is turned, the mail man, who has a large market basket heaped up with letters, lays down a bigger pile than the first and disappears. The manager sits down at her desk again and looks puzzled, but smiles and begins to sort the second batch. A girl says: "Oh, Miss (Blank) listen to this," and reads from a letter she picks up. "Isn't it just fine?"

"I always distribute my papers after reading them and so have taken a few to my friend and she likes them so well that she told me to send for the paper for her, which I, of course, gladly consented to do and enclose money for same. I wish a lot more would take it as it surely is a great source of information. Would not do without it as long as I could get hold of a dollar." Another girl says, "But just hear what this woman has written," and reads: "I never enjoyed THE UNION SIGNAL as I have the last year and that because of its reliable information in regard to prohibition. I am glad to renew my subscription and so retain the paper on my pay list and my prayer list." The manager says, "Yes, isn't that splendid, but we will have to hurry with our work. Look at the pile we have to do." Again she gives out the letters and finds a bigger pile than ever waiting at her desk. The girls look at the letters heaped up in front of them and begin to say they can't get through with so much. The manager replies, "We must finish when we have letters like this." She reads, "I find the unions are too weak when there is not one of our periodicals taken. They are dying for lack of knowledge."

A third girl exclaims, "And see what this little girl has done; we will have to get her orders out." She reads aloud, "I've been reading The Young Crusader and like it very much. My aunt, who lives in Ohio, sends it to me. Mama said I might try to get some subscribers, so I went out one afternoon and got fifteen." The manager gives them each another pile, then turns to say, "Miss Brown, I think I can dictate awhile now," but as they sit down, she finds still more letters on her desk. She starts to dictate and then says, "I guess we will have to wait until tomorrow for those letters, Miss Brown, as both of us will have to work at these names. If our mails are going to increase like this we shall certainly have to have more help," and both begin work on a pile of letters.

At one side of the stage sits John Barleycorn, who, each time the pile of letters is laid down on the desks, groans and grows weak. He has various placards pinned on him, such as "Wife-beater," "Law-breaker," "Moderate Drinker," but throws them off uneasily one at a time as though the weight were too much.

Finally the girls cry out in dismay, declaring that no more work can be done. The manager tries to encourage them, but the letters are heaped up everywhere and she throws up her hands in despair. As she sits with drooping head the mail man again appears and turns the basket upside down, showering the letters over her head and showing the large placard on the other side of the basket, "Convention at ————." The manager and girls rush from the room and John Barleycorn, who has been getting weaker and weaker, is unable to hold himself up any longer but slowly sinks from his chair to the floor and dies as the curtain falls. The manager and girls appear in front of the curtain, and as the manager urges that the playlet, "A Visit to the Circulation Department," be made true, the girls go through the audience with pencils and paper, while little folks hold up a banner reading, "Subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL and The Young Crusader," at the same time singing to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne," "Subscribe."

This exercise will gain in enthusiasm if various members of the county or local unions who are subscribers for the official papers are asked for signed statements which can be read instead of the quotations herewith given. In any case, remember that enthusiasm is what is needed and that the subscriptions should be taken at once. "Strike while the iron is hot."

Books for Mothers

A Great Mother, Frances E. Willard. Price $1.50.

Alcohol a Dangerous and Unnecessary Medicine, Martha M. Allen.

How to Tell Stories to Children, Sarah Cone Bryant.
Price, each, $1.10.

Almost a Man, Dr. Mary Wood Allen.

Almost a Woman, Dr. Mary Wood Allen

Talks to Boys. Eleanor Hunter.

Talks to Girls, Eleanor Hunter.
Price, each, 50 cents.

Child Confidence Rewarded, Rose Woodallen Chapman.

Moral Problem of the Children, Rose Woodallen Chapman.
Price, each, 25 cents.

Confidences (talks with a girl), Dr. Edith Lowry.

Truths (talks with a boy), Dr. Edith Lowry.
Price, each, 55 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

IMPORTANT NOTICE

When You Send Us Money

In sending money to the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union or to THE UNION SIGNAL, please either send a draft on Chicago or New York, a post-office money order, or add ten cents to pay cost of exchange on personal checks. Cashier's or certified checks are not exempt from this charge, which is made necessary by the ruling of the Chicago Clearing House, through which all checks sent to us pass for collection.

Pertinent to Present Needs

For Soldiers and Sailors

To Place in Comfort Bags or for Distribution

Songsters. Each, 7 cents.

Pledge Card, with stub and bearing a profile of Frances E. Willard. Singly, 2 cents; 50, 25 cents; 100, 40 cents.

Protecting the Home Folks (a warning against vice). Singly, 2 cents; 50, 25 cents; 100, 40 cents.

Rally on the Flag (for veterans). Singly, 2 cents; 50, 20 cents; 100, 30 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

¶We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.
¶Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
118-120 Fifth Ave., New York

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

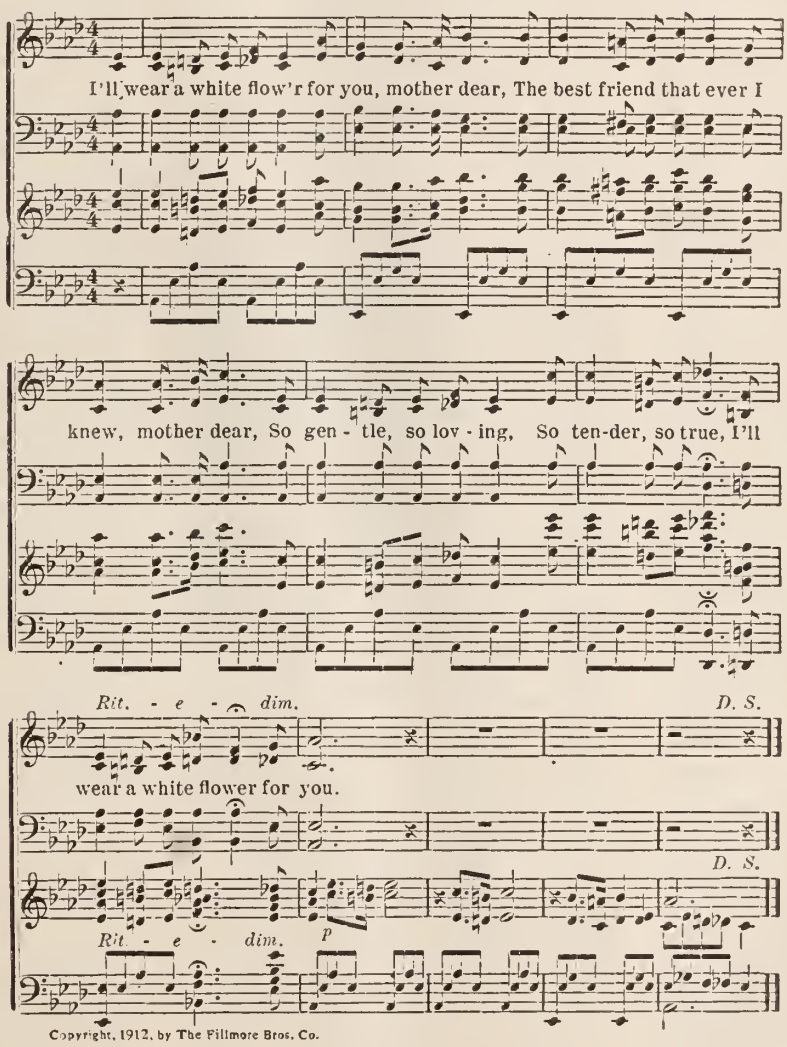
The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., MAY 10, 1917 | No. 19

MOTHERS' DAY, SUNDAY, MAY 13

Chorus to "I'LL WEAR A WHITE FLOWER FOR YOU."



Copyright, 1912, by The Fillmore Bros. Co.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

The British and French War Commissions have been the center of attraction all this week. Interviews with the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Treasury and with other governmental officials, have been carried on daily. The evenings have been filled with dinners, receptions and other functions, members of official society having vied with each other to do honor to our guests from over the sea. Sunday afternoon the entire party, accompanied by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, went on a pilgrimage to Mount Vernon on board the President's yacht, the "Mayflower." Standing in front of the modest tomb of George Washington, both Mr. Balfour, the Englishman, and Monsieur Viviani, the Frenchman, spoke words of eulogy of the great and good man who stood, fought and labored for the liberty of this people. As a tribute of veneration from their respective countries they placed wreaths of laurel in bronze at the foot of the tomb.

French Commission Visits Congress

By invitation of the Senate of the United States, the French Commission on Tuesday, May 1, paid a visit to that body and on Thursday, May 3, appeared in the House of Representatives. In both houses they were greeted with tumultuous applause. The House being much the larger body was most demonstrative. Seats were provided for these distinguished men on either side of the presiding officer, and when Marshal Joffre, with his strong, rugged face, appeared on the rostrum the House literally went wild and for fully five minutes or longer cheered and shouted a welcome. Viviani addressed the House in his native tongue. At the close of his address he, Joffre, and the Marquis de Chambrun, one of the commission, ranged themselves on the floor, while the members passed and shook hands. When Miss Jeannette Rankin came, the only woman in the midst of that vast assemblage, Viviani and Joffre each bent low and kissed her hand.

The Marquis de Chambrun, the great-grandson of Lafayette, was evidently impressed at finding a life-size portrait of his illustrious ancestor hanging on one side of the Speaker's rostrum, facing that of Washington on the other side. The young man, clothed in a soldier's uniform, stood for some moments gazing into the face of that other soldier who, when this new republic was struggling to keep its new-found liberty, offered himself and his fortune to help the cause of freedom and democracy.

The English Secretary of State, Mr. Balfour, will visit each house of Congress on Saturday, May 5. The French party left Friday night for a trip to Chicago and other cities, but will return here before leaving for home.

Numerous things, very ordinary in our eyes, have amazed the members of the commission. Among these is the speed with which our passenger elevators are run. They say, "The elevators installed in the British Foreign Office do not travel as fast as trees grow in this country."

Points About America Which Most Impress British War Mission

At a dinner attended by all the members of the British mission and at which each one was asked to give his opinion as to what had impressed and interested him most, the following summary was made by Geoffrey Butler, official spokesman:

That there is in America a "beating, burning patriotism and a desire to be of service on all sides."

That the "Panama Canal spirit," the determination to go through with whatever task is undertaken, prevails in the United States.

That high ideals obtain here, and that they can be touched by great men and great causes.

That, though rich and sympathetic persons started the Belgian relief fund, the people living in the rural districts and along the rivers are full of eagerness to start a relief fund to save the world from starvation.

That President Wilson's expression, "Service to Mankind," has been adopted as a national slogan in the United States.

That this country is an immense storehouse of potential forces far greater than the rest of the world realizes.

That "It is tremendously worth while to win the respect and esteem of this great nation."

The military bill has gone from Senate and House to the conferees, to be discussed by them. They will take up the Army draft bill features soon. The disputed points are the differences in the age of men subject to the selective draft provision; the Senate amendment which would permit Colonel Roosevelt to raise four infantry divisions for service in France; and the section prohibiting the sale of liquor at army posts.

The President yesterday had a conference with Senator Martin, party leader, and urged that the war legislation now before Congress be speeded up in order to make way for further and more important and more drastic shipping measures. The President impressed upon the majority leader the need for more prompt action than the Senate seems inclined to take and outlined the matters that are yet to be stressed, all with an important bearing upon the general conduct of the war.

A conference of state governors has been held in Washington this week to consider the food question in its many phases and other important and far-reaching interests necessary to the welfare of the government at this time.

LATE NEWS

UNITED STATES WILL SAFEGUARD HEALTH OF SOLDIERS

Medical Board to Set Prescribed Zones for Army and Navy

Washington, May 6.—Decisive steps for the hygienic and mental welfare of the nation's soldiers and sailors have been determined upon by the council of the national defense as a strict war measure. The council guided by the general medical board, has prepared to strike at the presence of insidious diseases and at alcoholism in all military commands.

Decisions were announced today as follows:

"First, that under military control an effective zone shall be created about all military commands as the most practicable and effective measure to prevent insidious diseases.

"Second that these military zones shall serve also as a means of control of alcoholic beverages to the troops.

"The council also recommends, as a further solution of the problem, that all military commands be provided with good facilities for the recreation of the troops. It urges that all suitable athletics be encouraged.

"The use of alcoholic beverages on the part of the soldiers and sailors in military commands has long been under military control. But the creation now of these military zones will in effect extend such control over the troops when they are off duty out of the command."—Chicago Herald.

250,000 Miles of Railroad Track for Government Use During War

Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore & Ohio R. R., and chairman of the advisory commission of the Council of National Defense made the following disclosure to the conference: that 175 American railroads, embracing 250,000 miles of track, will be operated under the direction of the government as one system during the war. Unnecessary passenger trains will be eliminated and all possible railroad power used for the transportation of food and munitions. The advisory commission is now sitting permanently in Washington, directing the transportation of the nation's products. The government has not purchased the railroads. It has guaranteed nothing, but it has, nevertheless, the equivalent to public ownership of railroads 250,000 miles long.

A sweeping bill, approved by the administration, was introduced in the House this week by Representative Lever of South Carolina, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture in the House, proposing to empower the President, whenever in his opinion the national emergency shall require, to regulate the production, distribution, and prices of food and other necessaries during the war; to prescribe regulations to govern the production of these commodities and, if necessary, to requisition the producing factories, mines, or other establishments, and the amount of grain, if any, to be used in the manufacture of liquors.

There has been keen interest in both Senate and House over the bill giving to the President further power to censor the press, withholding from the public information which in his judgment should be suppressed during the period of the war. Speaker Clark left the chair and in the most emphatic manner spoke against the provisions of the bill, using as his text the first amendment to the Federal Constitution, viz.:

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press."

Chairman Webb of the House Judiciary Committee, in charge of the bill, was equally insistent that supervision of material to be given out to the press is a positive necessity in time of war.

Big Brewer of Capital City Prepares for Dry Days Ahead

A gentle reminder that the national capital is slowly going dry was given when the National Capital Brewing Company notified its patrons that about the middle of this month it would stop selling beer and take up the ice cream industry. Only two days previous the Bartenders' Union, Local No. 428, announced the division between the American Red Cross and the Little Sisters of the Poor of a surplus fund in its treasury.

Several months ago, almost as soon as the President had signed the District prohibition bill, the National Capital Brewing Company began planning for its new undertaking, which probably will be begun within a short time after the company stops the sale of beer on May 15. Big vats, which for years have held the foamy beverage, have given way to modern machinery for the manufacture of the soda fountain's staple product.

(Continued on Page Nine)

FOURTEEN STATES AFFECTED BY ANTI-DRINKING ORDER OF NAVAL COMMANDANT

Captain W. A. Moffett, ranking officer of the ninth, tenth and eleventh naval districts, in charge of the Great Lakes Naval Training station, has issued an order that no officer or enlisted man in the regular navy, navy reserve, naval militia or volunteers, will be allowed to enter any saloon or public place where intoxicating liquors are sold, while in uniform, under penalty of court martial for disobedience. It further states that civilian clothes are not to be worn under any circumstances, all persons in the Navy in the three districts being required to wear the uniform at all times.

This order, in connection with the ruling by Secretary Daniels prohibiting the bringing or keeping of liquor in any ship, navy yard or station, will create an absolute drouth in the three districts named so far as the Navy is concerned.

The ninth, tenth and eleventh naval districts affected by the order of Captain Moffett are composed of the states of New York as far as Oswego, Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska and Kansas. Recruits entering the naval service in any capacity will come under the protection of this new regulation and the greatest menace to the boys from their nearness to Chicago and other wet cities will be removed.

GOVERNOR SLEEPER SIGNS ENFORCEMENT LAW

Governor Sleeper on May 2 signed the Damon prohibition enforcement measure approved by the 1917 legislature of Michigan .

PENNSYLVANIA BREWERIES FINED $62,000

Fines amounting to $62,000 have been imposed by the United States District court, recently sitting in Philadelphia, on thirty-five brewing corporations of Pennsylvania in the winding up of the government brewery probe into the raising of a "slush fund" of $1,000,000 to elect Senator Penrose and thirty-six members of Congress in the 1914 election in Pennsylvania. The Pennsylvania State Brewers' Association, directed by Edward S. Schmidt and John Gardiner, millionaire Philadelphians, an association that has been the power behind booze corruption in Pennsylvania for years, has agreed to go out of business and close its headquarters. This is considered a great victory. The fines imposed on the various breweries were fixed in accordance with the per barrel production.

NEBRASKA'S PROHIBITION LAW CLOSES OVER 800 SALOONS

On May 1 the Nebraska state-wide prohibition law went into effect thereby closing 829 saloons, fifteen breweries and ten rectifying plants. By the terms of the enforcement measure, passed at the recent session of the legislature, purchase, manufacture, sale or gift of liquor is forbidden.

GRAIN SAVERS' LEAGUE

In many places and through various agencies moderate drinkers are being urged, as an act of patriotism, to become total abstainers for the period of the war. A movement having this worthy object is known as the Grain Savers' League of the United States. It specially states that it "has no officers, headquarters, initiation fees or dues." It suggests the signing of the following pledge:

Whereas, I love my country; and

Whereas, my country is now at war; and

Whereas, there is a great shortage of food, especially of grain; and

Whereas, intoxicating liquors are made largely from grain, therefore,

I hereby gladly promise, on my honor as a patriotic American citizen, that FOR THE DURATION OF THE WAR (AND AS LONG THEREAFTER AS THE SHORTAGE OF FOOD SHALL PERSIST), I WILL NOT DRINK, BUY, SELL OR GIVE AWAY ANY INTOXICATING LIQUOR.

Sign this and file it with your wife, or somebody else who knows how much your word of honor is really worth.

THE LAW—Any man can close the saloon between his own nose and his own chin; the Supreme Court of the United States cannot declare the act unconstitutional.

THE BADGE—A small American flag worn on the left lapel of the coat. If you see a man drinking liquor while he wears the American flag, you will know how much his patriotism amounts to.

HONOR ROLL

—of—

PROHIBITION STATES AND TERRITORY AND DATE OF GOING INTO EFFECT

Maine			1851
Kansas			1880
North Dakota			1889
Oklahoma			1907
Georgia			1908
North Carolina			1909
Mississippi			1909
Tennessee			1909
West Virginia			1914
Alabama			1915
Arizona			1915
Virginia			1916
Colorado			1916
Oregon			1916
Washington			1916
Arkansas			1916
Iowa			1916
Idaho			1916
South Carolina			1916
Nebraska	*May	1,	1917
South Dakota	*July	1,	1917
Utah	†Aug.	1,	1917
Dist. of Columbia	†Nov.	1,	1917
Alaska	†Jan.	1,	1918
Indiana	†April	2,	1918
Michigan	*April	30,	1918
Montana	*Dec.	31,	1918
New Hampshire	†May	1,	1918

*Enacted 1916. †Enacted 1917.

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1917

Iowa††	Ohio	New Mexico

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1918

Utah††	Missouri	Florida
Minnesota	Wyoming	Nevada

††Now have statutory prohibition. Will vote on constitutional amendment.

STATES HAVING TEMPERANCE DAY IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Alabama	Oregon
Tennessee	North Dakota
Kansas	Missouri
New Mexico	South Dakota

CONNECTICUT HOUSE FAVORS STATE-WIDE PROHIBITION

The house of representatives, May 3, adopted a resolution proposing an amendment to the state constitution providing for state-wide prohibition. The vote was 143 to 82. The proposed amendment will come before the general assembly two years hence for ratification, and if accepted by both branches will then be submitted to the electors of the state for acceptance or rejection.

ARMY OFFICIALS IN HAWAII URGE PROHIBITION

The question of prohibition for Hawaii is a live topic among all inhabitants of the islands. Chief among those who are urging such legislation are the army officials who charge that ninety per cent of all the trouble in the ranks of the enlisted men is traceable to the saloon. In view of the war crisis which Hawaii is facing in common with the United States and the rest of the world army men are urging the desirability of enacting a "bone dry" law at once.

"No one would be more delighted than I would be over the passage of some measure which would bring about 'bone dry' prohibition in this territory," said Brigadier-General Frederick S. Strong, commanding the Hawaiian Department, as quoted in The Pacific Commercial Advertiser.

"As the commanding officer of this department I cannot speak, but as Frederick Strong, and as an officer of the army I may say that fully ninety per cent of the difficulties we have to face in the handling of enlisted men in the service of the United States is traceable directly to the pernicious influence of the saloon. Five per cent additional can be traced indirectly to the same evil influence."

Major Charles Lincoln, officer in charge of militia affairs of the Hawaiian department, is in perfect accord with his superior officer in his desire for a "bone-dry" prohibition measure for Hawaii. In an address before the chamber of commerce he said:

"I'd like to see Hawaii close all saloons tomorrow. We shall have a large number of young men in training, taken away, perhaps, from home influences. I would like to see prohibition in Hawaii on account of the military situation."

Discussing this subject later with a representative of the Advertiser, Major Lincoln said:

"I need not impress upon thoughtful people the need for strict economy in all foods and the abandonment of all extravagant foods and pleasures, for this nation is at war and war is no joke. The question of liquor is one that has concerned the government of every nation now at war in Europe. Every one of them has found it necessary to adopt restrictive measures and many of them have passed the most stringent of prohibition laws. They did this from a standpoint of military efficiency and for no moral reason. We have their example before us and should profit by it."

AMERICA

Patient she is—long-suffering, our land;
Wise with the strength of one whose soul in calm
Weighs and considers, and would understand
Ere it gives way to anger; fearing wrong
Of her own doing more than any planned
Against her peace by others deemed more strong.

Mother of many children alien born,
Whom she has gathered into her kind arms,—
Safeguarding most the weakest, most forlorn,—
The mother's patience she has learned to know,
Which passes trifles by with smiling scorn,
The mother's hopefulness, to anger slow.

Yet, O, beware! nor, overbold, presume
Upon a gentleness enlinked with power;
Her torch still burns, to kindle or consume,
And 'gainst the time when she must prove her might
Vast energy is stored in her soul's room,
Undreamed-of strength to battle for the right.

—Florence Earle Coates, New York Times.

RESPONSE OF WHITE RIBBONERS TO PATRIOTISM'S CALL

MINNESOTA AWAKE TO THE NEEDS OF THE HOUR

BESSIE LATHE SCOVELL

Miss Rozette Hendrix, state W. C. T. U. president, has put into operation all over the state plans for work at once on comfort bags, surgical dressings, bandages, etc. Some of the local branches are holding weekly meetings for this purpose and all the unions of the state may be depended upon to do their bit in this time of the nation's need.

Minnesota is bringing strong pressure to bear upon President Wilson for nation-wide prohibition as a war measure. Miss Hendrix sent to him a telegram in the name of the 8,000 members of the state W. C. T. U. The Minnesota Woman Suffrage association, at the closing session of its quarterly conference at Duluth, April 28, passed the following resolution: "The women of Minnesota are prepared to give their sons and brothers to this war, if need be, to forward the cause of world democracy, but they demand that the lives and well-being of these soldiers be safeguarded in every possible way. To this end they most earnestly petition you to use your executive power to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors during the period of the war and, until such time as a prohibition law becomes effective, prohibit the sale of liquor within a radius of ten miles of every military camp or station."

President George E. Vincent of the state university, ex-Governor Van Sant, ex-Governor John Lind, and many other noted men have sent telegrams to President Wilson urging nation-wide prohibition. Dr. H. E. Robertson, professor of pathology at the state university, who was in Germany for eighteen months after the beginning of the war, sent this telegram: "That intoxication in any degree lowers vitality, resistance to disease, power to work, ability to recover from exhaustion and general usefulness is beyond doubt. In my opinion no other measure could accomplish the moral and economic conservation of resources that would result from National Prohibition at this time." The State Sunday School association, which has just closed a six days' session in Minneapolis, sent resolutions to President Wilson recommending prohibition as a means of conserving food supplies, factory and farm productiveness and military efficiency.

(Continued on Page Fifteen)

WAR TIME ACTIVITIES IN MASSACHUSETTS

KATHARINE LENT STEVENSON, President Massachusetts W. C. T. U.

The Massachusetts Woman's Christian Temperance Union is actively engaged in work for the soldiers and sailors and has been since the mobilization of the troops on the Mexican frontier. The activity has increased since the formal declaration of war. A circular letter was sent immediately to the local unions, signed by the efficient superintendent of Work among Soldiers and Sailors, Mrs. Arabella W. Wilson, and the state president, and the response has been most encouraging. We are working in co-operation with the Red Cross, the Army and Navy League, and in many towns with the local relief committees, all work being reported to Mrs. Wilson. The special endeavor has been to fill Box No. 8 of the Red Cross supplies but it now looks as if we should fill several boxes and the busy fingers of the women are engaged everywhere in knitting wristers, sweaters, helmets, socks, sanitary sponges and other necessities, while comfort bags are coming in from many of the unions. In addition to the $150 sent to Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, National superintendent Work among Soldiers and Sailors, for the frontier work last year, $30 has been forwarded this year and other sums are being sent to Mrs. Wilson by the unions for purchasing yarn and other necessities. Nothing is being done in the line of cultivating vacant lots as that kind of patriotic work is so fully covered by the state committees.

The most vigorous work, however, is being carried on for war prohibition. While represented through the state president on the War Prohibition-Conservation committee, which is composed of many men and women prominent in other lines of endeavor who have never before espoused prohibition, the W. C. T. U. is also carrying on its own distinct propaganda. Every union in the state has been appealed to for funds for this special work and also urged to send telegrams and letters to President Wilson and Governor McCall. In addition they have interviewed the prominent men and women of their several communities and thousands of telegrams from unions, churches, clubs and individuals have been sent. The Old Bay State is thoroughly alive to the crisis and may be counted on to do its "level best."

NEW YORK EAGER TO DO ITS BIT

ELLA A. BOOLE, President New York W. C. T. U.

Now that the United States is entering the war, New York state W. C. T. U. is ready to carry its share of the work.

Our first act was to foster the spirit of patriotism, and at the meeting of our state Woman's Christian Temperance Union executive committee, immediately after the devotional services we pledged allegiance to the flag. This is being done by most of our local unions, several of which have been presented with beautiful flags which are displayed at every meeting. Next, we are recommending co-operation with the Red Cross in every possible way. Individual white ribboners are joining it and we are asking that some member of each local union, the superintendent of the department of Soldiers and Sailors, if possible, take the course for instructors, under the direction of the Red Cross, that she may be able to teach other members of our organization to do the relief work as standardized. Local unions are urged to hold special meetings for making Red Cross supplies and are being encouraged to knit face cloths, sleeveless sweaters, mufflers, and socks according to the recommended methods.

Many unions will provide comfort bags, always one of the specialties in New York, but they will be made after our own design and a Testament and a pledge-card, with a letter from some good motherly woman, will accompany the bags which will be distributed through our state W. C. T. U. department of Soldiers and Sailors. Our members will be encouraged to have home gardens and to assist in taking the war census.

We are not unmindful of the need for appeals to the President and those in authority for protection against the evils of drink during the war and are urging National Prohibition as a war measure before the club women, missionary societies, churches, etc. The W. C. T. U. in New York state is ready to do its bit in patriotic loyalty and in service for our country.

WHY SQUANDER IN LIQUOR-MAKING THE FOOD SUPPLY OF THE WORLD?

CONGRESSMAN PERL D. DECKER OF MISSOURI

The President has advised the farmers to till more acres of land; he has advised the women and children of the cities to plant gardens and raise vegetables. Why, then, squander wheat and corn and rye and barley in the manufacture of that which does no good and indeed does much harm? If children must eat less meat, if laborers must eat less bread, is it asking too much to insist that we do away with booze during the war? This kind of legislation will conserve our food supply for our people and help feed our allies. It will increase health and efficiency and guard the morals of the young men and boys that will be called to the colors to fight our battles.

"WHAT WAS THE GREATEST BATTLE IN THE WAR?"

SHERWOOD EDDY ASKS THE QUESTION OF THE BOYS IN THE WAR ZONE

In the whole world there are no men more fiercely tempted than are they who have gone to the defense of their country in the war, says Sherwood Eddy, out of his wide and intimate knowledge of conditions in the war zones of Europe. In an address given in many of the cities of this country prior to his sailing on May 6 for France to resume his work in the military camps, he told of the efforts of the Y. M. C. A. workers to grip the hearts and consciences of the boys and men before they go too far into the ways of sin. How they are able to accomplish it is best told in his own word picture (reprinted from The Record of Christian Work) of a meeting in a concentration camp in France, where thousands of French and British soldiers are stationed.

At one end of the hut a hundred men are buying tea, coffee and refreshments at the lunch counter. A couple of hundred are at the writing tables, buried in their letters, their thoughts far away in the old home and oblivious to the roar of the music and the talking going on about them.

It is time for our meeting to begin, but how are we ever going to grip the attention of a thousand restless men? Here are several hundred men who have been driven toward God and who are face to face with the great realities of life, death and the future for the first time in their lives, eager for a message which shall help them to find God and help them in time of trouble. But here are several hundred others who have been hardened by the war, who have fallen victims to evil habits determined you shall not force religion down their throats. How are we to capture the attention of this whole mass of men and hold them? Will they bolt or stand fire?

The time has come to begin the meeting and we plunge in. "Come on, boys, let's have a sing-song; gather round the piano and let's sing some of the old camp songs." Out come the little camp song books. Soon we have five hundred men seated around the piano and the chorus gathers in volume. Now we call for local talent. A boy with blue eyes and a clear tenor sings of home. A red-headed humorist named "Ginger" climbs on the table, and at his impersonations, his acting and comic songs the crowd shouts with glee.

My heart sinks within me as I look over this sea of faces and wonder how

Sherwood Eddy

I am ever going to hold this crowd that "Ginger" has in the hollow of his hand. Somehow these men must be gripped and held to the last.

"Boys, what was the greatest battle of the war?" we ask. "Was it the brave stand of little Belgium at Liege? Was it the great retreat of the little British army from Mons? Was it the battle of the Marne, when the French and British struck their first blow? Was it the great stand at Ypres, the defense of Verdun, or the drive on the Somme? What was your hardest battle? Is it not inside, the fight with passion? Now is the time to challenge every sin that weakens a man or the nation. Boys, how about drink? Is it a friend or foe? How about gambling? I was watching you at your game this afternoon. How about impurity?"

Here we mass our guns on the greatest danger of the war. In five minutes the room is quiet, in ten minutes we have the ear of every man in the hut, the last man has stopped talking and now the battle is on. They are gripped on the moral issue, how can we get them to the religious? These men have the roots of religion in their souls, but they do not know it. They believe in strength, in purity, in generosity. I show that they are all falling before temptation, but the very things that they admire are all found in their fullness in Jesus Christ. The wages of their sin is death, but the free gift of God is eternal life.

The thought of an illustration strikes me. I hold up a gold half-sovereign hidden in my hand. "Who will take me at my word and ask for a gift?" At last a man rises up, there is a little scene, and then a burst of applause as the man gets the coin and goes to his seat. "Now, why didn't you come? Some of you didn't believe me, some were ashamed to come up before everybody and ask for it, some were just waiting, but you lost your chance. Once again I offer a gift. Here is something more valuable than all the gold on earth, heaven to be had for the asking; the free gift of God is eternal life. Why don't you come? The same three reasons. Some of you don't believe, some are afraid to show their colors. Some are just waiting. You will start for the front tomorrow to take your place in the trenches. Are you ready for life or death? What then will you do with Jesus Christ?"

We have had them forty minutes now and every man is listening for his life. We hold up the pledge card of the war roll. "How many of you are willing to take the stand against drink, gambling and impurity, break away from sin, and sign the war roll, which says: 'I pledge my allegiance to the Lord Jesus Christ as my Saviour and King, by God's help to fight His battles and bring victory to His Kingdom'? Who will stand before this whole crowd and sign today?" Here and there all over the house men begin to rise. A hundred come forward to get cards and sign them. "Now, boys, let's stand for a closing prayer." Every head is bowed and in the stillness we pray for these boys, for they are mere lads, with ruddy cheeks, fresh from the farm or city streets, boys of eighteen and twenty.

AMERICA MUST HAVE A "SOBER" ARMY

That the United States is going about the business of war-making in a wonderfully sane and sober manner is demonstrated not only by recent orders issued by army officers regarding sale of liquor to men in uniform, by certain measures pending in Congress regarding sale of liquor to soldiers, but by the stand taken by many influential daily journals on the question of prohibition as a war measure or for all time. The following editorial under the above caption, from the Seattle Daily Times, is remarkably decisive and forceful in its presentation of the question. It illustrates the spirit of the press of today regarding the drink traffic. The question arises now, if we must have a sober army, why not have a sober nation to maintain that army and conserve every resource of the country for all useful purposes. We quote in full from the Times:

"Nearly as important as conscription itself is the army bill amendment approved by the Senate, under which the government would be authorized to adopt any necessary measure to prevent the selling or giving of intoxicants to enlisted men in the country's fighting forces.

"The new army that is to be organized under the 'selective draft,' must be a sober army. The young men called from their homes must not be subjected to temptations that they would not face in their own communities. In particular, they must be protected against the unscrupulous, who would seize at once upon the opportunity to establish groggeries at the gates of mobilization camps, where thousands of youngsters will be encamped during their period of training.

"This matter is one of peculiar interest to the commonwealths where state-wide prohibition is in force. Bitter opposition would be developed, not only to the methods employed in making conscription effective, but to the law itself were proper safeguards not thrown around the boys during their period of training and their period of service in the field.

"It is distinctly possible that Congress in the near future will decree national prohibition, in order to conserve grain supplies. This is a desirable and necessary reform. However, whether such a law is or is not passed, prohibition must be the rule in the army, and it must be made effective by imposing drastic penalties upon all who supply or attempt to supply the soldiers with intoxicants."

THE KID HAS GONE TO THE COLORS

The Kid has gone to the Colors
And we don't know what to say;
The Kid we have loved and cuddled
Stepped out for the Flag to-day.
We thought him a child, a baby,
With never a care at all,
But his country called him man-size
And the Kid has heard the call.

He paused to watch the recruiting
Where, fired by the fife and drum,
He bowed his head to Old Glory
And thought that it whispered:
"Come!"
The Kid, not being a slacker,
Stood forth with patriot-joy
To add his name to the roster—
And, oh, we're proud of the boy!

The Kid has gone to the Colors;
It seems but a little while
Since he drilled a schoolboy army
In a truly martial style.
But now he's a man, a soldier,
And we lend him a listening ear,
For his heart is a heart all loyal,
Unscourged by the curse of fear.

His dad, when he told him, shuddered,
His mother—God bless her!—cried;
Yet, blest with a mother-nature,
She wept with a mother-pride.
But he whose old shoulders straightened
Was granddad—for memory ran
To years when he, too, a youngster,
Was changed by the Flag to a man!

—W. M. Herschell, in the Indianapolis News.

"Attempt Great Things for God.
Expect Great Things from God."

MARY FRANCES WILLARD ANDERSON, National General Secretary Young People's Branch

HOW WILL YOU ANSWER THE CALL FOR SACRIFICIAL SERVICE?

MARY FRANCES WILLARD ANDERSON, National General Y. P. B. Secretary

You have read Mrs. Danser's appeal for our Y. P. B. Missionary Fund and for the French orphan we desire to adopt for this year, and I know you will respond. To give may mean to sacrifice, but these are days of sacrifice and we are called upon to join the hosts of young men and women the world over that are being swept out of their narrow lives into world thinking; out of ease into hardness; out of selfishness into sacrifice. Our Y. P. B. is composed of young people who are ready and willing to answer any call to sacrifice or service.

Recently I heard a story of a poor blind woman in Paris who placed twenty-seven francs in her missionary offering. "You cannot afford so much," said one of her friends. "Yes, I can," she answered, and after being pressed to explain, said, "I am blind, and I have asked my fellow straw-workers how much money they spend a year for oil in their lamps when it is too dark to work at night, and they replied that it costs them not less than twenty-seven francs for oil, and so you see because I am blind and do not need a light I want to give this to help shed the light in the dark places."

What rare spiritual sight she had—a far greater treasure than the mere physical vision! And since

"The night is dark upon the land, and we have light;
So many have to grope their way, and we have sight,"

let us bring an offering for all the physical, mental, and spiritual enlightenment which is given us in this land of ours.

"I looked upon the sea, and lo! it was dead,
Although by Hermon's snows and Jordan fed.

"How came a fate so dire? The tale's soon told:
All that it got it kept and fast did hold;

"All tributary streams found there their grave
Because the sea received and never gave.

"O sea that's dead, help me to know and feel
That selfish grasp and greed my doom will seal.

"And Father, help me, myself, my best to give,
That I may others bless, and like Thee, live."

"IS THERE NOT A CAUSE?"

1st Sam. 17:16-29, 38-49

As we study this scripture lesson, let us go in imagination to the land of Judea and stand with the Israelites on a Judean hillside. Across the valley we can see on the brow of another hill, the army of the Philistines and we can easily distinguish, foremost among them, the giant leader who for forty days has challenged the Israelites to send a man out to meet him in open combat, yet no man dares to oppose him.

Into the camp of the Israelites comes a boy with food and messages for his brothers, but what has he said to displease them, for we hear the eldest brother saying, "Why camest thou down hither, and with whom hast thou left those few sheep in the wilderness?" And David said, "What have I now done? Is there not a cause?"

This is the keynote of the story—David's recognition of the need, of the cause!

In the name of the Lord of Hosts, David slew the giant Goliath.

In the name of the Lord of Hosts, the young people of today are asking, "Is there not a cause?" and they are dealing the deathblow to John Barleycorn!

God had a purpose in sending the boy David to the camp, and in the name of the Lord, David needed not the helmet nor the coat of mail, neither did he carry the sword of Saul.

In our fight against John Barleycorn it is not necessary that we use the methods of our elders. In the name of the Lord, let us use our youth, for "There is a cause!" Let us carry "Youth" as our staff and for the five pebbles let us have "Faith" and have it more abundantly.

Faithfulness.
Agitation and Education.
Interest and Inspiration.
Talents for Temperance.
Helpfulness.

—MRS. L. V. SMITH.
South Dakota Y. P. B. Secretary.

SUGGESTIVE Y. P. B. PROGRAMS FOR MAY

First Meeting

WORLD EVENING

Song—"Helpers' Song," page 58.

Roll Call—Signs of Victory: "What Other Nations are Doing with John Barleycorn."

"Our Y. P. B. Comrades in Burma."

The May Mack Missionary Fund—a Sketch and an Appeal.

Offering or return of Y. P. B. Missionary coin cards.

"The Past Year in Russia—From Darkness to Light."

Symposium—Members:
What we are doing
What we are not doing
What we can do
For World Temperance

Song—"White Ribbon Rally Song," page 61.

Second Meeting

Study.

Department—Co-operation with Missionary Societies.

Social Hour—Have a weight or a measuring party to help the May Mack Missionary Fund.

APPEAL FOR MAY MACK MISSIONARY FUND AND FRENCH ORPHAN

Dear Young People of the Y. P. B.:

We are observing this year the four hundredth anniversary of the "birthday of the Reformation," when on October 31, 1517, Martin Luther nailed his theses to the door of the castle church at Wittenberg. Martin Luther was the "man of the hour" in his day to bring the Bible to the people. There was released by the Reformation a power which transformed the world.

The present world conflict of nation with nation greatly emphasizes and impresses upon us the necessity for renewed world-wide efforts to annihilate the liquor traffic. We may be working in our own little town, in our own state, or nation but our responsibility does not and will not cease until the demon, alcohol, the greatest foe to humanity today, is wiped off the face of the globe.

Last year the Y. P. B.'s of our nation gave generously to the May Mack Missionary Fund and again I am appealing to you for even heartier response this year. I know you will gladly do your best. Miss Mack has sent me thirty choice postcards of Burma which can be nicely used in a mirrorscope for a drawing room meeting. These cards will be sent to any Y. P. B. wishing to use them, that has given at least one dollar to the fund this year. If two dollars are given, a souvenir from India will also be sent. This can be kept by the Y. P. B.

The president of the Moulmein Y. P. B. was instrumental in getting the manager of the Nickban cinema to give a benefit performance in aid of the Y. P. B. A film

(Continued on Page Seven)

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH POPULAR IN TENNESSEE

DEAR COMRADES:

Rejoice! We are getting some very promising new Branches among the state Normal schools. Tennessee has three state Normals, one at Johnson City for east Tennessee, one at Murfreesboro for middle Tennessee, and one at Memphis for west Tennessee. They are fine schools and will be finer still, for the legislature has just decided to spend another $150,000 on each. At every one I have had the joy of organizing a Young People's Branch and that without any trouble in the world. Not a single individual in a single case made a single objection. Presidents were in favor, faculty members were ready to help, students were interested and every one who was elected to office was willing to serve.

In each school two of the officers elected were young men and two were young women. At Johnson City an experienced and wide-awake white ribboner, Mrs. C. W. Black, became general secretary. At Murfreesboro we were most fortunate in securing the services of Mrs. Elma Rutledge, a niece of our deeply loved and deeply missed Mrs. Silena M. Holman. Mrs. Rutledge has been a white ribboner for many years and is full of plans for Y. P. B. work.

The West Tennessee State Normal Y. P. B. is honored in having as its general secretary a lady whose name is well known in educational circles. Mrs. Seymour A. Mynders is the widow of the former president of this Normal school, who, indeed, superintended the building of it. He was also for a time the state superintendent of Public Instruction and was a strong temperance man, and stumped the state for Mr. St. John. Mrs. Mynders still makes her home in the school and as its librarian is closely associated with all its life. The student population must of necessity be very fluctuating, but we may hope for a good Y. P. B. as long as Mrs. Mynders remains at Memphis.

Neither ought we to regret the transient nature of the membership of these school and college Y. P. B.'s. Young people who belong to them only for a short time during their student career may carry the temperance truth they learn there to the very ends of the earth.

In all these state Normals it was through the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. that I was enabled to organize the Branches. These kindred societies held joint meetings that I might come into touch with the student body and present the practical temperance message. We owe them hearty thanks for their ready co-operation.

The college year is very near its close. I wish that all Branches would plan to do some summer work through their individual members, and that it might be reported at the first fall meeting. See the leaflet on college plans to be had for postage only from National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Evanston, Ill.

It seems a pity to end one's letter with a minor note, but unfortunately it is necessary. Apart from the above, if anything is being done in the way of aggressive work in the colleges and Normals I do not know of it. I cannot even find out the status of our college work in the country at large or how many Branches there were at the beginning of the year. One of the first things I did was to send out an inquiry to all the states asking what had already been done in the colleges. I received less than half a dozen answers that could be called in any way definite. So today, at the close of the session, I know hardly any more than you people who are reading this.

I have sent out between two and three hundred letters; have written to all the state papers besides, and have offered prizes and made pleas. But the answer from ocean to ocean and from the lakes to the gulf, with few exceptions, is—silence. Of course much may be going on which this secretary knows nothing about, but the general silence is ominous and augurs badly for our report at the end of the year.

If only one woman in each state would take to heart the need of work in the colleges and would try to organize in the state Normals, we might have a Branch in perhaps all the Normals in the country before the end of the year, and in many colleges besides.

"Lift up your eyes and look on the fields for they are white already to harvest; and he that reapeth receiveth wages and gathereth fruit unto life eternal."

Affectionately,

CHRISTINE I. TINLING.

"We're a loyal temperance army,
The Cheyenne Y. P. B.
We're out to fight old alcohol
And set Wyoming free.

We're going to work and vote and pray
Until our state is dry,
As we march to victory
We'll shout our battle cry!"

—Dedicated to the Cheyenne Y. P. B. by Mrs. John Grainger

APPEAL FOR MAY MACK MISSIONARY FUND AND FRENCH ORPHAN

(Continued from Page Six)

depicting the destruction caused by the liquor traffic was shown. Miss Mack writes, "In the Y. P. B. ranks we are fighting hard against the use of tobacco and coon or betel and as both these habits are formed in early childhood by the native races, I think it speaks well for them that there are so many who have been willing to quit the habit. Through the efforts of the young people 577 pledges were signed last year. The Burma W. C. T. U. prepared a special program for use in Sunday schools on World's Temperance Sunday and it was more widely used this year. We also appealed for a part of the collections taken in the churches on that day and we have received a generous response. I can't tell you how comforting it is to me to know that the young people of America are interesting themselves in our work."

Just one word more: A special appeal has come to us through our National Flower Mission superintendent asking our National Y. P. B. to contribute enough money to adopt at least one French orphan. This can be done by the payment of $36.50. Will you not, as you give for the May Mack Fund, donate also one dollar to the French orphan, and when sending your contribution please state to which fund you wish the money to go.

Let us one and all take as our own the following quotation:

"I live for
The cause that needs assistance,
The wrong that needs resistance,
The future in the distance,
The good that I can do."

May God bless you in your noble work for others.

Loyally yours,

MRS. FANNY ROOT DANSER,
National Promoter Y. P. B. Missionary Fund.

Richmond Hill, N. Y.

TWELVE MONTHS OF TEMPERANCE SERVICE BY THE YOUNG PEOPLE OF CHEYENNE

Special Correspondence

The Cheyenne (Wyoming) Y. P. B. is remodeling its headquarters, which includes a reading room, in order to accommodate its growing membership. Organized in March, 1916, with eleven names on its list, it has increased its enrollment to 107, gaining twenty-three members during April, the birthday month of Frances J. Barnes.

It has held nineteen business meetings, seven social, and seven special meetings with an average attendance of twenty-eight, given one rally program, one open-air picnic, and one poster picnic on July 4. It also had a float in the patriotic parade, in the Frontier day parade, and gave a stereopticon and musical entertainment and a farewell party for the president, vice-president, and one of the members. Altogether it has published two hundred inches of advertising in each daily paper. It keeps filled with the latest temperance literature a large show window twelve by seven and one-half feet, has distributed six hundred leaflets and two hundred post-cards and has one sub-

(Continued on Page Ten)

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, May 10, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, has returned to Evanston, after several weeks' absence in Washington, attending to legislative matters of great importance.

COUNCIL OF DEFENSE ARRANGES FOR PROTECTIVE ZONES

News received as we go to press indicates that the appeals of the women of America for the protection of their sons have been heard and granted. The Council of Defense has arranged for a saloonless, viceless zone around each army post and naval station. Great will be the rejoicing by parents and friends of the enlisting boys who might otherwise have been subjected to unspeakable temptations and dangers. The information so far received is not sufficiently definite and decisive as to the extent of these zones to justify the discontinuance of our efforts. In any event, telegrams and letters should continue to go to President Wilson for national prohibition as a grain-conservation and general protective measure during the period of the war.

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, 561 Thirty-third St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

HAVE YOU ENLISTED?

It is the question of the hour. To answer it in the negative is to admit a lack of patriotic fervor. All are eager to become attached to some unit of service through which their talents and energies may best be invested, but what shall it be? What method or organization shall be chosen as the channel for individual efforts? W. C. T. U. Membership Week, May 6-13, affords exactly the opportunity to secure the enlistment of many women of many communities in the white ribbon army, which is mobilized for patriotic service along various lines of work.

Enlist the young people of your community for the securing of National Prohibition as a war measure. Enlist for the production of food. Nail a flag to your hoe, your spade, your rake, and enter heart and soul into the food-growing movement. Read what is being done in other cities and initiate a similar plan in your own community. In St. Louis a group of young college women set in motion the thrift garden idea, and now a number of organizations federated in the St. Louis Council of Women have adopted it as their emergency service stunt. Headquarters have been established in the center of the city; an automobile, necessary office equipment, and the services of stenographers have been proffered by certain business firms; 20,000 copies of the Country Gentleman have been donated for purposes of sale, the proceeds to be used for seed and other necessities for the garden; a department of scientific information has been organized; volunteer botanists and gardeners secured; arrangements made for the free printing of question blanks and publication of answers in the newspapers. Suggestions along this line have heretofore been given by Miss Lella M. Sewall, National W. C. T. U. Flower Mission superintendent, and others will be found on page 10, in the official communication of Mrs. Lucia F. Additon, National superintendent of Temperance and Labor. Convert the soil, sunshine, seed, and moisture in your particular corner of the world into food to feed your fellow countrymen and the Allies. Enlist for relief work through the Soldiers and Sailors department, of which Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher is National W. C. T. U. superintendent, by the making of comfort bags for the soldiers, the providing of literature, jellies, marmalades. Knit your patriotism into sweaters and wool socks for the boys in the training camps and mobilization centers. Raise money for the renting of electric fans for the hospitals. Co-operate with the Red Cross Society in the making of bandages and other supplies.

Enlist for economy in your own domestic affairs. As someone has said, "Back up the men on the firing line, afloat and ashore, by a common-sense study of food values and a practical application of economy."

Inspire the women of other communities by reporting briefly and concisely the patriotic enterprises in which you are engaged. If you have knowledge of some need of the enlisted boys and men that is being adequately met by the women of your city, pass the information along through the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL, and thus multiply your influence for patriotism.

COLLEGE MEN AROUSED

If ever the accusation could be made against the presidents and professors of our colleges that they treated the liquor problem as a purely academic question that could be referred to committees and commissions, and be left to work its way to a solution through the course of the ages, as the race developed through the process of evolution, that time would seem to be past. The reported activity for prohibition as a war measure among the prominent university men would indicate that they are vitally awake to the necessity of using their influence to secure these measures. How could it be otherwise? Every day the choicest, the brainiest, the manliest youths in all the great colleges are responding to the call of patriotism, are going out from the protection of homes and schools into training camps and mobilization centers, where commercialized liquor and vice are lying in wait to claim them as victims. The president of one college, the father of five boys of enlistment age, was so aroused that he personally telephoned, telegraphed and sent communications by mail to practically every head of a college in the United States, urging them to bombard Washington with demands for an anti-liquor anti-vice zone around every mobilization center. The demand is going to Washington from these educational leaders that the boys who have been under their tutelage, lads of rare gifts and promise, must not be sacrificed to vice and liquor for the mere sake of the revenue from the drink traffic. Even though this country were bankrupt it could retrieve its losses, rehabilitate its institutions and start anew, but if its young men become debauched by the conditions of this war, it faces extinction. That the educational world is awakening to the critical condition that faces the members of the student body entering the army is cause for encouragement to hope the appeals of the educators, with those of the motherhood of America, will be heard and granted.

INFLATED FIGURES!

The number of bushels of grain consumed annually in the manufacture of alcoholic beverages has been variously stated by the press but the figure most generally used has been 600,000,000. The distillers and brewers now are calling the attention of the newspapers to the fact that they use only the trifling amount of approximately 135,000,000 bushels rather than 600,000,000, and that really a little matter of 135,000,000 bushels of grain wasted in the manufacture of poisoned drinks ought not to be worrying so many people in these days of threatened food shortage. The interesting point in the case is that the inflated figure, 600,000,000, originated with the liquor interests some years ago and has been used to impress the men engaged in agriculture with the immensity of the market for grains afforded by the liquor business and the calamity that would necessarily result to the farmers from prohibition.

Not a word of protest was ever uttered by the liquor interests concerning the use of this figure until the war prohibition question loomed large, when it was made to shrink in an astonishing fashion. The figure now named by the liquor interests is approximately the same as that which appeared in W. C. T. U. literature, notably in Prof. John Nicholls', "Does It Pay?" The food value of approximately 135,000,000 bushels of grain is almost beyond the grasp of the imagination of the average reader, and when interpreted in loaves of bread, being something like a loaf of bread a day for 11,000,000 men, seems to abundantly justify the enacting of a grain conservation prohibition war measure.

WOMEN'S ORGANIZATIONS OF AMERICA UNITE IN APPEAL TO PRESIDENT FOR PROTECTION OF ENLISTED BOYS

During the past few weeks there has gone to Washington through telegrams and letters an unprecedented appeal from the womanhood of America for the enactment of a prohibition measure as protection for the boys and young men of this country who have enlisted and are soon to be in mobilization centers, where they may be menaced by commercialized liquor and vice interests. Miss Anna A. Gordon, National W. C. T. U. president, has received hearty response to her letters to leaders of the various woman's organizations asking their co-operation. Among those which have definitely declared themselves in favor of this movement are the Federation of Woman's Clubs, National Woman Suffrage Association, Daughters of the American Revolution, Mothers' Congress and Parent-Teacher Association, Ladies of the Maccabees, National Woman's Relief Corps and the women's church missionary societies.

GROWING POPULARITY OF NO-LICENSE IN MASSACHUSETTS

In the state of Massachusetts the spring elections on the question of license or no-license present some peculiar returns. Three counties, Dukes, Nantucket and Norfolk, have no license territory whatever. Three others, Barnstable, Bristol and Plymouth, have only one town each voting for license. Ten towns did not have one single license vote at the last election. They are Gosnold, Heath, Hopedale, Leyden, Montgomery, New Ashford, Princeton, Wellfleet, West Tisbury and Windsor.

In the whole state 24 out of 37 cities, 255 out of 317 towns and 3 out of 14 counties are dry. The returns as a whole show that the state is no-license by a majority of 21,748, but owing to the fact that each city and town controls the matter within its own borders the no-license majority cannot be made effective for the state.

In view of the fact that the liquor forces of Boston at the recent election made the fight of their lives to retain that stronghold and secured an unusually large majority, the above showing is very encouraging for the dry forces.

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do You Know the Answers to These Questions? They May Be Found in THE UNION SIGNAL of May 3

Ten questions, the answers to which will be found in the preceding number of THE UNION SIGNAL, will appear each week. The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. Why should all good citizens protest against the Federal government increasing the tax on whisky and beer as a war prohibition measure?

2. What are the two reasons for prohibition for the war to be emphasized in sending telegrams and letters to President Wilson?

3. Name the two latest legislatures to pass anti-liquor advertising laws.

4. Which of the South American republics is seriously considering entering upon an anti-alcohol campaign?

5. What is the significance of the notable memorial for National Constitutional Prohibition presented to Congress April 24?

6. Name ten prominent individuals of different professions who have signed it.

7. Give the names of two prominent national women's organizations meeting very recently in Washington that have declared for prohibition.

8. What past effort of the W. C. T. U. to suppress the liquor and vice evils in military camps encourages us to hope for success in our present efforts?

9. How are Philadelphia women physicians trying to help drinking men to move into dry states?

10. Name five plans which are being used in the different states for securing new members for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

PATRIOTIC PARAGRAPHS

"Why urge housewives to conserve food and plant backyard vegetable plats when millions of bushels of grain are going to the manufacture of intoxicants?" the women are inquiring. The Cleveland Federation of Women's Clubs has not only asked the question, but has answered it, in the form of a resolution demanding national prohibition.

"Nail a flag to your plow and work for your country as you would fight for her," is the slogan of the farmers of Georgia.

"I feel that the present war situation, particularly the urgent need of all possible food supply, makes very much more evident the need of prohibition as a war measure," writes Governor Carl E. Milliken of Maine. "I shall be glad to do everything I can to help bring about this result. I believe that if President Wilson should ask Congress for such a measure it would certainly be passed."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

(Continued from Page Two)

Josephus Daniels, Jr., son of the Secretary of the Navy, enlisted in the Marine Corps yesterday. He will be sent immediately to the Philadelphia navy yard. His period of enlistment is four years. Young Daniels is twenty-one years old.

Competent Indians to be Made Masters of Their Own Affairs

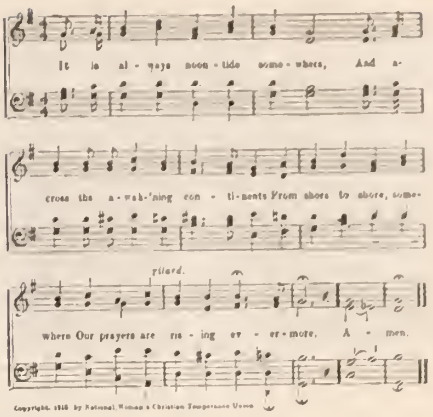
No longer are competent Indians to be wards of the government, according to a declaration of policy issued by the Bureau of Indian affairs recently. For years the Indian has had the government take care of his money and his land, and government officials have controlled him as parents control children. Now to those who are adjudged capable of transacting their own business will be given full rights and title to their lands and monies, to do with as they please. This discontinuance of guardianship of all competent Indians allows greater attention to be paid to those who are incompetent and thus reduces the expense to the government.

Certificates of competency will be issued to those qualifying for them. These rulings will apply broadly to those who have less than one-half Indian blood and to graduates of Indian schools and, with certain restrictions, to those with more than one-half Indian blood.

It is also planned to eliminate from the free Indian schools those children whose parents can afford to educate them.

National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, Washington, D. C., May 4, 1917

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



THE FLAG

By HENRY VAN DYKE

All day long in the city's canyoned street,
Through a forest of watching folk on either side,
I saw a river of marching men like a tide,
Flowing after the flag;
And the rhythmic beat of the drums
And the bugles' resonant blare
Metred the tramp, tramp, tramp of a myriad feet,
While the Red, White and Blue was fluttering everywhere
And the heart of the crowd
Kept time to a martial air.

O brave flag, O bright flag,
O flag to lead the free!
The glory of thy silver stars
Engrailed in blue above the bars
Of red for courage, white for truth,
Shall bring the world a second youth.

And draw a countless human host,
To follow after thee,
First of the flags of earth to dare
A heraldry so high;
First of the flags of earth to bear
The blazon of the sky;
Long may the constellation glow,
Foretelling happy fate;
Wider thy starry circle grow—
And every star a state.

O bright flag, O brave flag,
O flag to lead the free!
The hand of God thy colors blent,
And heaven to earth thy glory lent,
To shield the weak and guide the strong,
To make an end of human wrong
And draw a hundred million hearts
To follow thee.

—Chicago Herald.

Our interests go with our gifts. The more we give to God and God's work, the more dear will God and God's work be to us. "I am going down to hear Bishop ——— preach tonight," said a small Methodist boy. "The last time he was here I gave him five cents and I want to know what he did with it." If we give God what he asks of us, he will give us more than we can receive of himself. That is promised in Malachi 3:10.—Sunday School Times.

Resolutions urging action by the President and Congress for the protection of the young men who are enlisting for service have been adopted by many local and county unions and copies sent to THE UNION SIGNAL. We regret that lack of space makes it impossible to publish them.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

May 6-13—Membership week
May 13—Mothers' Day
June 9—Flower Mission Day—Birthday of Jennie Casseday

SUPERINTENDENTS

TEMPERANCE AND LABOR

LUCIA FAXON ADDITON

The stirring appeal to duty sent out by President Wilson touched every heart among us, I feel sure. On reading it I immediately sent to THE UNION SIGNAL the "hurry up" telegram, which has already been published, trusting that it might stimulate you to more strenuous activity.

Let us at once buckle on a little tighter, our armor of brotherly love and unitedly take our places in the great national service army—the peaceful, home-protection band of white ribboners. I am sure none will be idle. We serve if we but add one item, be it ever so small, to the food supply of the nation. President Wilson has said:

"Every man who creates or cultivates a garden helps greatly to solve the problem of the feeding of the nations; and every housewife who practices strict economy puts herself in the ranks of those who serve the nation. This is the time for America to correct her unpardonable fault of wastefulness and extravagance. Let every man and every woman assume the duty of careful, provident use and expenditure as a public duty, as a dictate of patriotism which no one can now expect ever to be excused or forgiven for ignoring.

"In the hope that this statement of the needs of the nation and of the world in this hour of supreme crisis may stimulate those to whom it comes and remind all who need a reminder of the solemn duties of a time such as the world has never seen before, I beg that all editors and publishers everywhere will give as prominent publication and as wide circulation as possible to this appeal."

The high cost of living has hit the laboring people hard. If we are true to our white ribbon principles, true to "God and Home and Every Land" we will quickly and loyally answer the call. It is a testing time to the nation and IN GOD WE TRUST.

Our women will not be found wanting; they are already turning waste land, vacant lots, yes, and even backyards into patches for cultivation of potatoes and other foodstuffs. Canning clubs and poultry clubs are being organized by our women. One state last year had 3,000 girls enrolled in canning clubs alone, whose combined product meant a net saving of over $38,000.00. These clubs and other clubs of similar character will serve as an entering wedge into the wider field of home economics with which the Temperance and Labor department has much to do.

Extension work in home economics and thorough understanding of human conservation through this channel, should receive the earnest and faithful study of every state. The Smith Lever law is an agricultural act aiding both the agriculturists and the home economists. It is a movement to improve the economic condition of our agricultural people—those who labor to help feed a nation. Many times have I had workers say to me, "Ours is an agricultural state; therefore, we practically have no labor problems." What a mistake. One of the most trying, perplexing problems of the industrial life is agriculture, and it is because of this very fact, that the government has taken hold to help solve it.

The laborer of the soil is the great conservator of the life of the nation. It is the farmer who raises our food supplies; the housewife who converts the products of the farm into life sustaining foods. Are they, then, of less importance to the great consuming class than the distributor of the foodstuffs? Is it not all one general problem? And just now when through this awful war situation so many thousands of producers are being taken out of that class and put into the class of non-producers, yet consumers, is it not vitally important to emphasize every need and every possible method of producing?

It has been stated over and over that the "enormous waste in the present system of marketing and distributing would relieve the hardship of the world."

We have urged work for human conservation and have talked much upon the subject. It is now up to us to put these theories into deeds. Knowledge which does not result in action is futile.

Human conservation is a vital problem. One thing is linked with another thing, there is no top or bottom. To use a phrase of Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney, "We are all betweenities," yes, between some one and some one else. Let us help all along the line—no, not a line but a circle. "God wills that in a ring His blessings shall be sent from living thing to living thing, nowhere stayed or spent. And he that takes and gives not out again is thus a link that breaks in heaven's love-made chain."

Will the women of today lay to one side their embroidery and take up the job of family conservation in the way it can be done—through the community. We believe very many of them will.

While the departments of Soldiers and Sailors and Flower Mission and Relief work are busy with their important missionary endeavors let there be a great arrest of thought on the absolute necessity of the work, also of the Labor department doing every "bit" we can to help increase the food supply and economize in the home. Let every foot of land be utilized, even though it be small. Remember that every bit of labor along these lines is an active demonstration of our oft repeated lessons in human conservation; that every vegetable raised, every bit of fruit put to good use, is helping to feed the nation.

In a great patriotic parade passing my window yesterday, many people were seen carrying over their shoulder a hoe with the flag tied to it—fit emblem, surely, of practical patriotism now that the food supply problem looms big.

Let us show our patriotism in every possible way, not forgetting constant heart prayer for international peace and prohibition of the liquor curse. God help us, every one.

Hotel Seward, Portland, Ore.

TWELVE MONTHS OF TEMPERANCE SERVICE

(Continued from Page Seven)

scription to THE UNION SIGNAL and one to The Young Crusader.

It also has to its credit a temperance meeting in co-operation with the young people's society of the First Baptist church and a ten minute talk at each monthly missionary meeting of the same denomination. Up to the present time twenty-seven prominent men have addressed the Y. P. B. In October it sent as the delegate to the state W. C. T. U. convention at Casper, its leader, Mrs. Bell. She brought back splendid reports of the work. On the evening of election day, November 7, it gave a play, "Seven Blasts," which was a success from every standpoint. It is proud to say that one of its members, Miss Hazel Bell, while in Chicago, had the privilege of visiting Evanston, Ill., the former home of Frances E. Willard. On Willard Memorial Day she gave a graphic sketch of National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Rest Cottage, and the Publishing House, which was very interesting. Governor Kendrick was the principal speaker on this occasion, telling of his early life in the state and the great possibilities now existing for progress along prohibition and other lines. After a few days he left for Washington, D. C., as United States Senator, taking with him good wishes and God-speed from the Cheyenne Y. P. B.

In January the Y. P. B. gave a hot chicken supper which was a financial success. During January and February it held two special meetings with an attendance of fifty-one, aside from its regular weekly meetings, at which seven members of the fourteenth legislature, all men loyal to the temperance cause, addressed it. They made a strong fight for a statutory prohibition law. During this campaign the Y. P. B. sent one hundred and ten personal letters to members of the senate and house. It was honored by having Governor Kendrick give to it one of the seven pens with which he signed the submission bill.

The Cheyenne Y. P. B. thanks God for all He has done for it in the past year and for all its loyal members. May His richest blessings rest upon the temperance work throughout our nation.

SIR ALFRED PEARCE GOULD PLEADS FOR PROHIBITION FOR GREAT BRITAIN, "TOTAL, GENERAL, IMMEDIATE"

With the food problem an increasingly pressing one in Great Britain the sentiment for prohibition is rapidly spreading. At a dry meeting held in London recently under the auspices of the Strength of Britain movement, of which Sir Alfred Booth, chairman of the Cunard Line, is president, the following resolution was adopted, says the Chicago Herald:

"That this meeting, believing the concentration of our utmost resources to be essential to the winning of the war, calls the attention of the government to the grave danger arising from the continued manufacture and sale of alcohol. It sees with increasing anxiety the daily destruction of food by brewers and distillers, while our food supplies are in great peril: the waste of tonnage on drink materials while ships are daily sunk by submarines, and the unparalleled expenditure on drink in times of unparalleled financial stress. It welcomes the prime minister's assurance that stopping drink is one of the most effective means of winning the war, and demands the pursuance of this policy to the only tolerable end, that this trade, weakening our energies, consuming our resources and endangering the physical and moral welfare of the army and the nation, be entirely and immediately prohibited for the period of the war and demobilization."

Many speeches were made and letters read at this meeting, some of them from prominent army officers. "To win the war surely and quickly," said a letter from Lieutenant Colonel Sir Alfred Pearce Gould, who had been ordered to the front just before the meeting, "and with the least possible injury to our countrymen and countrywomen, and with the smallest legacy of evil in the future, I plead for prohibition, total, general, immediate."

Steady Now! Fire! Waukegan (Ill.) Gazette

General Sir Reginald Hart, V. C., wrote that prohibition would be the greatest event in the history of the British empire.

"I have always regretted that the whole cabinet did not follow the example of the king and Lord Kitchener and insist upon prohibition in 1914," Lord Channing said.

Herbert P. Casson said that through drink he estimated Great Britain "is losing 3,000,000 meals a day."

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH NOTES

Kansas Y. P. B., under the able leadership of Miss Zoe Atchison, is planning a three days' state conference for June and the program, including "Welcome night," a grand gold medal contest, a union mass meeting, reception, parade and a number of other features, makes us all want to start for Kansas to have a share in the proceedings!

The Washington (D. C.) Y. P. B. held an enthusiastic rally in the Waugh M. E. church, April 20. The District Y. P. B. secretary, Mrs. Edna H. Taylor, presided and introduced Hon. Alben W. Barkley, who addressed the young people. During the evening a life sketch of Frances Barnes was read by Miss Lillian Williamson.

Nearly two hundred wide awake young people, as well as other leading temperance workers, attended the Y. P. B. group meeting and banquet held in Elmira, N. Y., recently. The evening session included an address by the secretary of the Y. M. C. A., an illustrated lecture on John Barleycorn by Miss Mildred Moody, and a prohibition demonstration led by Uncle Sam and Miss Columbia. Awards were given the Yates delegation for state and county rally cries, and the general comment on the conference was, "It was a live one."

The program of the Massachusetts Y. P. B. state conference held on April 28, at the state headquarters, Boston, was crowded with good things from the opening session, when Mrs. Katharine Lent Stevenson addressed the delegates and gave a parliamentary drill, until the conference closed after an address by Mrs. Deborah Knox Livingston. An oratorical contest was one of the features of the day.

Rhode Island Y. P. B. is forging ahead and the secretary writes, "We are anxious to have it the biggest and best Young People's organization in the state." The Providence Y. P. B. has had a very successful winter with special programs, including a stereopticon lecture, "The W. C. T. U. in Song and Story," the presenting of the sketch, "The Lark at Nonotuck Hall," and a reading by Miss Adelaide Patterson from "The Man Who Forgot." On May 28, the Y. P. B. is to hold a banquet with Daniel A. Poling as the speaker and guest. This bids fair to be the grand climax to a successful year of activity and the state secretary, Mrs. Grace K. Drown, deserves much credit for her splendid leadership.

The Michigan Y. P. B. secretary, Mrs. Rich, reports a splendid awakening among the young people in her state. As a result of Miss Gertrude Swan's efforts in the field, at least 150 new members have been gained for our Y. P. B.

Cheering news has come from Mrs. Josephine Sizer, Y. P. B. secretary of Wisconsin, telling of new Y. P. B.'s organized and new members gained and a great awakening interest for state-wide prohibition.

The Ohio Y. P. B. had a most attractive Y. P. B. edition of the state paper in April. The keynote is the Y. P. B. and "Ohio dry." New Branches are springing up and under Mrs. Fannie Drummond's leadership the work is going forward in a splendid manner.

Monmouth county (N. J.) Y. P. B. members celebrated April 14 by holding a county rally and conference at Asbury Park. The program was prepared by the state secretary, Mrs. Keutgen, and included splendid musical numbers, helpful addresses, and a diamond medal contest. By the way, there have been fifteen medal contests in New Jersey thus far this year, and the young people are often won as active Y. P. B. members through this department. Try holding a contest!

Because of the splendid appeal of Mrs. F. E. Preston, three new Y. P. B.'s, composed of young colored people, have been organized in Florida.

The Y. P. B. of Asbury Park, N. J., under the leadership of Miss Belle Hope, local and county superintendent of Medal Contests, held four diamond, four grand gold, six gold and four silver medal contests last year. They are keeping up the work this year also.

In Burma there are now twenty-six Y. P. B.'s with a membership of 1,000; eight new societies were organized last year, and 577 members gained. The usual monthly meetings, many public meetings, and temperance entertainments have been held, and much personal work has been done. A great work was done in Bassein, Moulmein, Nyaunglebin, and Tharrawaddy. Miss Tingey at the American Baptist Karen school at Bassein, has given talks on tobacco to both teachers and pupils. The World's W. C. T. U. has engaged Mrs. D. Gilmore (wife of the president of the Rangoon Baptist College) to take the place of Miss Strout.

LITTLE GIRL WANTS TO WRITE TO 'JACK TARS"

CAPTAIN MOFFETT APPROVES

A letter from a nine year old girl which Capt. W. A. Moffett, commandant at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, hopes may start a movement of great benefit to the jackies of the entire United States Navy broke the routine of business at the station. Little Evelyn Young of Chicago recently wrote to the commandant as follows:

"My Dear Capt. Moffett: .Will you kindly ask your jackies who are going to the war if any one wants an American girl, nine years old, to be his friend and send nice letters from home and things to show how much we admire him? And who could write me, too, sometimes and tell me what he was doing for the stars and stripes and all us girls and boys.

"I like jack tars and mamma does, too. Papa wants to fight and he was in the guard, but had to earn money for us.

"Hoping you do not get angry and do me this favor. Your friend,

"Evelyn Young."

Your Flag and My Flag

Your flag and my flag!
And oh, how much it holds—
Your land and my land—
Secure within its folds!
Your heart and my heart
Beat quicker at the sight;
Sun-kissed and wind-tossed—
Red, blue and white.
The one flag—the great flag—the flag for me and you—
Glorified all else beside—the red and white and blue!

—Wilbur D. Nesbit.

The Captain's Reply

Capt. Moffett sent the following letter in reply:

"My Dear Evelyn: If all our little girls had such a spirit as yours we would have no difficulty in getting our boys to enlist in the Navy, especially now, when their country needs them. You do not realize yet, but some day you will, that a man does not go to the front for his country alone, but for some woman—his mother, his wife, his sister, his sweetheart, or perhaps his daughter—such a patriotic little girl as yourself. He fights to defend his women and his home—these are his country.

"I have a great many lads at this station who would be proud to be your knight, and when they are at the front the thought of you will be an inspiration for them. You will hear from one of them tomorrow."

"Get angry at that letter? Not in a thousand years!" said Capt. Moffett to a newspaper reporter.

"Evelyn has started something that I would like to see every little girl in Chicago take up."

HER MOTHER'S SONG

MARGARET B. PLATT

"Jesus, Lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly."

In cadence sweet the words of the old familiar hymn burst upon the ears of Marian Forsythe and sang tbemselves over and over in her tortured brain. The long night through she had tossed in a fever of unrest and indecision and at dawn was still sleepless and undetermined. She had entered her room just the previous evening quite clear as to her future course—and now she was all at sea again!

"Ob, why will that woman persist in singing that old hymn?" she peevishly exclaimed. Rising, she looked out upon the street below. She could hear church bells ringing and could see happy faced children trooping by, and people hurrying here and there, some upon amusement bent, others actuated by more serious purpose. Turning away, Marian again threw herself upon her couch. She thought she had fought it all out—and now—

Months ago Marian had come to the city with hope keyed high, and with unlimited confidence in her own ability to climb the ladder of success. Gradually her buoyancy of spirit had deserted her. What was she among so many? Others there were as capable, as eager to make for themselves a larger place, as willing to serve. What hope was there that sbe, more than others, would reach the desired goal? She could not continue on in the old beaten path. Must she stand behind Strathmore Company's counters until old and withered and forlorn, just to keep bread in her mouth? She shuddered. No! Today she would choose a flowery way, a path of pleasure, amusement, gay company, choice food, luxury. She would be done with drudgery—

"Cover my defenceless head
With the shadow of thy wings," came the song.

Marian rose and, going to ber dresser, tumbled about the things in the drawer looking for something. Oh, would that woman never stop singing!

A letter caught her eye. How full of youth's fine optimism ber first missives home had been, but lately—how long was it since she had written?—weeks; and mother's last letter had been such a tender appeal to her only daughter to "come home where at least an honorable living could always be assured. Come, rest awhile," she had said. "We can do nicely, you and I, and I need you, dear." But Marian had flouted the prayer and the letter lay unanswered.

"Leave, oh, leave me not alone."

Ah, the voice of the tempter had seemed very alluring, these last tiresome days. Work had become more irksome, the monotony unbearable. Why should she go on and on this way when just across an "imaginary line" lay ease and plenty? She had thought the matter thoroughly settled. But all night, old memories thronged her mind—long forgotten incidents of her childhood days. Her mother's touch, her mother's voice had been with her through the sleepless hours; she could feel those clear eyes looking into her very soul. When had she felt like this before?

"While the nearer waters roll,
While the tempest still is high."

Surely the dark waters of sin were very near her feet. Temptation like a storm beset her. She sought her mirror. Yes, she was beautiful; and her hands were fair and shapely—she had been told that many times. She would grace any company; she was altogether fit to be adorned with jewels and bedecked with costly robes. Why should she waste her beauty on the common throng and her lovely hands become inured to toil when there were easier ways—

"Safe into the haven guide."

Doubtless mother was looking for her now, hoping—hoping she would see her coming up the flower bordered walk. Mother would be going to church now. Marian could see her moving about making ready for tbe service, then tripping off through the orchard, fragrant with bloom and glorious with promise, along the woods road, across the creek, to the little cbapel set in the grove of old forest trees. She could scent the wild flowers and the sweet, woodsy smell, and hear the creek gently telling the pebbles, as it ran along, little tales about the squirrels, the flowers, and the wild things up the mountain side where it came from. And all the neighbors would be gathered in the yard about the chapel. Kindly greetings would be exchanged and "the girls" would ask, "How is Marian?" and as in a dream she glimpsed a vision of a pair of earnest dark eyes, an honest face, a manly form—

"Make and keep me pure within."

"Mother, mother, I'm coming home." Marian was on her knees now, mother's last letter in her hands, covered with hot tears and kisses. Even in this moment she noticed how cramped the writing was, how blurred here and there. Mother was tired, she was longing for her girl, and she had wept as she wrote the tender home summons.

"Wait for me, mother! I am coming! I am coming now, and I will stay, motber! I'll stay as long as you want me."

"Plenteous grace with Thee is found."

Over and over the young mother across the hall crooned to the babe within her arms the old hymn. Its tender melody enfolded the girl as with an atmosphere of love and protection. She must hurry now, there was no time to lose; tonight she must be safe with mother.

An hour later a young woman, neatly gowned, with suit case in hand, knocked at the door across the hall. "Just a moment. No, thank you, I must not stop—I'm leaving on the next train." "Yes, going home. But I must tell you how much you have done for me. You did not know—it was your singing—mother used to sing just that way. Sometimes it made me feel—well, today I was going—but when you sang that hymn I—I—saw mother and she is looking for me, and I'm going home, but I want you to know what you've done for me—just by singing."

Brokenly, and with quivering lips, she told her story. The young matron caught the youthful face between her hands and kissed the fair brow. "God bless you, child! I'm so glad! Won't this be a happy day for your mother, dear?"

As Marian crossed the street below there floated out through the open windows, in triumphant strain, the long metre doxology, and as she turned and lifted her eyes for a last look at the upper window, the madonna of the song, with her babe close to her heart, waved the girl she had saved a tender farewell.

"I PROMISE, MOTHER!"

FRANCES McKINNON MORTON

The noonday sun was hot enough to raise blisters on the red paint which covered the rough boards of the small depot shack—the vital point of connection between the great world and the little Texas town that straggled over the prairie on either side of the railroad track. It was hot, but the mills of the gods grind on in sun and shade and the sword of justice was tempered in a fiercer heat than any that ever scorched the sun-baked prairies of the dry West. The waiting-room was crowded. Seated on the benches were twenty-three derelict human beings, outward bound to that sad haven of the wrong doer—the state prison. There were gathered about them no eager crowds with tender words of farewell. Family, friends and sweethearts do not speed such travelers on their sad journey. They stay at home behind drawn shades, realizing bitterly that the tragedy of time is not dying but living on.

A few loafers and curious small boys gathered outside on the platform, drawn there by a morbid curiosity to see how the twenty-three sullen convicts, handcuffed and guarded like beasts, were taking it. They were an evil looking crowd, brought together from different counties, —unknown to each other and held together only by the iron grip of the law which had decreed for them a common destination. The faces of most of them were expressionless, but one noticed a few of fine features, with drooping eyes or sad, weak mouth that told without words the pitiful story of a man able to see the right, yet not strong enough to act in accordance with his convictions. There were stolid faces, too, and others wearing the hunted look of the beast at bay, but dominating all else on every face was a blank look of surprise at what fate had dealt out to him. Men do not voluntarily undertake a trip to a state prison; they do not choose it as the end of their journey, and most of them land there with a feeling of consternation that to them should have come this thing.

The members of a small theatrical troupe forced to wander up and down the earth for a bare living added their numbers to the convict gang and one particularly frivolous young fellow, wearing checked trousers and a green neck-tie, began humming lightly, "Good-bye, Sweetheart, Goodbye." No smile met his flippancy. A sense of proportion is one of the most common assets of human affections.

The train was late and the minutes dragged. Suddenly a figure demanding attention walked down the platform and in at the door of the small waiting room. It was that of a little plain old woman. Her old-fashioned split sunbonnet of black calico with no ruffles or lace to relieve the severity of its tragic outlines, the plain, black calico dress, the cheap, black-bordered handkerchief, told the sad story of a recent acquaintance with poverty and death. She was bent and round-shouldered and not very tall and yet there was about her a certain erectness of carriage that revealed a spirit unconquered by heavy burdens. A wonderful light of faith and love illumined the wrinkled sadness of her face. She came into the room amid a hushed silence. The glare outside had been as intense as the heat, and coming from it into the sheltered room the faces blurred before her unadjusted vision; yet slowly, by the light of her love, she picked out one from the number—her boy. He was a big, over-grown fellow, with the hulking frame of a prize fighter, and a heavy red face in which a confused surprise fought with the bravado of youth and the lust of its strength.

"Hello! What are you doing here, mother?" he asked gruffly, but neither the heavy-featured face nor the gruff voice were able wholly to conceal the simple human gladness that her presence brought him. He was not to her a condemned criminal, a social parlah, a human outcast; he was her child, her boy, the creature of her love, and something wonderfully like hope surged up into his heart as he looked at her. She didn't weep, nor cry aloud, nor fall on his neck—hers was not that sort of love —but she smiled at him—the serene and tender smile of mother love backed by undying faith.

"I just come down to tell you goodby, Jimmie," she said simply, and her voice held no reproach and no question—just boundless, unreasoning mother love. "You know I always did have to tell you goodby, Jimmie. I never did let you go away from home without telling you goodby."

Jimmie brushed his big, hairy, red hand across his eyes but said nothing. She didn't expect an answer nor wait for one—mother love demands no response. "Do you remember, Jimmie," she went on tenderly, "the first time you ever went to the store by yourself? You were such a little fellow I was afraid something might run over you and I went to the gate with you and kissed you goodby and then I just couldn't go back in the house and leave you to go on all alone, so I stood at the gate and watched you till you went into the store, and then till you came out again, and then till you were nearly home. And don't you remember when you first started to school you were afraid to go because you didn't know the teacher and the children, and so I walked all the way to the schoolhouse door with you? You knew I would come this time, Jimmie, because you know I never did let you go away from home without telling you goodby. When you first went away from home to work in the saw mill, you were sixteen years old then and you were such a big boy that I thought you might not want to kiss me goodby at the depot, but you said, 'A fellow never gets too big to kiss his mother goodby,' and I was so proud of you that day. You remember I said 'Goodby, Jimmie. Be a good boy,' and you said, 'I can't promise that, mother,' and I said to myself, 'Well, if he did promise it I know he would keep his promise and it ain't every mother that can say that of her boy.' I thought you was mighty young to be going so far away from home to work in such a rough place, but you laughed when I said so. Your pa was sick and we needed things and you always was so willing to work, Jimmie."

Some of the men moved their big cowhide boots uneasily along the floor and more than one passed his hands across his eyes to brush away the rising mist. The guards looked out at the windows and seemed to be troubled with a strange tightening of the muscles of their throats. Jimmie's mother never noticed them. She had come down to tell Jimmie goodby and she was thinking in her kind mother-way if there was not something kind and encouraging she could say to her child.

"Jimmie," she continued, "I was at the court that day and I want to tell you that your mother was mighty proud of you for just telling the truth about your trouble that you got into. You always was a man about telling the truth, Jimmie, and about keeping your word. I always used to tell your pa, 'If Jimmie promises he'll do a thing, he'll do it or die a-trying.'"

Jimmie tried to say something but the words stuck cruelly in his throat and the only sound that escaped him was so like a sob that the other men looked away and some of them cleared their throats painfully. Everything in the room was silent for awhile and then came the distant roar of the incoming train that was to take Jimmie away. The mother knew she must talk fast if she was to have any more words with her boy.

"They tell me you are going to be gone a long time, Jimmie," she said, with the first sign of trembling in her thin, old voice, "and that you can't come home for Christmas and Thanksgiving dinners like you've always done. But I won't forget you, Jimmie, and I'll always send you a box of home-made goodies. Maybe they'll let you have it if they know that it's from your old mother that'll be thinkin' of you all the time night and day. It's a long way off and I can't come to see you, Jimmie, and maybe I may not be here when you get back, my boy, but don't you worry about me. I'll get on all right. I've got a little put by for my buryin' and we've got kind neighbors and anyways folks always was mighty good to me. I'm going to miss you a heap, Jimmie, and I'll always be a-prayin' for you and if I ain't here when you get back, I want you to know that I'll be looking for you in that home over there, where we won't never have to say goodby."

Jimmie rose to his full height and put his free arm around her and kissed her wrinkled old face tenderly and sobbed aloud in simple and unashamed grief. The men shuffled uneasily in their places and rubbed their eyes with their rough coat sleeves and one of the guards blew his nose and wiped his eyes openly. The flippant young man, who had tried to mock the misfortunes of his fellows, hung his head. The dear, simple language of mother-love is so much alike the world over and the trembling lips of his weak mouth showed that in him, too, memory and conscience were at work.

The train was standing outside, there was a call of "all aboard," and the little old mother in the black split sunbonnet summoned all her splendid mother-courage, and smiled up at her boy through a mist of tears. "Goodby, Jimmie," she said, "and God bless you. Be a good boy, Jimmie." That was all, but it was enough—there was not a dry eye in all that hardened crowd. The little old mother-woman had troubled the stagnant waters of memory in every heart.

As the loaded train pulled out of the station the last sound to be heard was a brave old voice calling out, "Goodby, Jimmie, be a good boy." As the words were borne to him out of the widening distance, Jimmie gave a quick movement, wrenched himself free from the guard and made for the platform. It was all so sudden that the guard made no move to detain him, and he reached the rear platform without hindrance. Raising his manacled hands to his mouth, trumpet fashion, he roared out to the little figure, growing dimmer and dimmer in the distance, "I PROMISE, MOTHER." Then he stood still and watched as long as it could be seen the flutter of a black bordered handkerchief waving like a banner of victorious love. When his straining eyes had caught its last gleam he turned and went meekly back to his place.

The guard looked at him in amazement, for he saw a changed man. Somewhere out of that great workshop of God—a man's soul—there shone through his face the glory of a noble purpose. The old look of dazed surprise and helpless confusion was gone and another had come to take its place. The guard caught his breath—one is not privileged every day to witness the birth of a man's spirit. The big, burly convict looked him straight in the eye. "Did you hear what mother said?" he asked. The guard nodded. "She said, 'Be a good boy, Jimmie,' and I've promised and I mean to do it."

KANSAS AND THE CIGARET

WILLIAM A. McKEEVER, University of Kansas

Gradually the sun-flower state is lining up for a more vigorous campaign against the direst enemy of the American boy, the cigaret. During very recent years the obnoxious cigaret business has been growing by leaps and bounds. Through the use of the new psychology advertising, the great tobacco trust has been enabled to claim tens of thousands of victims among our growing boys. During last year the men and boys of America burned up $100,000,000 in manufactured cigarets alone, to say nothing about the "roll your own" variety. This represents almost exactly the price of our great Kansas wheat crops. Think of it, every bushel of that golden grain went up in cigaret smoke. But that is a small price compared with the damage done to the character of the American boy.

A few statements such as the following may be here reiterated as certainties:

A boy who early becomes a victim of the cigaret tends to sexual perversion, falls short in his classes and leaves school as soon as the law permits. He quits the Sunday school at an early date and is practically certain never to be found later as an active member of the church. He falls an easy victim to booze, if such an evil comes within his reach. He has a low regard for the virtue of women and for the integrity of humanity at large. Whenever a big moral issue comes up, he is likely to be found either keeping silence or helping the enemy of virtue and good morals.

At the close of this article will be found our new anti-cigaret law, which goes into effect as soon as the statute book is published. As will be observed, this law has plenty of teeth in it and we hope to succeed well in its enforcement. The reader will readily guess that the enemy had a strong lobby at the legislature and fought the law at every turn, but we finally put them out of commission. We hope to accomplish much by means of the section prohibiting the advertising of cigarets. Newspapers and magazines which run cigaret advertisements cannot be sold at the news-stands or delivered by carriers. The billboards of similar nature must also come down and those cunning little cigaret ads. hidden in the packages of tobacco, must quit business. As a means of encouraging this law, Mr. John A. Edwards of Eureka, Kansas, a former member of our legislature, is for the second time offering annual prizes amounting to two hundred dollars to the boy groups which make the best showing in the combating of the cigaret in their own localities. Last year the first prize, one hundred dollars, was awarded to the boys of Kansas City, Kansas, where forty-three schools had organized groups. These boys came out two thousand strong in a big mass meeting and held a formal burning of all forms of cigaret "makings." The Boy Scouts of Altamont received the second prize of $50.

But the matter which I especially desire to call to the attention of the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL, is that Kansas is getting ready to follow up her great successful campaign against booze with a new form of radical prohibition, that of the cigaret evil, and it may be that this movement will slowly develop into one of a general character against all forms of nicotine. Already the better classes of our people are beginning to show a sensitiveness on this subject.

The great W. C. T. U. of Kansas has carried on a persistent campaign against the cigaret and one which is having a telling effect. The Federation of Clubs has taken up this work very actively and is carrying the campaign into a large number of local communities. The State Teachers' Association, eight thousand strong, passed a radical resolution to assist in every material way with this campaign. The State Organization of School Board Members also passed a radical resolution intended to assist. The State Editorial Association, which recently met in Topeka, agreed unanimously to cut out cigaret advertising even before the new law was introduced. The State Sunday School Association, the State Young Men's Christian Association, the State Board of Health and other organizations are joining actively in this movement.

Our Kansas state institutions of higher learning are also in this fight with us. The board of administration has forbidden smoking in and about the building of the State University and has requested that the same rule be observed on the campus. The State Agricultural College forbids the use of tobacco on its large campus and the three state Normal schools are acting practically in the same manner.

Finally I appeal to all interested persons to assist us with this great campaign to save the American boy from the worst poison which ever affected him. Alcohol is not in the class with the cigaret as an enemy to the growing youth. Let everyone who feels so disposed write to magazines which publish obnoxious advertisements. There is a crude and cunning campaign now on to make smoking popular among women and in some places to induce them to take up the habit. Now, here is a blow at the heart of humanity. Protest also to the business men, such as clothiers and others who incidentally advertise tobacco and cigarets as a part of their wares. Provide wherever possible that cigaret advertisements and obnoxious tobacco advertisements be clipped out of papers and magazines which go into school libraries or go otherwise into the hands of the young. So let us all, in every honest way, show our contempt for those selfish interests which conduct a business so directly hurtful to the characters of our boys and youths.

THE KANSAS ANTI-CIGARET LAW

(In part)

Section 1. It shall be unlawful for any person, company or corporation to barter, sell or give away any cigarets or cigaret papers, or any disguise or subterfuge of either of these, or to have any cigarets or cigaret papers in or about any store or other place for barter, sale, or free distribution.

Section 2. It shall be unlawful for any person, company or corporation to advertise cigarets or cigaret papers, or any disguise or subterfuge of either of these, in any circular, newspaper or other periodical published, offered for sale or for free distribution within the state of Kansas. It shall also be unlawful for any person, company, or corporation to advertise cigarets or cigaret papers on any street sign, placard, or billboard; or in any package of merchandise, store window, show case, or any other public place within the state of Kansas.

Section 3. It shall be unlawful for any person, company, or corporation to sell or give away to any minor under twenty-one years of age any cigarets, cigars, cigaret papers, tobacco or any other such materials connected with the smoking of tobacco. And it shall likewise be unlawful for the proprietor of any place of business to permit minors under twenty-one years of age to frequent such place of business while in the act of using tobacco in any form.

Section 4. Any person, company, or corporation violating any part of section 1, 2 or 3 of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction shall be fined not less than $25 or more than $100 for each and every such offense.

Pertinent to Present Needs For Soldiers and Sailors

To Place in Comfort Bags or for Distribution

Songsters. Each, 7 cents.

Pledge Card, with stub and bearing a profile of Frances E. Willard. Singly, 2 cents; 50, 25 cents; 100, 40 cents.

Protecting the Home Folks (a warning against vice). Singly, 2 cents; 50, 25 cents; 100, 40 cents.

Rally on the Flag (for veterans). Singly, 2 cents; 50, 20 cents; 100, 30 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

FOR ANTI-CIGARET SUNDAY

CLINCH THE ANTI-CIGARET LESSON

POSTERS

College Smokers and Non-Smokers. 15 cents each
The Cigaret Condemned. 10 cents each.

BLOTTERS

Who Is the Coward?
A Cigaret Arithmetic
50, 20 cents; 100, 35 cents.

SEALS

(Stickers). Three kinds, each with a message that will stick. Each 25 cents per 100. (Order in 100 lots only.)

LEAFLETS

Where's the Harm in Cigarets?
How Ralph Stopped Smoking
Each, 2 cents; 50, 25 cents; 100, 40 cents.
How the Smoker's Heart Is Affected
The Cigaret
The Demand of Today
Why Mark Never Became a Printer
A Lesson From Real Life
What I Have Seen of Cigarets. (Judge Lindsey.)
Bob Learns a Few Things
Each, 2 cents; 50, 15 cents; 100, 25 cents.
A True Tale of the Cigaret
Pin Points
Each, 2 cents; 50, 20 cents; 100, 35 cents.
No Tobacco. Why?
Each, 2 cents; 50, 20 cents; 100, 30 cents.
Doors Closed and Doors Open
Single copies, 3 cents; 50, 40 cents; 100, 75 cents.
Alcohol and Tobacco
Listen Boys!
The Evolution of a Pipe (illustrated)
A Cigaret Arithmetic Lesson (illustrated)
Cigaret Facts
Victims of the Cigaret
Luther Burbank on Alcohol and Tobacco
How It Grows (illustrated)
Each, 2 cents; 50, 10 cents; 100, 15 cents.

RECITATIONS

The Tobacco User
Nothing But Leaves
Wanted a Boy
Two Offerings
A Case for Charity
The Deadly Cigaret
Only a Boy
Each, 2 cents; 50 15 cents; 100, 25 cents.
Anti-Cigaret Speaker. Each, 10 cents.

PLEDGES

Anti-Cigaret, or Anti-Tobacco. 100, 10 cents.

BOOKLET

Testimony Against the Cigaret. Each, 5 cents; 50, $2.50.

EXERCISES

The Anti-Cigaret Warfare
The Doom of Prince Nicotine
The Cigaret Bonfire. (Dialogue for girls.)
The Cigaret Fortune Teller
Each, 2 cents; 50, 30 cents; 100, 50 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

¶We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.
¶Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
118-120 Fifth Ave., New York
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works
Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

MINNESOTA AWAKE TO THE NEEDS OF THE HOUR

(Continued from Page Four)

Minnesota's legislative session, which closed April 20, passed the following measures of interest to the temperance forces: A "bone dry" constitutional prohibition amendment to be voted upon at the next general election, November, 1918; a law abolishing wholesale liquor houses operating in wet territory by prohibiting the sale of liquor, in any quantity, outside of organized municipalities, which measure went into effect immediately and closed out over one hundred of the houses which had sprung up on the borders of dry counties, outside of towns; and a law making the state hospital for inebriates at Willmar, which received two per cent of all liquor revenue for its maintenance, into the eighth state hospital for the insane.

Other measures in which the W. C. T. U. was interested and which failed to pass were: A law to permit the reading of the Bible in the public schools; to prohibit the manufacture and sale of snuff; to close pool halls at eleven o'clock at night and Sundays; to repeal the prize fight law; statutory prohibition; limited suffrage; suffrage constitutional amendment.

The closing days of the session ran high with war excitement, and several eleventh hour bills for preparedness were passed under suspension of the rules, "to strengthen the hands of the state and national government in the present crisis." A public safety commission, consisting of the governor and attorney general, with five citizens appointed by the governor, was created with almost unlimited authority, its object "to safeguard the peace and quiet of the commonwealth so long as the war shall last." This commission has already closed the saloons about Fort Snelling and ordered thirty-eight saloons and pool halls put out of business in the river district of Minneapolis, May 1. The Minneapolis city council has revoked the licenses of these places and the mayor says they will be closed. The state president, Miss Rozette Hendrix, and Mrs. Eva Waterman, Legislative superintendent for the Minnesota W. C. T. U., have been faithful and untiring in their work during the entire legislative session.

"SUNSHINE POWDERS"—A Dainty Gift for an invalid or one in sorrow. Jewels of thought, lovely for birthdays, hospitals, sunshine work. They were prepared by a "shut in," wife of a home-missionary, once a pupil of Frances Willard, an earnest worker in the W. C. T. U. "Bright, cheery, comforting!" "Worth their weight in gold." Try a box! 25 cts. Rev. H. M. Goodell, Pasadena, Calif.

This FREE Shoe Book
crowded with photos & descriptions of Ezwear shoes for Men, Women, Children. Ezwear shoes combine comfort, style, quality & fit perfectly or money back. Amazingly low prices. Send for your copy to-day.
The D.D. Simon Shoe 1589 BROADWAY BROOKLYN, N.Y.

AMONG OUR WORKERS

On Sunday, April 22, Mrs. Amy C. Weech, National organizer, finished a week's engagement with the A. Elizabeth Thomas W. C. T. U. of Philadelphia. Her addresses were an inspiration, new members were gained and a new union will probably be organized as a result of her efforts. Special work for the L. T. L. and the Y. P. B. awakened enthusiasm among the young people and children. At a reunion of the former members of Philadelphia Y's letters were read from Miss Anna A. Gordon and Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National president and vice-president, respectively, and from Mrs. Ella M. George, president of the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U., and other workers. A plea was made that some action be taken to protect young girls from the dangers of restaurants where liquor is served. A committee was appointed to bring the matter before the meeting of the Philadelphia county executive committee. Mrs. Weech also addressed public school pupils on two occasions.

Sugar Grove, Warren county, Pa., had a very successful group institute on April 21. "Teaching Citizenship in the Public Schools in 1917" and "Individual Responsibility for National Constitutional Prohibition," were among the timely topics discussed. Mrs. Mabel E. Dallas, president of the Warren county W. C. T. U., presided. Among those who assisted was Mrs. K. M. Warner, president of Chant county W. C. T. U. Luncheon was served at W. C. T. U. headquarters.

Mrs. Addie B. Parsels, National organizer, who recently spent five days in Union county, New Jersey, addressed five evening meetings and two social meetings and spoke to the pupils of the Plainfield and Garwood schools. Two new unions were organized, one at Linden with a membership of twenty-one, the other at Elizabeth with a membership of twenty-five. New members were gained at nearly every meeting. Her work in the schools won the hearty appreciation of the school superintendents.

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, president of the New York state W. C. T. U., and vice-president of the National W. C. T. U., was the leader of the fourteenth annual W. C. T. U. institute of Franklin county, N. Y., held at Malone, April 10-11. Delegates were present from every union but one. The L. T. L. had an interesting part on the program and prize essays by pupils of the grades and high schools were read. Posters made by children to help in the recent campaign when Malone went dry were also exhibited. In addition to Mrs. Boole's magnificent evening address on "The Progress of a Great Reform," and the forum of legislation in which she told of work at the state capital, suffrage was considered under the heading, "A Study in Government," an efficiency congress of departments was presented, "Motion Pictures as an Educational Factor," was discussed, and representatives of local unions told "How We Raised our Share of the Mile of Dimes." The county president, Mrs. Metta C. Gehring, presided at all sessions.

The Long Beach (Calif.) W. C. T. U. recently prepared individual packages of cake, candy and other homemade dainties for a company of eighty-nine soldier boys stationed nearby. With each package was a bouquet with pledge and text card attached.

Mrs. Mary Stewart Powers, former general secretary of the Young People's Branch of Ohio, on a recent visit to Transfer, Mercer county, Pa., found not one boy in the high and grade schools who used tobacco. The county is dry, and there is an active Y. P. B. in Transfer.

Flower Mission Day Coming!
PREPARE EARLY

THE TEXT CARD should accompany flowers or other gifts on Flower Mission Day.

Price, 100, 12 cents.
L. T. L. Text Cards, 100, 12 cents.
Comfort Powders. Per box, 25 cents

LEAFLETS

What the Flower Mission Can Do to Help Bring National Constitutional Prohibition.
Each, 2 cents; 50, 12 cents; 100, 20 cents.
What the Flower Mission Should Mean to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Community.
Some Phases of Relief Work.
The Flower Mission Trinity.
Each, 2 cents; 50, 30 cents; 100, 50 cents.
Program for Flower Mission Meetings.
Hints for W. C. T. U. Flower Missions.
Friends in Need.
Each, 2 cents; 50, 15 cents; 100, 25 cents.
Why a Flower Mission?
A Flower Mission Exercise.
The Story of Jennie Casseday.
The Story of the Roof Garden.
Each, 2 cents; 50, 35 cents; 100, 60 cents.

SOME LEAFLETS TO DISTRIBUTE ON FLOWER MISSION DAY:

The Shoemaker and the Little White Shoes.
The Common Joy.
The Story of the Dollars.
Each, 2 cents; 50, 20 cents; 100, 35 cents.

National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill.

Sanitary Drinking Fountains

Also Drinking Fountains for Man and Beast.

Special prices to W. C. T. U. and all Charitable Societies.

This Fountain was erected by the W. C. T. U. of Luray, Va.

Write for Catalogue

J. W. Fiske Iron Works
56 & 58 Park Place
NEW YORK

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year
Club rate for ten or more subscriptions, 25c a year
No other premium allowed.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

HOW CAN I HELP?

VIDA THOMPSON, Manager Circulation Department

Is not this the question each of us is asking during these days of national and world crisis? Especially insistent is the desire to help the boys who are enlisting. What can we do for them, we are asking over and over again. The comfort bags that are being prepared by every union will of course be a comfort—no doubt of that—but another prime necessity is good literature for the reading rooms at the different centers for enlisted men.

Help these young men to pass the lonely hours and to resist temptation, give them something worth while to think about. Some of them will read now that which until this time of stress they never cared for.

Why not help in this good work by sending the money for a club of ten subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL for military or naval stations, training camps or mobilization centers? By forwarding the money through National Headquarters the papers can be sent out in quantities to the places where the need for this literature is greatest. Credit will be given to the representative of the state, county, or local union sending in the order.

Act at once. Make your next meeting a committee of ways and means for helping. If necessary, have a called meeting. The boys are giving themselves for their country. Let us do our part—NOW!

IMPORTANT NOTICE
When You Send Us Money

In sending money to the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union or to THE UNION SIGNAL, please either send a draft on Chicago or New York, a post-office money order, or add ten cents to pay cost of exchange on personal checks. Cashier's or certified checks are not exempt from this charge, which is made necessary by the ruling of the Chicago Clearing House, through which all checks sent to us pass for collection.

Posters Are Always in Order
TRY THESE!

Old Glory

Drink Traffic and Revenue

A Business Proposition

Protect the Children

Size 28 x 42. Each, 10 cents; 3 for 25 cents; 100, $7.

Beware! (A beer poster in English or German)

Alcohol

Beer

Saloons Increase Taxes

Size 19 x 25. Each, 5 cents; 50, $2; 100, $3.50.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

HOW PROHIBITION AFFECTS THE LABOR MOVEMENT IN COLORADO

Frequently The Labor Bulletin receives letters from other sections of the country asking what effect state-wide prohibition has had upon wage-earners and the labor movement of Colorado. To these we are always pleased to reply that the law has worked a wonderful revolution for good, and that at least seventy-five per cent of the union voters who were against the amendment would vote to retain it now should the occasion arise. Last fall when it was sought to amend the law to permit the manufacture and sale of beer in this state, the proposition was defeated by an adverse majority of 89,000 votes.

There are more well fed, better clothed and happy families of working people in Colorado than ever before. Especially have members of organized labor realized during the past year the fallacy of that old slogan about the saloon being "the poor man's club." They have discovered that this so-called "poor man's club" got a very large share of their earnings, which now goes to support the family or establish a bank account.

The Bulletin has no hesitancy in saying that on the whole the condition of Colorado working people is at least fifty per cent better as a result of state-wide prohibition. The increase in savings deposits last year was truly remarkable, and retail merchants declare collections are from forty to sixty per cent better under prohibition than when the saloon door stood wide open to invite the wage-earner bearing a pay envelope.

During the week preceding Christmas the banks of Denver paid out over one-half million dollars to members of savings clubs, practically all of whom were wage-earners. This great amount of money was really an accumulation that had hitherto been spent for liquor or its accessories.

Today it is practically impossible to find a member of organized labor in Colorado advocating a return of former conditions with the open saloon and its accompanying crime.

Take The Bulletin as a concrete illustration. It was prophesied by our wet friends that a labor paper couldn't exist in a dry community. We lost about $50 a month in liquor advertising and some three hundred and fifty subscribers who were employed in the liquor industry. Last year, the first dry year in Colorado, our books show that The Bulletin did four times the advertising business and we have today on our mailing list three times as many subscribers as when Denver had 350 saloons and five breweries in operation. Besides the advertisers and subscribers pay their bills much more promptly and we don't have to degrade ourselves by "settin' 'em up" to a crowd of bar-room flies when we go to collect a bill.

There has been a wonderful improvement in the moral tone of Denver since the saloons were driven out. The city has been largely ridden of bums, pickpockets, gamblers and badger gangsters. In truth, it is much more of a privilege than ever before to live in Colorado, and laboring people in other states will find the same cause for congratulation when they drive the saloons, wholesale liquor vampires and breweries from their border.—Denver Labor Bulletin.

PROPOSED OHIO CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT PRONOUNCED LEGAL

The constitutional amendment proposed by the dry forces of Ohio for submission to the people next fall has been pronounced legal by the attorney general of the state. The proposal reads that "The sale and manufacture for sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage are hereby prohibited. The general assembly shall enact laws to make this provision effective. Nothing herein contained shall prevent the manufacture or sale of such liquor for medicinal, industrial, scientific, sacramental or other non-beverage purposes."

A WAVE OF PROHIBITION FACTS AND FIGURES
ready to be set in motion throughout the country by the use of the
PROHIBITION FAN
(Octagon in shape, 7 x 8⅝ in.)
Prohibition map, date of adoption of prohibition by various states. On the reverse side the appeal
PROTECT OUR AMERICAN YOUTH
by
PROHIBITING THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC
Price, 1 doz., 35 cents; 3 doz., $1; 100, $2.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

THE INSTITUTE SEASON IS HERE
MAKE YOUR INSTITUTE VALUABLE

INSTITUTE LEAFLETS

Department Quiz
The Meeting of the Local Union
The Purpose and Plan of the Institute
How to Make the Institute Count
Single copies, 2 cents; 50, 20 cents; 100, 35 cents.
A Model W. C. T. U. Meeting. Singly, 3 cents; 50, 40 cents; 100, 75 cents.

The following sent for postage at 15 cents per 100:
The Literature Table
A Literature Demonstration
A Resurrected Union
She Read It; She Took It
Why Take the Union Signal

SUGGESTIONS FOR YOUR LITERATURE TABLE

Superintendent's Manual. 10 cents.
Liquor Traffic Must Go Pencils. 5 cents; dozen, 35 cents.
Seals. Liquor Traffic Must Go (Pennants). 100, 20 cents; 1,000, $1.50.
Tri-Colored Wall Shields. 25 cents.
Prohibition Fans. Dozen, 35 cents; 100, $2.
Popular Prohibition Songs. 5 cents; dozen, 50 cents.
Temperance Songster (paper). 15 cents; dozen, $1.80.
Blotters. Eight varieties. 50, 20 cents. 100, 35 cents.
Flower Mission Text Cards. 100, 12 cents.

BADGES

Loop Bow Pin, white enamel on sterling silver, with letters W. C. T. U. Price, 60 cents each; per dozen, $6.50.
Smaller Size, same style. Price, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.20.
Flat Bow Pin, white enamel on gilt, without letters. Price, 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.
Brooch Pin, white enamel on gilt. Price, 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.
Scarf Pin, white enamel on gilt. Price, 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

$2.50 PER DAY SALARY PAID ONE PERSON in each town to distribute FREE circulars, and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring. Non-alcoholic. Big demand, steadily increasing. J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7G, E. Harrison St., Chicago.

SOMETHING NEW
12 INCH PROHIBITION RULERS
TEXT: TOTAL ABSTINENCE, THE ONLY SAFE RULE OF LIFE
Reverse side: RULE OUT ALCOHOL—HELP MAKE A SOBER NATION.
Good Everywhere. Place in Your Schools and Offices.
5 cents each; 1 doz. 35 cents; 100, $2.50.
NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., MAY 17, 1917 | No. 20

Let 'Em Starve, Uncle!

CAMPAIGN EDITION

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

After twenty-one full days of debate, conferees have come to a decision on the army draft bill. The age limit for selective conscription in the army for the war against Germany has been fixed at from 21 to 30, inclusive. Those absolutely exempt from the draft include officers of the United States army and any state or territory, ministers, students of recognized divinity or theological schools and members of "any well-recognized religious sect or organization at present organized" whose "existing creed" forbids participation in war. It was agreed to increase the pay of enlisted men to twenty-five dollars a month and the pay of other grades below commissioned officers.

The amendment submitted in the Senate, allowing Colonel Roosevelt to head and lead a division of volunteers into France, was eliminated. This is expected to cause much opposition, the Senate by a large vote having favored the plan.

Senate amendments, prohibiting the sale of liquor at army camps and otherwise safeguarding the morals of the troops, were in the main retained. The Senate bill made it unlawful "to sell, furnish, or give away any intoxicating liquor, including beer, ale, or wine, to any officer or member of the military forces while in uniform." As agreed to, the prohibition is only against "selling" liquor and not against "furnishing or giving it away" to men in uniform. Prohibition at army posts is enforced.

The $1,800,000,000 tax bill, carrying wartime assessments on a multitude of every-day necessities and luxuries, was taken up in the House on Thursday, after a week or more of incessant labor on the part of the committee to complete the schedule. The debate was opened by Chairman Kitchin, House leader, in a four hours' speech in which he declared this bill to be the greatest war revenue bill recorded in history and one which would raise more additional taxes than any that has ever been presented in the history of the world. Mr. Kitchin urged its prompt passage and said, too, that while some items might seem excessive and unjust when considered separately, the only answer was "The government needs the money."

The increased tax on liquors is as follows: On distilled liquors the present tax, $1 10, is doubled, making it $2.20 per gallon. To the rectifier's tax fifteen cents a gallon is added. Beer, porter, ale, etc., are assessed $2.75 a barrel, instead of $1.50. The tobacco tax is doubled and an additional $1.25 per thousand is placed on cigarets.

Letter postage is increased from two to three cents an ounce; postal cards from one to two cents, and newspaper rates are to be fixed by the zone system. Levies by stamp taxes, or other means, on life insurance policies, electric power, telephone and telegraph messages, theaters, club dues, on manufacturers of automobiles, cosmetics, proprietary medicine, musical instruments, jewelry, moving picture films, chewing gum, pleasure boats, railroad or steamboat fares, Pullman tickets, mileage books, etc., are made. This Act is to take effect the day after its passage.

Prohibition Bills Introduced in Senate

Two important bills were introduced in the Senate this week, one by Senator Kenyon of Iowa which would suspend the manufacture of and all traffic in intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes during the time the United States may be engaged in war. This measure is S. 2185. The other was introduced by Senator Gronna of North Dakota, to conserve the agricultural food products of the United States and to prohibit their manufacture into alcoholic liquors. This is S. 2186.

The "Liberty Loan" bids are reaching the Treasury at the rate of $5,000,000 a minute. On Wednesday, May 9, the Treasury was buried beneath an avalanche of subscriptions to the loan. The pace was $20,000,000 an hour on Tuesday, but went up to the larger figure on Wednesday. Secretary McAdoo declares that the $2,000,000,000 offering will be oversubscribed and beyond all previous estimates. Compilation of the actual amount of subscriptions received on Thursday was beyond physical possibility with the present working staff. Great blocks of bonds are being asked for by large industrial corporations. One of the greatest of all the American institutions has signed for $25,000,000.

Thursday, May 10, the Senate went into executive session to take up the press censorship sections of the Espionage bill, excluding all reporters, clerks, secretaries, pages, etc., but notwithstanding this precaution, the evening papers had a vigorous speech of Senator Martin, which he delivered as soon as the doors were closed, in which he made a plea that the Senate stand by the President and gave figures to show that there are strong reasons to believe that American supplies are getting to enemy nations, through neutral countries, and he asked the Senate to leave the matter to the chief executive. There was naturally much surprise on the part of the Senate to find a record of the proceedings at the executive session in the afternoon papers.

U. S. Senate Votes to Bar Use of Grain for Alcoholic Beverages

The first legislative step toward conserving the nation's food resources was taken on the evening of May 12 by the United States Senate in committee of the whole, in approving, 38 to 32, an amendment to the espionage bill forbidding during the war the use of cereals or grain in the manufacture of intoxicating liquors. The prohibition amendment, according to associated press reports, was adopted under a rule limiting debate sharply, and there were only brief speeches on each side. The question will be finally voted upon when the Senate takes the bill, with the amendment, from the committee of the whole.

LATER

On May 14 the Senate reversed its action of Saturday and by vote of 47 to 37 struck from the Espionage bill the Cummins amendment prohibiting the use of cereals and grain in the manufacture of alcoholic liquors during the period of the war.

Telegrams urging conservation of grain used in manufacture of liquors and passage of all prohibition war measures and opposing increased taxation on alcoholic liquors should be sent by all patriotic citizens to their Senators and Congressmen.

Conference of Governors Held in Washington

Last week there was held in Washington a conference of governors of states to consider matters pertaining to the war situation. At the close of the conference they expressed themselves by formal resolutions and otherwise as having received great benefit from their visit. They declared they were "amazed at the stupendous problems before the nation." While in Washington they met the President, the members of his Cabinet, the Council of Defense, and others well informed on the business in hand. While no definite time has been set, the President contemplates sending an invitation to the governors of every state to meet him in Washington to go over the whole war situation. A President and the governors of forty-eight states will make a notable tea party, but when the purposes of the meeting are considered, its importance becomes of the first magnitude.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, representing 19,000,000 church members and thirty denominations, has been in session in Washington this week. Distinguished men and women from different parts of the country were in attendance. Addresses were delivered and sermons preached by Rev. Dr. Jowett of New York, Rev. Bishop Earl Cranston, Rev. Bishop McConnell, Rev. Bishop Hendrix, Rev. Dr. King, president of Oberlin College, Dr. John R. Mott, Rev. Dr. North of New York, president of the organization, Dr. Robert Speer, Dr. Daniel Poling, and others.

A delegation, composed of nine prominent men, headed by Governor Milliken of Maine, went before the Senate committee on agriculture in the interest of the Gronna and Kenyon bills. Senator Gore of Utah, chairman of the committee, was most kindly in his reception of the delegation. Rev. Dr. Crafts, who was in charge of the hearing, was the first to speak, calling attention to the 7,000,000,000 pounds of food stuffs used in the manufacture of drink and the need of conserving our resources. Governor Milliken followed, speaking along the same line and commending the Gronna bill. Mr. Charles Stelzle, the noted labor leader, gave some convincing statistics. Hon. Amos Pinchot, E. C. Dinwiddie, Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel for the Anti-Saloon League, and your superintendent spoke briefly. Mr. Wheeler discussed the question of the constitutionality of war prohibition, saying that "Congress has power to prohibit the use of grain for making liquor during the war. An adequate common defense at this time demands the destruction of the liquor traffic in order that the United States may have command of all its forces and resources in a great national emergency."

The committee is largely composed of men favorable to temperance measures, Senator Kenyon, Senator Gronna, Senator Brady (Idaho), Senator Norris, and Senator Page (Vt.) being among the members.

Newspaper Publicity Against Liquor Traffic Begun by Council of Defense

The council announced its determination to raise $1,000,000 to be spent in newspaper publicity against the liquor traffic. This money will be secured by subscription through 20,000 volunteer solicitors, and will include special campaigns among college men, society leaders and organized labor.

Strong resolutions were passed, concerning war plans and recommendations, protesting against the lowering of labor and the relaxing of sanitary standards, co-operation with the Red Cross and with the War and Navy Departments in furnishing the "pick" of the churches' young ministers as chaplains for the army and navy, on the ground of the highest qualifications, rather than with undue regard for strict denominational lines.

National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, Washington, D. C., May 11, 1917

NEW MEXICO LEGISLATURE IN SPECIAL SESSION URGES NATION-WIDE PROHIBITION

At a special session, the legislature of New Mexico, May 9, passed a memorial to Congress asking for nation-wide prohibition as a war measure. The vote in the house was 33 to 7, In the senate it was unanimous. The memorial asked for the passage of a dry measure for the protection of the young men who are enlisting and for the conservation of the grain, sugar and other food products used in the manufacture of intoxicants. Messages of the same purport were sent to President Wilson and Congress by Governor Lindsay, the Supreme Court of the state, the chamber of commerce of Santa Fe, the state W. C. T. U. and the federation of woman's clubs. The state W. C. T. U. is to be congratulated that among its state officers is the wife of Governor Lindsay.

Hearst Papers Declare for Full Prohibition

William Randolph Hearst, owner of the greatest chain of newspapers in the world, including great dailies at San Francisco, Los Angeles, St. Louis, Chicago (two), New York, Philadelphia and Boston, has just swung his two California papers—the San Francisco Examiner and the Los Angeles Examiner over to fight for ABSOLUTE, STATE-WIDE, COMPLETE, BONE-DRY PROHIBITION.

Mr. Hearst states:

"I have been in favor of temperance instead of prohibition, but since the Rominger bill has been killed by the liquor interests, and since the situation has now resolved itself into a struggle between whisky and the wide-open saloon, on one side, and prohibition on the other, I do not think that any moral element or moral influence can hesitate to align itself with prohibition rather than with the saloons. I desire the San Francisco Examiner and the Los Angeles Examiner from now on to make a straight-out fight for prohibition.

(Signed) "William Randolph Hearst."

Sweden Places Further Restrictions on Liquor

Sweden has taken a further step in the restriction of the sale of alcoholic beverages, according to Associated Press reports. Under a law adopted by the riksdag, effective January 1, 1919, the present system of selling distilled liquors is extended to cover wine and beer. This means that every consumer will have to be provided with a passbook in which his purchases will be entered.

Private saloons will be abolished and all private trade in beer and wine and the importation of wine by individuals is forbidden.

Liquor Barred in Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison

Colonel E. F. Glenn, in charge of the officers' reserve training camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, on May 11, issued orders barring liquor and narcotics from the camp.

"Liquor is not going to handicap brains at Fort Benjamin Harrison," said Colonel Glenn. "Every young man in this camp who meets the requirements of the War Department, is to command men, and therefore he should make himself fit to command by living an exemplary life."

Great Britain's Distilleries Now Manufacturing Explosives

"The manufacture of alcoholic liquors has practically ceased in England, and distilleries have been taken over by the government and are now used for the manufacture of explosives," stated Mr. Allan G. Anderson, vice-chairman of the royal food commission of Great Britain, in an interview reported in the Chicago Daily News recently.

HONOR ROLL

—of—

PROHIBITION STATES AND TERRITORY AND DATE OF GOING INTO EFFECT

Maine	1851
Kansas	1880
North Dakota	1889
Oklahoma	1907
Georgia	1908
North Carolina	1909
Mississippi	1909
Tennessee	1909
West Virginia	1914
Alabama	1915
Arizona	1915
Virginia	1916
Colorado	1916
Oregon	1916
Washington	1916
Arkansas	1916
Iowa	1916
Idaho	1916
South Carolina	1916
Nebraska	*May 1, 1917
South Dakota	*July 1, 1917
Utah	†Aug. 1, 1917
Dist. of Columbia	†Nov. 1, 1917
Alaska	†Jan. 1, 1918
Indiana	†April 2, 1918
Michigan	*April 30, 1918
Montana	*Dec. 31, 1918
New Hampshire	†May 1, 1918

*Enacted 1916. †Enacted 1917.

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1917

Iowa†† Ohio New Mexico

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1918

Utah†† Missouri Florida
Minnesota Wyoming Nevada
Wisconsin

††Now have statutory prohibition. Will vote on constitutional amendment.

STATES HAVING TEMPERANCE DAY IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Alabama Oregon
Tennessee North Dakota
Kansas Missouri
New Mexico South Dakota

Wisconsin Legislature Passes Prohibition Submission Measure

By a vote of 21 to 11, the Evjue bill to submit a prohibition referendum to a popular vote in April, 1918, was passed by the Wisconsin senate under suspension of the rules. All attempts to amend failed. The measure passed the house on March 22 by a vote of 52 to 44.

New York Cities to Have Local Option

The Hill-Wheeler bill to permit the cities of New York state to determine for themselves the question of licensing saloons has passed both houses of the New York legislature. The measure now goes to the governor, who will undoubtedly sign it, as he speeded its passage as an emergency measure.

Harvard Alumni in Favor of Dry United States

The Harvard alumni bulletin contains a declaration in favor of national prohibition during the war. The bulletin in its weekly issue in part declares:

"We must say that we should like to see Harvard opinion and influence frankly identified with this movement. We have enough faith in Harvard sentiment to believe that idealism appeals to it more than self-interest, that personal habits can be modified or sacrificed for the general good."

Dry Reunions for Yale Graduates Urged by Ex-President Taft

Ex-President Taft is one of the prominent graduates of Yale college who is behind the movement to make the Yale graduates' reunions dry this year. Mr. Taft has sent out an appeal to the 21,500 graduates asking their support. The senior class is unanimously in favor of this patriotic endeavor. Among the alumni of the "committee of 71" which is spreading the movement for prohibition are the following: George E. Vincent, president of the University of Minnesota, recently appointed head of the Rockefeller Foundation, John V. Farwell, and Prof. Irving Fisher.

Favorable Action on Suffrage by Connecticut House

A suffrage referendum measure passed the Connecticut house of representatives on May 8 by a vote of 138 to 96. The proposed amendment will come before the general assembly two years hence for ratification, and if accepted by both houses will then be submitted to the electors of the state for acceptance or rejection. Similar action was taken a few days earlier, it will be remembered, on the proposed prohibition amendment.

CONSERVATION OF HEALTH OF ENLISTED BOYS OF PARAMOUNT IMPORTANCE

MILITARY CAMPS AND MOBILIZATION CENTERS MUST BE PROTECTED FROM VICE AND LIQUOR

The order issued by Captain Moffett of the ninth, tenth and eleventh naval districts, in charge of the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, that no enlisted man be allowed to enter the door of a saloon in the districts named will bring joy to the hearts of parents of boys who will do service in the Navy. It goes far towards safeguarding them against the liquor evil, and reflects credit upon the commandant who issued it and upon the Navy Department; but it falls far short of what the government of the United States should do in the protection of the enlisting lads.

Utterly inadequate seems the government's appreciation of the self-sacrifice exhibited by these youths and their parents when one considers that by the edict above referred to Uncle Sam virtually says to the boys who have responded to his call to the colors. "Now, boys, we prohibit your entering these places for the sale of poison drinks, the indulgence in which will unfit you for efficient service, will undermine your health and your character and wreck your body, mind and soul. And we warn you that if you disobey, we shall courtmartial you. But we shall continue to permit these places for the propagation of disease and inefficiency and vice in your vicinity, to exist so near that you must pass them frequently, because the government has not yet seen fit to carry on its finances without the revenue derived from liquor."

The liquor interests are asserting that "the military power of the United States is going to be a unit against the destruction of the distilling, brewing and the sale of all classes of liquor" as a war measure. On the face of it this statement is false, for already some officers of the Army have advocated national prohibition.

As matters stand at the present time, the situation as to liquor and vice seems to be left very largely in the hands of the officers of the different divisions. Some of these officials are wont to argue that the men under them will be dissatisfied if their personal liberty in the matter of drinking and indulgence in vicious practices is interfered with. The experience of certain camps on the Mexican border positively negatives such statements. In an article by Dr. M. J. Exner, published in Social Hygiene, in which he tells of the unspeakable conditions surrounding camp life, describing the constant temptation to which the soldiers were exposed, he speaks of one large camp located near two small towns, where the commander suppressed both the saloons and houses of vice that tried to establish themselves. We quote his words:

"As fast as any sources of prostitution or of the sale of intoxicants could be located, this officer got rid of them, assuming the authority to do so when he did not technically possess it, on the ground of military efficiency. Prostitution was practically inaccessible to this large contingent of troops, except as a few men might secure leave to visit larger centers, many miles away. An example of the commander's methods may be of interest:

"A saloon-keeper opened a saloon near the camp. The commander told him he could not sell booze to his men, and advised him to move on. The saloon-keeper replied, 'I have my license; you cannot stop me.' The commander again assured him that he could not sell liquor to his men, and again advised him to leave. The saloon-keeper answered, 'I'll show you.' The commander issued an order that no soldier should visit the place, and stationed a guard before the door to enforce the order. The saloon-keeper remained a week, after which he departed, not being able to do any business. At no other point were vice and drink so consistently and thoroughly suppressed.

"Now, it will be of interest to inquire what has been the reaction of these repressive measures on the men in this command. According to the arguments of many officers, in support of prostitution, we should expect extreme discontent, clamoring for prostitution facilities, revolt, mutiny. The facts are, that no more contented, more orderly, better disciplined, better trained, more efficient, or more loyal body of troops could be found anywhere on the border. These facts can readily be verified by any one conversant with the situation. Furthermore, these men were proud of the moral reputation of their regiments. Many of the men said to me, with a ring of pride, 'Oh, we have a clean bunch here.' This feeling of group pride was everywhere conspicuous among the military units of this camp, and was in itself a great restraining influence. It was unique; I found it nowhere else. The fact that prostitution was actually not indulged in to any extent by these men is shown in that this camp had by far the lowest prophylaxis rate.

"This thorough test of the application of repressive measures with reference to prostitution and drink with so large a body of troops for so long a time, is sufficient utterly to refute the contention of so large a proportion of army officers that sexual indulgence is necessary for the contentment and well-being of the men. The soldier is human, and men in the unstable period of adolescence, under the unusual moral strain incident to military service, cannot be expected to keep clean when prostitution in its most flagrant forms is placed right under their noses, with the sanction and encouragement of their officers. But give them a reasonably wholesome environment and place a high value upon clean manhood and moral integrity, and they will measure up to what is expected of them and of their own better selves, just as did the men of this camp."

Every influence should be directed to getting the plan inaugurated by the commander in this camp adopted throughout our Army.

ANOTHER CUSTOMER LOST

—Seattle Times

"Thank God, Canada Is Dry in Spots"

"A returned soldier has just been in to call on us, a fine, handsome, well set up fellow, educated and with a good fund of humor," writes the Montreal Witness. "After six months in the front trenches he is glad to be out of it. Unfortunately, like so many of our returned heroes, he had been continuously treated since arriving in Canada and was not well over the effects of the night before. When his unsteadiness was mentioned to him he said, with good humor, but very sincerely, 'Yes, but, thank God, Canada is dry in spots at least.' He was on his way to one of those dry spots, the province of Ontario. He knew he would be tempted till he reached there, and he was looking forward with evident pleasure to residence in a place where the temptation would be removed from him. Another returned soldier tells us of a patient in the next bunk to him in a hospital, badly addicted to drink, who told him how glad he was to be going home to Manitoba, where he would not be able to get any more. These expressions of pleasure at freedom from bondage to drink are not by any means uncommon occurrences."

For the sake of such brave men as these the patriotic moral forces of Canada are urging dominion-wide prohibition.

LIFE-SUSTAINING FOOD vs. LIFE-DESTROYING DRINK

SAVE THE GRAIN TO FEED THE NATION AND THE ALLIES

PROF. JOHN A. NICHOLLS

In the present great crisis in our national life, it is of utmost importance that every effort should be put forth to conserve the resources of the nation. One of the most wasteful and destructive forces, constantly sapping the energy and lessening the vitality of the country, is the beverage liquor traffic. The manufacture of intoxicating liquors uses up large quantities of foodstuffs, which are especially needed at the present time. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, according to the official reports of the Internal Revenue department, and the Bureau of Crop estimates, United States Department of Agriculture, the total amount of grain used for the manufacture of fermented liquors was 68,439,849 bushels. This consisted of barley, corn, rice and other materials. Besides the grain there were also used grape sugar or maltose, 54,934,621 pounds; hops, 37,451,610 pounds; glucose, 2,742,854 gallons; and 19,112 gallons and 24,756,974 pounds of other materials. The manufacture of distilled spirits required 39,341,566 bushels of grain in addition to 152,142,232 gallons of molasses. In all, the brewers and distillers together used up 107,781,415 bushels of grain, which, added to the other materials, was sufficient food to supply the energy requirement of 7,000,000 men for a year, after allowing one-sixth for the production of denatured alcohol. The world is crying out for food. Millions of men have been called from production to destruction, during the last three years, because of the great world war. Universal famine stares us in the face, unless we utilize all our resources.

—Courtesy of War Cry

Stop This Criminal Waste of Grain!—The World Needs it for Food!

President Wilson, in his proclamation to the people on April 15, stated the case very clearly when he said, "The importance of an adequate food supply, especially for the present year, is superlative. Without abundant food, alike for the armies and the peoples now at war, the whole great enterprise upon which we have embarked will break down and fail. The world's food reserves are low. Not only during the present emergency, but for some time after peace shall have come, both our own people and a large proportion of the people of Europe, must rely upon the harvests in America."

How serious the food situation is can perhaps be better understood if we examine the actual facts with regard to production. Last year the falling off in production of the grain crops was very large. In 1914 the wheat crop of the United States was 891,000,000 bushels; in 1915, 1,025,801,000 bushels; in 1916 we produced only 640,000,000 bushels, while the wheat crop of Canada for 1916 was about one-half that of the year before. At the same time the increasing demand from Europe brought about larger exportations. For the year ending July 31, 1914, the exportations from North America of wheat amounted to 284,000,000 bushels. Last year, with a smaller crop, we sent abroad 480,000,000 bushels. As the result of this combined shortage, and increased demand, on the first day of March, 1917, we had a lower stock of staple foods than at any previous time during the past twenty years. And yet, in the face of the shortage and the urgent necessity of conservation of food necessities, we allowed the brewers and distillers to use up, in the manufacture of liquid poison, more than 107,000,000 bushels of good grain. We also sent abroad in 1915 26,754,522 bushels of barley, nearly all of which was used for the manufacture of beer in other countries. Thus, good grain, grown upon American farms, was used in such a manner as to add to the work of destruction going on across the Atlantic.

And while our food supplies were getting lower every day, we sent abroad last year 1,677,809 gallons of rum, the larger part of which went to the coast of Africa, although in order to be impartial we sent to England 268,908 gallons; to China 61,035 gallons; to France 61,042 gallons; to Holland 58,409 gallons; to Japan 15,821 gallons; and to Canada 15,576 gallons. In addition to this we distributed among the nations of the earth, from Africa to Uruguay, 179,664 gallons of whisky. We did not forget Mexico, with all her troubles, for we sent there 26,049 gallons of whisky, gin and rum. Our supply of ardent spirits undoubtedly aided in the work of destruction going on in that ill-fated land. And remember that these spirits were sent abroad for drinking purposes, and had nothing to do with, and are not included in, our exportations of alcohol and neutral spirits used in the manufacture of explosives.

Surely it is time to put a stop to the wholesale destruction of the nation's necessities, brought about by the manufacture of intoxicating drinks. National prohibition should be the urgent demand of every loyal citizen. If, in order to make the world safe for democracy, we have found it necessary to enter the great world war, we surely ought to stop the manufacture and exportation of alcoholic intoxicants, the use of which, by demoralizing its soldiers, curtailing the productiveness of labor, inciting to crime, and wasting material resources, seriously diminishes a nation's efficiency. From the more than 45,000,000 bushels of corn used last year in the manufacture of malt and distilled liquors 60,000,000 people could have been supplied for one hundred days with food products that would, to a great extent, have taken the place of wheat bread and potatoes. When millions of people are suffering because of food scarcity, no part of the world's grain supply should be diverted from its proper use.

We certainly ought to learn some lessons from our Allies on the other side of the Atlantic. Only the other day the premier of Great Britain, David Lloyd George, in a public address given at the Guildhall, London, said that he hoped that the United States would avoid the blunders made by Great Britain. One of the most serious of these has been the toleration of the drink traffic. It is true that restrictions have been placed upon it, but its demoralizing effect has been even more apparent than before the war. Many of the most eminent and prominent public men there believe that Mr. George was right when in the early days of the war he said, "We are fighting Germany, Austria and Drink and so far as I can see, the greatest of these three deadly foes is Drink." Great leaders like Earl Kitchener and Lord Roberts issued special warnings, pointing out the dan-

(Continued on Page Six)

SENSE OF PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY NEEDED

MARGARET B. PLATT

"Let drink alone and it will let you alone." You have doubtless heard that remark from some of John Barleycorn's admirers. Do you believe it?

Down in Texas not long ago, at a good roads meeting, two young men having doubtless imbibed sufficient "stimulus" to make them quarrelsome, engaged in a fight. One pulled from his pocket a whisky flask and struck the other. A sliver from the broken bottle struck an innocent bystander in the eye, cutting the pupil and permanently endangering his vision. He was not meddling with the drink, but it did not let him alone!

You have probably "let drink alone" all your life-time. Has it let you alone? What has it cost you? Can you compute the price you have paid in order that the drink traffic might go on? And yet you let it alone! It is time to stop letting it alone. It is time to destroy it, root and branch. Come, help!

A deep sense of individual responsibility on the part of both the official and the private citizen is a prime requisite for successful enforcement of law. Every law is made for some particular purpose, presumably, and in general for the protection of life and property or for conserving the best interests of society as a whole. The expression of the people's will enacted into law announces certain principles by which society desires its individual and concrete life to be governed, and constitutes certain rules of action, and unless the purposes of the law are wrought out in private and public life it is impossible to demonstrate its real value to a community, state or nation.

"Law is made for the lawless," but the moment the individual, irrespective of position, power or wealth, defies the law he drops into the lawless class. The moral obligation to obey rests equally upon all, and the true patriot will not use place or power as a means to the end that he may with impunity violate law, nor as a shield to protect himself from the just penalty imposed for disobedience. Nor will those otherwise placed consider that poverty, ill-fortune or personal repugnance to law justifies them in ignoring its requirements. The burden of obedience bears equally upon all.

It is related that once upon a time a semi-public driveway in the national capital near the President's mansion was temporarily closed to travel and a United States trooper was set to guard the entrance. There approached in his carriage an official of high rank from a foreign country. The trooper barred the passage and bade the equipage turn back. The official demanded entrance, adding that he was a representative of a foreign nation. The trooper respectfully saluted, but held his ground, saying: "Sure, sir, that's all right, sir; but my orders are to keep this road closed and you could not pass even if you were an American citizen." The fine point of the soldier's argument was not lost upon the foreign envoy, who afterward related the story with great gusto. Law must apply equally to all, the least and the greatest; and in the scale of true democracy there is none greater than the American citizen if so be he conducts himself in a manner becoming his high privileges and obligations.

Law is made to restrain the lawless, also to protect the law-abiding in the exercise of their rights and duties. The average citizen would not be pleased to be classed with the lawless, but in various instances the term might justly be applied to many who in their own estimation least deserve it. If every citizen would comply in his individual life with the laws written upon the statute books of the state, and the ordinances and regulations governing lesser units, it would not only diminish largely the vast burden of taxation now made necessary for purposes of law enforcement, but would contribute immeasurably toward the solution of the ever present law-enforcement problem.

Public Sentiment a Prime Factor

No law can long remain operative unless public sentiment supports it. To be successfully maintained and given opportunity to prove its real value, a law must meet a certain need and the demand of a goodly proportion of the people, and it is fair to assume that this condition is complied with or the law could not be enacted, save in exceptional cases. There has been in the past an endeavor to express through law widespread sentiment in favor of definite principles, but such action failed, largely because of the blind adherence of the masses of voters to party rule, and submission to the dominance of a few political bosses. But that day, happily, is past. The masses are no longer to be whipped into line by a party lash. The spread of equal suffrage and the refusal of millions of voters to wear forever a party yoke augurs well for our future. Our hope is in the intelligent, independent voter.

Laws which relate not only to the physical but to the moral welfare of the people can justly claim, and are manifestly entitled to the support of all. Included among these are the laws providing for the elimination of the alcoholic liquor traffic, the suppression of the cigaret evil and the eradication of immoral practices and the traffic in vice. Because good health, sobriety and morality are essential to the maintenance of the highest standard of citizenship and the perpetuation of national life, the enforcement of such laws and the establishment of the principles which they represent are absolutely necessary, and every good citizen should feel vitally concerned in the matter and be willing to co-operate to that end.

No citizen has a right to say, "I will obey this law and ignore that." No official has a right to say in effect, "I will enforce this law and not another," either because it suits him to do so, or because he may think any number of people do not desire the law enforced. It is not for him to judge. Law is made to be obeyed and the best way to secure the repeal of a bad law is to enforce it, while the only way to judge of the benefits to be derived under a good law is to give opportunity for it to prove its quali-ger to the country from the drink traffic, while King George ordered the wine cellars at Windsor Castle and Buckingham Palace to be closed, and inaugurated a reign of total abstinence in the royal households. But, notwithstanding these appeals, and in the face of a constantly increasing shortage of food supplies, the selfish liquor traffic continued its work of destruction.

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

LIFE-SUSTAINING FOOD VS. LIFE-DESTROYING DRINK

(Continued from Page Five)

Last year, as shown by the official government returns, the following quantities of foodstuffs were destroyed in the manufacture of beer and liquors, viz: Malt and grain, 61,830,000 bushels; rice, maize and other grains, 1,352,000 hundredweight; sugar, 2,400,000 hundredweight; molasses, 838,000 hundredweight; hops, 450,000 hundredweight, besides other materials. Eight hundred and seventy-one thousand acres of valuable land were used to raise the home grown barley for the manufacture of these intoxicants, and an additional 31,000 acres were given up to the growth of hops. In addition to the home supply, imported grain and sugar to the amount of 850,000 tons were used. The sugar amounted to 260,190,000 pounds, a year's supply for 6,670,000 people. At the normal rate of consumption the food value of these materials was sufficient to have kept the nation for forty days. The national drink bill of Great Britain amounted last year to over $1,000,000,000.

In a debate upon the food supply in the House of Commons recently, the Hon. Lief Jones said, "The prime minister said at Bangor two years ago that drink was doing more harm to this country than all the German submarines together. That was not a flight of fancy; it was the fact. Drink during the war has destroyed more food than all the German submarines put together. Drink during the war has used up as much tonnage as the Germans have sunk with all their submarines. Drink during the war has killed more men than the German submarines."

Because of these startling facts the thoughtful people of Great Britain are now demanding national prohibition. Three million adults have appealed to the government to stop the traffic. A great memorial has been presented to the prime minister, containing more than 2,000 signatures of persons eminent in the public service, asking for the suspension of the liquor traffic during the period of the war. In that memorial the petitioners say this: "With the weakening power of alcohol removed, our national effort against the enemy would have gathered strength; with increased strength and more rapid supplies our losses in six campaigns would have been substantially reduced." Included in the list of persons who made this declaration are thirty-one admirals and vice-admirals of the British fleet, twenty-two generals and lieutenant generals of the army, and hundreds of other officers in active service. The name of Sir Alfred Booth, chairman of the Cunard Steamship company, and the head of the War Control committee of the port of Liverpool, heads a long list of directors of munitions of war.

In the face of these facts it is no wonder that the London Spectator says, "We have come to the conclusion that the nation cannot afford to go on manufacturing and drinking intoxicants while it is engaged in the effort to beat the Germans. The prime fact that forbids us winning the war without prohibition is that intoxicants are made out of food, and we must use every ounce of food for nourishment."

These words should appeal to us with great power. Let us learn wisdom from the events of the past, avoid the blunders of other nations, and by the adoption of national prohibition, conserve our resources, guard our efficiency, protect our people, and thus hasten the coming of a lasting and righteous peace.

PROHIBITION NECESSARY FOR MILITARY EFFICIENCY

LET AMERICA PROFIT BY GREAT BRITAIN'S LESSON

Eugene N. Foss, former Governor of Massachusetts, in Chicago Examiner

My special interest at this time of national crisis is the promotion of war prohibition as a military efficiency measure. The government is to call out hundreds of thousands of young men. If these are to give the nation the maximum of service they must be protected from the saloon. The modern war technique on sea and land demands clear heads and quick action. This the federal government understands. It has suppressed the army canteen and prohibits the sale of alcohol on its ships and in its navy yards.

But our eastern cities, sodden with drink, would nullify the wise purposes of the national authorities. Within a half mile of the Charlestown navy yard (Boston) eighty-six licensed places set their traps for the bluejackets. Things are much the same at Portsmouth, Brooklyn and down the line.

It is now well understood that alcohol lowers resistance to disease. If our boys are to offer their bodies as a defense to the nation, these bodies should not be weakened to the attacks of infectious sickness. The surgeons in the Russian army explain with delight that the quick recovery from wounds in the present war (as contrasted with the Russo-Japanese war) is the undoubted consequence of the prohibition of vodka. Let us, too, give our wounded the best chances of recovery. Further, our boys should be protected from the black diseases which stream from city brothels. Close the saloon and venereal sicknesses shrink to a minimum.

If our war industries are to work to the limit of productivity, they must not be hampered by the drink shop. The famous "White Paper" issued by the British government in 1915 showed how drink was holding up repairs on warships, the transport of material, the production of shells — in this way endangering the whole fabric of the British empire. The English will not much longer be content to fight with one hand bound. From all corners of Britain are coming demands that England place herself in line with prohibition Russia. "The government," says the London Spectator, "must at such a moment as this show that it is not going to let the nation go over the parapet with a rifle in one hand and a glass of slopping beer in the other."

The food question, they now tell us, is the central fact of the war situation. Everything must be done to conserve our supplies in this, the world's lean year. The New Republic states truly that "the largest single item of wasteful consumption in the United States is the hundred million bushels of grain that every year go to the production of beer and whisky," and adds that "billions of fourteen-ounce loaves of bread can be baked from the waste involved in the manufacturing of beer." And besides the grain there are the sugar and rice and molasses and coal and other materials destroyed by the brewer and distiller. Yet officialdom, instead of hurrying to turn off this waste faucet, urges us to start gardens in our backyards.

The Spectator reckons that "if we (i. e., the English) had stopped barley being turned into beer at the beginning of the war and had put that barley into store for a rainy day, we should now be absolutely safe (from submarine starvation). The British government has latterly restricted greatly this continuous cataract of waste, yet the foodstuffs even now worse than destroyed would feed the whole British nation for a month and a half of the twelve."

Let us not in America imitate this incredible folly.

Again, the war has got to be paid for. Russia is financing her military operations on what she has saved from drink. Savings bank deposits in the dry war time have jumped more than 2,000 per cent. A report from England, on the other hand, announces that while the war is costing her sixty pounds ($300) per second, drink is adding six pounds ($30) more per second. The two billions which America pays out yearly for intoxicants would ease tremendously the financial strain which is coming to us in the near future.

Finally, let us have a clean war, a war worthy of the nation and its just cause. Let there be no drunken soldiery, maudlin and staggering in our streets; no hospitals filled with recruits,

(Continued on Page Eleven)

"Yes, Sir—Sherman Was Right!" —Philadelphia Ledger

MOBILIZING LABOR FOR THE WAR

In response to the call of the United States government, the young men from the farms, the business offices, the factories, the mines and lumber camps are enlisting in the Army and in the Navy. Who are to fill the vacancies created by their going? Where are to be found the men to keep moving the wheels of industry during the period of the war?

By the enactment of a prohibition war measure, 100,000 men would be released from work in the saloons, breweries and distilleries to serve in these various capacities. The farms of this country alone could furnish work for the 100,000 in the cultivation of additional land for the producing of foods; the munitions factories could use to advantage the services of these men; the ship-building industry which now has on hand the gigantic order for 1,000 wooden ships, will need a large amount of comparatively unskilled labor. Men will be needed to mine coal for fuel for the ships that carry food and ammunition to the Allies. Men will be needed in the foundries to make the steel to be used in the manufacture of these ships. Men will be needed by the great transportation lines which carry troops, ammunition and provisions.

Why should these 100,000 men be permitted to expend their time and strength in the manufacture of commodities that are not only useless but absolutely injurious? Patriotism demands that they be released at this time for constructive service.

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, May 17, 1917

COMMUNICATE WITH YOUR SENATORS AND CONGRESSMEN IMMEDIATELY!

NOW IS THE TIME FOR ACTION. Every patriotic citizen must immediately get to work to send and secure the sending by his fellow-citizens of petitions, letters and telegrams urging the passage of a national prohibition measure and protesting against the increased tax on alcoholic beverages. These messages should be addressed to the United States House of Representatives, in care of one's own Congressman, and a similar course is in order in the Senate. The legislator is bound to present a petition for record whether or not he favors it, and petitions that do not persuade a man to vote right sometimes neutralize his position. Men often say letters are more effective than petitions, but telegraphic petitions are better than either, and living deputations the best of all. Petitions published in the Congressional Record also have their effect, as that periodical is read, more or less, by all members of Congress.

Let eight or ten people combine in the sending of one telegraphic petition and thus save expense. The following form is suggested:

U. S. Senate (or House of Representatives)
Care of Senator .....
(or Congressman .....):
Undersigned urge conservation of foodstuffs used in making intoxicating beverages, and passage of all war prohibition measures. Also urge that no added tax be placed on liquors.
(Signed)

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, 561 Thirty-third St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

THE PATRIOTISM OF THE LIQUOR INTERESTS

In these heart-breaking days of the world's history the patriotism of every man of the land is being subjected to the acid test. Proclamations of patriotism slip easily and glibly from one's tongue in times of peace and prosperity; today's emergency demands not mere words, but heroic, self-sacrificing deeds. The liquor interests of America have not hesitated to vehemently advertise themselves as patriots. Now is their opportunity to demonstrate the sincerity of their affirmations.

Let the brewers and distillers show their loyalty to our common nation by closing their doors and permitting the grain used in the manufacture of alcoholic beverages to be made into bread to feed the hungry. Let them invest in relief work the large sums of money now being expended in press publicity on the compensation question, and an endeavor to explain to the reading public why a few months ago they were insisting that the farmers were absolutely dependent upon them for a market for their grain, but today are contending that only an infinitesimal amount of the country's food stuffs is used in their breweries and distilleries.

Let them offer to co-operate with the government and the military authorities in the establishment of anti-saloon and anti-vice zones around all military camps and mobilization centers. They cannot blame the people if they are skeptical concerning the patriotic intentions of the men of "the trade" when even in war times the representatives of the liquor interests in state legislatures deliberately kill all legislation designed for the protection of the enlisting boys and men. Almost before the ink was dry on the order of the commandant of the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, prohibiting any enlisted man in the ninth, tenth, or eleventh districts from entering a saloon under penalty of court martial, the liquor law makers in the Illinois legislature killed a bill providing for a five mile dry zone around this naval station, one of the largest and most important in the country, now harboring thousands of boys in the adolescent period of life and this in spite of appeals from Secretary of the Navy Daniels and Governor Lowden.

But notwithstanding these discouraging facts, we have faith to believe that there are among the liquor dealers many men whose latent patriotism is being awakened and who might easily be persuaded to take the course adopted by a certain saloonkeeper of New Hampshire, who recently voluntarily closed his business, just a year before the prohibitory law goes into effect.

May this not be an opportune time for the launching of another and a new crusade among the liquorites of this country. Never in the history of the nation have there been so many and such convincing grounds of appeal as today. The spirit of self-sacrifice is in the air. Gracefully and with credit to themselves the men engaged in the liquor trade can retire and thus save themselves the ignominy of a little later being forced out of business. If forty years ago, in times of peace, the saloonkeepers of certain communities could be made to respond to the prayers and appeals of mothers to close their doors, is it not only possible but probable that today, with public sentiment against the traffic a thousand times more pronounced, with the whole world considering prohibition as a war measure, these men would yield to the entreaties and importunities of their fellow-citizens if tactfully and sympathetically approached.

May it not be worth while for local unions, churches, and citizens in the vicinity of military camps, naval stations and mobilization centers, to write, petition, personally appeal to the men engaged in the drink traffic, striving to impress upon their hearts and consciences the vital fact that an opportunity lies before them to do a wonderful act of service to their country and to the world?

CAN THE UNITED STATES AFFORD TO RELINQUISH LIQUOR REVENUE?

Apparently the chief obstacle in the way of the adoption of a national prohibition measure at this time is the fear that the relinquishment of the liquor revenue will endanger the finances of the nation. "Can we afford to take this risk?" is the query of many who would otherwise approve of the movement. The question is a legitimate one, but when given due consideration seems less weighty and serious than at first appears. There occur to the student of the question at least five good and sufficient reasons why the United States may be incurring a greater risk in permitting the continuance of the liquor traffic than in giving up the revenue therefrom.

First: With the abolition of the traffic in drink there is certain to be an increase in national wealth. The experience of Russia and indeed of every prohibition state furnishes evidence of the truth of this statement, for the money spent in the saloons, upon their closing immediately pours into the savings banks. It is plain, therefore, that the ability of individual citizens to subscribe for the huge war bond issue will be enormously increased under prohibition, and that the revenue to be derived from the income tax and other taxes under dry conditions is certain to be augmented.

Second: The history of the war so far has shown the immeasurable advantage in the way of military efficiency of having sober soldiers. With alcoholic liquor out of the way, and with total abstaining forces on land and sea, the war, which otherwise might be prolonged, would be brought to an earlier and a successful termination, thus saving the nation an immense sum of money.

Third: At the present time much more than half of the territory of the United States, being under prohibition, has ceased to contribute to the liquor revenue of the government without its apparently suffering from this diminution. It stands to reason that a further reduction will not seriously handicap Uncle Sam, and that the readjustment necessary can be made in connection with the present loan for war purposes.

Fourth: Under prohibition the local, state and national government will be relieved from great expense due to possible uprisings and disturbances of various kinds incident to war—criminality, disease, necessary hospitals, etc., thus saving an outlay of money sufficient, in part at least, to counterbalance the loss of revenue.

Fifth: The conservation of food products, and of the health and morals of the citizens of the country is of incomparably more importance at this critical time than the saving of revenue. That upon which the nation must build primarily when the war is over is manhood not dollars, and any measure that will tend to safeguard the physical, mental and moral well-being of its citizens, no matter how extravagant it may seem in dollars and cents terms, should have first consideration.

May not this be the time and the occasion for America to forever silence the charge sometimes made, that it places the almighty dollar above all else, by voluntarily relinquishing as a nation the revenue from alcoholic beverages, thus declaring to the world that its supreme concern is the creation and maintenance of a clean, strong, upright manhood and womanhood, free from the debilitating and degenerating influence of alcohol.

MAKE ALCOHOL A SERVANT, NOT A MASTER, SAYS COMMITTEE OF SIXTY

Stop manufacturing beer, whisky, brandy and all alcoholic beverages, says the Committee of Sixty, and utilize brewery and distillery plants for the production of pure alcohol for manufacturing purposes.

The Committee of Sixty, composed of such men as Professor Irving Fisher of Yale University, Dr. Charles W. Eliot, Health Commissioner Haven Emerson, Dr. Richard C. Cabot of Boston, William Allen White of Kansas, explains the purpose in a letter, a copy of which has been sent to all the brewers and distillers of the United States. It reads as follows:

"It is not common sense that grain should be made into liquor when the world is hungry for bread. The Committee of Sixty is conducting a campaign for wartime prohibition, not on moral or sentimental grounds, but on grounds of plain common sense. There is universal shortage of grain, and the reserve stock has been lowered to the danger point. At this time of stress it is not common sense that one-fifth, or one-tenth, or one-twentieth of our grain should be used to manufacture products not of direct value to the United States or our Allies."

The committee is awaiting replies from the brewing and distilling companies. In the meantime, experts on industrial subjects are endeavoring to show that brewers and distillers will not lose one penny if they stop making beverages and convert their plants into alcohol factories.

Can Be Used for Motors

In a statement issued the other day through the committee, Dr. Allen Rogers, of the American Chemical Society, a member of the faculty of Pratt Institute, says that alcohol can be made to serve thousands of industrial needs. In a mixture with kerosene it can be used as motor fuel. It is needed in huge quantities for the manufacture of explosives, ether and certain drugs.

"But the use of alcohol for industrial purposes on a large scale is impossible now," Dr. Rogers declares, "because, denatured alcohol is free, pure alcohol costs $2.40 a gallon, of which $2 is tax. European countries have removed the tax on alcohol, and we must do the same. Let us use it for motor fuel, cooking stoves, dyestuffs, shellacs and varnishes. Don't close the breweries. Transform them. Let them make alcohol, not for drinking, but for manufacturing purposes."

National Council of Women Endorses National Prohibition

The National Council of Women, representing twenty-seven of the prominent women's organizations of the country, with a membership of about 7,000,000, has gone on record for national prohibition as a war measure. This action was taken at a meeting of the executive committee of the Council, in session at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, May 10-11. The resolution urged the enactment of a national prohibition war measure for the protection of the boys who are enlisting for service in the war. It was decided to hold the next biennial meeting of the Council in Washington, D. C., Dec. 8-11. The National W. C. T. U. was represented at this meeting by its president, Miss Anna A. Gordon, and its corresponding secretary, Mrs. Frances P. Parks.

Chicago to Lose 200 Saloons

Two hundred Chicago saloonkeepers are to close their doors on account of the prospects of war prohibition, it is reported. The liquor interests are greatly troubled and the breweries in many instances are not putting in their money to keep licenses from lapsing.

Minnesota Stockmen Urge War Prohibition

Two hundred men representing livestock and farming interests in Minnesota recently wired President Wilson to suspend the manufacture of all malt and distilled liquor during the period of the war. Other methods of conserving and increasing the food supply of the United States were carefully considered.

Ohio Club to Close Its Bar

The Youngstown (O.) Club with a membership of 260 and representing a private wealth of $100,000,000 and a corporate wealth of $300,000,000, it is reported, has voted to close its bar until the end of the war. The vote for war prohibition, which goes into effect May 27, was virtually unanimous, and was taken to conserve the food supply and promote community efficiency.

Nurses Declare for Dry Nation

The American Nurses' Association in recent session in Philadelphia adopted a resolution calling for the suppression of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors during the war. In the discussions, the evils resulting from the use of strong drink during the mobilization on the Mexican border were brought out, nurses attached to the National Guard units telling of the experiences of men who suffered from the effects of alcoholism.

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do You Know the Answers to These Questions? They May Be Found in THE UNION SIGNAL of May 10

Ten questions, the answers to which will be found in the preceding number of THE UNION SIGNAL, will appear each week. The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. What notable anti-liquor order for the protection of the enlisted men of the Navy has been issued by the commandant of the Great Lakes Naval Training Station?

2. In what way has Secretary of the Navy Daniels already safeguarded the Navy from drink?

3. How do prominent Army officials of the Hawaiian islands regard the sale of liquor to the soldiers?

4. What happened to the saloons, breweries and distilleries of Nebraska on May 1?

5. Why are college presidents and professors awakening to the menace of liquor?

6. In what different lines of endeavor can the women enlist for service in this national emergency?

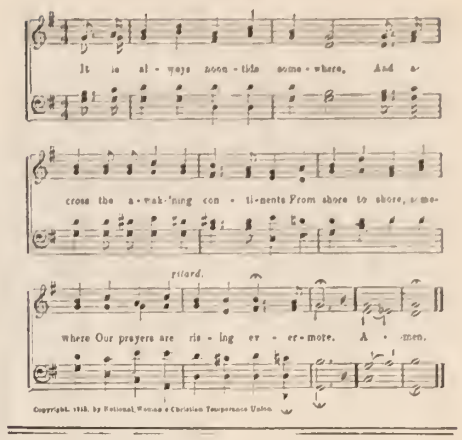
7. Tell something of conditions in Great Britain which have influenced prominent citizens to plead for prohibition, "total, general, immediate."

8. Name some of the pernicious effects upon young men of cigaret smoking as given by a noted college professor of Kansas.

9. What has been the effect of prohibition upon the labor movement in Colorado?

10. How is one big brewing company of the District of Columbia preparing for prohibition in the District?

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



If He Love a Country

If a man would live at ease, let him beware of the life of love. If he love a country, it may call him suddenly to hardship and death. If he love art, it will set him heart-breaking lessons of trial and self-surrender. If he love truth, it will call him to part company with his friends. If he love men, their sorrows will sit by his fire and shadow its brightness. If he love some other soul as the life of his life, he must put his happiness at the hazard of every day's chances of life and death. If he give himself to some great devotion, he must be ready to be searched through and through as by fingers of fire, to be called higher and higher by a voice which takes no heed of obstacles, to live day by day in the presence of an ideal which accepts nothing less perfect than itself; for love is a more terrible master than law and they who follow must stand ready to strip themselves of a thousand possessions.—Hamilton Wright Mabie

My Country

Every youth
That cherishes a masterful design,
And every girl that blossoms to a home
In all these borders, forms a sovereign state
Confederate of my country. Not a fire
Burning upon a pure and happy hearth
But shakes her banner forth. Where true men fare
Brave and contented to their daily toil,
There march her armies. Where the favored ship
Bears such a true man to a foreign shore,
My country goes abroad. Whene'er a home
In all her wide estate is magnified
By the sweet hahy-promise of a man,
My country is enlarged; and where two friends,
Drawn close to one another by the ties
Of love and helpfulness, strike hand with hand,
My country gains a strength; yes, whensoe'er
The lonely heart most humble of them all
Achieves the smallest deed of kindliness,
My country wins a grace.

There is a bond
Encircling us that know a common sun;
It is my country's arm. There is a light
Flashed on a face when freedom's name is heard;
That light was born within my country's eyes;
And there are sacred thoughts of God and man,
Of reverence and justice, pulsing far
Upon our mountains and along our plains;
And where they run, there flows my country's blood.

—Amos R. Wells, in The Christian Endeavor World

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAY

June 9—Flower Mission Day—Birthday of Jennie Casseday

WHITE RIBBONERS RESPOND TO PATRIOTISM'S CALL

Michigan's Plan for Massing Patriotic Influence

MRS. E. L. CALKINS, President Michigan W. C. T. U.

For some time we had been considering the need of massing the influence of Michigan women. The call to patriotic service seemed to be the psychological moment. We sent out a call to representatives of all organizations of women in the state asking their presence at a meeting at Lansing. It was well attended.

Forming what is known as the Michigan Woman's Committee for Patriotic Service, we elected Rev. Caroline Bartlett Crane of Kalamazoo, chairman. The advantage of our plan is self-evident. In twenty-four hours we had the work thoroughly organized. The W. C. T. U. with its Flower Mission department, its department of Work among Soldiers and Sailors, and other channels for patriotic activity, had only to press the button to set its machinery in motion.

What is true of our organization is true of the Equal Suffrage Association, the Federation of Woman's Clubs and all other societies. We are not only co-operating with the Red Cross society but planning to obtain and transport emergency farm help, organize classes in household economy, canning clubs, provide relief for soldiers' families and to aid in other ways. Following out the suggestions received from the Extension division of the Michigan Agriculture College we are seeking to interest the women in the rural districts to do everything possible to release the men for the heavier work of spring planting, by themselves undertaking to test seeds, etc. The superintendent of Public Instruction, at our request, circularized all of the county school commissioners asking them to instruct the teachers to use to the full their facilities in this direction as a part of the agricultural school course.

We are getting in touch with women in the cities as well as in the rural districts, seeking to inform them of the proposed plan of co-operation between country and town women for the harvesting and the preservation of surplus products. We have not only urged the utilization of every available garden spot but arranged to have all receive expert advice as to the best methods to be pursued. Already more than one thousand bushels of potatoes have been obtained for seed, far below the market price.

Later on we expect every W. C. T. U. in the state to take up the problem of food preservation and household economy the solution of which will be valuable to housekeepers in time of peace.

Virginia to Specialize on Home Gardens and Waste Elimination

Special Correspondence

The Virginia Woman's Christian Temperance Union is answering the call to the colors, and every woman available will be pressed into patriotic service. Many have enrolled for various lines of work as laid down by the War Service Bureau. Not one has proved a "slacker" when the demand arose for patriots to take up the hoe, for intensive gardening both in the country and city seems to be one of Virginia's most effective means of service. In one city the W. C. T. U. issued a leaflet bearing the slogan, "A garden in every back yard, and a garden on every vacant lot." The members made a house-to-house canvass leaving a copy of the leaflet and a government bulletin.

In all the cities the Red Cross has white ribbon recruits who are taking "first aid" training. In some sections a great publicity campaign is being carried on by means of window exhibits and the publishing of numerous cartoons, portraying the amount of grain wasted in the whisky barrel. One town honored its departing soldiers by lining up at the station and presenting with a Bible each soldier who entrained. The women are sewing, knitting, preparing hospital supplies, etc., and in every way co-operating with the War Service Bureau, though handling the work through the specific departments of the W. C. T. U.

Tennessee Women Enlisting for Active War Relief Work

Special Correspondence

In this time of need by the national government the women of Tennessee are not slow to take active part in relief work. We have two immediate aims: to put an electric fan in one of the military hospitals and to provide comfort bags for the battleship "Tennessee," to be presented at the time of the launching. The W. C. T. U. will also join with the Army and Navy Comfort Circles in furnishing warm woolen garments for the boys. During the year each woman will be urged to put up one glass of jelly and one can of fruit, at least, for the sick and wounded.

Nashville is the site of the mobilization camp and it is the aim of the state superintendent of Work among Soldiers and Sailors, Mrs. Myra A. Tandy, to keep this camp supplied with temperance literature and to urge the unions in that city to provide games and magazines for the boys.

The members of the W. C. T. U. are planting their own gardens and furnishing seed, ground and tools to those who have none. The proceeds of these garden plots will be shared with the needy.

Montana Working for National Prohibition as Safety First Measure

MRS. MARY L. ALDERSON, President Montana W. C. T. U.

In Montana the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is working for National prohibition as a safety first war measure. We are emphasizing the fact that this is the most important thing that our patriotic women can do for our country and our soldier boys. We are laboring to have all soldiers forbidden to enter saloons. We are also organizing in our unions the department of Work among Soldiers and Sailors, and trying to show the necessity of safeguarding the boys in the field from the saloon and vice. One union alone, Lonesome Prairie, sent twenty-six dollars to Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher for an electric fan for the soldiers at Fort Bliss, one dollar of this amount to be used to place the name of the union on the gift. Money toward another fan has also been sent to Mrs. Thacher. Local unions are supplying soldier boys in camps and hospitals with magazines, fruit, and delicacies.

We have interested ourselves in getting our boys to take up work on farms, and are encouraging cultivation of vacant lots. We co-operate with the Red Cross society. We do not enter military parades, but are ready to aid in any work that will abate the evils or harm of war.

We are doing something under the direction of Mrs. I. F. McClure along the line of teaching foreigners to be loyal American citizens. Bozeman has changed our transcontinental conference into a white ribbon conference or get-together meeting, with an invitation to all unions to send delegates as Bozeman's guests. This conference will discuss National prohibition, how to assist in the production of maximum crops, and various other patriotic measures.

REGISTRATION PLANS

At the request of the Woman's Committee of the Council for National Defense, the National Council of Women has set aside its own plans of registration, agreed upon at the April 3 meeting in Washington, D. C., and has decided to accept the plans of registration which will be sent out by the Woman's Committee, of which Dr. Anna H. Shaw is chairman.

Oregon to Provide Help for Farmers' Wives

Special Correspondence

Oregon is alive with zeal for patriotic service. Many new organizations are being formed, each to do its bit along some new line. This is the time when the "do everything" policy of the W. C. T. U. proves its value; the machinery of our organization is tested and not found wanting.

Our state superintendent of the department of Soldiers and Sailors, Mrs. Elizabeth Dalgleish, has been in training for months with the United Surgical and War Dressing organization. She is ready in this emergency to give personal instruction to our unions which are taking up this work in co-operation with the Red Cross. Mrs. Dalgleish is also superintending the making of comfort bags for the sailors and housewives for the soldiers. We have been furnished some of the regulation housewives to use as samples, and several unions are already busily engaged in that effort. Women who do not belong to the W. C. T. U. are coming to our state headquarters for suggestions and help in working for our soldier boys. The Central union, Mrs. M. L. T. Hidden, president, devoted an afternoon meeting to patriotic work and a general invitation was extended to women who want to help.

Recognizing that the greatest menace to the soldier is the commercialized vice which surrounds the camp, our superintendent of Purity, Mrs. Rachel M. Kelly, with others, is co-operating with the Y. M. C. A. and Social Hygiene society in the endeavor to secure the moral protection we owe our country's defenders.

The increase and conservation of our food supply is of great interest in this state, where the valleys are fruitful gardens whose capability for food production has never been tested. Mrs. Lucia F. Additon, state as well as National superintendent of Temperance and Labor, has long preached the gospel of cultivation of vacant lots and the conservation of the worker as well as the food. She is again rallying our forces to increase production and eliminate waste.

On the same line Mrs. Jennie M. Kemp, state president, has a vision of the need of providing help for the farmers' wives, whose work will be greatly increased by the "back to the soil" movement this year. The Oregon W. C. T. U. is experienced in house-to-house campaigns. It may well lead in the plan which will place girls or women who wish to serve their country by increasing food production where they may join hands with the farmers' wives in saving from waste food which will be sorely needed in the months to come. Every woman who will make two chickens grow where only one grew last year, who will see that not even the smallest bit of food is wasted is truly a patriot. It may not be spectacular or easy, but it is sensible efficiency.

These activities are supplemental to the leading thought of the W. C. T. U.—to help secure National prohibition. Oregon men and women responded quickly to the call of our National W. C. T. U. president, Miss Anna Gordon, by sending telegrams and letters immediately to President Wilson and our Senators and Congressmen. The three large dailies in Portland give space freely to the W. C. T. U. and our Publicity director, Mrs. Helen Ayer Davenport, secured the insertion of Miss Gordon's appeals with an urgent request from the state president that Oregon should heed the summons to duty. Our papers also published the official call sent out by our National General Officers, thus reaching our membership promptly.

DIRECTIONS FOR MAKING COMFORT BAGS

Contents of Bag.

Two sizes of black and white bultons.
1 spool of patent thread, khaki or olive drab.
1 spool of white thread, No. 24.
1 spool black thread, No. 24.
1 spool khaki or olive drab darning cotton.
1 spool black darning cotton.
1 pair small blunt scissors.
1 package court plaster
1 Testament.
1 White Ribbon Songster.
Pledge Card.
Leaflets on purity, tobacco and temperance.

Six needles No. 5
Six coarse darning needles.
Six safety pins.
1 piece narrow tape.
1 pin ball filled with pins.
1 small roll of absorbing cotton.
1 small roll of clean muslin for bandage 2 inches wide 3 yards length.

These may be bought at the drug store (pharmacy).

7½ inches wide when finished.

A good motherly letter. Boys look for this first.

Take strong pretty cretonne or khaki 11 inches long (36 inches in length and 1 yard wide will make 6 bags), cut a strip 2½ inches wide from the width (1 yard) for pin balls and button bags, leaving 33½ inches in width. Cut this in two pieces for two bags. On wrong side of cloth 4 inches from top edge fasten three pieces of new flannel, red, white and blue, with pinked edges for safety pins and needles. This should have a piece of narrow white ribbon sewed on (one underneath and the other on top) to tie up in a roll so that the needles will not rust. Fasten a small bag for buttons on the other side where the casing will be made. Sew up side and bottom. Turn down 2 inches at top for frill; stitching two rows (one inch apart) for casing for two strings of pretty colored braid each 21 inches long and run in either side for opening and closing bag. The pin ball should be 2 inches in diameter (or wide); when finished fill with pins.

Make Wall Pockets like a large envelope, but of white table oil cloth. Fill with clippings cut from good reading matter. Sew a ring on each corner and run ribbons through to hang it up. Mark it from W. C. T. U. These are used in hospitals, etc.

Write to the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill., or to The American Bible Society, Astor Place, New York City, for testaments.

Testament, 8 cents; Testament with Psalms, 10 cents; Songsters, 7 cents; pledge cards, 40 cents pe 100, with flag, Miss Willard's face, and stub for return, also leaflets can be purchased from me.

MRS. ELLA HOOVER THACHER, Superintendent,
1627 Massachusetts Ave., N. W., Washington, D. C.

N. B.—All Unions and L. T. L.'s competing for banner MUST PUT in all the articles mentioned above, the White Ribbon songster for this department being used. (Compiled for this department.) Each state will keep its own comfort bags for its own soldiers and sailors.

PENNSYLVANIA GRAND JURY'S INDICTMENT AGAINST RUM

A Pennsylvania grand jury, in its report for April recently submitted to Judge Davis, made a smashing indictment against rum as the cause of poverty and crime and called upon the United States to abolish the liquor traffic.

"It seems to us that the time is ripe for another crucifixion," says the report, published in the Philadelphia North American, "not of man, but of a business, that men might be free from the damning influences and effects of intoxicants, with the resulting crime, misery and lowering of moral standards of the individual and home, and the increased cost to the commonwealth in supporting criminals and paupers resulting from its continuance."

In explanation of the demand for prohibition the jury says in its report:

"We were, early in the month, horrified at the great amount of crime directly attributable to the use of intoxicants.

"This horror was intensified as the work of the month progressed. The devastation caused was borne in upon us with a greater force when we were informed by Superintendent McAllister that of the 6,716 cases in the Philadelphia General Hospital and Almshouse, not less than 80 per cent were traceable and due directly or indirectly to this cause.

"Of the 653 cases in the Reed street prison (Moyamensing) this same reason was given for the major part of crime. Indeed, here the percentage was placed at not less than 90 per cent.

"We feel that we would be negligent in the performance of our duty as citizens if we did not express ourselves in no uncertain terms regarding the sale and use of liquor.

"We believe that the Federal government should be heartily supported in what it is considering—the suspension of manufacture of intoxicating liquors during the period of the war, not alone for the conservation of the food supply, but of human happiness and the welfare of the nation."

PROHIBITION NECESSARY FOR MILITARY EFFICIENCY

(Continued from Page Seven)

useless for the war itself as well as for after life. In the Spanish war supply trains were sidetracked to let the product of Milwaukee pass through to the army camps. We have moved a long way on the road to national sobriety since then. Military hygiene also is too enlightened to stand for such things again. If men of good will all over our good land will exert a little pressure on the national government we shall be able to insure our coming army against all that drink means of disease and inefficiency and moral squalor.

HIS FIRST POSITION

HELEN I. CASTELLA

"Given a choice between two positions—one paying ten, the other eighteen dollars a week—which would any fellow in his sober senses take?" Jim's remark, although uttered aloud, was addressed to no one in particular, for he was alone. "Jim, you're weak-minded!" he soliloquized emphatically. "Go in for all the money you can get, at the start, and live economically and put by what you can. After you are on your feet it's well enough to pick and choose. I suppose the folks back home would stand on their heads, if they knew, but what they don't know won't hurt them. I've always had the name of being a level-headed fellow, and I'm not much afraid of going to the bad, even if I do get out of the ordinary beaten path."

Jim was affable and made friends easily. He had come to the big city to seek his fortune, fortified with splendid references and recommendations from the school teacher, the minister, and in fact all the men of standing in the little town in which he had been raised.

On the train to the city he had entered into conversation with the man who was now offering him the position at eighteen dollars a week. The stranger had not at first disclosed his business, except by saying he was connected with one of the big hotels. When Jim found out, as he did in the course of a week that Mr. Watkins was chief wine clerk of the hotel, it was something of a shock to him. Any one connected with wines or liquors of any kind must, in a sense, be in league with Satan, Jim had been brought up to believe.

"The folks back home are really so far behind the times that by no possibility could they be expected to catch up with the present-day generation," Jim told himself, as he remembered their antiquated notions.

Mr. Watkins was neither dissipated nor a drunkard, as far as Jim could see. He didn't urge drink upon the young man. It was true that he constantly tasted and sipped. He had to do that, of course, to get the flavors and make comparisons, and Jim, following his example, learned to sip, too, for Mr. Watkins would say, "H'm! Pretty good stuff! We'd better have a case or two of that—what do you think?"

That was after Jim went there as assistant clerk at the munificent salary of eighteen dollars a week. The older man flattered the youth by telling him that he wanted a temperance fellow, like himself. "I can get plenty of drinkers," he said. "They're eager for the chance to come. I want a young man who's level-headed, and outside of business hours never touches the stuff. Business is business, don't you know, and here in the sample room it's our business to taste and make comparisons. That's our job. Outside of business I know you wouldn't touch it. That's what I call being a temperance fellow. I've had men in here who couldn't leave the stuff alone, but you're not that kind, I can see."

Of course Jim wasn't that kind! Mr. Watkins' discrimination and his smooth way of complimenting him when he made what was termed a good choice, or turned down stuff that wasn't up to the mark, pleased him, at the time.

Yet he really felt vexed with himself that he didn't take the pride he should in his position, pride enough, that is, to talk about it at the dinner table; to tell little incidents and happenings of his daily work, as did his fellow-boarders in Mrs. Hallahan's boarding house.

For one thing, a retired minister sat at the foot of the table, and a young theological student on his right. To questions that were asked him as to the nature of his work, Jim had responded that he was a hotel clerk. Of course this was true enough, nevertheless he felt a little sneaky about his answer. It had hitherto been Jim's way to tell facts without equivocation. But he pictured the surprised looks that would certainly go around the table if he were to make the plain statement that he was a wine clerk. Indeed, he wasn't at all sure that he would have been welcome to stay.

"Some people are narrow-minded," he told himself. "When they don't know what a thing is like they imagine it's a den of iniquity. I'd better keep quiet, I guess."

On account of his musical gifts—he played the piano well, was a good memorizer and had a fine tenor voice—he was soon in favor with the boarders. Indeed, as Mrs. Hallahan expressed it, "He was the life of the house!"

"You ought to go in for evangelistic work," the theological student told him, one Sunday, after they had sung clear through the gospel hymnal, "You have a gift!"

"I don't believe that kind of work pays much, does it?" queried Jim, doubtfully.

"Pays much? Well, in dollars and cents, I suppose not, if you look at it in that way. But the reward that the work itself would bring—it seems to me that ought to compensate. I didn't know"—and he looked at Jim rather quizzically, "that hotel clerks usually received high salaries. Is yours such a splendid paying position? We had a young fellow boarding here once who only made nine dollars a week, clerking. Of course he was in a smaller hotel than the one you're in."

Jim felt somewhat panic stricken, for he realized he had spoken thoughtlessly. "Of course, I didn't mean you to think that I'm getting rich where I am," he tried to explain, "I was thinking more of the future. A fellow naturally wants to do as well for himself as he can."

"'Lay not up for yourself riches on earth,'" quoth the would-be minister.

"I'll admit that some of us are far too money-grabbing," Jim conceded. "But it's in the very air, nowadays, to want to get on."

Jim thought he was getting on beautifully. He paid Mrs. Hallahan six dollars a week for his board, and he joined a building and loan association into which every month he put ten dollars. After paying for clothing and incidentals there was still a surplus to put away in the savings bank, and now and then he sent a five dollar bill back home. Not that they needed it, but he knew his mother's pride in him, and he was sure the news would be circulated through the town that he was doing splendidly in business.

There were some days when Mr. Watkins seemed a little irritable, but that was because his stomach easily got out of order. "It's dyspepsia!" he growled. "I can't digest food properly. Some days everything I eat disagrees with me." He was thin and nervous.

Jim had the digestion of an ostrich. He boasted he could eat anything, and as for the stuff he drank having any pernicious effect upon either his morals or his health, he laughed the suggestion to scorn. He knew, just as he had known before he went there, that it was not right to drink. But the proprietor of the hotel was not asking Jim what he should do. He had his license and would run the bar irrespective of Jim's opinion as to the right or wrong of it. So long as somebody had to fill the position, wasn't it better that it was a young man like him, industrious, steady, who was there because he could save money, rather than some poor, weak fool who couldn't withstand temptation, and who would drink to excess, whenever he had a chance?

And so Jim grew quite adept at hiding what he didn't want to tell, and puffing himself up in the letters he wrote home—letters that deceived his mother and gratified his father into thinking his son a bright, capable young fellow, and that it was too bad some of the other boys in the village weren't doing as well as was Jim.

And then came the accident. It was very simple, one that might happen any day, and again might never happen at all. Only it did happen, in this case, and Jim, as he lay in the hospital, had plenty of time to remember that he had come to where he was feeling quite comfortably that the exact nature of his work need never be disclosed, unless he chose to tell it.

There was a bandage over his eyes and he couldn't see the faces of the people who came to see him; he couldn't see his mother's or father's face; or the faces of the old minister or the theological student.

There was no doubt now about everybody knowing in just what capacity he was employed, for all the newspapers featured his accident on the front page.

"Jim Haines, assistant wine clerk at the Cataract Hotel, seriously injured by the explosion of a siphon bottle while at work. Probably will lose the sight of one eye. His right arm was so badly lacerated by the flying glass that several of the arteries were severed. Physicians fear blood poisoning."

There was a great deal more about Jim—who he was, where he boarded, where he had come from, and who his father was—leaving no doubt in the minds of those who read as to his identity.

Around the boarding house table that evening they spoke of Jim as though he were already dead. "His poor father!" mourned Mrs. Hallahan, wiping her eyes. "I've known him since he and I went to school together, and his mother, too! This'll break their hearts!"

When his mother, bending over him, asked in a tone which there was no mistaking, "Jimmie, is it true that you were working there?" Jim groaned.

"Why did you go there, Jim?" his father inquired, several days later, when the boy was able to talk. "It wasn't as though you couldn't get another position, surely?"

"No, it was the salary that tempted me," Jim acknowledged. "I thought there was more money in that than in going into the grocery house that only offered me ten. Of course I didn't intend to let people know."

"We had taken such pride in you, Jim." Jim winced at the word "had." He knew how his father must feel. It was his boast that in all of his long life no drop of intoxicating liquor had ever passed his lips. Jim couldn't say that—he would never be

(Continued on Page Sixteen)

And thou, my country, write it on thy heart,
Thy sons are they who nobly take thy part;
Who dedicates his manhood at thy shrine,
Wherever born, is born a son of thine.
Foreign in name, but not in soul, they come
To find in thee their long-desired home;
Lovers of liberty and haters of disorder,
They shall be built in strength along thy border.

—Henry van Dyke

RUSSIA'S WEALTH-CONSERVING EXPERIMENT

WHAT THE UNITED STATES CAN LEARN FROM IT

The one obstacle that seems to stand in the way of securing national prohibition as a war measure is an unwillingness on the part of the government to give up the revenue derived from the traffic in alcoholic beverages. In considering the actual value of the revenue argument, we may well study the history of Russia's experiment with the liquor business. Thirteen years ago the Russian government, rather than lose the $450,000,000 annual revenue from vodka traffic, rejected the pleas of the army leaders for prohibition and as a result suffered defeat in its war with Japan. The prohibition edict at the beginning of this war undoubtedly was the salvation of the Russian army. It is, of course, now a matter of common knowledge the world over that prohibition has been not only a conserver of the health and efficiency of the Russian people during the three years of war, but it has increased their wealth so stupendously that the loss of revenue from the abandonment of the traffic is deemed a matter of little importance.

The following brief summary of the financial situation of Russia under prohibition is a most convincing refutation of the argument that the liquor revenue is necessary for the United States:

"From a review of the record in Russia, we learn that in 1912 the people saved in their banks or deposited in securities just over twenty million dollars; in 1913, not quite so much. In the first eight months of 1914 they took out fifty-five million dollars more than they paid in. Then came the war and prohibition, and in the first four months of the war, with no vodka to lure their money from them, they poured seventy million dollars into the banks. In 1915 they saved four hundred and five million dollars, and the Budget for 1917 gives us their savings to September, 1916, when they had reached, with securities, over seven hundred and fifty million dollars. The figures of savings and deposits of securities are hard to believe; look at them again:

"Last eight months of vodka, net loss of ..... $ 55,000,000
"First four months of prohibition, savings of..... 70,000,000
"First full year of prohibition, saving of 405,000,000
"First nine months of 1916, savings of 755,000,000

"In two years, says this review, Russia has recovered her lost revenue and enriched her people. The bank deposits for the last year of vodka were forty million dollars; the deposits for a year of prohibition have been eight hundred and eighty-five million dollars. There has been nothing like this in the history of the world before."

—North American of Philadelphia

Wanted: First Bass for International Quartet

SENSE OF PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY NEEDED

(Continued from Page Six)

ty and let the people pass upon results. In either case they will make their judgment known.

From time immemorial the liquor traffic has persistently and brazenly violated every law and ordinance enacted for its regulation or restriction. It has covertly or openly claimed immunity from every action that sought to control or limit its operations, and has boldly striven to be a law unto itself. It has been the prime factor in creating an attitude of lawlessness and hoodlumism among the youth of cities and smaller units, and has been the principal force in causing that disregard for the majesty of the law which is today one of the most threatening elements in social and civil life. True it is that it has now well-nigh exhausted the patience of the people and the day of its extinction seems near at hand, but it is yet far from dead and much remains to be done to secure its final and complete overthrow. Only a constant up-building of public sentiment by perfectly demonstrating the incalculable good to be gained in every community by the outlawing of strong drink will form an impregnable defense against it. We must thus form a perfect bulwark everywhere against the onslaught of its re-aligned forces.

To this end existing laws must be enforced and a perennial campaign of education in total abstinence principles, among all classes, must be kept up. It is eminently necessary to imbed in mind and character the fundamental reasons why alcohol should not be used for beverage purposes. The agitation of past years has not been without effect. Alcohol is now universally acknowledged to be injurious to body, mind and soul, as well as materially ruinous. This educational work must not lapse for a moment. This is one prime requisite for obtaining law enforcement.

Personal Aid to Law Enforcement

The good citizen will not seek to evade the law, or aid and abet others in so doing. While the law forbids importation or sale of liquors he will not, by connivance with criminals, fill his own cellar or stock his storehouse with the contraband article. Neither will he, in collusion with the lawless, follow a blind trail to a blind tiger's lair to blindly satisfy an unlawful thirst. He will strive to obey the letter and the spirit of the law by that obedience thereto which a patriotic citizen will render unto every law made for his country's good, even though it deprive him of a momentary personal gratification. Though the law may not please him, he will give allegiance to the principle that a democracy must seek the highest good for the greatest number, even at a measure of self-sacrifice.

Nor are the clergy exempt from duty and privilege in the matter of securing law-enforcement. They may render high service by emphasizing to their people the duty of obedience to properly constituted law, even though it may possibly contend with self-interest or personal appetite on the part of some of their hearers. Not all church members or attendants are total abstainers, nor are all free from complicity with the drink evil. It is well known that some there are who harbor contraband goods upon their premises while others speak sagely of "vested interests" and "revenue." These need an arrest of thought. Reason and right must rule as against desire or self-interest. This will in some degree help to solve the problem of law-enforcement.

Teach the Law

Even as it is the almost universal custom to listen once a year to the public reading of the Declaration of Independence, it would not be amiss to have occasionally certain sections of our laws pertaining to the welfare of our people read in public. Particularly might this be helpful if wise emphasis were given to the thought that each of us is a law-breaker or a law-keeper. Such action might well apply to anti-liquor or anti-cigaret laws and ordinances, and would not be out of place in schools and colleges, for here are found multitudes of youth who persistently violate laws wisely made for their own protection. The general knowledge of just what the law is, what it is for, why we should obey it, and an appeal to good citizenship to aid by all honorable means in its enforcement could not fail of good results. And every inch gained is that much toward final victory.

The citizen who himself obeys the law does not thus rid himself of all obligation. He must render whatever assistance he can to those who are directly charged with executive duties. To withhold information or effort which may aid in ferreting out or bringing to justice those who are violating law is to make oneself a party to the crime. The private citizen has many obligations to fulfill in return for the protection and security given him by his government, and one of these is to be obedient unto law and to endeavor as best he can to secure or assist in enforcing obedience on the part of others. Without respect for, and enforcement of law, there can be no stability of government.

PENNSYLVANIA SURGEONS AND SCIENTISTS DENOUNCE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Many of the leading citizens of Philadelphia agree as to the desirability of prohibition as a war measure, various surgeons of the city and professors of the University of Pennsylvania being among the number to put themselves on record against the liquor traffic.

"The less spirits we put into men during war time, whether they are in the army or navy, in the munitions works or upon the farms, the more spirit we will get out of them for the particular tasks they are called upon to perform," said Dr. Austin O'Malley, surgeon and author, as quoted in the Philadelphia North American. "I am for prohibition as a war measure primarily because it will release vast quantities of rye, corn, barley and wheat, which will be needed for food supplies. In addition, it will make men more efficient and it will undoubtedly reduce venereal diseases."

"As a general principle, total, world-wide prohibition, in my opinion, would be one of the greatest possible forward steps for humanity," said Dr. William Romaine Newbold, professor of intellectual and moral philosophy, University of Pennsylvania. "As a war measure, the experience of other nations has shown that prohibition is a necessity to prevent the wastage of grain in liquor that should be devoted to life-sustaining food products."

Another advocate of prohibition for peace as well as for war is Dr. Edward Martin, surgeon-in-chief of the University of Pennsylvania hospital, who said:

"Prohibition during war time is necessary, for the specific reason that we are in this war as business men should get into it, taking advantage of every possible method whereby we can assure a victorious conclusion. We are training for a national effort, and we cannot train men for anything worth while on rum. Another reason is that prohibition is a good thing for humanity as a general principle. The theory of selective conscription demands elimination of rum. It provides that each man shall perform the task for which he is best fitted, whether it be in the army, the navy or in a munitions factory."

"I am for prohibition as a war measure, in the first place, because it means an immense saving of food supplies," were the words of Dr. W. W. Keen, professor emeritus of surgery, Jefferson Medical College. "In the second place, because the experience of France, Russia and England under actual conditions of warfare has demonstrated that prohibition increases the efficiency of the people tremendously, not only in the army and navy, but also in civil life; and, in the third place, because prohibition will remove the temptation to vice to which men under the influence of alcohol are inclined to give way."

"With prohibition of the liquor traffic, we will be able to turn our grain into food products of far greater value to the nation," said Dr. James P. Lichtenberger, professor of sociology, University of Pennsylvania. "The consumption of so much food value in intoxicants, when there are a lot of other more important things we can do with it, is inconsistent with efficiency."

Dr. Joseph McFarland, professor of pathology and bacteriology, University of Pennsylvania, said:

"The amount of work that the individual can do will be vastly increased by the prohibition of liquor. It will also diminish crime at home among the civil population, and it will reduce largely venereal diseases."

"I believe in total prohibition of the liquor traffic while the nation is at war, primarily because experience of other nations has shown that it will promote personal efficiency, both at home and in the army," said Dr. E. T. Reichert, professor of physiology, University of Pennsylvania.

A WAVE OF PROHIBITION FACTS AND FIGURES

ready to be set in motion throughout the country by the use of the

PROHIBITION FAN

(Octagon in shape, 7 x 8⅝ in.)

Prohibition map, date of adoption of prohibition by various states. On the reverse side the appeal

PROTECT OUR AMERICAN YOUTH by PROHIBITING THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Price, 1 doz., 35 cents; 3 doz., $1; 100, $2.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

PATRIOTIC SHIELD

in red, white and blue

This shield has on one side a relief map of the United States in white with 1920 in red figures and the words "By the will of God and our united efforts." The reverse side bears the "pledge of the united mothers' movement for a saloonless nation by 1920," with space for signature. These shields are most appropriate for decorating

SUNDAY SCHOOL ROOMS
W. C. T. U. HEADQUARTERS
CAMPAIGN HEADQUARTERS

and one's own home. Price, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.50.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Become a Nurse

WE have trained thousands of women in their own homes to earn $10 to $25 a week as nurses. Send for "How I Became a Nurse" —248 pages with actual experiences. 48 illustrated lesson pages free.

Sixteenth Year

The Chautauqua School of Nursing
513 Main St., Jamestown, N. Y

HELP TO INFORM YOUR VOTERS
by mailing to each in a follow-up system
THE PROSPERITY POST CARDS

What Every Merchant Knows.
Of Interest to Wage Earners.
Of Interest to Taxpayers.
Of Interest to Bankers.
Prosperity Statistics.

This series of post cards has been prepared in English, German, Italian, Norwegian, Polish, Spanish, and Swedish.

Price, per dozen, 15 cents; per hundred, $1.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

What Prohibition Has Meant To Colorado

By Governor George A. Carlson

An artistic booklet, full of convincing campaign arguments, issued especially for distribution among

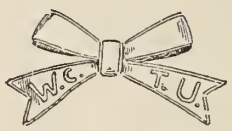
BOARD OF TRADE MEMBERS
REAL ESTATE FIRMS
ASSOCIATIONS OF COMMERCE
COMMERCIAL CLUBS
BANKERS

and business men in general.

Size, 4x9 inches. Price, 5 cents each; per fifty, $1.50; per hundred, $2.50.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

W. C. T. U. Badges



LOOP BOW PIN, white enamel on sterling silver, with letters W. C. T. U.

Price, 60 cents each; per dozen, $6.50.

Smaller size, same style.

Price, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.20.

FLAT BOW PIN, white enamel on sterling silver, without letters.

Price, 30 cents each; per dozen, $3.35.

FLAT BOW PIN, white enamel on gilt, without letters.

Price, 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

BROOCH PIN, white enamel on gilt.

Price, 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

SCARF PIN, white enamel on gilt.

Price, 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

HONORARY PIN OR BUTTON, blue enamel with white bow in center.

Price, 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.75.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

¶We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.
¶Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
118-120 Fifth Ave., New York

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

National Prohibition Vitally Important Wires Savannah's Mayor

In a telegram sent by the mayor of Savannah, Georgia, to President Wilson, urging the importance of national prohibition as a war measure, he calls attention to the benefits in his own city from the abolition of the saloons, as follows:

"Prohibition in Savannah has produced astonishing economic benefits. Following are the percentages of reduction of arrests for crime: Assault with intent to murder, 64; burglary, 47; drunk and disorderly, 72; larceny, 50; larceny after trust, 76; murder, 66 ⅔; lunacy, 54; number of convicts reduced, 50 per cent. Approximately 3,000 less calls for patrol wagon and 10,000 less articles pledged with pawnbrokers than in previous years of open saloons. Farmers and other employers of labor agree efficiency and reliability of labor increased 50 per cent. Enormous quantity of grain required for production of alcoholic drinks is urgently needed for food. It will be a crime to allow continued waste in this manner. National prohibition during war is of vital importance.

"WALLACE J. PIERPONT,
"Mayor of Savannah."

Drunkenness Eliminated in Omaha

"Prohibition virtually has eliminated intoxication in Omaha," says the Omaha News, "and the street bums have disappeared since May 1," Police Judge Madden is quoted as authority for the statement. He says:

"Since the law went into effect the police have arrested but two men on charges of intoxication. Scores of inebriates and panhandlers, who for years have been a part of lower Douglas street, have vanished."

Flower Mission Day Coming!
PREPARE EARLY

THE TEXT CARD should accompany flowers or other gifts on Flower Mission Day.

Price, 100, 12 cents.

L. T. L. Text Cards, 100, 12 cents.
Comfort Powders. Per box, 25 cents

LEAFLETS

What the Flower Mission Can Do to Help Bring National Constitutional Prohibition.
Each, 2 cents; 50, 12 cents; 100, 20 cents.
What the Flower Mission Should Mean to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Community.
Some Phases of Relief Work.
The Flower Mission Trinity.
Each, 2 cents; 50, 30 cents; 100, 50 cents.
Program for Flower Mission Meetings.
Hints for W. C. T. U. Flower Missions.
Friends in Need.
Each, 2 cents; 50, 15 cents; 100, 25 cents.
Why a Flower Mission?
A Flower Mission Exercise.
The Story of Jennie Casseday.
The Story of the Roof Garden.
Each, 2 cents; 50, 35 cents; 100, 60 cents.

SOME LEAFLETS TO DISTRIBUTE ON FLOWER MISSION DAY:

The Shoemaker and the Little White Shoes.
The Common Joy.
The Story of the Dollars.
Each, 2 cents; 50, 20 cents; 100, 35 cents.

National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill.

$2.50 PER DAY SALARY PAID ONE PERSON in each town to distribute FREE circulars, and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring. Non-alcoholic. Big demand, steadily increasing. J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7G, E. Harrison St., Chicago.

Become the woman you wish to be

REGAIN your health, poise and figure. I can help you. I know I can. Not one drop of medicine.

My way is the natural way—a scientific system, combining exercise, bath, diet, sleep and deep breathing.

In a few short weeks, thousands of my pupils have surprised their families

80,000 Women Are My Friends

I have won their friendship and respect because I have made them well, taught them how to keep well, reduced and increased their weight, given them perfect figures—all in the privacy of their rooms—and I have kept their confidence May I help you?

Physicians approve my work; their wives and daughters are my pupils. Medical magazines advertise my work.

These facts are cited modestly—with only a desire to prove that I can and will do all I promise. Remember,

You Can Be So Well! You Can Weigh What You Should!

It is easy to be free from nagging ailments. Even the most chronic afflictions, in nine cases out of ten, are vastly benefited by my help.

You thoroughly enjoy my simple directions and you feel so satisfied with yourself.

Write to me! Ask for my Booklet No. 24 — sent you without charge. Let me tell you all about my wonderful experience! Then you will understand the great work I am doing for womankind and how I can help

If you have any of the following derangements, mark an X after it and send to me:

Excess flesh in any part of body	Lack of Reserve
Thin Bust, Chest, Neck or Arms	Nervousness
Round Shoulders	Irritability
Incorrect Standing	Constipation
Incorrect Walking	Indigestion
Poor Complexion	Dizziness
Poor Circulation	Weakness
Lame Back	Rheumatism
Headache	Colds
Sleeplessness	Torpid Liver
	Mal-assimilation

Susanna Cocroft, Dept. 37, 624 Michigan Ave., Chic

Prohibition Imperils Convict-Making Business

MRS. AUGUST BURGHARD

Since the "bone dry" law became effective in Georgia very few individuals are having their personal liberty taken away by being lodged in jail on account of disorderly conduct, accidents, misdemeanors, and crimes resulting from drunkenness. At this time Bibb county, with 60,000 inhabitants, has only fifty-four prisoners. Four-fifths of the names on the criminal dockets are those of Negroes.

Usually the May term is the heaviest in the year and the grand jury, which meets in April at the beginning of the civil session, is kept at work for at least two or three weeks in succession. But this year the grand jury has found less than twenty indictments and has remained in session only four or five days altogether, each of these days adjourning before noon.

"The shortage of prisoners has gotten to be a serious proposition," stated Sheriff J. R. Hicks. "It takes about as many prisoners as we have now to make expenses on operation of the jail. It is run on the same basis as a boarding house. The more prisoners we have the more revenue, or allowance, we have. But with food prices soaring out of sight, it is nearly impossible now to make expenses on the jail, much less make money."

"To what is all this attributable?" the sheriff was asked.

"Without a doubt, prohibition," he replied unhesitatingly. "Three-fourths or four-fifths of the crimes committed are by Negroes. The same percentage may be applied to the cause of these crimes. When a Negro commits burglary, usually he has had a good shot of dope or several drinks of liquor to nerve him up.

"The sale of whisky and narcotics has been practically cut off by the state and federal governments, hence, the reduction of crime. The Negro has no place to go at night, for he doesn't gamble much and he doesn't carry a pistol unless he has whisky; so he stays at home."

Convict Labor Scarce Under Prohibition

Georgia had depended many years on convict labor to work its roads. The good roads movement meant merely putting more convicts on the thoroughfares armed with picks and shovels. It was better than feeding them in the jails at the taxpayers' expense. Now the county authorities are wondering where they are going to get men to work the roads. Some of the counties in the state have already begun to employ free labor. Chatham county, with 85,000 people, in which the city of Savannah is located, has let a contract to a private concern to build a new road. This had never been done before. But the community may have to do other things just as remarkable as this. The Negro convict is pretty scarce. Municipal recorders who in other days sent from thirty to a hundred short term convicts a week upon public works, now send from five to ten. County courts, from which most of the long term misdemeanor convicts were recruited now have little to do. In Savannah the criminal court, which tries such cases, used to sit two whole days a week. Now the business is transacted in a couple of hours each week.

Practically the same conditions obtain in every Georgia county.

EDUCATE THE PEOPLE
WIN YOUR CAMPAIGN

CAMPAIGN LEAFLETS
Untouched Sources of Revenue
No Real Revenue
The Workingman and the Saloon
Prosperity Statistics
How About the Revenue?
The Paramount Issue
The Workingman and the Alcohol Problem
Drink Manufactured Facts
The Revenue
2 pages, 6x9 inches
2c each; 50, 15c; 100, 25c.

The Last Steps of the Great Conflict
Prohibition Brings Prosperity
The Challenge of Patriotism
Christian Citizenship
Excerpts from Address of W. J. Bryan, National W. C. T. U. Convention, 1916
4 pages, 6x9 inches
2c each; 50, 25c; 100, 40c
Send for catalog

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

ULATION DEPARTMENT

ON SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year
Club for ten or more subscriptions, 25c a year
er premium allowed.

YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institute or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

UNION SIGNAL . . . $1.52 a year
Foreign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

E YOU USED THE QUIZ?

OMPSON, Manager Circulation Department.

ularity of THE UNION SIGNAL ng. All those who have tried nusiastic over the help it gives e meetings. Many state officers have s commending it and are urging through their state papers. The e a few extracts from letters ies:

e will recommend THE UNION SIGNAL Quiz in our state paper, *The Watch*rise its use in all the meet

"MRS. ANNA ALLISON,
ent Wyoming W. C. T. U."

ead with interest THE UNION uiz and shall do all I can to en- use in the local unions.

"MRS. T. ADELAIDE GOODNO, North Carolina W. C. T. U."

ine Hyde Jamison, in the South Dakota state paper, writes:

"Try the Quiz in THE UNION SIGNAL for your meeting. Write out the answers; number the question, one, its answer, two, the next question, three, its answer, four, and so on. Encourage free discussion while the slips are being read, and see if you do not have a live meeting."

Something New
12-Inch Prohibition Rulers

TEXT: TOTAL ABSTINENCE, THE ONLY SAFE RULE OF LIFE

Reverse side: RULE OUT ALCOHOL —HELP MAKE A SOBER NATION.

Good Everywhere. Place in Your Schools and Offices.

5 cents each; 1 doz. 35 cents; 100, $2.50.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Pertinent to Present Needs For Soldiers and Sailors

To Place in Comfort Bags or for Distribution

Songsters. Each, 7 cents.

Pledge Card, with stub and bearing a profile of Frances E. Willard. Singly, 2 cents; 50, 25 cents; 100, 40 cents.

Directions for Comfort Bags. Each, 2 cents; 50, 15 cents; 100, 25 cents.

Protecting the Home Folks (a warning against vice). Singly, 2 cents; 50, 25 cents; 100, 40 cents.

Rally on the Flag (for veterans). Singly, 2 cents; 50, 20 cents; 100, 30 cents.

Testament and Psalms, 10 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

CAMPAIGN YARNS

THE MAYOR CONSULTS THE BOYS

There is a law in Boston that a schoolhouse must be a certain number of feet away from a saloon. A license for a saloon nearer than the prescribed distance to a school was asked for. The question was referred to the mayor for decision. He asked that six of the brightest boys in the school be sent to him and he put the question of the license to them, and asked them what he ought to do. With kindling eye and attractive manliness the last boy replied: "Mr. Mayor, I think we ought to keep the saloon away from the school, for if I go there and study well I can become a mayor some day and the saloon would not help me to do that." The saloon license was not granted.

"I CAN'T FIND THE BRAKE!"

Harry Phillips in The National Advocate tells of being in a hospital where an old man was dying from an injury. He was evidently a man of culture, had been reared a gentleman; but in his delirium, with a look of unutterable anguish on his face, he would cry out,

"I am going down to hell, and I can't find the brake"; his right foot moved restlessly under the bedclothes, trying to find the pedal of a brake.

Then, when he was in his right mind again, he answered:

"Has it been drink? Mostly that. What an awful waste my life has been! Well-born, public-school boy, Rugby—Oxford—honors. Magnificent fortune at twenty-one—all gone—dying alone, uncared for, in a London hospital at sixty. Do you know what ruined me? Driving four-in-hand. I tried to drive drink, gambling, extravagance, and idleness. Costs a lot to keep up that team; and then they bolted one day, and the brake broke, and I couldn't hold them. You have seen at the top of some hills: 'Cyclists, beware! This hill is dangerous.' That notice should be placed over every gin-palace and every gambling club. Over strong drink altogether."

Then the delirium returned, and the look of agony in the eyes, and the restless moving of the right foot, and the cry: "I can't find the brake! Some one hold the leaders!"

"THAT'S WHAT MA'S AFRAID OF"

A warning: "You are a fine little fellow," said a man to the son of a friend as he patted the boy on the head. After chatting with him awhile he asked, in parting, "Well, I suppose you are going to grow up to be a man like your father?" "That's what ma's afraid of," innocently replied the boy.

"I'LL TAKE WHAT FATHER TAKES"

There is a story told by the Pender (Neb.) Republic of a father who took his little boy one morning into the city where he transacted his business. When noon came they went to a restaurant where the father often had lunch. The waiter on receiving the order, knowing that it was the father's custom to have a bottle of wine, asked the boy what he would take to drink. The boy replied, "I'll take what father takes." The father, realizing the seriousness of the situation, quietly beckoned the waiter and countermanded the order.

HIS FIRST POSITION

(Continued from Page Twelve)

able to make the boast his father could, and he was not yet twenty-two.

There were days of complete darkness for Jim before the doctors could take off the bandages, and he would know whether he was ever to see again, and there was an anxious time when it was feared that he was going to lose his right arm.

"And never be able to play again!" was the fear that agonized him. "Oh, what a price I am paying just because I thought it didn't matter if I stifled my conscience for awhile!" He tried to pray, but the prayers he had learned in his boyhood seemed to have slipped away from him, and all he could say was, "Please God, don't let me always be blind, and don't let me lose my arm!"

Perhaps his mother's prayers, or the prayers that others sent up for him availed, for he came out of the hospital with vision unimpaired, but with an arm so weak that the physicians advised against using it for a year. In his helpless condition Jim went back home.

"I guess you can stand it if we can," his mother said, in her gentle way, when he demurred.

"I don't reckon you feel much like a hero, son," his father said, grimly. "Maybe you feel as though you hadn't come up to what the town expected of you. You know what the Bible says about reaping what you've sown? Next time you go out into the world don't plant your seed in soil that makes wrecks of humanity; put it into good ground. Will seed grow in gunpowder? Instead of good soil you chose gunpowder, and the gunpowder blew up. It isn't any use to take chances, boy, the odds are always against you."

"I've found that out, dad!" Jim answered.

The Choice of a
COMMENCEMENT GIFT

is easily made and sure to please if selected from the following list:

BOOKS

The Life of Frances E. Willard, Anna A. Gordon. Price $1.50.

The Federal Government and the Liquor Traffic, Wm. E. Johnson. Price, $1.00.

Social Welfare and the Liquor Problem, Henry S. Warner. Price, $1.00.

A Century of Drink Reform in the United States, Aug. F. Fehlandt. Price, $1.00.

The Anti-Alcohol Movement in Europe, Ernest Gordon. Price, $1.50.

The Liquor Problem, Norman E. Richardson. Price, 50 cents.

What Frances E. Willard Said. Compiled by Anna A. Gordon. Price, 75 cents.

What Lillian M. N. Stevens Said. Compiled by Anna A. Gordon, Price, 50c.

Jean Mitchell's School, Angeline W. Ray. Price, $1.00.

A Modern Madonna, Caroline A. Stanley. Price, $1.50.

Nineteen Beautiful Years, Frances E. Willard. Price, 60 cents.

The Man Who Forgot, James Hay, Jr. Price, $1.37.

John Barleycorn, Jack London. Price, $1.42.

Little Sir Galahad, Phoebe Gray. Price, $1.42.

The Golden Lamp, Phoebe Gray. Price, $1.42.

Dear Enemy, Jean Webster. Price, $1.37.

Black Rock, Ralph Connor. Price, 60c.

Sky Pilot, Ralph Connor. Price, 60c.

Two, Edith Smith Davis. Price, 40c.

SOUVENIR SPOONS

Rest Cottage Spoon, sterling silver oxidized. (Rest Cottage in bowl.) Price, $1.50.

W. C. T. U. Teaspoon, sterling silver. (Crusade Church in bowl.) Price, $2.

REST COTTAGE SOUVENIR

A Terra Cotta Placque, with Rest Cottage in bas relief, hand carved, hand tinted. Price, $2.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

This FREE Shoe Book
crowded with photos & descriptions of Ezwear shoes for Men, Women, Children. Ezwear shoes combine comfort, style, quality & fit perfectly or money back. Amazingly low prices. Send for your copy to-day.
The D.D. Simon Shoe 589 BROADWAY BROOKLYN N.Y.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., MAY 24, 1917 | No. 21

Display by the Ft. Worth (Tex.) W. C. T. U. in Home Economics Exhibit

Prepared by Mrs. J. V. Brewer, vice-president, and Mrs. Cora B. Megrail, corresponding secretary of Texas W. C. T. U.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

FRIENDS OF PROHIBITION IN SENATE WILL VIGOROUSLY CONTINUE FIGHT FOR FOOD CONSERVATION OF GRAINS USED IN MANUFACTURE OF LIQUOR AND FOR NATIONAL PROHIBITION—GENERAL JOFFRE QUOTED AS CALLING ALCOHOL TRADE "CRIME AGAINST NATIONAL DEFENSE"

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

Saturday, May 12, Senator Cummins of Iowa introduced this amendment to the espionage bill which was before the Senate: That "during the period of the war and one year after no cereal, grain, or other edible thing" may be employed, directly or indirectly, in the production of intoxicating liquor of any kind. Senator Cummins, in presenting this amendment dwelt on the fact that 7,000,000,000 pounds of food products are used in the United States annually for making that which is a curse to the world. A heated discussion followed. Senator Kenyon of Iowa, in a fine appeal, expressed his approval of the amendment and among other things said:

Alcohol Trade Called by General Joffre a Crime Against National Defense

"The fact is England would have had 3,500,000 tons more food if there had been no drink trade. Suppose she had that food now. London would have been fed during this war by food stuffs that have gone into liquor. This is not a question of prohibition, but it is a question of good, common, horse sense. Drink has done no good to any foreign nation. France is moving along the line now of getting rid of spirituous liquors. General Joffre has called the alcohol trade in France a 'crime against national defense.'"

Several amendments to the amendment were offered by different Senators, but they were all voted down and when the vote was taken on Mr. Cummins' amendment, 38 Senators voted in favor of it and 32 against it, 26 not voting. On the Monday following, May 14, it was moved by Senator King of Utah to strike out the Cummins' amendment. Every step was contested, but, after several heated arguments, the amendment was voted ont, 47 to 37. Our friends in the Senate, however, are not giving up the fight either for food conservation of grain used in liquor or for prohibition, but will continue to urge such legislation.

Senator Cummins and Senator Kenyon of Iowa, Senator Gore of Oklahoma, Senator Sheppard of Texas, Senator Curtis of Kansas, and Senator Gronna of North Dakota, with others, are working on a carefully worded bill for presentation, either as a separate measure, or as an amendment to the first food conservation bill that is brought up.

On Saturday, May 12, the report of the conferees on the Army bill was before the House. All proceeded in a dignified parliamentary manner until the section relating to the plan of Colonel Roosevelt to take a division of men to France, was reached. Then for two hours the House divided itself into frenzied friends or howling enemies to the plan. Colonel Roosevelt was handled without fear or favor by some, and extolled with equal intensity by others. Seldom if ever has the House shown such marked feeling. The Republicans were mainly for him and about twenty-five Democrats joined their ranks. The Speaker tried in vain to gain order, the resounding whacks from his gavel being unheard and his insistent cry, "The House will be in order," falling on deaf ears. Finally speech-making time was over and voting was in order on the question of returning the report to the conferees with instructions to write into the bill a paragraph permitting the raising of four divisions of troops, 80,000 in all, the general understanding being that Colonel Roosevelt should be in command. The House was a busy, orderly body while the vote was being taken by roll-call of "Yea" and "Nay" but when the result, 215 in favor to 178 opposed, was announced, the victors sprang to their feet and with clapping, shouting, and stamping of feet for fully ten minutes evinced their satisfaction, the galleries joining in the general hubbub. The matter, however, is virtually left to the President to create by volunteer enlistment these four proposed infantry divisions, according to his discretion.

The unrestrained wrath of the Senate was poured down upon food gamblers one day this week. "Pirates" and "robbers" were terms frequently applied to those who profit by speculation in food products in this hour of the nation's need. This was the case when Senator Thomas of Colorado proposed an amendment to the espionage bill to suspend for the duration of the war all boards of trade, stock exchanges, or chambers of commerce which permit speculation in futures in food. Senator Kirby denounced the speculators as "parasites." "We have wasted time in discussion," he said, "when we should have acted. The gambler in grain is a parasite. The time is ripe for some legislation of this kind." Quite a lengthy discussion was carried on and great interest manifested, but the amendment failed to carry, 54 voting against it and 25 in favor of it, with 17 not voting, several of the last named number being ill at their homes.

Individuals Attempting to Coin Hunger of Women and Children Into Dollars Will be Summarily Dealt With

The Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Gregory, after holding an all-day conference with George W. Anderson of Boston, and Robert W. Childs of Chicago, the government special investigators into price-boosting and grain and produce market manipulating, found there was sufficient evidence to warrant indictments in several cities. The Department of Justice withheld information as to the cities in which indictments may be expected, or the number of individuals likely to be involved. It goes without saying that men who would "coin the hunger of women and children into dollars" will be summarily dealt with.

Again publicity has been given the Senate executive proceedings which were supposed to be carried on for five hours absolutely behind closed doors. The evening papers contained an account which one of the Senators remarked upon as being quite accurate, more so than the publications of open session proceedings. Just where the leak was has not yet been determined, but it is believed that the guilty party will be brought to bay.

Members of Congress to Enlist in Army and Navy

The House has been startled by the resignation of Representative Augustus P. Gardner of Massachusetts, recognized as one of the leading preparedness members of the House. He sent to the governor of Massachusetts his resignation as a member of Congress because of his commission as colonel in the officers' reserve corps. Representative Gardner is the first member of either House to leave Congress for military service in the present war. He ceased to be a member of Congress as soon as his resignation was received by the governor. He immediately stopped using the congressional franks and other prerogatives of a member. He has been detailed to the Adjutant General's department and will report to Army headquarters at Charleston, S. C. Several Senators and Representatives, however, are planning to enlist as bluejackets in the Navy when the present session of Congress ends. They will serve during the recess of Congress, or get a leave of absence from the Navy for the next session. To enable men to enlist as privates, Senator Kenyon yesterday offered an amendment to the Navy personnel bill in the Senate and it was accepted by Senator Swanson, in charge of the bill, who said he knew how anxious some members of Congress were "to do their bit."

Speaker Champ Clark this week presented to the House a memorial from the legislature of Utah, urging Congress to pass prohibition and suffrage amendments to the Federal Constitution. The legislatures also of Colorado, Michigan, and Nebraska memorialized Congress in favor of a National Constitutional Prohibition amendment.

We regret that criticism has been made of the lack of petitioning by temperance friends on behalf of measures now pending in Congress. The fact is, the women of the W. C. T. U. are following out the plans laid down for them in behalf of prohibition legislation, by bombarding with telegrams and letters those high in authority. Petitions received and presented by Senators and Representatives are recorded and published in the daily issue of the Congressional Record and are in that way seen and noted, while telegrams and letters are only known to the recipients. Each method has its part and each carries weight. Petitions to Congress are always in order.

May 18 1917

COMMUNICATE WITH YOUR SENATORS AND CONGRESSMEN—CONTINUE TO SEND TELEGRAMS TO PRESIDENT WILSON

Any day action may be taken by Congress on some of the bills now pending for national prohibition as a war measure. Communications by telegram and letter should go at once to the President and to Senators and Congressmen, urging that such bills be passed. Rest assured the members of Congress are receiving their instructions from the liquor interests as to how to vote. Prompt action by the temperance people is absolutely necessary. Not only act yourself but see that your neighbors, associates in business, and fellow townsmen do likewise.

Let eight or ten people combine in the sending of one telegraphic petition and thus save expense. The following form is suggested:

U. S. Senate (or House of Representatives)
Care of Senator .....
(or Congressman.....):
Undersigned urge conservation of food products used in making intoxicating beverages, and passage of all war prohibition measures. Also urge that no added tax be placed on liquors.
(Signed)

Also continue sending telegrams to the President as commander-in-chief of the Army, asking that he exert his powerful influence for the safeguarding of the enlisted men.

Mississippi Valley Suffrage Conference Makes Plea For "White Zones" Around Mobilization Centers

The Mississippi Valley Conference on Suffrage, in recent session in Columbus, O., adopted resolutions urging the establishment of "white zones" about military camps from which liquor shall be barred; an order forbidding soldiers visiting gambling and other resorts; the enactment of wartime prohibition as a grain conservation measure; the early passage of a federal suffrage amendment and immediate steps for the regulation guaranteeing women who replace men in industrial and other work the same salaries as were paid to the men.

Illinois Medical Association Urges Dry Military Camps

The 700 physicians in attendance at the state convention of the Illinois Medical Society, at Bloomington, Ill., enthusiastically recommended the total abolition of the sale of alcoholic liquors in the military camps.

Ohio Medical Men on Record For National Prohibition

The house of delegates of the Ohio State Medical Association, in its opening business session in Springfield, Ohio, passed a resolution declaring itself emphatically in favor of national prohibition. The approximately 150 votes cast were almost without exception in favor of the resolution. Dr. S. P. Kramer, president of the Ohio Society for the Study of Alcohol and Other Narcotics, introduced the resolution, which urged that "the health of our army and the good of our people must be conserved by the abolition of the liquor traffic."

Petition Bearing 30,000 Signatures Goes to President From Governor Capper's Office

A petition containing 30,000 signatures was recently mailed by Governor Capper of Kansas to President Wilson asking that the federal government prohibit the use of foodstuffs for the manufacture of intoxicating liquors, at least during the period of the war. Thousands of letters have come to the governor's office during the last three weeks, commending his stand. Not included in the 30,000 are the many petitions that were mailed direct to Congressmen. There are scores of letters and hundred of petitions from mothers, sisters and sweethearts of soldiers or soldiers-to-be, all endorsing the stand for prohibition. Many of the signers are in favor of prohibition for all time.

Liquor Advertisements Barred From Over Twenty-four States

Postmaster General Burleson has announced that the territory to which it will be unlawful to mail letters, postal cards or publications containing liquor advertisements under the new federal law which goes into effect July 1, embraces at least twenty-four states in their entirety and portions of others.

The absolutely barred states are Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Michigan, Mississippi, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Utah, Virginia, Washington, and West Virginia. The ban is effective in Utah August 1 next; Indiana, April 2, 1918; Michigan, April 30, 1918; New Hampshire, May 1, 1918; and Montana, December 31, 1918.

Make American Uniform Symbol of Real Manhood

Four hundred senior engineers of the University of Minnesota, at a massmeeting held on April 27, 1917, unanimously adopted the following resolution:

We stand ready to respond to the call of the country in willing service.

We undertake to maintain our part in the war free from hatred, brutality or graft, true to the American purpose and ideals.

Aware of the temptations incident to camp life and the moral and social wreckage involved, we covenant together, as college men, to live the clean life and to seek to establish the American uniform as a symbol and guarantee of real manhood.

HONOR ROLL

—of—

PROHIBITION STATES AND TERRITORY AND DATE OF GOING INTO EFFECT

Maine			1851
Kansas			1880
North Dakota			1889
Oklahoma			1907
Georgia			1908
North Carolina			1909
Mississippi			1909
Tennessee			1909
West Virginia			1914
Alabama			1915
Arizona			1915
Virginia			1916
Colorado			1916
Oregon			1916
Washington			1916
Arkansas			1916
Iowa			1916
Idaho			1916
South Carolina			1916
Nebraska	*May	1,	1917
South Dakota	*July	1,	1917
Utah	†Aug.	1,	1917
Dist. of Columbia	†Nov.	1,	1917
Alaska	†Jan.	1,	1918
Indiana	†April	2,	1918
Michigan	*April	30,	1918
Montana	*Dec.	31,	1918
New Hampshire	†May	1,	1918

*Enacted 1916. †Enacted 1917.

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1917

Iowa†† Ohio New Mexico

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1918

Utah†† Missouri Florida
Minnesota Wyoming Nevada

††Now have statutory prohibition. Will vote on constitutional amendment.

Bridewell Inmates to Do Farm Work in Dry States

Six hundred men serving time in the Bridewell, Chicago, are among the recruits to the army of field workers who will work on farms this summer. These men will be sent to dry states only, and will thus be given a chance to begin life over again without the temptation of liquor on every hand.

Booze Money For Liberty Bonds

The twenty-second annual banquet of the Chicago Legal Club, to be held on May 28, will be "bone dry," it is reported. The money which in the past has been taken from the treasury for wines and liquors will be devoted to the purchase of Liberty Loan bonds. This action was taken by the unanimous vote of the 150 members of the organization, who are prominent young lawyers of the city.

Soft Coal Operators Endorse Prohibition

Conservation of the nation's grain supply and promotion of industrial efficiency through national prohibition were urged in resolutions forwarded by officers of the Central West Virginia Coal Operators' Association to members of the West Virginia delegation in Congress.

Buffalo Business Men Favor Abolition of Liquor

Many business organizations of Buffalo, N. Y., according to the Buffalo News, have expressed themselves as favoring national prohibition.

"Wartime prohibition is an economic necessity, and we would like to see every business firm in the country on record for it," said W. G. MacDonald of Graves, Manbert, George & Co., lumber dealers.

William F. MacGlashan, total abstainer, but liberal in his views on prohibition in normal times, sent a letter personally, and as president of the Beaver Board companies, to President Wilson, supporting wartime suppression of the liquor traffic.

The Rogers Brown Iron company wired President Wilson in favor of prohibition "as a war measure, calculated to increase production, raise the standard of efficiency and release men for military and industrial war duties."

The Hedstrom, Weaver and Underhill coal companies have gone on record emphatically for the proposition. Their especial interest is explained in this statement of Irving S. Underhill:

"Coal operators say decreased efficiency of miners, because of alcoholic excesses, is directly responsible for the coal output being 20 to 25 per cent less than it could be. If we can get that 20 to 25 per cent more, it will mean 100,000,000 more tons of coal and the country needs it and it is going to need it more very soon."

One Buffalo manufacturer said: "I employ 1,000 men, but I have the work of 750. Through men 'laying off' because of indisposition due to excesses the previous night, or impairment of energy and skill from the same cause when they do work, or the shifting and discharging of men too much addicted to alcohol to hold a job, we are getting the efficiency of 750 men for a payroll of 1,000 and it is solely due to intemperance. Military efficiency, it seems to me, will not tolerate this unnecessary loss in wartime."

THE SOCIAL EVIL AND ALCOHOL

Excerpts from an article by Walter Clarke, field secretary of the American Social Hygiene Association, in Social Hygiene.

Intoxicating drink has been associated with prostitution from the earliest times. Through the pages of social history, alcohol figures as the evil genius of sex life almost from the beginnings of civilization. St. Jerome called wine and youth the two fires of lust. Ivan Bloch says: "Alcohol everywhere in the most diverse conditions prepares the way for prostitution." Dr. Prince A. Morrow declared: "Alcohol relaxes the morals, while it stimulates the sexual impulse." Modern scientists, such as Dr. William Healy, hold that alcohol plays a notorious part in prostitution. Every commission that has studied prostitution agrees with the Chicago report which refers to alcohol as the "most conspicuous and important element next to prostitution itself." The exploiters of vice are keen to take advantage of the intimate, subtle association of intoxicating drink and sexual immorality and to utilize it in commercializing the weaknesses of human nature.

Alcohol Destroys Self-Control

The most clearly defined effect of alcohol is upon the inhibitions. As Patrick says, alcohol "inhibits the inhibitions." In this particular, experimental evidence and observation agree, the data of the laboratory explaining, in a way, the conduct which may be seen in the barroom or brothel. Whoever has closely observed a drunken man or woman, has seen the emotions, the physical instincts, bubble to the surface, and the restraints of discretion, forethought, morals, and the like disappear. It is not so much that evil or brutal passions are stirred by alcohol. Often the intoxicated person is entirely harmless and very easily controlled, generous to the point of foolhardiness, gay, unrestrained, and boisterous. But as a result of the suppression of inhibitions, the intoxicated person becomes suggestible, open to the flood of his or her own emotions and to the stimulations of various factors in the immediate environment.

Liquor a Means to Secure New Recruits

The well-known methods of the pander or procurer who plans the entanglement of a particular man or woman are founded upon this weakening result of alcohol upon ordinary restraints. It is related that a pander who worked among the students of a large university was accustomed to take young men, with whom he scraped a casual acquaintance, to some wine room where a dinner would be served and drinks liberally indulged in. The pander was careful to arrange the journey back to the students' quarters so as to pass the brothel for which he was a runner. When near this resort, the pander would suggest to his half-intoxicated companions a visit to the resort. In his testimony before a vice commission, he stated that very few of the young men upon whom he tried this plan were able to withstand the suggestion. It was his endeavor to secure young men who had previously had no such experience.

There are occasionally girls who, without knowledge of the dangers that lie about them, are taken to drinking resorts, become the victims of drugs, and are forcibly carried away to disorderly houses and there debauched. These are the typical "white slave" cases. In such cases, alcohol plays a disastrous rôle. The luxurious cafés or the low dives that lend themselves to such abuses are part of the network of vicious influences that propagate and protect prostitutes and panders. The sale of liquor in conjunction with immorality is a part of the daily business of such places. But the motive in the white slave case is the profit which the procurer expects to reap, alcohol being merely an instrument, a tool with which to work. Drink and the disorderly place in which it is sold, facilitate and provide the opportunity for the carrying out of a vicious design, which is only indirectly influenced by liquor itself.

A variety of outside considerations may influence such unhappy careers, but almost from the beginning of such a career, as is summarized above, intoxicating drink is an important factor. It loosens the bands of restraint, and over and over again permits the passions to expend themselves in the most dangerous ways. Meanwhile a desire for alcohol grows up.

—San Francisco Examiner

Acts first committed under its influence are, after a while, committed for the sake of drink itself, and the victim becomes accustomed to relationships against which formerly horror would be felt. Desire for drink has long been recognized as playing an important part in the drift toward prostitution. "It will be conceded," says Sanger, "that the habit of intoxication in woman, if not an indication of the existence of actual depravity or vice, is a sure precursor of it, for drunkenness and debauchery are inseparable companions, one almost invariably following the other." Parent-Duchalet, speaking of the prostitutes, says, "They insensibly accustom themselves (to the liquor habit) until the practice becomes so strong as to preclude all chance of returning to a better state, and finishes by plunging them into the lowest state of brutality."

The effect of closing out liquor from houses of prostitution has been carefully noted in various cities. As an adjunct to the business, it is so important both as a source of income and as a stimulant to the business of prostitution itself, that when liquor is excluded from houses of prostitution, the business decreases about one-half. The Chief of Police of Cincinnati stated in a personal conference with the writer that the removal of liquor from the houses of prostitution in Cincinnati was followed by the closing of half of the houses. Those remaining are having great difficulty, due to the decrease of their business. A madam testified before the Wisconsin Vice Commission in 1914 that when liquor was closed out of her house in Superior, her custom decreased 50 per cent. Other cases confirm these statements.

The expenses for rent, hush money, runners, and the personal extravagances of the inmates, are so great that when alcohol, the ally of prostitution, is removed, the business of many madams must come to an end, and in a large number of cases, madams have been obliged to give up their holdings in a city having rigid enforcement of the law regarding the sale of liquor in houses of prostitution, and have moved to less exacting communities.

Commercialized Vice Rare in Dry Cities

In cities that have long been dry, commercialized vice is at a minimum. Topeka, Oklahoma City and Grand Forks are, as regards prostitution, among the cleanest cities in the United States. It may be true that the public opinion which will not tolerate the licensed saloon is far less patient with the openly exploited house of prostitution, regardless of the relation of liquor to vice, but the originally good public opinion is preserved and strengthened by the development of a citizenry which has not been hampered by vice and drunkenness. Some years ago, Devil's Lake, North Dakota, was reputed to be the worst town in the state. It was overrun with vice and crime. Then the prohibition law was enforced. At a recent meeting of the North Dakota Sunday school convention, twenty-five preachers were lodged in the county jail at Devil's Lake, hotel accommodations in the town being scarce, and the jail being entirely without inmates. The dives and houses of ill-fame are gone. President F. L. McVey of the University of North Dakota says that since the sale of liquor has been stopped in Grand Forks, the problem of immorality among the students has become much simpler. In Oklahoma City and Topeka conditions are the antithesis of those in many wet cities of the same size. Though it can not be surely claimed that prohibition is the sole factor, it is unquestionably important. The observable differences in the morals of wet and dry towns are impressive.

CALIFORNIA LIQUOR MEN TO OPERATE CANNERY

Two of the principal wholesale liquor houses of Los Angeles have announced that they are quitting the liquor business and will at once open an immense cannery to be operated under the name of the California Sanitary Canning company. These firms are the Old Plantation Distilling company, owned by Col. Henry Laub, and the Napa Wine company, the property of Joseph and George Shapiro, brothers, who came to California from Portland, Oregon, when the prohibition law went into effect in the latter state.

"The liquor business in California is doomed," said Col. Laub, who was chairman of the anti-prohibition campaign committee, working in conjunction with the California Prosperity league last fall. "Just when it will be wiped out is, of course, a debatable question, but its end is not very far away. I have been anxious to get into some other line of business for some time, and when the opportunity came for me to change I accepted it."

Story of Two Great Generals' Encounter with John Barleycorn

GENERAL FUNSTON IN SAN FRANCISCO AND GENERAL PERSHING IN VILLA HUNT ENFORCED "BONE DRY" PROHIBITION

By W. O. M'GEEHAN, in New York Tribune

(in part)

The overseas army which the United States will send to Europe will be a bone dry army. This is more than a prediction. The distillers know it and the brewers know it, although it has not yet been ordered. They are only hoping that Congress will not ponder over the incongruity of a civilian population proceeding upon its alcoholic way after prohibition has been prescribed for its fighting army in the field.

Of course there are stubborn persons among the liquor men who will not believe that prohibition can come suddenly. Still others insist that there can be no absolute prohibition.

"They'll get liquor anyhow," these contend. "Why, they'll make it."

Three Weeks of Dryness in San Francisco

I have seen prohibition achieved within twenty-four hours in a community of 400,000 without authorization from city, state or Federal authorities, and maintained absolutely for nearly a month. The late General Funston made San Francisco, probably as bibulous a city as there is in the country, bone dry immediately after the earthquake of 1906, and kept it in that unnatural state for three weeks.

On the evening of April 17, 1906, San Francisco prided itself upon its famous "cocktail route." Drinking was a fine art in the "city that was." At that time of the year it is hard to go to bed in San Francisco. The climate is like that of Southern Europe. The bars of San Francisco had thrown away their keys. They never closed in those days and nights. It was not a vicious city, but a reckless, happy-go-lucky, hard-drinking city.

Just before the dawn of April 18 the earthquake came. It killed 500 outright, injured about 2,000 more in less than a minute and set fire to the city in five or six places. The water main which carried most of the supply into San Francisco was wrecked by the shock, and the chief of the fire department was buried under a brick chimney that had fallen through the roof of the firehouse where he slept.

Men and women were tumbled out of their beds, and the 400,000 were in a state of panic. A drinking people naturally turn to drinking in the time of trouble for solace or temporary courage. The men who had no families naturally flocked to the bars. There was no general disorder. They drank heavily and with great gulps to still their shaking nerves.

Municipal and state officials turned to the Federal authorities for guidance in this emergency. They found the ideal emergency man in General Frederick Funston, who was stationed at the Presidio at the time. On his way to the wrecked City Hall to meet Mayor Schmitz of San Francisco, Funston saw a crowd of men staggering out of a saloon with their arms full of bottles.

Prohibition the Decision of an Instant

Prohibition was decided upon for San Francisco on that instant. After a brief consultation with the mayor, orders were given to police, soldiers and militiamen to destroy the contents of every bar in San Francisco and to confiscate and destroy all liquor found on the person or property of every citizen. These orders were carried out to the letter. The gutters ran with whisky, the sewers were flushed with beer and light wines. The undisciplined population of San Francisco got a taste of benevolent military tyranny. It protested volubly for a few days; then it acquiesced.

I do not think that General Funston's authority to put San Francisco arbitrarily upon the water wagon was ever questioned at the time or afterward, although he had no such authority in law. Perhaps one or two saloon owners did protest, but a protest delivered to a man with a Krag-Jorgensen rifle topped with a bayonet comes under the head of little futilities. The liquor thus confiscated and destroyed "illegally" was at one time valued at some sum in the millions, but those from whom it was taken never filed claims for damages.

In a brief space of time the men who were flabby and listless and who had deep rings under their eyes on the night before the earthquake began to look like real male human beings again. The superfluous flesh rolled off them, they ate with an appetite that needed none of San Francisco's famous cocktails, they walked with a swing and they looked clear-eyed at the work that was before them.

Often in looking back on those days I say most fervently that it was a pity that San Francisco's enforced trip upon the water wagon could not have been continued indefinitely. But "order was restored." The bars were opened gradually, the clear eyes were bleared again, the newly developed muscles became flabby and the quick brains became fagged. The famous cocktail route was restored.

General Pershing Struck Blow at "Personal Liberty"

General J. J. Pershing, who commanded the punitive expedition into Mexico, is one of the army's strongest advocates of prohibition. It was by his orders that part of New Mexico enjoyed a brief spell of enforced prohibition during the chase after Villa.

I happened to be in Columbus, N. M., the base of the expedition, when the emergency arose A private soldier, crazed with border whisky, tried to break into a house on the edge of the town during the night. A woman stepped to the door and shot him through the head.

Bright and early the next morning the major in command of the base rode into town. He did not take the trouble of consulting the town officials. He called together three of the most substantial citizens.

"By four o'clock today every place where liquor is sold must be closed," said the major. "Also, every drop of liquor in this place must be shipped out by that time. A provost sergeant with a detail will patrol the town after that time and see that the orders have been carried out."

One of the citizens mentioned the law of the state of New Mexico, and another mumbled something about constitutional rights and personal liberty.

"I am familiar with the law and also with the Constitution," replied the major. "As for the matter of personal liberty, I will say this: That somebody's personal liberty cost us one private soldier, and that is too high a price to pay for such a trivial thing. Anybody disobeying this will be sent to the corral."

"But he has no authority to put a citizen of New Mexico in the stockade," protested one of the citizens.

"I Have a Notion He Sure Will Do It"

"Maybe not," said the most philosophical of the trio. "But I have a notion that he sure will do it. Let's tell the boys to close up."

Columbus was dry by four o'clock, and remained in that condition until General Pershing's expedition was withdrawn.

Pershing's expedition was the dryest body of troops that ever marched. It traveled absolutely on the water wagon, and the going was hard. Some of those soldiers went into Mexico soft and moderately rum-soaked. But they came out lean, clear-eyed and hard as nails. The sanitary corps reports on that expedition will show some wonderful results. Despite the hardships of the first rush, the sick reports were startlingly meagre.

But it is idle to dwell upon the hygienic value of prohibition. It is admitted by all but those directly connected with some liquor interest. The economic benefits of prohibition will be attested by the new South, which is just beginning to come to its own because of prohibition.

I am citing the instances where two United States generals enforced prohibition for soldiers and civilians to prove that prohibition, bone dry and absolute, can be enforced.

The grizzled First Sergeant is calling the roll of a company of United States Infantry, mustered in for duty overseas. The khaki-clad men are standing at the right shoulder, ready to bring the pieces to the order as the names are called.

"Private Barleycorn," growls the Sergeant.

There is no answer. The files stand as rigid as statues and not a rifle leaves one of the broad shoulders.

"Barleycorn!" growls the Sergeant in a louder tone as he peers up from the roll, for it is a new company and the First Sergeant has not yet had the practice with the names to enable him to call his roll without the records, as a First Sergeant should.

"Where is Private Barleycorn?" thunders the First Sergeant. "Corporal, whose squad does Barleycorn belong to?" demands the Sergeant, as he glances along the line from squad leader to squad leader.

"Not mine," says the Senior Corporal, and the reply is echoed in tones of thankfulness along the khaki line.

"I can't make it out," mutters the First Sergeant. "There always was at least one Private Barleycorn in every company that ever fought from Lexington to Carrizal. It's the fightingest family in the world, the Barleycorns."

The First Sergeant wheels, faces the Captain and salutes.

"Private Barleycorn missing," reports the First Sergeant.

"He will remain on the rolls as missing," replies the Captain. "There will be no member of the Barleycorn family with this expedition."

ALCOHOL HAS NO PLACE IN LIFE AND DEATH STRUGGLE

CONGRESSMAN EDWIN YATES WEBB in Sunday School Times

If our national life is at stake, our soldiers and sailors are the prop upon which such a life rests, and every drunken or drinking member of our armed forces weakens to that extent our national prop. The statement seems to be axiomatic. If so, then it is unthinkable that our great country, while in a life and death struggle, should permit one drop of whisky to go into the hands or mouths of its fighting forces. We should, therefore, have by all means a law prohibiting, under severe penalties, selling or giving intoxicants to any soldier or sailor of the United States.

But a sober army cannot long endure if it is dependent upon a drinking or drunken population.

—Evanston News-Index

ENLIST TODAY IN THE HOME DEFENDERS' ARMY AND DEMAND NATIONAL PROHIBITION AS WAR REQUISITE

"America cannot fight this war with the drink traffic hanging to its arm.

"Anything less than the nation's greatest effort for victory will degrade the nation's place and spirit. There is no place in the war program for preventable disease, preventable weakness, preventable waste or preventable death.

"Hundreds of thousands, possibly millions, of America's premium men will be concentrated in mobilization camps. Their health, their spiritual morale, their fighting efficiency will be matters of heart-center concern to every man and woman throughout the nation.

"Many thousands of these boys will be from prohibition territory. And many of these concentration camps will be in license territory.

"Unless the federal government immediately asserts authority over territory contiguous to military camps and depots we may expect scandal, shame, loss and disaster.

"As in the past, we will see soldiers exploited by the breweries and saloons. There will be education in the vice of drinking. There will be drunkenness. There will be disease more fatal than German shells. There will be occasions of disorder, possibly riot, dishonoring the service. There will be a slackening of the popular spirit; a loss of faith in the national efficiency.

"And there will be mounting food prices, while grain untold is rotted into poison.

* * * * * *

"WHY NOT DO IT NOW? Assert at once the government's authority; enact the regulations that are obviously needed and add to them as the need of extension becomes apparent.

"Better still: ENACT PROHIBITION FOR THE WAR. Use the distilleries to make munition alcohol and as a source of power fuel. Use the breweries to pack meat, pack fruit, make vinegar, make ice and serve other useful ends. They can be adapted to such purposes at small expense.

"Take this as a fact already settled: The American people will not be content to tolerate waste and destruction during such a time of sacrifice as there is ahead of us.

"The needed legislation should not be in answer to the propaganda of any organization or group. It should be in answer to the dictates of common sense and the demand of the whole people.

"Let us stand behind the President and stand behind him armed with our FULL STRENGTH!"

To the Patriotic Men and Women of America:

Now is the time for action. Enlist today in the Home Defenders' Army.

Send letters or telegrams to the President of the United States and your members of Congress urging nation-wide prohibition, during the war at least, of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, which traffic is causing waste of more than two billion dollars yearly, and is destructive to the manhood of our nation.

DO IT NOW.

—Baltimore Sun

Baby Week Exhibit of the Albany County (N. Y.) W. C. T. U.

In point of beauty, influence and dignity the Baby Week exhibit held by the Albany county (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. in the State Education Building was splendid. The word "Success" best describes this first effort. Hundreds of people visited the stately corridor to view it, and many asked questions. Over 6,500 pages of attractive literature were distributed. The shelf of temperance books, the medicine chest of "Don'ts" (now difficult to find) and the "Slumber Songs" by the victrola all contributed to the attractiveness of the exhibit. The special hand-made posters were greatly admired. This exhibit will be placed in a substantial container to be used again on at least three occasions between now and October. Mrs. J. F. Denison, Mrs. G. L. Palmer and Mrs. W. H. Stubblebine representing the departments of Health, White Ribbon Recruits, and Medical Temperance, were in charge. Information relative to the exhibit was furnished by Mrs. C. P. Lindsay, National W. C. T. U. superintendent Fairs and Open Air Meetings.

AN APPLESTAFF LAUNCHING

For the first time in the history of the ship-building industry three boats were launched from one plant on the same afternoon only ten seconds apart, and each was christened not with the traditional champagne, but with the sparkling new non-alcoholic beverage, applestaff. The boats were large cannery tenders built for the Alaska fisheries business and the scene was laid in Seattle. That the occasion was one of peculiar significance is evident by the prominence given it in local papers. We quote from the Seattle Times:

"Brilliant sunshine, a cloudless sky, an unbroken expanse of sparkling salt water, summery warmth in the air, green shores, budding trees combined to give an incomparable Puget Sound setting for the spectacular ceremony.

"The three young women sponsors stood on platforms at the bows of their respective vessels. Each carried a great bouquet of Ophelia roses, the gift of the Tregoning Boat company. If they had rehearsed for days they could not have carried out the triple christening ceremony with greater brilliancy. The crash of the bottles on the bows sounded through the plant at ten-second intervals, bathing the bows of each vessel in glistening foam. The bottles of applestaff were entwined in the national colors and hung from the tops of the three prows on silken streamers of red, white and blue.

"Never before has Seattle witnessed a triple launching from one plant and never have three vessels foamed into the water under more auspicious circumstances. The christening ceremony marked the debut of applestaff, a Seattle product, as the christening beverage for launchings and it made good in whirlwind style, showing that it has no trouble in filling the place occupied so long by champagne. Not a hitch, not a halt or pause of any kind occurred to detract from the brilliant ceremony, which means, according to the traditions of the sea, that it is safe and sane to christen a vessel with the new Seattle beverage."

When one remembers how recent was the time when the "temperance crank" was the butt of ridicule and jest for even suggesting that ships could be christened with anything but champagne, one can begin to realize how rapid has been the onward march of the anti-alcohol propaganda, in that to use apple juice for such an extraordinary occasion is now considered "safe and sane."

NATIONAL GUARD OFFICER BLAMES LIQUOR FOR TROUBLE ON MEXICAN BORDER

Col. Cary F. Spence of the Third Regiment of the National Guard of Tennessee, is one of the army officers who is in favor of national prohibition. "All the great trouble that we experienced from our men on the border could be traced directly to the drinking of liquor. Some time after we were assembled for duty we were placed with a New York division which had prohibition. This ruling came from Major General O'Brien, of New York, who desired and secured total abstinence. Before we were put in this division we had considerable trouble with our men, who persisted in getting intoxicated. This would usually follow pay day and it would be some time before we could get our men back into normal working condition, as considerable time was lost in the guard house. I could see a wonderful difference between our division, which had prohibition, and the others which had not."

PROHIBITION ON TRIAL

Barley Escapes Prohibition's Swipe

If prohibition doesn't hurt the barley growing industry, then what industry does it hurt? This is the question propounded by the Spokane Chronicle. More barley is being produced in Washington since the prohibition law became effective than before, according to the annual report of R. D. Jarboe, state grain inspector.

"During the entire period since prohibition went into effect," reads the report, "barley sold higher than oats, for the first time in the history of the state.

"The receipts of barley from July 1 to November 1, 1916, were 3,075,719 bushels as against 2,730,525 for the same period of 1915."

This is in spite of the fact that the demand for the grain for the manufacture of intoxicating liquor has been cut off in all northwestern states.

"FIRST AID" TO THE BOOZELESS

"When 'bone dry' laws make thirst acute, use apples as a substitute."

This is "first aid to the boozeless" from the pen of Dr. J. B. Anderson, Spokane health officer, for use when the new federal regulations make the state of Washington completely arid, says the Spokane Chronicle.

"Apples, oranges or any acid fruit make a splendid substitute for whisky," declared the health chief. "Acid drops or any fruit candies will help, too.

"It's no use trying to kill the craving for liquor unless the body and nerves are helped out. The nerves which have been used to alcoholic stimulants must be stimulated by something else. A good fruit diet will do this and will tone up the body at the same time."

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, May 24, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

PROTECTION ASKED FOR OUR SOLDIERS IN FRANCE

Through Rosalind, Countess of Carlisle, World's W. C. T. U. president, Miss Gordon, National W. C. T. U. president, has cabled to the governments of Great Britain and France, appealing on behalf of the National W. C. T. U., for the protection of United States soldiers from liquor and vice.

MRS. THACHER TO VISIT NAVAL TRAINING STATIONS

Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, National superintendent of Work among Soldiers, Sailors and Marines, spent a number of days in Evanston last week, in conference with the General Officers preparatory to visiting the various naval stations of the East and South as an official representative of the National W. C. T. U. While in Evanston she was the guest of Captain and Mrs. Richmond P. Hobson. She expects to visit first the Washington (D. C.) Navy Yards and Barracks. It is her purpose to rally the W. C. T. U. and other women's organizations for the establishment, in the vicinity of naval stations and mobilization camps, of W. C. T. U. centers which will provide uplifting social attractions.

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, 561 Thirty-third St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

EXPERT ADVICE FROM LIQUOR MAN

If the unsolicited advice of Tom Gilmore, head of the Model License League and owner and publisher of Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular, were to be taken by the military leaders of this nation, every soldier and sailor and marine would go into battle equipped with a supply of liquor to fortify him for the unpleasant task he has before him. He would carry this concentrated courage, in bottle form, to steady his nerve and relieve his terror and inspire his heart to fight, and endure, and die for his country, if need be. Evidently Mr. Gilmore does not rate very highly the bravery and the poise of the American soldier when in the following words he makes this suggestion:

"I believe that a good drink to each soldier before a charge will insure the steadiness of nerve that wins battles. The man who rushes a rapid fire gun should be given the relief from terror that alcohol imparts. Our information shows that wine, beer, whisky and brandy are all tremendous factors on both sides of both fronts in the great European war of today."

It seems almost unnecessary to attempt to refute Mr. Gilmore's assertions. The mere mention of the names of such great military geniuses as General Kitchener and General Roberts of England, and Major General Frederick D. Grant, General Nelson Miles, General Howard and a dozen others of our own country calls to mind their positive and emphatic hostility to the use of liquor by men engaged in war. Almost without exception the successful war leaders of the present generation are opposed to liquor drinking, especially in war time. Lord Kitchener prohibited the carrying of alcoholic beverages on the famous Soudan expedition, and at the beginning of the European war issued a proclamation urging his men to beware of intoxicating drinks and women.

An article in the present issue of THE UNION SIGNAL indicates that General Funston and General Pershing regarded the liquor evil as a menace to their men in times of emergency. It is a cause for congratulation that the American forces to be sent overseas are to be under the command of General Pershing, whose conduct in this regard during the Mexican uprisings gives assurance that the men under him will not be provided with Tom Gilmore's specific for courage.

A COMMON SENSE PRESCRIPTION

At the present time some of our great cities are wrestling with the problem of how to rid themselves of a certain diseased member of the body civic, popularly termed the "red light" district. Legislation, municipal, state and national, stands ready as the surgeon to perform an operation upon the diseased section; sociology, domestic and imported, has been called into counsel as to the best methods to pursue to accomplish the desired end; benevolence, scientific and otherwise, has volunteered its services to nurse the sick cities back to health. However, none of these measures seem as yet to have been successful.

"When we sometimes wish we could be healthier," said a wise woman, "we merely mean that we wish we had more common sense." The relation between common sense and health is an intimate one in both the human and the civic body. Since the methods mentioned above seem to have failed to restore health to the municipality, why do not some of the wise advisers resort to the common-sense remedy and try the efficacy of putting these cities upon a restricted diet? In other words, why do they not close and abolish those places where men can procure the poison which tends to encourage self-indulgence and abnormally develop the brute instincts, thus creating a demand which the red light district exists to supply. So long as the saloon is permitted to do business, so long will the social evil, its twin, continue to flourish.

WHY OPPOSE INCREASED LIQUOR TAX?

The apparent willingness of the liquor interests to have the products of the breweries and distilleries subjected to a further tax during the war may be interpreted by some people as an evidence of patriotism. Would that we of prohibition belief could so regard it. With our knowledge of the ways of the liquor men in the past we can see in this readiness to accept an added tax only a submission to the lesser of two evils. They fear that any suggestion of united protest by them against the proposed tax will precipitate that of which they are in constant dread—the wiping out of the entire liquor traffic as a war prohibition measure. They see, too, in the placing of this tax a unique opportunity to pose as public, patriotic benefactors, whose financial aid at this critical time is indispensable to the government. They realize, as ought all right-minded citizens, that if they are called upon and permitted to furnish a large amount of the money needed to finance the present war they will thereby, upon its termination, secure a hold on the public and the government that will serve them in good stead as an argument for the continuation of the traffic.

It seems inconceivable that with the memory of the adoption of the Civil War revenue measure still fresh in the minds of American citizens such action should for a moment be contemplated. Have we forgotten that when the measure to raise revenue by licensing the liquor traffic was presented to and urged upon President Lincoln, so keenly did he feel the shortsightedness and unwisdom of the act, that he cried, "I would rather sever from my body my right arm than sign my name to this bill," and that when he finally yielded to the pleadings of his associates, he exacted from them a promise that as soon as the immediate war necessity for the measure was past, it should be promptly repealed? Were Abraham Lincoln alive today he would with all the strength of his great conscience and power of brain oppose the increased tax. In your telegrams to Congress for a National Prohibition measure, do not fail to include a protest against the war tax on alcoholic beverages.

LO, THE POOR BARTENDERS!

"What's to become of the poor bartenders, thrown out of a job by the cruel undoing of John Barleycorn?" This and similar questions were stock arguments (?) against prohibition just a little time ago. Today the question has apparently solved itself. The bartenders deprived of their former unhappy business have been absorbed by the business world and all have found ways of earning a living more honorably than by poisoning their fellowmen.

In 1913 there were 835 members of the bartenders' union in the city of Seattle. In 1916 there were over 600 members. After the dry law became effective the union continued for awhile with a reduced membership, but now the members are scattered and an investigation finds them catalogued as farmers, sailors, soldiers, business men, shipbuilders, market dealers and miners. Some continue as bartenders, but it's a different bar they "tend" and a different service they render. Sweet milk, buttermilk and apple juice, pop-corn, peanuts and apples; vegetables and fruits; groceries and delicatessen supplies; wet goods that cheer but do not inebriate and dry goods that feed instead of clothe. The barkeeper is absorbed in legitimate business. No one is ruined by prohibition and the world goes on.

SUGGESTIONS FOR WARTIME WORK

From sunrise to sunset, keep the stars and stripes displayed in front of your home or place of business.

Wear on your waist or coat, with your bow of white ribbon, the national colors —both are symbols of patriotism.

Enlist, under the plan of the Soldiers and Sailors department, in some service for the men and boys who have responded to the call of the colors. Engage in the making of comfort bags, the establishment of rest rooms at training stations or mobilization camps; the knitting of mufflers, helmets, wristlets or socks. Collect and send to the camps good reading matter, puzzles, games, scrap books of humorous anecdotes and jokes.

Co-operate with the Red Cross in your community for the making of hospital supplies. Join a First Aid Society and learn how to do simple, practical nursing.

Arrange through your Press department for space in your local papers, in which to keep the public informed of your various wartime activities, and thereby awaken the interest of those who may not be members of the W. C. T. U.

Arrange to take care of any families of enlisted men who may need assistance during their absence.

Through the plans of your department of work among Foreign Speaking People, endeavor to cultivate a friendly feeling with all aliens in your community, especially if they are of the nationalities with which we are at war. Use your efforts to suppress all feelings of animosity against them because of their nationality. Tactfully strive to familiarize them with American ideals and institutions and instil in them a love for their adopted country. Distribute among them temperance literature in their own tongue. Establish community music societies. Gather together groups of young people from foreign sections of your city into a band, orchestra or chorus, and provide them with a trained leader; when they have had sufficient practice, urge them to participate in patriotic programs at W. C. T. U. and Y. P. B. affairs, thus cultivating in them the patriotic spirit.

Through the plans of your Temperance and Labor or Flower Mission departments interest the children of the Loyal Temperance Legions and older people in the cultivation of vacant lots, and thus increase the food supply for America and the Allies.

Raise funds through entertainments, food sales, and by voluntary offerings for the renting of electric fans for hospital use, and for other equipment that may be needed for the sick and wounded soldiers later on.

If you are a housewife, do everything possible to conserve your food supply. Study food values; do your own marketing, make economy fashionable in your town. In fruit time make an extra quantity of jellies, marmalade, canned fruit and grape juice for the soldier boys.

Apply to your state agricultural college and to the Federal department of Agriculture for information and instruction in regard to the production, conservation and preparation of foods.

Offer the services of yourself and your maid to the farmers' wives for their summer work. These women will be unusually burdened because of the added responsibilities put upon all farmers and the increased help that must be fed and housed by them.

Offer your automobiles and chauffeurs for the transportation of farm and garden products from producer to consumer, and thus eliminate the expense and waste of the middleman.

Keep a record of the boys who have enlisted from your community and follow them with your interest, your prayers and your letters. Do not forget to have sent to them the home paper.

Observe the noontide hour of prayer daily in your home, in the local union or the church service, remembering especially the young men who have gone from your home town, and not forgetting the boys who are fighting in the ranks of the enemy.

With all these new emergency enterprises claiming your attention do not forget or neglect to keep up your interest in and support of the worth-while social service which is dependent upon you. Remember that upon the "stay-at-homes" rests the responsibility for keeping safe and clean and righteous the nation for which the brave boys who have enlisted are going forth to battle.

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do You Know the Answers to These Questions? They May Be Found in THE UNION SIGNAL of May 17

Ten questions, the answers to which will be found in the preceding number of THE UNION SIGNAL, will appear each week. The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

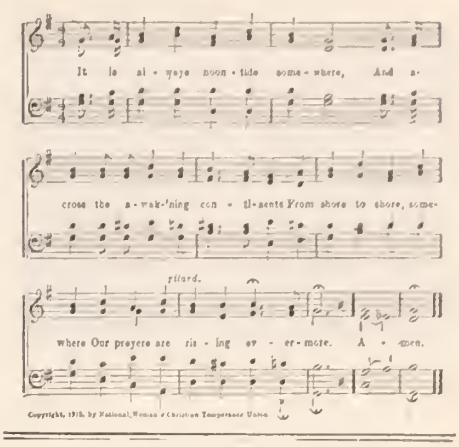
1. What recent indications point to a growing interest in prohibition at Harvard and Yale?
2. Which European country has just placed further restrictions on the sale of liquors?
3. Name a prominent fort and military training camp from which liquors have been barred by order of the officer in charge.
4. The legislators of which state, at a special session, have just sent a memorial to Congress for National Constitutional Prohibition as a war measure?
5. Tell incidents of unpleasantness on the Mexican border which prove that enlisted men and boys are proud to belong to a camp protected from liquor and the social evil.
6. How large a quantity of grain, that could be used for food, is being wasted in the manufacture of alcoholic liquors?
7. To what use could the army of men released from the breweries and distilleries be put?
8. How can the liquor interests demonstrate their patriotism at this time?
9. What business in Georgia is being imperiled by prohibition?
10. How does the experience of Russia furnish a complete and convincing answer to the liquorite's "revenue needed" argument?

MADISON DRUG STORES TO BE DRY

In conformity with the vote at the April election, closing the saloons of Madison, Wis., July 1, the druggists of the city voted unanimously to discontinue the sale of intoxicants for medicinal or other purposes when the prohibition law goes into effect. Only raw alcohol will be retained, and this for manufacturing purposes only; it will not be sold. Evidently the druggists of Madison resent the insinuation contained in the little rhyme:

"Cheer up little barrom,
Don't you cry,
You'll be a drug store
By and by."

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



AT THE NOONTIDE HOUR

At the sacred noontide hour let the white ribboners of our land unite in prayer daily for our country and all other countries, that all may come to see the true Christian and humanitarian point of view in this world crisis; for the protection of "our boys" from the physical and moral deterioration from drink and vice that follow in the wake of war; for our President and his advisers that divine wisdom may rule every decision, that lasting peace may speedily come and the will of the Father of all peoples be done throughout the earth.

A PRAYER FOR USE OF STUDENTS

DR. EDWARD I. BOSWORTH, Dean of Oberlin College

Almighty God, Father of all mankind, have mercy upon us. Forgive us that hitherto we have not looked with humility, self-sacrifice and devotion upon the lot of those less favored than ourselves in our own and other lands. We now feel the stern, loving pressure of Thy will upon us. Therefore, we pray Thee, purify our souls and fit them for the times and tasks that face us.

We offer ourselves and all that we have to Thee, to be used in life and death to bring a larger life to all men of every race. May those of us who are called to take up arms in the battle for a better world be everywhere true followers of Jesus Christ. In camp may our hearts be kept pure and the Gospel word be often on our lips. In the fierceness of fighting may we be quiet and unafraid. May those of us who will die in battle find the Lord of life with us in the death hour. May those of us who will bring our brothers to death do the deed without hate, eager to meet them again, some time and somewhere to do the will of God together.

Grant to those who minister in hospitals power to bring not only healing to the bodies but peace to the souls of the sick and wounded far from home.

Give patience to all who in suspense wait and pray at home and fortify their souls for whatever message may come.

Give peace to the nations in Thine own time, O God.

In the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, the Savior of the world. Amen.—North American Student.

Many of the saloonkeepers of Nebraska whose places were closed by the going into effect of the state-wide prohibition law May 1, are going back to the farms, it is reported.

Thirty million persons in the United States have joined in the campaign for food gardens in back yards, according to a report of the national emergency food garden committee, which is back of the movement for 1,000,000 food gardens.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

NATIONAL SUPERINTENDENT OF WORK AMONG SOLDIERS AND SAILORS TO VISIT NAVAL TRAINING STATIONS AND FORTS

During the past week Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, National superintendent of Work among Soldiers, Sailors and Marines, has been at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, in conference with the General Officers concerning plans for work among the enlisting boys and men. In company with Miss Anna A. Gordon, National W. C. T. U. president, she visited the Great Lakes Naval Training Station and Fort Sheridan. On her return to Washington, she expects to start on a tour of the mobilization camps and training stations of the East and South. Shortly before leaving Washington she had a conference with Secretary of War Baker and Mr. Raymond Fosdick in which they expressed a desire and purpose to furnish adequate protection for the nation's defense.

"We want to secure the co-operation of the women in all the churches, especially in the vicinity of the camps," said Mrs. Thacher in an interview with a representative of THE UNION SIGNAL. "Through the local unions, rest rooms may be established in the nearest town or village, and the homes of white ribboners may be opened to entertain some of the homesick recruits from distant states. For thirty years the women of the W. C. T. U. have been doing this work under my department. It is nothing new to them; they are prepared to go right ahead with it and carry it to success. Through such agencies in the past many wild and reckless youths have been reclaimed and brought back to ways of right living." Mrs. Thacher told of a number of soldier boys who had been encouraged to go through college and later entered the ministry, where they are now ably serving their day and generation.

If anyone imagines that the boys to be found in these mobilization camps will not welcome the attentions of motherly white ribboners, they should listen to some of Mrs. Thacher's experiences in this kind of work. As a matter of fact the boys who compose the companies now in training come from homes where they have been dependent upon the association of mothers and sisters and other women relatives, and the abnormal life in a world made up entirely of men, into which they are suddenly thrust, often leaves them a bit heartsick and lonely, especially when, as is often the case, they are indisposed or ill. With eagerness they greet a mother of other boys who understands how to tactfully approach them and interest herself in them. They are grateful for the invitation to a home, which, after a few weeks of camp life, seems to them like a bit of heaven. It is quite possible that the service the women of the W. C. T. U. will render to the boys encamped in their vicinity will prove as great a satisfaction to the mothers who have just said good-by to their sons leaving for "somewhere in the United States" or "somewhere in France" as it will to the recipients of the benefactions themselves.

The following practical and comprehensive suggestions of Mrs. Thacher should have the prayerful consideration of all white ribboners:

How to Keep the Soldier from the Saloon

By religious and social work: Open your homes, your church parlors and your halls for the boys wherever they are mobilized.

Provide socials and entertainments; use the talent of the soldier and sailor as often as possible; give them a treat of home-made cake, ice cream, coffee, lemonade, etc. Many homes should be opened to smaller units, which will mean keeping the boys from evil surroundings.

If in a wet state, close the saloons. If in a dry state, watch for the men who are defying the laws and are selling illegally and prosecute them. Close all houses of prostitution and ill-fame.

While soldiers are entraining, if in a cold climate, serve sandwiches and coffee; if in a hot climate, cake and lemonade. Cookies and doughnuts will often open the hearts of these laddies. Give them our white ribbon Soldiers and Sailors department Songster ($4.00 per one hundred for this purpose). Slip our pledge card into the Songster.

Organize groups of women to make surgical dressings, bandages, pajamas, etc. We shall make the Red Cross our medium for distribution, but remember we use our own machinery, keep our own identity and records, as is our custom, reporting through our local, county and state superintendents. Where there is no state superintendent your state president is the acting superintendent for this department.

Interest the Y. P. B., the L. T. L. and the school children and secure their co-operation.

W. C. T. U. INSTITUTES

MRS. LETTIE HILL MAY, National Superintendent

Our women everywhere are recognizing the value of institutes in propagating sentiment for more intelligent campaign work. The letters from state superintendents are most encouraging, and lead us to believe that more institutes will be held this year than in any previous year. This seed sowing will bring results. A rather novel institute feature, reported by some of our co-workers as having proved quite interesting, is a clinic where the different diseases to which local unions are subject are discussed and prescribed for. Diseases quoted as common are paralysis, intermittent fever, heart trouble and starvation. Have you held an institute in your local union? Can you name any other W. C. T. U. service that gives such immediate and generous returns? If your union is in need of new members, new enthusiasm and new zeal, hold an all day institute. If your superintendents of departments are not measuring up as they ought, hold an institute and give time on the program for the discussion of their departments. Try it.

State superintendents should send the department Plan of Work and the report blanks to the county superintendents for distribution among the local unions, and should urge upon them to return same in time for reports to be compiled before conventions.

Do not fail to emphasize the very great importance and value of the use of our literature. The literature table at the institutes has become a very strong and helpful feature. State superintendents are urged to continue to stress its value, and to increase interest in the study of the leaflets for the department. A local union that is inactive in this time of stress is a dead weight to the organization. Awake, thou that sleepest, and hold an institute. Remember,

"True worth is in being, not seeming,
In doing each day that goes by
Some little good, not in dreaming
Of great things to do by and by."

Let me help you in any way that I can.

5640 Maple Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

MEDAL CONTESTS

MRS. A. E. CARMAN, National Superintendent

If any have an idea that it is not necessary to do medal contest work because they live where a prohibitory law is on the statute books, let them at once disabuse their minds of the thought. The value to the young people from a cultural viewpoint alone is worth the effort, but there are other reasons. Nearly all moral questions are touched upon in the selections in our books of recitations—social purity, anti-narcotics, suffrage, penology, anti-gambling, enforcement of law, missionary work, etc. Teachers write me that the best readers they have in school are those who have been in contests. Pastors of churches say that such people are the most efficient helpers in the Sunday school and in the young people's societies. We have created through this department some of the best workers we have in the organization. As a developer of good citizenship there is nothing that will bring better results than contests. Three of the four states that are doing the finest work today are prohibition states. Take Kansas as an example. The state W. C T. U. president writes:

"I think if there is a state in the Union interested in medal contest work it is Kansas. We have a woman in the field who goes from town to town drilling the children. We have offered to make up deficits to pay for diamond and grand gold medals, as an inducement to get the young people to hold that kind of a contest. I have seldom in my life-

(Continued on Page Eleven)

WHITE RIBBONERS RESPOND TO PATRIOTISM'S CALL

INDIANA'S WHITE RIBBONERS MOBILIZING

CULLA J. VAYHINGER, President Indiana W. C. T. U.

Events are crowding thick and fast upon the women of Indiana. In less than four months we have been granted a constitutional convention, the right to vote for delegates to the same, and statewide prohibition. Just as we were in the midst of preparing ourselves for our new duties, war was declared and we were called upon to provide various supplies for the soldiers who are to go to the trenches of France as well as serve in the home field. Our unions are organizing the relief work and are pushing our department of Work Among Soldiers and Sailors. Some of the women are having a part of their lawns plowed for cultivation. Committees have been appointed in various towns, the use of vacant lots has been solicited, and these are being tended by men and women who have no place for gardens. We are attempting first to supply our own soldier boys with comfort bags, and after this is done, to reach out and help others. Hundreds of telegrams went to President Wilson urging national prohibition as a war measure. Others have asked that every camp where soldiers are quartered shall be protected from the invasion of the prostitute.

SOCIAL AND RELIGIOUS WORK FOR SOLDIERS EMPHASIZED BY WYOMING W. C. T. U.

ANNA ALLISON, President Wyoming W. C. T. U.

We are busy with many plans to serve our country, many of which are already being carried out.

We have a splendid superintendent of the Soldiers and Sailors' department in the person of Mrs. R. A. Morton, the state president of the woman's clubs of Wyoming. A great deal is being done all over the state to push this special line of work.

We are paying especial attention to social and religious work for soldiers and expect to look after them as they go from place to place, doing all we can to furnish counter attractions to the saloons.

We are also co-operating with the Red Cross society in doing for the defenders of our country. From time to time we shall have other activities to chronicle in THE UNION SIGNAL.

COMFORT BAGS FOR BATTLESHIP "MISSOURI"

The white ribboners of Missouri have recently sent 800 comfort bags to the sailors upon board the battleship "Missouri." This is the second time the Missouri white ribboners have sent such equipment. In a cordial letter, Captain W. W. Jacobs heartily thanks the donors for this gift and expresses the appreciation of the men for the same.

Definite lines of relief work are being taken up by the local unions and an effort will be made to supply every Missouri boy in the training camps in the state with a comfort bag or kindred necessities. Meetings are being held with other organizations to interest them in this line of relief work, which will be carried out under the auspices of the department of Work among Soldiers, Sailors and Marines.

LEGISLATIVE WORK IN NEW YORK STATE

ELLA A. BOOLE, President New York W. C. T. U.

Legislation has occupied much of our time during the winter. To states engaged in a state-wide campaign it may seem that we have gained very little.

The temperance forces of the state united in presenting to the legislature a prohibition amendment to the constitution and a bill known as the Prohibition Remonstrance bill, which had been framed by the Anti-Saloon League. All societies supported these two bills, but the members of the assembly, some of whom were elected on the issue of giving cities the right to vote on the question, introduced another bill, simple in form, but which proposed to give to all cities in the state the same privilege now granted to towns, of deciding whether saloons, hotels, groceries, or drug stores can sell alcoholic liquors.

Two very large hearings were held, one on the bill proposed by the legislators themselves, and the other on the program of the allied forces. It soon became very clear that the second hearing was but a continuance of the first and that the only bill that had a chance of passing was the one known as the Hill-Wheeler bill. We did not antagonize it. We realized that if we were to secure any advance ground the temperance forces must not divide. Governor Whitman and Speaker Sweet ably seconded the efforts of Senator Hill and Assemblyman Wheeler. The liquor interests maintained a powerful lobby at Albany all winter and attempted to defeat the bill through successive amendments. For weeks we have confidently expected the measure would pass, but new amendments have been proposed which had to be combatted. The sponsors for the bill stood their ground notwithstanding the fact that they were opposed by the Republican party leader in the senate. It was not until the closing day of the legislature that the bill finally passed both houses.

The revenue measure was presented by the Republican party leader in the senate. As first proposed, in addition to a provision to increase the license fee, it contained many features which would have weakened the present no-license laws. It reduced the number of saloons in each unit to one for every five hundred people, but we have reason to believe that all its provisions, as originally introduced, were perfectly satisfactory to the liquor interests. One by one the provisions to weaken the no-license laws were broken down, but the W. C. T. U. could not endorse a bill for revenue because it does not believe that the state should be supported by liquor revenue. That bill, shorn of many provisos, passed and will probably be signed by the governor.

The legislature passed a bill to raise the age at which cigarets and tobacco can be sold to minors, from sixteen to eighteen years. This measure, too, is in the hands of the governor, and we are hoping it may be signed.

April and May are institute months in New York. Mrs. Addie Parsels is just concluding a four weeks' itinerary in the western part of the state. Everywhere she has aroused enthusiasm and gained new members. Mrs. Frances W. Graham, Mrs. Maude B. Perkins, Mrs. Lulu E. Walker, Miss Helen G. H. Estelle and Miss Mildred Moody are the leaders and are doing splendid service.

The money for the mile of dimes has come in a little more slowly than last year, but we are glad to announce that we have just about completed our full mile, which means $8,000 for the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Of this money, ten per cent has been used for administration expenses, and $2,400 returned for local work, $2,400 for the work in the county, and a like amount has been turned into the state treasury. We realize that little of this money would have gone into W. C. T. U. work had we not had a financial plan. Of course, some of the amount was contributed by our own members, but the great advantage is that a good deal of the money was given by outsiders, to whom the work of the W. C. T. U. had been presented.

Four counties in greater New York have all had their annual meetings and report gains in membership. Already, seven local unions, Flatbush, Canaseraga, Batavia, Cobleskill, Plattsburg, Somerset, (Utica), and Endicott have reported that they have gained more than fifty new members, thus entitling them to prize lectures for next year. Three of these unions have gained more than one hundred new members.

It is of interest to note that the first and only woman among the fifteen persons receiving diplomas from the Auburn Theological Seminary, a Presbyterian institution which has been in existence nearly a hundred years, was our own state superintendent of Evangelistic work, Mrs. Ida Thorne Parker of Union Springs, pastor of the Friends' church there. We are proud that she has opened the doors of the seminary to her sisters.

We are much saddened by the death of Mrs. Edwin A. White, president of Genesee county. She had led the white ribboners for six years and though a busy home woman, was always ready to guide and direct the work.

MEDAL CONTESTS

(Continued from Page Ten)

time made a speech without emphasizing the benefit of contest work."

Of course the states that are out for state-wide prohibition are holding contests. The president of Ohio says, "We are going to do a whole lot of contest work this year, for I verily believe we can reach more doubtful workers through that department than in any other way." In reply to the question, "Is it necessary to have a new recitation book?" she adds, "I have looked over Numbers 19 and 20 and find them very good. While we could use a new book to advantage, we can get along very well with these." And Ohio has held more contests the past few years than any other state. North Dakota, a prohibition state, employs a contest worker, who organizes, as well as coaches, classes.

Results show that the work pays, not only educationally, but financially. Iowa has two or three contest trainers, all doing excellently. Other states are working along the same line. There never will be a time when contests cannot be made popular and helpful. We, as an organization, do not take advantage of this opportunity as we should. The schools are very much interested and we should enter every open door. The children and young people who take part in contests may be used to great advantage in campaign work.

We have just received several thousand copies of the catalogues. These will be furnished for postage. They contain a general plan of work. The leaflet, "The Medal Contest Catechism" and "How to Advertise," also the rules, should be sent to each local union, which should be taught how to do the work and make it a financial success.

5414 Broadway, Chicago, Ill.

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE MOUNTAIN

ADA LOUISE WILCOX

By means of a kerosene lamp emitting a pale, crossed light, the tall young man surveyed as much of himself as was reflected in a ten by twelve inch glass.

It showed a black, rumpled head, a lean, brown face, black eyes, well set, a straight mouth with twisty corners, and a chin as far as the beginning of a cleft. The imitation walnut frame intercepted the remainder of that feature, which was square, and cut off from view a wilted though clean collar and a somewhat crumpled tie.

As the young man, whose lank form was clad in a palm beach suit with an after-the-ball-is-over hang to it, gazed at the piece of himself, the twists in the corners of his mouth uncoiled, loosening his straight lips into a crinkly smile.

"You!" he apostrophized the beaming section of his physiognomy. "You! Lynn Murray, mayor of Beantown, county-seat of Cake-on-the-Pike, at the foot of Bean Mountain!"

He shook with silent laughter, and suddenly turned a hand-spring. The room being in feet what the glass was in inches, his legs caught on the only chair and landed his laundry in a bucket of water. He fished it out ruefully.

"Another dollar to Jane," he groaned, "and no clean fixings for the mayor's debut tomorrow. I'll buy me a sport shirt and a green four-in-hand. A four-in-hand is worth two in the water bucket."

He leaned out the window and looked down on the court house square, silent now in the moonlight.

There, standing on the upper balcony of the old building, two hours before, he had thanked Beantown, assembled en masse, for the honor conferred upon him in making him mayor of their corporation; and he had solemnly assured them that he would faithfully execute the office of mayor, and would, to the best of his ability, preserve, protect and defend their charter.

Now that he recalled his words, they had a long ago familiar ring.

"Gee!" he chuckled, "I like to have plagiarized the president's oath of office. I meant it, though."

His eyes wandered to the mountain, a blue black, misty wall, shutting in the town on the east. The twists in the corners of his mouth wound themselves so tight that they drew his lips into a hard, thin line.

No one had found out—yet. He wondered, though, what mad impulse had led him to settle so near the old spot. It was strange that in the three years since he came to Beantown, he had never run across any one from the other side of the mountain. It was in an adjoining county, so its men attended another court; yet he was always looking for some one to appear in Beantown. He wondered if they no longer used the old signal. But if they should—after all these years—and under the half name—

"I'll get met up with yet," he muttered, as he blew out the light, "but I bet I hit 'em a few licks first."

His last thought, however, was not pugilistic, nor was it of his new office, nor yet of the other side of the mountain; but of a certain girl who had sat in a car on the outskirts of the crowd that night—a girl with bronzy hair, bronzy brown eyes and a fair skin with scattered brown freckles. She had looked up at him with an expression on her face he would have given all his law practice to be able to read.

The next morning the old marshal, who had held his job for ten years, because nobody else wanted the unpopularity of making arrests in Beantown, walked into the office of the young mayor. The eyes of each regarded the other keenly. The marshal let fall a few generalities, so glittering that they fairly scintillated.

Presently, he walked to the window, and in the midst of a large expectoration, observed that the prohibition law in Beantown was getting plum washed away with so much free whisky flowing loose in the streets.

"You don't mean loose," laughed Lynn, "nor in the streets—most of it's flowing down men's throats."

"They ain't all men," said the marshal, "some of 'em's boys."

"Where do they get it?" asked Lynn.

"Search me," answered the officer, with a shrug. "I reckon some of it flows down the mountain, an' men catches it in bottles; an' some works miracles on sorghum jugs an' turns out whisky. I suspicion a man who's been handlin' it by shipments, but he's so cute I ain't sure of him."

"The state law don't take effect till January, an' that's nine months off—time enough for a heap of deviltry in Beantown. I reckon, though, if we was so minded, we might wipe up some of the whisky." He looked tentatively at the mayor.

"Get onto your job, then," snapped Lynn.

"You aimin' to be on yours, if I do?" responded the other.

"You heard me say I'd stand for law and order, didn't you?" demanded Lynn.

"Yep! But you didn't mention whisky. A heap of mayors in the last ten years have stood for law an' order on election; but afterwards they set; just naturally tipped back their chairs an' set."

"Try me," answered Lynn, curtly.

The marshal walked out with drop-hip slouch deceiving as to his agility.

During the next fourteen days he brought nine whisky cases before the mayor. Lynn applied the law impartially to each. At the ninth case Beantown sat up and took notice. Through an older brother in the legal profession, it commended Lynn for his zeal, but hinted that it was not according to knowledge. Law, it suggested mildly, was to protect a man in his rights.

"Which man? And what rights?" inquired Lynn, with a steel glint in his eyes. "This is a prohibition town, isn't it?"

The legal brother admitted the imputation, and winked violently with both eyes, as he added that "since the state had cut out whisky, local law would have to look the other way when men took a drink."

Meanwhile, the girl in the car had overtaken Lynn one evening on the pike. Providentially her mother and her aunt occupied the back seat.

"Will the worshipful mayor honor a place beside me into town " she inquired, with sweet, mock humility.

"If you'll move over," he said, "just common Lynn Murray will be honored to be your chauffeur."

"I hear you are 'faithfully executing the office' of mayor," she guyed, slyly.

Lynn smiled, apparently at a hen taking a dust bath in the middle of the road.

The hen rose with a wild screech.

"Better be careful," warned the girl.

"I never touched her," he grinned.

"You know I didn't mean that," rebuked the girl. "Beantown's like that church the preacher read about Sunday—it 'has a name'—but—alas for its works. It won't stand for the treatment you're giving it."

"If Beantown won't stand for what I'm giving it, it can take it lying flat on its back," said Lynn cheerfully. "Beantown's got fatty degeneration of its morals and it's got to cut off whisky or it'll die of heart failure."

"Beantown is dead now—morally," sighed the girl hopelessly. "You can't raise the dead."

"I can bury it, then," he laughed, "and I'll make its funeral cost like the dickens."

"You'll only make yourself unpopular. What's the use?"

"Of having principles, or a conscience?" he asked soberly.

"It hurts me to have you criticised."

Something in her tone made his heart leap. The car swung round a curve and ran facing the mountain, splendid now, with the setting sun flinging over it thin, silken curtains, crimson, purple, copper-colored, through which green-black masses of pines showed, soft and shadowy.

Lynn's voice was barely audible above the purr of the machine.

"Hilda," he said, "I've got a big fight on—the cause has its beginning the other side of the mountain. If I win"—he turned his eyes an instant to hers—she did not look away or falter—"if I lose"—his eyes were on the ribbon-like road as it unwound into town.

That week the Cake County Comment contained a front page notice from the mayor to the effect that certain dangerous animals, notably wild cats and blind tigers, were known to be at large in Beantown or its vicinity. As mayor, he called upon all respectable citizens to aid him in hunting them down. Furthermore he warned all citizens against giving shelter to the animals. The law, he declared, furnished a club stout enough to knock any one of them in the head if the blows were dealt by the strong arm of public sentiment.

This time Beantown not only sat up and took notice; it also rose, walked abroad, and said things lawful for strong

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

SOLDIERS OF THE SOIL

No bugle blows, no drum is beat
To stir us to our toil,
There is no sound of marching feet
That tread the quiet soil;
No captain have we but the sun,
Nor ever yet have trod
A path of blood to battles won—
Whose general is God.

A million miles of trenches mark
The ancient war we wage.
From dusk of dawn to early dark
All nature we engage.
We scatter powder seed like rain,
We charge with horse and blade
Until the ranks of ripened grain
Stand sturdy at parade!

Then all our acres rise to meet
The call for volunteers,
And countless regiments of wheat
Uphold their golden spears,
And through a sea of banners green
That glisten in the morn
Shine out in endless sweeps of sheen
The bayonets of corn!

They stand and sway and swiftly fall
That men may eat and live,
And we go back to wait the call
Another spring shall give—
And now it thrills and now it stirs
Our souls amid new scenes
Where hoes are more than howitzers
And bullets bow to beans!

And now we challenge soil and sky
For Freedom to provide—
That richer fields for man may die
Than ever yet have died;
That endless hosts of food may sweep
Across the bristling sea
To where the brave their vigil keep
For God and Liberty!

—Leigh Mitchell Hodges in North American of Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA'S "GET TOGETHER" MEETING

JANE A. STEWART

"Sound the proclamation
All around the nation
Hear the message ringing
Everybody singing
Pennsylvania's going dry!"

Never was this stirring prophecy more fervently sung than at the recent annual co-operation meeting of the Philadelphia W. C. T. U.

The singing came as an irrepressible outburst of pent-up faith and hope. It followed a spirited appeal by a representative of one of the temperance societies that "Victory must be won in Philadelphia, the hardest place in all America to win; and probably the last place to be captured by prohibition forces." Federal Congressmen from Philadelphia voted solidly against a bill for a dry District of Columbia, while New York and Chicago each turned in several dry votes; and thirty-seven of the forty-one state legislators living in Philadelphia voted recently against local option for the state, to defeat which the liquor interests poured out millions, knowing that we could put about forty counties dry by local option and gain an educational effect which could make the whole state dry.

To get them in closer touch for this great work, the Philadelphia W. C. T. U. rounded up a dozen or more active organizations at this notable co-operation meeting. The groups included the women's missionary societies; the Civic Club; the Christian Endeavor Union; the county Sunday School Association; the Home and School League; the Woman's Clubs; Alumnae Associations; the Business Woman's Christian League; the Young Woman's Christian Association, and the Woman Suffrage Association.

Church women, club women, teachers, mothers, society women, a policewoman, a business woman, a social worker, were all there to instruct and to receive the quickening impulse which comes from taking active part in good work which many share. "What would we do in our Christian work if we walked alone?" asked one speaker. "Although organizations be multiplied a hundredfold we wouldn't have enough!"

Honor was paid to the pioneer Woman's Christian Temperance Union which laid the foundation for the great onsurging prohibition movement. Touching appeals were brought to them.

"If you can do anything to stop dancing in the cabarets, I beg of you to do it," urged Mrs. Ida M. Hudson, the consecrated, energetic president of the Young Woman's Christian Association. "I plead with you for the young womanhood of this great city. Where are our mothers? I fear they are not praying as our mothers used to do. Friends, we must know where our girls are." She told of talking with and securing pledges from six girls, in a single week, who had taken "just a cocktail," but protested against being regarded as drinking girls. "Tell mothers they must teach their children that godliness is the only way of living," she declared.

"Get as many voters as you can to stand for the abolition of the liquor traffic as a war measure," was another appeal. "Food products destroyed in liquor manufacture every year would feed twelve million people; and that number of people will starve in this country if the liquor evil is not abolished."

"You know and we know that the enfranchisement of women stands for prohibition," said Mrs. G. A. Dunning, head of the Pennsylvania woman suffrage party. "We are fighting right with you against this strong invisible force and if we all get together we will win. 'Booze or Bread' is the new slogan." Eight new states, she pointed out, have won some form of suffrage since January 1, 1917, the latest being Nebraska.

"In any big work of co-operation we need to have vision," said Mrs. Moore of the Business Woman's Christian League. "God is working out his purpose. Our souls grow by the things we do for and with other people. It is hard to work with some people; and often it seems easier to do the task yourself. But in that way you deprive others of the needed benefits of co-operative service."

"It is not with little candles and little brooms of twigs but by the aid of electric lights and vacuum cleaners that the women of today are working to save the lost coins all around the world," said Dr. Anna Young, Presbyterian missionary from India. "Over in India liquor is entering countless homes and even some nominally Christian people are beginning to use it. I ask your prayers especially for women who are hostesses, for many poor victims get their first taste of liquor at social functions."

This testimony was earnestly corroborated by Mrs. Joseph M. Gazzam, a thoughtful mother and a member of Philadelphia's exclusive set, now widely known for the splendid stand she has taken on behalf of a "sane, social season"; and the substitution of temperance beverages for alcoholic drinks at social affairs. She told of the new movement to get parents together to promote the moral, mental, and physical wellbeing of their children by establishing wholesome standards in matters affecting their education, amusements and home life, to meet the menace of social drinking, late dancing, and other soul and strength-depleting diversions of the modern social whirl.

"Nearly all arrests of women are for drunkenness," testified the policewoman; "and nearly all crimes are committed under the influence of liquor. This, to me, is a very practical reason for Pennsylvania's going dry!"

The spacious rooms of the "Willard," the W. C. T. U. headquarters, were decorated with flags, apple blossoms, festoons of pledge-cards, and the long-lettered roll of the prohibition states. Through the courtesy of Mrs. Mary Jones, a leading white ribboner, luncheon was served to all.

The meeting was one of great mutual benefit. The recitations by gifted young W. C. T. U. medal contestants, the patriotic temperance solos, and the eloquent arraignment of the drink evil, deeply stirred the visitors, none of whom departed without having had "the spirit stabbed broad awake" with the realization that the liquor traffic menaces the very foundations of the nation.

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE MOUNTAIN

(Continued from Page Twelve)

men to utter under excitement, but not pleasant to hear.

Who, they demanded, was this ingrate they had put into office with their own sacred votes—this young chaw-bacon who commanded respectable citizens to tamper with the time honored customs of the town—this, this young fool?

In fact, public opinion seemed to embrace and shelter the blind tiger and the wild cat with one strong arm and to knock the mayor in the head with the other.

Respectable citizens were slow in lining up for the hunt. After a few days, however, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which had been living at a poor dying rate for several years, sent its president to him to declare that it would survive or perish with him on the hunt.

The pastor of one church asked the Lord to assist the mayor in driving out the powers of darkness, and confident in the Lord's ability to do so, went on his own way in peace. The other two preachers went the priest and the levite one better, for they shook hands with the mayor before they passed by on the other side.

Colonel Tolliver, the father of Hilda and the most authoritative citizen of Beantown, did not so much as shake the mayor's hand. Instead, he shook his own head.

"No use, no use, my boy," he said with a smile, "you can't clear up the forest of tradition."

"You reckon I can blaze a trail?" asked Lynn.

"You'll have the wolves on you, if you try a new path. The paths beaten by our fathers are safest," prosed the colonel.

Lynn's laugh was not joyous.

"That depends on the fathers," he said.

The colonel looked thoughtful.

"Lynn," he began, and hesitated—"Lynn, when you first came to Beantown, I marked you as having the qualities necessary to make a successful lawyer. Lynn, you're in love with my girl—you're a good boy, I like your principles—I don't know how Hilda feels—like enough you do—and for Hilda's sake I hate to see you taking up a losing fight. Girls are prejudiced against failures. They don't understand them as we men do. It is always foolish for a young man to espouse a feeble or a dying cause."

During this broken speech, Lynn felt curious flashes, red-hot and ice-cold, pass up and down his spine. In the rigor of a cold flash he said, "You assume that the prohibition cause is a feeble and a dying one and that I am going to lose in my fight?"

The colonel's tone was that of a judge reluctantly pronouncing a death sentence.

"It is scarcely an assumption in view of the facts," he said.

"The facts be hanged!" cried Lynn, in the fury of a hot flash, and he walked away.

He might not win Hilda; but it would not be because he failed to clean out whisky in Beantown, at least while he was mayor.

Was Colonel Tolliver trying to buy his silence at the price of the girl? Of course not—there could be no motive—and Lynn put the thought away. Still he wished Hilda's father had shown up to better advantage.

Apparently the mayor's warning served only to drive the wild cats and blind tigers closer into their lairs. No one saw a trace of them for weeks. The office of marshal was almost a sinecure.

Then, one Saturday night, Beantown's boys had an orgy. No one knew where the whisky came from, and according to custom some one smuggled the boys away before the marshal could make an arrest.

"You ain't caught them wild animals, have you?" snickered a citizen the next morning.

"No," answered Lynn, good-naturedly, "but I bet I have them eating out of my hand yet."

The orgy made Beantown sick and until late summer it lived the life of a monk, and wild cats and blind tigers slunk back into the mountain or prowled around neighboring towns.

One Monday morning in August, as Lynn sat near an open window in the

(Continued on Page Fourteen)

EDUCATIONAL ACTIVITIES OF THE COLORADO W. C. T. U.

Special Correspondence

The local unions of Colorado are educating for total abstinence as the foundation of effective prohibition and disseminating information about the cigaret in preparation for a prohibitive cigaret law. Greeley has been very successful in holding scientific temperance and anti-tobacco essay contests, five hundred pupils competing. Two hundred copies of "The Little White Slaver," by Henry Ford, were available as a source of help.

The prize winning essays were read and awards presented at a large and enthusiastic public meeting. The Y. P. B. gave a pantomime, Miss Columbia crowning the dry states.

Fort Collins has original and successful plans for work in the schools. Last year it specialized on scrap-books. This year it has had an afternoon program on cigarets given in a public school building. Pupils in the fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh grades took part. The cigaret received a great deal of attention in readings, exercises and dialogues, and prohibition and patriotism were lauded in speech and song.

East Side, Colorado Springs, had a public reading of prize essays on alcohol and tobacco. In addition to money awards a flag pin was given the winners of the first prize and a white carnation to those who received honorable mention.

Boulder has held essay contests in four grades, on "Thrift" for the girls and "The Injurious Effect of Tobacco on the Growing Boy" for the boys. Awards to the amount of sixty dollars were presented and two banquets given, one for one hundred boys and the other for one hundred girls, who wrote the best essays. Teachers who helped make a success of the contests were guests of honor.

Besides essay and anti-narcotic medal contests in Denver, debates on "Resolved, that the cigaret is the greatest menace to the young people of Colorado today," are being held, in which prominent men participate. These result in a two-fold benefit as the affirmative presents the evils of the cigaret and the negative pictures the dangers of the public dance, pool hall and kindred amusements.

TEXAS W. C. T. U. CONVENTION A RED LETTER EVENT

Special Correspondence

The thirty-fifth annual convention of the Texas W. C. T. U., which closed in Ennis on Friday, April 20, was one of the best ever held in the state though possibly not the largest in numbers. Never were the white ribboners more heartily welcomed. The women of Ennis had planned their work well, and opened their homes to the delegates with unbounded hospitality.

The meetings were held in the Tabernacle Baptist church, Rev. W. E. Brittain, pastor. Mrs. Nannie W. Curtis, president of the Texas W. C. T. U., Mrs. J. V. Brewer, vice-president, and Mrs. Ammerman, president of the South Fifteenth district, presided at different times. The mayor, unavoidably absent, sent a representative and offered the services of his wife and his automobile to the white ribboners. Perhaps the most important thing accomplished was the revision of the constitution and by-laws. The words, "as a beverage," in the pledge were eliminated. Salaries of the state officers were doubled. A resolution providing that no woman can hold office in the state W. C. T. U. unless she subscribes for and reads THE UNION SIGNAL, was passed. The papers read were good, also the reports. A whole host of little folks were dedicated to the cause.

Judge Grubbs, father of the law which gave to Texas the College of Industrial Arts at Denton, was present and gave a brief welcome. Mrs. Grubbs also spoke. The law which provided for the founding of this college was absolutely a W. C. T. U. measure as the W. C. T. U. was the only woman's organization to petition the legislature to build this institution. Later other women's organizations became interested and they are now helping to carry on the work. There is an unwritten but well understood law that a W. C. T. U. woman is to be a member of the board of regents. Mrs. Stoddard served as secretary of this board. Mrs. J. S. Turner followed her. Since then this law has been ignored. Another new hall or dormitory is to be erected and the convention passed a resolution asking that this hall be named Lydia Grubbs Hall because of the interest of Mrs. Grubbs in the work from the very beginning.

The Press banner was again returned to Mrs. Clara N. Murray, local Press superintendent of Austin, for the best all-around report.

A very few of the old timers were present: Mother Orr, an Ohio Crusader; Mother Yates, who attended the first Texas convention; Mrs. Tracy, a charter member of the Houston W. C. T. U., and Miss Fanny Armstrong, who for thirty-three years has been a member of the Texas W. C. T. U.

Miss Veva De Jernette of Peniel, daughter of a charter member of the Texas W. C. T. U., was elected a delegate to the National Convention. Miss De Jernette is treasurer of the Peniel W. C. T. U. and a power in her home town. Two of her L. T. L. girls were with her and all took certificates, Miss Veva for studying the L. T. L. Manuals.

The motion picture play, "The Man Who Forgot," was shown in Ennis during the convention, and an arrangement was made, largely through the efforts of Mrs. Brewer, whereby the W. C. T. U. received one-half of the profits.

The former officers were re-elected with the exception of Mrs. J. S. Turner, treasurer, whose health is such she could not accept the office another year. Mrs. M. M. Kirkham, a president of the Twelfth district, was elected in her place. Mrs. Maude Gerhardt of Corpus Christi was elected Press superintendent and Miss Fanny Armstrong assistant.

The 1918 convention will be held in Gonzales, in southern Texas.

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE MOUNTAIN

(Continued from Page Thirteen)

recorder's office, he heard a loud voice in the court house yard.

"T'other side of the mounting now." Lynn looked out. "We don't have no mayor servin' notices on us to run down our blind tigers and wild cats. They just naturally roam free." The speaker glanced up and saw Lynn. Incredulity, doubt, certainty, crossed his lean, lined face. Lynn felt the muscles of his own throat tighten, but he met the eyes of the tall mountaineer squarely.

The crowd followed the stranger's gaze. When they saw Lynn, they burst into a loud laugh. He smiled and stepped back. Then he went into his office and waited; but no one came.

At noon Lynn saw two men on horseback ride out the south pike and turn off into the mountain.

Lynn ventured onto the street.

"Who was the visitor that blessed me, down the country?" he asked casually of the marsbal, who had been one of the crowd.

The marshal looked at him sharply.

"Him? Why, he's Captain Hicks, from the other side of the mountain. If all the whisky he's made had been turned loose on the mountain, I bet it'd cut a gully as deep as Gee's Creek."

"Why hasn't the government got onto him?" inquired Lynn.

"He's got a scent for revenue officers, like a turkey buzzard for dead flesh, an' his still is harder to find than a nigger that don't love watermelon. He never did open his mouth after he saw you. I have a hunch, though, that his comin' means more whisky in town. Seems like it always follows some one's appearin' here from the other side of the mountain."

"Did he bring any in?"

"Nop, but I bet him or the fellow with him left word where it's to be found."

"Well," said Lynn, abstractedly, "keep close watch. By the way, I'm going out to Hiwassee to inspect that timber I'm thinking of buying and I won't be in till late."

The marshal looked admiringly after the mayor as he disappeared into the garage.

(To be continued)

A WAVE OF PROHIBITION FACTS AND FIGURES

ready to be set in motion throughout the country by the use of the

PROHIBITION FAN

(Octagon in shape, 7 x 8⅝ in.)

Prohibition map, date of adoption of prohibition by various states. On the reverse side the appeal

PROTECT OUR AMERICAN YOUTH by PROHIBITING THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Price, 1 doz., 35 cents; 3 doz., $1; 100, $2.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

The Choice of a

COMMENCEMENT GIFT

is easily made and sure to please if selected from the following list:

BOOKS

The Life of Frances E. Willard, Anna A. Gordon. Price $1.50.
The Federal Government and the Liquor Traffic, Wm. E. Johnson. Price, $1.00.
Social Welfare and the Liquor Problem, Henry S. Warner. Price, $1.00.
A Century of Drink Reform in the United States, Aug. F. Fehlandt. Price, $1.00.
The Anti-Alcohol Movement in Europe, Ernest Gordon. Price, $1.50.
The Liquor Problem, Norman E. Richardson. Price, 50 cents.
What Frances E. Willard Said. Compiled by Anna A. Gordon. Price, 75 cents.
What Lillian M. N. Stevens Said. Compiled by Anna A. Gordon, Price, 50c.
Jean Mitchell's School, Angeline W. Ray. Price, $1.00.
A Modern Madonna, Caroline A. Stanley. Price, $1.50.
Nineteen Beautiful Years, Frances E. Willard. Price, 60 cents.
The Man Who Forgot, James Hay, Jr. Price, $1.37.
John Barleycorn, Jack London. Price, $1.42.
Little Sir Galahad, Phoebe Gray. Price, $1.42.
The Golden Lamp, Phoebe Gray. Price, $1.42.
Dear Enemy, Jean Webster. Price, $1.37.
Black Rock, Ralph Connor. Price, 60c.
Sky Pilot, Ralph Connor. Price, 60c.
Two, Edith Smith Davis. Price, 40c.

SOUVENIR SPOONS

Rest Cottage Spoon, sterling silver oxidized. (Rest Cottage in bowl.) Price, $1.50.
W. C. T. U. Teaspoon, sterling silver. (Crusade Church in bowl.) Price, $2.

REST COTTAGE SOUVENIR

A Terra Cotta Placque, with Rest Cottage in bas relief, hand carved, hand tinted. Price, $2.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

AMONG OUR WORKERS

The thirteenth institute of the Monroe county (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. was held at Brockport early in May, Mrs. Mary H. Bishop, county president, presiding. Seventeen of the twenty-nine unions were represented at the opening session. Among the many interesting features of the program were the "Efficieney Congress," the W. C. T. U. Exchange, showing activity along many lines, "Eehoes from Albany," by Mrs. Bishop, a prohibition pageant by twenty-six young ladies. Addresses by Mrs. Maude B. Perkins, state Y. P. B. secretary, emphasized the value of work among young people, five thousand of whom in New York state are pledged to lives of total abstinence, prohibition, and a single standard of purity. Mrs. Perkins, in addition to awakening interest in Y. P. B. work among W. C. T. U. members, addressed the pupils of the normal and grammar schools. A night letter was sent to President Wilson urging the necessity of prohibition during the period of the war. The institute abounded in devotion, patriotism, loyalty. Our National official organs were brought to the attention of the institute in a practical way, and the necessity for their study was shown. The institute proved beyond dispute that "Publicity is a factor in winning prohibition."

Philadelphia county W. C. T. U. is doing splendid poster work under the supervision of its able superintendent, Mrs. Gertrude Pennington. Posters in approximately one hundred different styles, which sell at from two to twenty cents each, are on exhibit in a public building. Much interest in, and commendation of, the work are being expressed. The members of the various unions take turns in acting as "salesladies." Philadelphia had the services of Mrs. Eliza E. Peterson, National superintendent of Work Among Colored People, with very good results. Mrs. Mary Harris Armor will be the speaker at the county convention in late May.

On the suggestion of Mrs. Archer Nixon Tevis, Medal Contest superintendent of Philadelphia county, who was the guest of honor at a meeting of the Torrington (Conn.) W. C. T. U., the union held a declamatory and vocal contest. Eighth grade boys and girls competed for the medal which was awarded to Harlan C. Franklin, who recited "How We Raised Ten Thousand Dollars." The vocal contestants were members of the various church choirs. Rev. F. F. Vorhees made a stirring temperance address, urging voters to appeal to Congress for the enactment of wartime prohibition. Much temperance enthusiasm was generated, forty dollars was added to the funds in the treasury and several women enrolled as new members.

Mrs. Mary Harris Armor and Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, National W. C. T. U. superintendent of Work Among Soldiers and Sailors, were both welcome guests at the spring institute held in Burlington by the Burlington county (N. J.) W. C. T. U. Mrs. Thacher spoke on the subject "Our Country in Peril and Its Needs." Mrs. Armor delivered the address at the evening meeting. Mrs. Emily V. Street, county president, presided and two hundred delegates were in attendance.

On the eve of the departure for Montana of Mrs. Adah Wallace Unruh, National lecturer, a farewell reception was held in her home in Portland, Ore. Many expressions of appreciation of her pioneer work in the state and her efforts in helping to secure the "bone dry" law were given by those in attendanee and in letters from out of town friends, among them Governor Withycombe.

Chautauqua county, New York, has had a genuine W. C. T. U. revival under the leadership of Mrs. Addie B. Parsels, National organizer, who recently conducted eight one-day institutes in the county. One union, Dunkirk, gained forty new members. Disinterested members have become interested and all who eame under the influence of Mrs. Parsels received new inspiration.

A series of seven meetings under the auspices of the Canandaigua (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. were held recently with Mrs. Mary Harris Armor the principal speaker. Many new members were gained and a goodly sum added to the treasury. Miss Mildred Moody, state L. T. L. secretary, conducted a very interesting school of methods and Mrs. Lula Walker, state superintendent of Medal Contest work, made an interesting address. Much good resulted from the presence of these visitors. The Canandaigua union has contributed to the Lillian Stevens Campaign fund, the Frances E. Willard Memorial fund, and is doing its share toward the raising of the mile of dimes.

A membership contest of the Erma (N. J.) W. C. T. U. resulted in the addition of thirty-two new members who were welcomed recently at a most enjoyable social meeting.

A feature of Temperance day at the Cairo (Ga.) Chautauqua was an automobile parade by the W. C. T. U. In the lead were handsomely decorated cars filled with eighty-five L. T. L. children, followed by twenty-six cars representing the prohibition states, each carrying W. C. T. U. women dressed in white. The automobiles were elaborately decorated. On the front of each was the name of the state and a large white bow. Especially beautiful was the District of Columbia float, decorated with the national colors, in which stood Miss Columbia waving "Old Glory." In a red and black float rode boys and girls bound in chains. They represented the nonprohibition states bound by the liquor traffic. In the National Prohibition float rode the goddess of liberty. This was followed by a water wagon upon which boys representing Florida and other states were trying to climb.

At the Chautauqua Governor Catts of Florida made the prohibition address, the school children were heard in songs and Scientific Temperance Instruction prizes were presented to writers of the best temperance essays. All of the Grady county schools took part in the contest. Large crowds were in attendance.

Miss Sara Phillips Thomas, National associate superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction, has been speaking in Georgia schools and colleges. She addressed the Georgia Educational Association in Macon on May 3. Temperance day in the public schools was endorsed by the Georgia Educational Association and by the Chautauqua of the South.

The Cheyenne (Wyo.) W. C. T. U. on April 19-20 held an interesting and well attended institute, with Mrs. Anna Allison, state W. C. T. U. president, as the presiding officer. At one of the evening meetings, addresses were made by Mrs. Adrianna Hungerford, president of the Colorado W. C. T. U., ex-Gov. Joseph M. Carey and Mr. Fred Crabbe. The day sessions were given over to important business of the executive committee, reports of state officers and addresses by Judge Mentzer of the district court of Laramie, Mrs. Hungerford and Rev. Minnie Fenwick.

For Soldiers and Sailors

To Place in Comfort Bags or for Distribution

Songsters. Each, 7 cents.
Pledge Card, with stub and bearing a profile of Frances E. Willard. Each, 2 cents; 50, 25 cents; 100, 40 cents.
Directions for Comfort Bags. Each, 2 cents; 50, 15 cents; 100, 25 cents.
Protecting the Home Folks (a warning against vice). Each, 2 cents; 50, 25 cents; 100, 40 cents.
Rally on the Flag (for veterans). Each, 2 cents; 50, 20 cents; 100, 30 cents.
Testament and Psalms, 12 cents.
Testament, 10 cents.
Gospels, Matthew, Mark, Luke or John. Each, 3 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Flower Mission Supplies

THE TEXT CARD should accompany flowers or other gifts on Flower Mission Day.

Flower Mission Scripture Text Card
Frances E. Willard Flower Mission Card
L. T. L. Scripture Text Card
Price, per 100, 12 cents.
Verses of Cheer, a collection of ten beautiful poems, printed on separate cards in the sepia shades. Price, per package, 25 cents.
Comfort Powders. Price, per box, 25 cents.

LEAFLETS

What the Flower Mission Can Do to Help Bring National Constitutional Prohibition.
Each, 2 cents; 50, 12 cents; 100, 20 cents.
What the Flower Mission Should Mean to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Community.
Some Phases of Relief Work.
The Flower Mission Trinity.
Each, 2 cents; 50, 30 cents; 100, 50 cents.
Program for Flower Mission Meetings.
Hints for W. C. T. U. Flower Missions.
Friends in Need.
Each, 2 cents; 50, 15 cents; 100, 25 cents.
Why a Flower Mission?
A Flower Mission Exercise.
The Story of Jennie Casseday.
The Story of the Roof Garden.
Each, 2 cents; 50, 35 cents; 100, 60 cents.

SOME LEAFLETS TO DISTRIBUTE ON FLOWER MISSION DAY:

The Shoemaker and the Little White Shoes.
The Common Joy.
The Story of the Dollars.
Each, 2 cents; 50, 20 cents; 100, 35 cents.

ORDER EARLY

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Something New
12-Inch Prohibition Rulers

TEXT: TOTAL ABSTINENCE, THE ONLY SAFE RULE OF LIFE

Reverse side: RULE OUT ALCOHOL —HELP MAKE A SOBER NATION. Good Everywhere. Place in Your Schools and Offices.
5 cents each; 1 doz. 35 cents; 100, $2.50.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year
Club rate for ten or more subscriptions, 25c a year
No other premium allowed.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

REMEMBER THE SEAMEN!

Is there an institute or reading room for seamen in your vicinity? If so, be sure to include it in the list of complimentary subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL which you are sending to libraries, and reading rooms, mobilization and training camps. Appreciative testimony to the value of the SIGNAL and the work of the Jacksonville (Fla.) W. C. T. U. among the men at the Seamen's Institute of that city comes from Rev. Karl Frost, superintendent. He says: "I wish to assure you that THE UNION SIGNAL is very highly appreciated by the seamen who patronize our reading room, as well as by myself personally. We have enrolled on our temperance book 118 of the men. This has been largely accomplished through the local W. C. T. U. which has been interested in this work since its beginning in 1915."

ENTIRE MEMBERSHIP TO HAVE CAMPAIGN EDITION

The Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL is to be sent to the entire membership of the First Milwaukee (Wis.) W. C. T. U.—109. This was the result of action taken at the annual business meeting of the union on April 16. This union reports a balance on hand of $156.84 after paying railroad fare of delegates to state convention. Among the enterprises of the year was the raising of $52.50 for the state W. C. T. U. mile of dimes, the awarding of three life memberships in the state organization and contributions to the Frances Willard Memorial Fund and the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund. Mrs. H. Hill was re-elected president. At a banquet and meeting in the evening, in celebration of the thirtieth anniversary of the union, a toast was given Mrs. W. A. Lawson, state W. C. T. U. president, and an honored guest, by Mrs. Vie H. Campbell. Mrs. Edith Smith Davis, a former president and now World's and National superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction, delivered the address of the evening. The history of the union was given by Mrs. Ford, a charter member, and messages and greetings from other charter and pioneer members were read.

FORTY SUBSCRIPTIONS GIFT OF RENO UNION

The Reno (Nev.) W. C. T. U. is actively at work helping in the campaign for statewide prohibition. This union, the largest in the state, has a membership of sixty, a large number for this sparsely settled section of the country. Under the direction of the state superintendent of THE UNION SIGNAL, who is also the local superintendent, the Reno union, as one of its campaign plans, is making generous use of the Campaign Edition. Recently this union sent in sixty-two subscriptions to the Campaign Edition, forty of which paid for by the local union, are going to different parts of the state to make prohibition sentiment.

$2.50 PER DAY SALARY PAID ONE PERSON in each town to distribute FREE circulars, and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring. Non-alcoholic. Big demand, steadily increasing. J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7G, E. Harrison St., Chicago.

PROGRESS OF PORTO RICO PROHIBITION CAMPAIGN

The statement is being made through the general press that the anti-prohibition advocates in Porto Rico have practically given up the fight and have disorganized, but reports from our correspondents indicate that they are carrying on a very vigorous pussyfoot campaign. "The liquor interests at first formed an organization and started an open campaign," writes one of our correspondents. "They found they had nothing to gain by publicity and dissolved their committees. As a matter of fact, however, they have a very effective organization and will go to the polls with most of the 'practical politicians' on their side and with considerable campaign funds."

A great deal of general publicity work, distribution of circulars, platform speaking, etc., is being carried on by the advocates of prohibition. There are now in circulation thousands of copies of a new circular prepared by a young lawyer refuting the statement of the liquorites that Porto Rico cannot afford to lose the $1,500,000 from the liquor traffic.

Some of the newspapers have been generous in giving space to prohibition news and propaganda. The Puerto Rico Evangelico, a religious and literary quarterly, the official organ of the Protestant churches of the island, is devoting many of its pages to the liquor question and has a news section especially for the prohibition movement.

"There is little doubt that the island will go dry, for the natives do not want any more rum," writes a correspondent, "but to insure success in July when the vote is taken, the educational work must be pushed."

Enemies of Prohibition Already at Work in Porto Rico

(A free translation of handbill in Spanish circulated by "Anti-Prohibition Committee of Porto Rico" at expense of liquor dealers, no doubt.)

The Jones bill is a blessing to Porto Rico.

It is light that lights the whole island.

But there cannot be light without shade, and in this case the shade is the prohibition amendment which shortens by $2,000,000 yearly the income of our treasury, and holds back, we may say, the great development of our general progress, cutting off schools, roads, public works, etc., and therefore our Governor will be compelled to find a way to cover so enormous a deficit by raising the tax collections.

But the Jones bill provides that the prohibition amendment can be made void at any general election which takes place within the first five years, by a majority of the qualified electors, provided that a petition to that effect has been made by ten per cent of the same.

On the 16th of next July the first general election will take place, and on that day we shall see if we can count or not on those $2,000,000 which cover unavoidable needs of our economic life and of the intellectual development of the Porto Rican people.

The Unionists, the Republicans and the Socialists will all vote as a single man against prohibition.

The wholesale and retail trade are decidedly against it.

We expect, therefore, that the Porto Rican people will show once more the force of their opinion in the first plebiscite which has been offered them for their decision.

THE ANTI-PROHIBITION COMMITTEE.

Sanitary Drinking Fountains

Also Drinking Fountains for Man and Beast.

Special prices to W. C. T. U. and all Charitable Societies.

This Fountain was erected by the W. C. T. U. of Luray, Va.

Write for Catalogue

J. W. Fiske Iron Works

56 & 58 Park Place
NEW YORK

EVERY

COLLEGE LIBRARY
PUBLIC LIBRARY
PUBLIC SCHOOL LIBRARY
SUNDAY SCHOOL LIBRARY

should have for reference at least one copy of

THE LIFE OF FRANCES E. WILLARD, written by Anna Adams Gordon.
Price, $1.50

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

GIVE THE PEOPLE FACTS

by a generous distribution of What Prohibition Has Meant to Colorado, by Gov. George A. Carlson.

Price, 5 cents each; per 50, $1.50; per 100, $2.50.

Colorado's First Year on the Water Wagon, by Edwin L. Sabin.
Price, 3 cents each; per 50, 50 cents; per 100, 90 cents.

These booklets are full of convincing campaign arguments issued especially for distribution among

BOARD OF TRADE MEMBERS
ASSOCIATIONS OF COMMERCE
REAL ESTATE CLUBS
COMMERCIAL CLUBS
BANKERS

and business men in general.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.
Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
118-120 Fifth Ave., New York
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works
Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., MAY 31, 1917 | No. 22

STRONG drink has stolen from every home in England one pound of food for every day of the war.

The grain now used in the United States in the manufacture of alcoholic liquors would enable us to send a pound loaf of bread a day to each of 11,000,000 men at the front.

Have you appealed to President Wilson and Congress for War Prohibition?

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

ARMY BILL FORBIDS SALE OF LIQUOR TO MEN IN UNIFORM—SECRETARY DANIELS ASKS SIMILAR LAW FOR PROTECTION OF NAVY—POSTOFFICE DEPARTMENT ISSUES LIQUOR BULLETIN

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

The war revenue bill, calling for $1,800,000,000, which the Ways and Means committee introduced two weeks ago and which has been the main business of the House under the five minute rule continuously since, was brought to its final passage Wednesday, May 23, by a vote of 329 to 76, 21 not voting. This bill now goes to the Senate, where we may safely believe another two weeks, or longer, will be spent in scanning the many items of this far-reaching and all-important piece of legislation, before a vote is taken. Congress, and especially the Ways and Means committee, has been deluged with countless protests against the proposed increase of taxation. Everything possible has been assessed to meet the exigencies of war. Mr. Kitchin of North Carolina, chairman of the House Ways and Means committee, is one of the strongest advocates of peace in Congress and, almost alone, stood for it and was assailed on both sides of the chamber because of his attitude at such a time. But when war was declared, he immediately let it be known that in every possible way he would stand by the declaration and do his best to help. We sit near each other in the dining room of the Driscoll Hotel and I said to him one morning, "Mr. Kitchin, your name is upon a good many lips these days." "Yes," he said, "many are cursing me, but this is what I knew must follow if war came—the people must needs be taxed to the utmost. I tried to keep them from it and now the very ones who cried hardest for war are crying loudest because of war taxes." Mr. Kitchin's eldest son enlisted two weeks ago and has entered the training camp at Fort Myer, Va. Representative Saunders of Virginia, another strong advocate for peace, is staying at the Driscoll and his two sons also have entered the training camp across the Potomac river.

Senator Lewis of Illinois this week told the Senate that in the West the recent Red Cross speech of the President has been so misrepresented that it may endanger the success of the Liberty Loan and make the enforcement of the conscription law very difficult. He read from a communication sent him as follows:

"Why should we give our money and our boys when the President says, 'We have no grievance'? Why fight for Britain and die and be bankrupt? Why give Britain our money, our men, and then our Navy to satisfy their grievances?

"The circular sent us shows that the President's speech in full stated to the women of the Red Cross that we have no cause for fight or war or to pay our money out for bonds for fight or war; that America is not involved."

Senator Lewis expressed regret that there was such a misapprehension on the part of the people and said further, that "The President of the United States is unfortunate when he speaks without his manuscript, when there has been misrepresentation or misinterpretation." The Senator bravely defended the words of the President and closed his speech by quoting the words of Disraeli upon a famous occasion when he said, "Let us trust that hereafter criticism may be made with discrimination and condemnation with justice."

Secretary Daniels Asks for Legislation Against Sale of Liquor to Men of Navy While in Uniform

Secretary of the Navy Daniels recently addressed a letter to Speaker Clark, urging that the legislation incorporated in the Army bill, prohibiting the sale of liquor to "any officer or member of the military forces while in uniform" be extended to cover the Navy. Senator Kellar of Tennessee, author of the provision in the Army bill, said he believed the term "military forces" is a general term and includes the men of the Navy as well as those of the Army. Webster, he pointed out, defines "military" as "of or pertaining to soldiers, arms or warfare." However, in order to be on the safe side, the request for additional legislation by Mr. Daniels probably will receive prompt attention in Congress. The prohibition against selling liquor to men while in uniform, coupled with the recent order requiring every Army man on duty to wear his uniform, has had the effect of making the Army "bone dry."

In view of the fact that after November 1 next, Prince George's county, Maryland, will be the only territory within a radius of practically fifty miles of Washington where liquor can be obtained, the board of liquor license commissioners there have been having a hard time to dispose of the many applicants who desire the granting of licenses to sell intoxicants. Probably the most drastic action taken by the board was in the case of three saloons located near Fort Washington, where 800 soldiers are now stationed and where it is probable a much larger number will soon be added. The commissioners flatly refused to allow any one of the three saloons to remain in business and declared emphatically that, until the close of the war, no consideration would be given applicants from that section.

ARMY BILL FORBIDS SALE OF LIQUOR TO MEN IN UNIFORM

Section 12. It shall be unlawful to sell any intoxicating liquor, including beer, ale or wine, to any officer or member of the military forces while in uniform.

President Wilson, in a formal statement acknowledging receipt of resolutions passed by members of the First Presbyterian church, which calls upon Congress to pass a law regulating the manufacture and sale of intoxicants as a war efficiency and conservation measure, has replied:

"It gives me great pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of your resolution. Such attitude cheers my heart in times like the present. I hope Congress will respond to your desire."

Text of First Liquor Bulletin Issued By Post Office Department.

The Post Office Department issued "Liquor Bulletin, No. 1," May 14, 1917, according to the Act of Congress, approved March 3, which goes into effect July 1, 1917. This Act is construed to bar from the mails any letter, postal card, circular, newspaper, pamphlet or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of intoxicating liquor of any kind, or containing a solicitation of any order for any such liquor, in any state or territory, or portions thereof, in the United States, where the state or local law is in force at the time prohibiting advertising or soliciting of orders. Heavy penalties are affixed for a violation of these provisions. The bulletin further says: "Whoever shall order, purchase, or cause intoxicating liquors to be transported in interstate commerce, except for scientific, sacramental, medicinal and mechanical purposes, into any state or territory, the laws of which prohibit the manufacture or sale therein of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, shall be punished," etc. The states from which liquor advertisements are excluded are as follows: Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Delaware, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana (effective April 3, 1918,), Iowa, Maine, Michigan (effective April 30, 1918), Mississippi, Montana (effective December 31, 1918), Nebraska, New Hampshire (effective May 1, 1918), North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Utah (effective August 1, 1917), Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, Connecticut, numerous towns; Delaware, Sussex county; Maryland, many local places; Ohio, county or territory where sale of liquor as a beverage is prohibited; Rhode Island, cities and towns which have voted dry; Texas, all political subdivisions which have voted dry. Data for the bulletin is as yet incomplete, but further bulletins will be issued by the Post Office Department from time to time.

National W. C. T. U. Representatives Present American Flag to Head of British Mission

Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, Mrs. Lenna Lowe Yost and the writer waited upon Right Honorable Arthur James Balfour, head of the British mission, by appointment, Thursday, May 24, to present him with an American flag. We were escorted by one of the secretaries to the private office of Mr. Balfour. He was sitting at his desk when we entered, but rose and came forward to greet us. Mrs. Thacher, after a few words of explanation, shook out the silken folds and handing the Stars and Stripes to Mr. Balfour said, "We present this flag as the gift of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union" and went on to speak of the Countess of Carlisle as the honored president of the World's W. C. T. U. and of the many years Lady Henry Somerset was officially connected with the World's organization. Mr. Balfour, holding up the flag, said, "Do let me thank you for this beautiful gift, the most beautiful Stars and Stripes I have ever seen." A few words of further greeting, as he walked down the spacious halls, and our pleasant visit was at an end.

Belva Lockwood Called to Her Heavenly Home

One of the great women of our time has been called away. Belva Lockwood, at the age of eighty-six, has laid down the weapons of warfare and gone to her reward. Away back in the forties she began her battle for lifting up the oppressed. She worked and planned for years to provide a way for women to teach, for girls to attend high schools, for women to hold property and to give the mother equal rights with the father in the ownership of the child. Alone and almost single handed, she fought for years for the right of women to be admitted to law practice in the Supreme Court of the United States and was herself the first woman to be so admitted. She worked to the last for the rights of the Indian. Her funeral was largely attended, Bishop Hamilton, three former pastors, Dr. Anna Shaw and the writer being the speakers. The body had lain in state in the church of which she was a member, the officers of the District W. C. T. U. acting as an honorary guard.

National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, Washington, D. C., May 25, 1917.

Prohibition the Burning Question of the Hour

The religious denominations of the United States have for some years past been urging national prohibition of the liquor traffic at their state and national meetings, but this year, in the face of the war crisis, their demand is increasingly insistent. A telegram to President Wilson from the board of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, in session in Cleveland in connection with the Northern Baptist convention, characterized prohibition as the "burning question of the hour." A resolution adopted by the general assembly of the Presbyterian church, U. S. A., in session in Dallas, Texas, copies of which were sent to President Wilson, Vice-President Marshall and Speaker Clark, assured President Wilson that "enlightened public sentiment will sustain you in thus honoring the people by safeguarding the manhood of the nation." The Chicago diocesan convention of the Protestant Episcopal church, in session in Chicago, went on record in favor of national prohibition and the establishment of protected zones around military camps from which immoral women shall be excluded. The clergy should unite to impress Congress with the importance of "bread rather than beer, wheat rather than whisky," declared Bishop Charles P. Anderson on that occasion. The Episcopal diocese of Bethlehem, Pa., through resolutions adopted, urged state and national prohibition as a war efficiency measure and to conserve the grain for food.

Fifty Simultaneous Prohibition Meetings Held in Chicago

The Chicago Woman's Club, through its new Prohibition department, is strongly allying itself with the temperance forces at work to drive the saloons from the windy city. In a "big drive" against the liquor interests, which was planned primarily in recognition of the great need for prohibition at this time, the club recently held within the municipality and its environs fifty simultaneous prohibition meetings, as many prominent women of the city and suburbs opening their homes for this purpose. The speakers were pastors, social workers, many of whom had not before publicly committed themselves on the question, and temperance leaders, among whom was numbered Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National W. C. T. U. From all of the fifty meetings were sent telegrams and letters to President Wilson and Congress urging national prohibition.

"Bone-Dry" Soldier Law Worries Barkeepers

These are days of worry for the barkeep. Torn between conflicting emotions of filling up the cash box and going to jail, he is in a fix. It all happened since the scenery of the loop changed to khaki and navy blue and now he is doing his bit for the telephone company by keeping a sergeant busy at the recruiting office:

"Hello. Is this Captain Kenney? No, well I want to know if I can sell a gent a drink?"

"Nobody is holding you."

"But he is in uniform."

"Are you anxious to break into jail?"

"No," with a shiver in the voice.

"Well, don't sell him any booze."

"Does that go for those in blue with white hats?"

"You had better not experiment with either unless you want Uncle Sam to pay your board bill where the fences are high."

"T'anks."

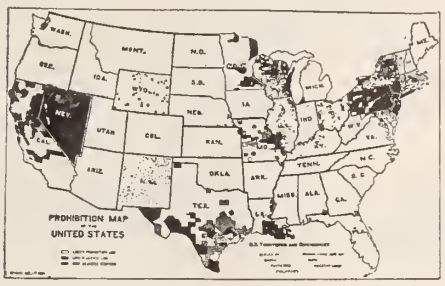
"That's the 'steenth' time some booze rustler has called up to find out if it is against the law to sell a man in army or navy uniform a drink," commented the officer as he wearily hung up the receiver.—Chicago Herald.

Ban on Liquor at Fort Sam Houston

In accordance with a order by Brigadier General James Parker, the possession of liquor in quarters by soldiers or its sale within the limits of Fort Sam Houston or Camp Wilson, says a news item from San Antonio, Texas, has been prohibited. This order applies to the two officers' clubs, which were thus made dry for the first time since the establishment of the army post.

Suffrage Bill Passes House of Commons

After ten days' debate, the bill which may give the 6,000,000 women of Great Britain the franchise passed the House of Commons, on May 23, by a vote of 329 to 40.



HONOR ROLL

—of—

PROHIBITION STATES AND TERRITORY AND DATE OF GOING INTO EFFECT

Maine		1851
Kansas		1880
North Dakota		1889
Oklahoma		1907
Georgia		1908
North Carolina		1909
Mississippi		1909
Tennessee		1909
West Virginia		1914
Alabama		1915
Arizona		1915
Virginia		1916
Colorado		1916
Oregon		1916
Washington		1916
Arkansas		1916
Iowa		1916
Idaho		1916
South Carolina		1916
Nebraska	*May	1, 1917
South Dakota	*July	1, 1917
Utah	†Aug.	1, 1917
Dist. of Columbia	†Nov.	1, 1917
Alaska	†Jan.	1, 1918
Indiana	†April	2, 1918
Michigan	*April	30, 1918
Montana	*Dec.	31, 1918
New Hampshire	†May	1, 1918

*Enacted 1916. †Enacted 1917.

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1917

Iowa†† Ohio New Mexico

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1918

Utah†† Missouri Florida
Minnesota Wyoming Nevada

††Now have statutory prohibition. Will vote on constitutional amendment.

Secretary Baker of War Department Asks Governors to Help Protect Soldiers' Morals

Secretary Baker made public on May 25 a letter he had addressed to the governors of all states calling for co-operation in keeping the army mobilization camps free from improper surroundings and immoral influences.

"Our responsibility in this matter is not open to question," the secretary wrote. "We cannot allow these young men, most of whom will have been drafted to service, to be surrounded by a vicious and demoralizing environment, nor can we leave anything undone which will protect them from unhealthy influences and crude forms of temptation.

Responsibility to Families

"The greater proportion of this force probably will be made up of young men who have not yet become accustomed to contact with either the saloon or the prostitute, and who will be at that plastic and generous period of life when questionable modes of indulgence easily serve as outlets for exuberant physical vitality.

"Not only have we an inescapable responsibility in this matter to the families and communities from which these young men are selected, but, from the standpoint of our duty and our determination to create an efficient army, we are bound, as a military necessity, to do everything in our power to promote the health and conserve the vitality of the men in the training camps.

"I am determined that our new training camps, as well as the surrounding zones within an effective radius, shall not be places of temptation and peril. We are not going to be able to obtain the conditions necessary without the full co-operation of the local authorities. Will you give earnest consideration to this matter in your particular state?

Threatens to Move Camps

"I am confident that much can be done to arouse the cities and towns to an appreciation of their responsibility for clean conditions.

"I would suggest that your council make itself responsible for seeing that the laws of your state and of Congress in respect to these matters are strictly enforced. This relates not only to the camps established under federal authority but to the more or less temporary mobilization points of the National Guard units. It relates, too, to the large centers through which soldiers will constantly be passing.

"If the desired end cannot be otherwise achieved I propose to move the camps from those neighborhoods in which clean conditions cannot be secured."

Governor Phillips of Wisconsin Vetoes Prohibition Referendum Measure

The prohibition referendum bill, which passed both houses of the Wisconsin legislature, was vetoed by Governor Phillips just five minutes before the bill would have become a law had his signature been withheld. Although Governor Phillips had promised to sign the bill if it passed the legislature, he changed his attitude when he found that the bill had actually been approved by both the senate and house. He objected that breweries were not permitted to manufacture for shipment out of the state and that farmers could not make wines and ciders for their own tables, and he proposed amendments making these provisions. This appeared to be only a scheme for opening the question again with the hope of defeating it the second time, thus shifting the responsibility, writes our Wisconsin correspondent.

WHITE RIBBONERS RESPOND TO PATRIOTISM'S CALL

Missouri War Relief Activities

NELLE G. BURGER, President Missouri W. C. T. U.

The white ribboners of Missouri are patriotic and loyal, and while we would prefer to keep busy along lines of peace, today all energies are bent toward plans to ameliorate the sad conditions of war.

The local unions are organizing the women of many towns for co-operative work. Many who are not ready to join our ranks as full fledged members are willing to co-operate under our department of Work among Soldiers and Sailors. Relief supplies of all descriptions are being made and will be distributed by the Red Cross. Where there is an active Red Cross society in a town or city the local union is known as the W. C. T. U. unit, and co-operates in all efforts. Of course all work done by the W. C. T. U. will be accredited to our department of Work among Soldiers and Sailors, and will be accurately reported.

Two consignments of comfort bags have been sent to "our boys" on the battleship "Missouri" and the women are busy making more and are also knitting for the sailors.

Housewives are being furnished the men at Jefferson Barracks, Maxwelton, Kansas City and all other training camps. Similar comforts will be supplied the many Missourians at Fort Riley. As the government furnishes only one "housewife" to a squad of eight, these gifts from our white ribboners are highly acceptable and much appreciated. Each county in the state is contributing toward the electric fans at Fort Bliss and sending delicacies.

Patriotic meetings, with suitable programs, will be held all over the state on June 5. On that day opportunity will be given all patriots to "enlist" in the W. C. T. U. Our organization, with its multiplied lines of endeavor, offers an avenue for the patriotic activity of every woman.

The Missouri Counsellor will carry into 13,000 homes definite plans for war relief work, instructions for knitting, for making comfort bags and housewives and hospital supplies. Out of this dreadful war we are confidently expecting world-wide prohibition and world peace.

North Carolina Endeavors to Include Comfort Bags, Sewing, Knitting and Gardens

T. ADELAIDE GOODNO, President North Carolina W. C. T. U.

The North Carolina Woman's Christian Temperance Union, while not so large as some other state unions, is endeavoring to do its share in the war relief work. Many of the women have joined the Red Cross and are meeting once a week, making bandages, socks, shirts, pillow cases, gowns, etc. Some carry work home and fit it in with their many household duties. Many women are taking the first aid instructions, while others are knitting helmets, sweaters, mittens and scarfs.

As a special effort for all our women comfort bags are being made after the W. C. T. U. design. These bags will contain all the equipment, even to the motherly letter. Each woman is asked to give one dollar. In this way there will be enough money to purchase the material and equipment at wholesale. The bags will be cut out and sent to the women to make, then returned to Raleigh to be filled. They will probably go to the battleship "North Carolina."

All unions were instructed to send letters to President Wilson asking that he use his influence to prohibit the manufacture and sale of liquor as a war measure. A request has gone to unions, asking that they write Senator Overman to do what he can to save the grain for food. Last year we sent $33.00 to Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, National superintendent of Work among Soldiers and Sailors, for use on the frontier in Texas, also contributed $10.00 towards the flooring of the tabernacle for soldiers. As most of our unions are located in rural and country districts, our women always have gardens. This year efforts are being made for increased products.

Vacant Lot Cultivation

LELLA M. SEWALL, National Superintendent Flower Mission and Relief Work

This line of work of the department of Flower Mission and Relief Work has recently come into great prominence, owing to the scarcity of food caused by the great war. All unions which have been doing this work in the past should continue it with added vigor, looking to its wide expansion, especially during the continuance of the war; other unions, conveniently located, should discover and secure every available space for cultivation, planting vegetables at this time instead of flowers. The children of the Loyal Temperance Legion could, under proper supervision, do much of this work. Many vegetables should and must be raised in this way, through this department, for the benefit of the needy. In Massachusetts a letter on the subject has been sent to every local union and already garden conferences are being held—so the good work goes on. In New Jersey, Pennsylvania and other states these particular activities have had prominence in past years. Let this department be quick to recognize the opportunity and privilege of doing this work and of doing it well.

War Service Program of Maine W. C. T. U.

ALTHEA G. QUIMBY, President Maine W. C. T. U.

Telegrams from the state and county organizations, with many letters and telegrams from local unions and prominent people, have been sent to President Wilson, urging national prohibition as a protective and conservation measure. Following a meeting of the general officers, the services of the Maine W. C. T. U. were offered Governor Milliken for any form of patriotic duty which, at the governor's suggestion, it may be able to render during this crisis.

After corresponding with the director of the Northeastern Red Cross division, definite plans of relief work have been sent to each local union. The comfort bags will be made as directed by Mrs. Ella H. Thacher, National superintendent of Work among Soldiers and Sailors. The knitting and sewing, printed directions for which have been sent to each local union, will be standardized by the Red Cross rules. All finished work will be sent to our own state headquarters in Portland and from there will go to the nearby Red Cross headquarters for distribution.

Ever a body of faithful, patriotic women, the members of the Maine W. C. T. U are reminded to give especial attention to the affairs of their households that the appeal of President Wilson for conservation may not go unheeded. They are also asked to encourage increased acreage of garden cultivation.

The brave boys and girls of the L. T. L. and the enthusiastic members of the Y. P. B. are urged to devote their splendid energies to garden and other food-producing activities.

Many of our young people will join the Junior Volunteers, which are being actively organized at the suggestion of Governor Milliken.

Maine will continue its appeals, by telegram and letter, to the authorities at Washington "until the United States flag floats over a nation redeemed from the home-destroying, heart-breaking curse of the liquor traffic."

North Idaho Pushing Patriotic Service of Many Kinds

MABEL I. McCREA, President North Idaho W. C. T. U.

The women of North Idaho Woman's Christian Temperance Union are preparing to take their places in the great service army in which we have been asked to enlist. In many places the unions have already been assisting the Red Cross Society by doing various kinds of work at its headquarters. Where there is no Red Cross organization sewing has been sent to the unions from the headquarters in other towns. The women are also knitting, making bandages, etc., in their homes.

The president is urging that, in response to Mrs. Thacher's appeal, active work be taken up by the unions, comfort bags made, and reading and amusements provided for the convalescents in the hospitals. At the mid-year executive meeting, held in Sandpoint on May 2 it was decided to rent an electric fan for the hospital at Fort Bliss, Texas.

Sandpoint union is planning a reception and entertainment for the National Guards stationed there, and other unions will undoubtedly follow its example. On the departure of the militia from Coeur d'Alene the W. C. T. U. of that city adopted a plan to place a Testament in the hands of each man without one.

Several of the state officers visited the headquarters of the Sandpoint militiamen and, with the permission of the captain, addressed the boys, urging them to keep themselves, as well as the Stars and Stripes, unsullied. Ten young men signed the pledge.

The great need of food conservation is also being emphasized. The cultivating of vacant lots, and the canning of fruits and vegetables are urged, that no ground may be left idle, and nothing of food value wasted. Many telegrams from business men, as well as state and local

(Continued on Page Sixteen)

SAVING AT THE SPIGOT AND WASTING AT THE BUNGHOLE

WILLIAM J. BRYAN

In the first place, we cannot afford to allow $145,000,000 worth of grain to be converted into alcohol when it is needed for bread. To urge an increase in garden space and yet be indifferent to the conversion of the products of our prairies into alcohol would be saving at the spigot and wasting at the bunghole. The second argument is found in the fact that alcohol impairs efficiency, and we cannot, at a crisis like this, permit an impairment of efficiency either in our soldiers or in our producers.

MODERN WAR AND PROHIBITION

MAJOR GENERAL WILLIAM HARDING CARTER, U. S. A.

With the declaration of war with Germany and the enactment of the selective draft law, we have assumed obligations whose ultimate ends no man can foresee. Primarily we have now become responsible for the preparation of hundreds of thousands of young men for the stern duties and hardships of war, and, in the natural order of things, they will constitute the human element available for the country's defense for many years to come. The nation owes it to the young men who are selected for military training and service that from the very first they shall know that the training will be carried on under circumstances above reproach.

The development of minds and bodies to meet the demands of military service in war requires not only the most modern hygienic surroundings but the absence of every form of personal dissipation. Any one who sells or gives intoxicants or drugs of any kind to young men undergoing training for the nation's defense, not only commits a crime against the individual but a treasonable act against the nation.

The experience of European nations has made it clear that to maintain a modern army in the field there must be organized industry at home. Anything that militates against this, by depriving the human element of its normal energy, working under war pressure, must be combatted and if need be destroyed.

The public is far better advised today than ever before concerning the effects of the habitual use of intoxicants in producing criminal, insane and untrustworthy men and women and degenerate children. Prisons, asylums and public reformatories furnish continuous and abundant evidence along these lines. The increasing undiscipline of Americans has been observed and noted by investigators and students for many years. This is evidenced in lack of respect for parents, for the aged, for the officers of the law and for the law itself. It also has been a uniform observation that these conditions become aggravated whenever and wherever intoxicating liquors are habitually used. Confronted with these facts we are about to undertake the creation of a large army of the people and to prepare it for participation in the most gigantic struggle in the history of wars.

In the course of time following the abolition of the sale of beer and wines—whisky and rum were previously barred—on military reservations, the naval regulations banished intoxicating drinks from war vessels. Modern battleships, destroyers and submarines had become too complicated to be entrusted in any part to minds beclouded with drink. Efficiency and safety of operation alike demanded the exclusion of liquors from war vessels and it is certain that if the restoration of the wine mess for the period of the war were put to a vote of naval officers it would be overwhelmingly defeated.

Observing the operations of the so-called anti-canteen law, which stopped the sale of wine and beer at post exchanges or cantcens, it was found that for a time the offenses involving drunkenness increased at army posts located in territory where saloons were permitted to exist. This was credited to the fact that men went to considerable distances from barracks for liquor, and, not expecting to repeat the trip soon, indulged in too much for their own good. The statistics of disciplinary action through a number of years seemed to establish that more than fifty per cent of the cases of desertion and absence without leave were due to drunkenness.

While the current returns of the internal revenue bureau of the treasury make it appear that the income from the manufacture of beer and liquors has steadily increased, there can be no question that the temperance and total abstinence campaigns of the past few years have brought about a marked change in American life. It is no longer fashionable to serve wines and liquors in the lavish way which obtained in former years. That temperance has won a lasting victory is attested by the large increase in territory covered by prohibition laws and in the drastic regulations governing the employment of men in dangerous occupations, when individuals may be and often are responsible for the lives of others. If this applies in the operation of railroads and great industrial establishments, how much more should it apply in the cases of the officers and men called to the colors to uphold the honor of the nation and to defend its material interests.

Of course it is absurd to inaugurate complete prohibition until, as a nation, we are prepared to abandon taxation of manufactured intoxicants. After many years' observation of the effects of drink upon our soldiers, it is the unhesitating opinion of the writer that the proceeds of governmental taxation of stills and breweries are, to say the least, no compensation for the misspent lives and stunted brains of those who are addicted to drunkenness. If it requires war time prohibition to insure an absolutely sober and dependable army, we should have it, and the sooner the better.

A LESSON FOR THE UNITED STATES

—Pioneer of Toronto.

Jack Canuck—Why don't I straighten up and put forth my whole manpower? Can't you see why?

MASSACHUSETTS WOMEN OUT FOR PROHIBITION

KATHARINE LENT STEVENSON, President Massachusetts W. C. T. U.

Not the women of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union alone—that they should be "out for prohibition" is a foregone conclusion, as much a truism as to say that the sun shines or the wind blows,—but the other women, the women of societies many and various, the women of wealth and social position, and the women who are wage earners, the women who are suffragists and those who are "anti's," the women who a few years ago would not have touched the question of prohibition with the proverbial "forty foot pole,"—that they should be out en masse, in their new enthusiasm apparently outranking the veterans of the "Old Guard," this is a phenomenon which may well cause the liquor dealers to stop and think or, in classic parlance, to "sit up and take notice."

War Prohibition a Unifying Agency

This very phenomenon was witnessed recently in Ford Hall, Boston, where the women of the city were gathered to voice their protest against the continuance of the liquor traffic during this time of stress and danger to our nation and to the world. The meeting was called by the Women's War Prohibition Conservation Committee, of which the president of the state W. C. T. U. is a member. Mrs. Elizabeth Tilton, chairman of the Poster committee for the Associated Charities, presided, and there were seated upon the platform the presidents or representatives of about fifteen women's organizations, the majority of them being state-wide in their scope and directly affiliated with the national organizations of the same name.

It is to be doubted if there was ever a prohibition gathering representing more distinct or more divergent interests, and yet they were an absolute unit in their demand for prohibition as a conservation measure, at least during the period of the war. The lion and the lamb lay down together when the Women's Peace Party and the Society for Preparedness, the suffragists, through Alice Stone Blackwell, and the anti-suffragists, sat together in perfect unity of thought and purpose and voted unanimously for the passage of the drastic resolutions presented by Mrs. Tilton, which had first been approved by the committee. Some of the other societies represented were the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Federation of Woman's Clubs, through its president, Mrs. Gurney; the National Associated Charities, through Mrs. Alice Higgins Lothrop; the Settlement Workers, through Mrs. Robert Woods; the District Nurses' Association, the Women's Press Club, the Scientific Temperance Federation, through Miss Cora Stoddard; the Council of Jewish Women, through Mrs. Julius Andrews; the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, through its state president, and others which I am not able now to enumerate. One gentleman said that he had never attended a meeting which maintained throughout such a high grade of speaking, and another standing by remarked that he had attended only one which excelled it, and that had been a convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, with Frances E. Willard in the chair.

Women Score Attitude of Governor McCall

The grand objective point of the meeting was the formal protest sent to Senator Weeks and the eleven Massachusetts Congressmen who are known to oppose prohibition, and the "open letter" to Governor McCall. This open letter is printed on a poster and the audience, with only one dissenting vote, pledged itself to send these posters broadcast throughout the state, and a large number pledged that, in addition to this, they would call on Governor McCall and urge his immediate action.

The situation is a peculiar one. A representative committee, of which President Charles Eliot was a member, called on Governor McCall on May 1 and presented strong arguments in favor of war prohibition, asking him to request the legislature to memorialize Congress for the passage of the measure. The governor seemed profoundly impressed but, after a week had passed and no action had been taken, a smaller committee waited on him, only to observe a marked change in his attitude. He said he felt sure such a recommendation would have no weight with the legislature. The committee then called upon the chairman of the house and the president of the senate, only to be assured by both that they felt certain the measure would pass each branch by an overwhelming majority. Calling again on Governor McCall, they were told that there was no precedent for such a recommendation; that the governor's office was executive and not legislative. They were able to cite a precedent during the administration of Governor Rice, but this had no apparent effect upon the governor's mind. When last interviewed and urged not to fail the women of Massachusetts, he asserted that he had not failed them, as he had recommended to the Federal Government the establishment of the Massachusetts mobilization camp in dry territory. This reminds one strongly of the old story of the lad whose father refused to take him to the circus, but assured him he might visit his grandfather's grave. We shall be glad to have the camp in a dry zone, but what is such a crumb for the Massachusetts men in comparison with the loaf we have asked for the men of the nation?

I sat beside Miss Cora Stoddard on the platform during this great meeting and again and again we turned to each other and said: "Can you believe your ears?" Surely the "little one has become a thousand and the weak one a strong nation." I said, "I wish Frances E. Willard, Lillian Stevens and Mrs. Hunt might have lived to see this day," and she replied, "I think they must be looking over our shoulders." Thank God for the new recruits and the strength of the mobilizing army, but, oh, I thank God, as I am sure every pioneer W. C. T. U. woman must, that it has been permitted to us to work for this cause before it became popular, while there was reproach in the very name, and when the Woman's Christian Temperance Union sang, as a solo, what is now becoming a grand national chorus:

"We're out for Prohibition."

LOCATING THE $700,000,000 WASTE

FRANCES P. PARKS, National Corresponding Secretary

"Modern war means bending all the energies of all the people to a common end." To some the call comes to serve their country in the trenches over seas, others must stand behind the fighters and conserve the resources of America. There is no place but our own land to which to look for an adequate food supply. America is the end of the line and if she fails to feed herself, must go hungry. Not only must America feed herself, but all Western Europe depends upon her for food. The Secretary of Agriculture has published an estimate of the food waste in the kitchens of the United States. Translated into terms of money, the department puts it at $700,000,000 annually, or about $7.00 per person.

Wartime "Informal Dinner" Menu

"Ten men sat down at dinner the other evening in Washington," says Secretary Houston. "It was a 'little informal dinner,' and they ate raw oysters on the shell; a rich clear-green turtle soup; freshly caught shad with roe, garnished with potatoes and mushrooms and other trifles; broiled mushrooms, boned breast of guinea hen, grilled, with slices of Virginia ham; new asparagus; green peas; new potatoes; romaine salad, accompanied by a variety of choice cheeses; ice cream and fresh strawberries—and at the very end a savory omelet.

"Having accomplished this feat, they had recourse to iced cordials and liqueurs to counteract possible ill effects of their overeating. The comic relief to this dull spectacle was provided by their conversation. They discussed the high cost of living, the imminent famine in foodstuffs which they assumed to exist, and 'What can I do to help in this war?' They all had forty-inch chests and forty-eight-inch waistlines, and were too old to enlist.

"The answer to the question they were asking themselves and one anotner lay among the broken meats in the pantry from which their dinner was served. The cost of the unnecessary and wasted food at this one dinner was easily twenty-five dollars. This would have paid the monthly grocery bill of any one of hundreds of American families, or would have given twenty-five Belgian children the supplemental meals they require for one month."

An Excellent Conservation Recipe

Twelve women sat at luncheon in Chicago two weeks ago. They represented the 7,000,000 women included in the membership of the National Council of Women. The menu was simple, cream soup, chicken and ham sandwiches, salad and coffee. They discussed the high cost of living, the need for co-operation in the elimination of waste, thrift teaching and increase of food supply. "I learned a lesson in food economy from my laundress," said Mrs. B., president of a large organization of women. "Cook had boiled a ham. I expressed regret that the fat at the top of the pot must be wasted when the government was especially emphatic in warning against waste of fats. 'But, surely, you do not throw out the pot-liquor?' questioned the laundress, and she proceeded to tell us how her mother utilized the water in which a ham had been boiled. Following her directions, we had three excellent dishes on as many days from that pot-liquor. The first day, mixed vegetables, cut in small cubes and cooked in some of the liquor; the second day, a dumpling dinner; and, on the third, as delicious a bean purée as I ever tasted. I am passing on to groups of women, my lesson in thrift. We must not throw away fats as we once did."

Automobiles to Be Used for the Collection and Distribution of Vegetables

Another told of a thousand bushels of seed potatoes secured from out-of-the-way farms by women who own automobiles. Later, the automobile "teams" will gather the surplus of vegetables and fruit from these farms, which would otherwise be wasted, and deliver them to the distributing points.

KING ALCOHOL AND THE KAISER

From Governor Arthur Capper's Address at Kansas W. C. T. U. Convention

If we let King Alcohol support and aid the kaiser in this war and permit them to fight side by side, the American people may see another Valley Forge in which the whole nation, not merely the army, will suffer.

Uncle Sam gets three hundred million dollars of the dirtiest money the world ever saw as his share of the revenue every year from a traffic which costs him not a cent less than five billion dollars. And we have statesmen (?) who wonder how we possibly can get along without this revenue, the bribe paid by the liquor interests for the privilege of debauching one hundred and three million people—if it can!

Let me try to give you some idea of what Uncle Sam permits the booze business to do to him in return for this bribe.

It is the cause of 75 per cent of the nation's crime, of 60 per cent of all of its destitution. That alone is a fearful indictment of this national curse.

It also is the cause of 50 per cent of all Uncle Sam's defectives, the children born simple-minded or deformed.

It makes crazy 30 per cent of all his insane.

It causes every year the death of 100,000 drunkards and makes 100,000 new drunkards out of Uncle Sam's boys and young men.

It ruins every year 60,000 of his girls.

It makes orphans every year of 800,000 of his children.

It causes the murder every year of 3,000 wives. You read of such cases almost daily in the newspapers.

It smothers every year 2,500 babies through the carelessness of drunken, besotted parents.

It does all this and more to the nation every year that Uncle Sam may get this three hundred millions of blood money which cost him five billions.

The yearly cost to the nation in the price of the liquor consumed is two billions of dollars. The yearly cost to us as the result of licensing this agent of degeneracy, debauchery, poverty and crime, is five billions. That is the tax King Alcohol assesses every year on the one hundred and three million people of the United States.

Think of supporting King Alcohol and undertaking a war at the same time.

I have no more use for the saloon than has the woman who possesses a drunken husband. From what I have seen or known of its work, I believe liquor and the saloon have destroyed more lives, made more women and children widows and orphans, ruined more homes, created more grief, sorrow and appalling wretchedness, than a war like the great war in Europe had it continued from the time of Christ down to the present day.

Here is the biggest truth in America today. No one thing can do half as much to increase our industrial and our national efficiency as putting the saloon out of business completely and absolutely. This only can be done by adopting national prohibition. In generations to come men will call prohibition the greatest reform in the history of the world.

(Copyrighted 1917 by J. T. McCutcheon)

SWEARING UNCLE SAM

"Do you promise loyally to protect me and mine while I am away fighting for you?"

PROHIBITION AS A WAR MEASURE ADVOCATED BY CONVENTION OF NATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS OF NURSES

JANE A. STEWART

The National Organizations of Nurses of the United States held the greatest convention in their long and remarkable history at Philadelphia during the last week of April and the first two days of May.

The most signal act of the entire varied assembly was the adoption, at the joint closing session, of a resolution to send a telegram to President Woodrow Wilson urging him to push the passage of the National Prohibition Amendment now before the United States Congress and advocating prohibition as a war measure.

Among the most vital utterances of speakers were those which pointed out the dangers of the drink evil and the use of alcohol as a medicine.

The sale of liquor to enlisted men was deplored by those earnest, thoughtful nurses who had seen its evil results among the soldiers on the Mexican border during the late Mexican campaign.

"By government control of alcohol alone, the food saving will be great," declared one speaker; "and the health saving immeasurable."

It was a remarkable scene that was witnessed in the big beautiful ball room of the Bellevue-Stratford hotel, usually the center of frivolous social affairs and of fashionable functions. The nurses came down in hundreds from their joyous reception at the roof garden and packed the ball room assembly hall to pass the resolution. In this same room they heard the impressively clear illustrated talk by Dr. Thompson of the American Social Hygiene Association, picturing the horrible physical ravages of the dread devastating venereal diseases, classing them with alcohol and tuberculosis as menaces to the health of the nation and calling for Federal action as a war measure.

"There is as much syphilis as tuberculosis and gonorrhea is very prevalent," said Dr. Thompson. "Civic and educational organizations must combine with dispensaries and hospitals to wipe out these diseases." He advised educational exhibits (separate exhibits for men and for women) such as that held at Coney Island where over 20,000 men saw and studied the object lesson during eight weeks; declared that personal contact of the victim with persons of clean minds will aid the work; pleaded for sex hygiene teaching and impressed the need for warring against quack doctors and patent medicines.

"The value of such a gathering as this," he said, "in the battle for the abolition of social diseases and of the use of alcohol, is beyond computation. We are fighting for the rights of mankind and for the future peace and welfare of the world; we realize how great the task and the elements of self-sacrifice involved. It is a supreme test and we must all act and work and serve together."

"I tell my patients not to use alcohol in any form," said an intelligent nurse. "I think that the use of alcohol in medicine will soon be a thing of the past." This was the general view of the nurses. Many eagerly received and carried home with them for careful study the valuable leaflets of the World's and National W. C. T. U. department of Medical Temperance. Among these were "The Passing of Alcohol," by Ellen B. Bradley, R. N., associate National W. C. T. U. superintendent of Medical Temperance, and a number by the World's and National superintendent, Mrs. M. M. Allen, including "New Evidence Against Alcohol," "Recent Medical Opinions and Findings Against Alcohol," "Some Things Women Should Know About Alcohol," etc.

Five years ago, it is apropos to note, the American Nurses' Association went on record as endorsing "Votes for Women." The main association has affiliated with it two national nursing groups, the National League of Nursing Education (formed in Chicago in 1893); and the National Organization for Public Health Nursing (formed in 1912); forty-five state nurses' associations; forty-eight county or city associations, and two hundred and forty-eight alumnae associations. From the beginning all have combined to elevate the educational status of nurses and to sustain the best professional ideals. The affiliated national organizations of nurses have ably promoted the development of the work of nursing as a feature of public service, including school nursing, municipal and rural nursing, social service in hospitals, the proper preparation of nursing teachers and of women nurses for responsible posts as hospital heads, nurses' training school superintendents, members of public boards of health, etc.

Positions of public trust now opening for well trained nurses call for a rather unusual combination of personal experience and special training, and for women possessing these qualifications there is a pressing demand.

PENNSYLVANIA SUFFRAGISTS SOLID AGAINST LIQUOR

"Suffragists are solid against booze," is the assertion of Mrs. George A. Dunning of Philadelphia, chairman of the Woman Suffrage party, as quoted in the Philadelphia North American.

"If the national amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors during the war is not passed by Congress, the suffragists will try to boycott the use of liquor by asking people to pledge themselves to abstain from purchasing or using any form of alcoholic liquor during the term of the war.

"We have just sent a series of telegrams to President Wilson, urging the enactment of legislation to insure nation-wide prohibition and requesting him to promote by every means in his power the immediate passage of the measure now before Congress. The suffragists are united on this subject. It is the first departure from our national platform of 'suffrage only.' We have decided to oppose the liquor traffic because we feel that it is a matter of such vital interest to the country.

"When it comes to a question of booze or bread, there is no doubt where any sensible person stands. All the men and women of my acquaintance have come forward to endorse the movement. Many of them have always been accustomed to a mild use of liquor in their own homes. But they are now strong for prohibition during wartime.

"I have just come from a fashionable wedding, and in other times it would not have been considered complete without some kind of wine or champagne. This afternoon the guests were served with mineral water, and all approved of the change."

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, The Union Signal, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
The Date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
Remittances should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
Change of Address. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
Campaign Edition (Monthly) 35c a Year

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, May 31, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National W. C. T. U., will attend a conference of the representatives of the various national temperance groups called by the Federal Council of Churches for Thursday, May 31, at its offices in New York City. The conference is held for the purpose of outlining a temperance educational program for the Army and Navy training camps. Before returning to National Headquarters Miss Gordon will spend a few days in Washington, D. C.

PROMOTE PROHIBITION PATRIOTISM ON JUNE 5

It has undoubtedly occurred to every advocate of prohibition that June 5, the day appointed by the government for registration, will be an opportune time to create sentiment for prohibition as a war measure. Patriotic meetings will be the order of the day and at this time one's love of country almost involuntarily expresses itself in work for prohibition of the liquor traffic. In one state, at least, June 5 is to be observed as a day for the enlistment of the women as members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. We feel sure that the day will be celebrated by white ribboners everywhere in a way to give the war prohibition movement a splendid impetus.

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, 561 Thirty-third St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

KEEP THE WIRES HUMMING

If by some magic the frenzied efforts of the liquor interests to control the action of Congress and the administration on the prohibition question could be visualized before the eyes of the Christian people of the nation, it would certainly arouse them to a realization of the need of action. They have been misled into thinking that the liquor interests are quiescent, awaiting the will of their country and prepared to yield gracefully if the order to close their breweries and distilleries shall be given. As a matter of fact the telegraph wires are kept humming and the United States mails are burdened with the protests and demands of the liquor interests directed to Congressmen and Senators, and the President. Lobbyists in the employ of "the trade" are dogging the footsteps of the Congressional lawmakers and all possible pressure is being brought to bear to check the movement for national prohibition. It is unbelievable that the good people of this land should sit quietly by and permit these men of mercenary motives to control the situation, when so much is at stake. There is one way and only one to checkmate their efforts, and that is for right-minded people to give articulate expression to their convictions through telegrams and letters, addressed to President Wilson, Senators and Congressmen. These communications must be sent today, not tomorrow, not next week or next month, but today. Let not the sun set on your good intentions. Write the telegram, dictate the letter, and see that it gets into the next mail. What is more, see that your neighbor, your business associate, your relative, your butcher, your baker, your candlestick maker, do the same patriotic act, and hasten the doing of it. In the next few days deluge Congress and the White House with such a shower of appeals and prayers for National Prohibition as will insure a response in immediate legislation.

BE OF GOOD CHEER!

Is there lurking in the heart of any white ribboner a feeling of discouragement because interest today seems concentrated on war enterprises to the exclusion of all else? Be of good cheer, there never was a time in the history of our organization when there was more reason to expect a generous response to an appeal for our cause.

How many white ribboners during these latter days have had come to them for help and counsel some who heretofore had ignored or possibly scorned the W. C. T. U., but who now turn to "organized mother love" to point out to them the way to work for protection for their enlisting boys? Prohibition had meant to them little or nothing when their sons were sheltered in the safety of their homes or in a dry community; today as they are saying good-by to them as they leave for "somewhere in the United States" there comes the heart-breaking realization that their loved ones may soon be at the mercy of the forces of evil. Instinctively they turn for help to the organization that they know has for years tirelessly battled with that foe of youth, the legalized liquor traffic. Could there be a more opportune time to give them a chance to enlist with the other Christian women of the nation in securing by means of nation-wide prohibition protection not only for their own lads but those of other mothers?

The soul of every mother-hearted woman today is surcharged with love for her country, and she is eagerly seeking some definite, practical way to translate her emotions into action. Virtually all organizations are taking up some phase of relief work, but few of them go into it equipped with the tried and tested machinery of the W. C. T. U. Thousands of sailors on our battleships have for years had as treasured possessions comfort bags made by white ribboners; thousands of soldiers in the regular army recognize in the National superintendent of the department of Work among Soldiers and Sailors a staunch friend and comrade, and welcome her visits and communications. With a knowledge of these facts and many others that might be stated, what woman in your community would not consider it a privilege to join the ranks of our peaceful army which has for years been engaged in ministrations that will make it an invaluable aid in the present national emergency?

Today the heart of every true American is very tender toward the nations overseas, because of a kinship of suffering that makes for love and sympathy. Last week our National W. C. T. U. president, through the president of the World's W. C. T. U., urged upon the governments of France and England the moral protection of the boys going from the United States. Full well we know that our white ribbon comrades in these countries will do all in their power to second our appeal to this end. What American mother could resist an invitation to join this world-wide organization, with branches in every one of the countries of the allies, and thus help to sweep from America and from Europe the traffic in liquor and vice?

Never was the bow of white so potent to win as today. Let us give the invitation to join the W. C. T. U.; let us tell its wonderful history, explain its fine equipment for patriotic service, and show the marvelous opportunity which lies before it to do a work world-wide in scope when the war is over. Let us make the women of this country our debtors by urging them in these momentous days to join the white ribbon army in its holy war.

THE MAN IN THE UNIFORM

The personal liberty of the liquor dealer is rapidly disintegrating. Khaki-clad figures are on every street corner and the blue and white Navy uniform seems almost omnipresent, but the saloonkeeper sees among these men not one prospective customer. He dare not, under penalty of imprisonment, sell even a dime's worth of booze to him who wears a United States uniform. Alas for John Barleycorn! While the government has not yet prohibited the conversion of the 7,000,000,000 pounds of perfectly good foodstuffs into alcoholic liquors, what are the liquor dealers going to do when so large a part of the citizens of the United States are donning the uniform of Uncle Sam and thus placing themselves in the proscribed class? With the Army and Navy giving strict orders to their men not to drink under threat of court-martial, and penalizing the liquor dealers for selling to all men in uniform, with Secretary of War Baker expressing his determination to protect the mobilization camps from liquor and vice, with Secretary of the Navy Daniels doing all in his power to establish a dry zone around his jackies, the liquor men may find a remarkable decrease in the number of customers for the liquors made out of the 7,000,000,000 pounds of good food products they are with avaricious hands holding so tightly. Why do they not win the everlasting gratitude of their fellow-citizens and make for themselves a name as patriots by voluntarily going out of the liquor business and utilizing their plants for the manufacture of denatured alcohol or the production of foods?

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

A vast extension of the social welfare work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has become an immediate necessity. This work is embodied in several departments of national, state, county and local union endeavor. The successful prosecution of this service to meet the war emergency calls for greatly enlarged machinery. It calls for the careful conservation of energy and expense. It necessitates doing away with all duplication of effort. In order that we may adequately measure up to the great opportunity entrusted to us as members of the W. C. T. U., efficiency must everywhere be promoted. To help to the utmost our boys who are giving themselves to the service of God, country and humanity demands not alone diligence and consecration, but also the maximum of W. C. T. U. team-work.

Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, National superintendent of the department of Work among Soldiers and Sailors, agrees with the General Officers of the National W. C. T. U. that for the duration of the war there must be a special centralization of the activities of this department. The best available machinery of our entire organization must immediately be put in motion to exploit an explicit plan agreed upon by the National Officers and the National superintendent. This plan must be loyally followed by state, county and local superintendents of the department of Work among Soldiers and Sailors. National W. C. T. U. headquarters at Evanston, Illinois, will at once become the center from which this plan will be vigorously pushed. Other National superintendents whose department work is of a character to be especially useful in connection with W. C. T. U. emergency service will also receive from the administrative office of the National W. C. T. U. the same helpful assistance.

GENERAL OFFICERS,
National W. C. T. U.

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do You Know the Answers to These Questions? They May Be Found in THE UNION SIGNAL of May 24

Ten questions, the answers to which will be found in the preceding number of THE UNION SIGNAL, will appear each week. The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. What method of urging upon the President and Congress the necessity of national prohibition as a war measure is being advocated by the National W. C. T. U. as most effective at this time?

2. Why is prohibition a necessary step in the abolition of the social evil?

3. Tell the story of the three weeks of prohibition enforced by General Funston in San Francisco at the time of the earthquake.

4. What summary measures in violation of "personal liberty" were carried out by order of General Pershing during the Mexican border trouble?

5. What tribute is paid by a Tennessee colonel of the National Guards to "bone dryness" as a military precaution?

6. What is the almost universal opinion of present day army officers in regard to the use of liquors by soldiers?

7. Why should patriotic citizens oppose an increased tax on alcoholic liquors as a war measure? What was Abraham Lincoln's attitude toward this means of replenishing the treasury of the United States?

8. What methods are the liquor interests of Porto Rico using to prevent a vigorous campaign by the prohibitionists of the island?

9. Give ten suggestions for patriotic service during the war.

10. Name some popular ways of using the Campaign Edition in campaign states and as an aid to W. C. T. U. work.

THE W. C. T. U. AND THE RED CROSS

For the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to co-operate with the American Red Cross in its distinctive work of making hospital supplies does not mean the merging of our emergency work into that of the Red Cross.

The American Red Cross in its latest circular sent out by the department of military relief, A. R. C. 164, includes directions for making comfort bags. For many years the National W. C. T. U. department of Work among Soldiers and Sailors has been making comfort bags for men in the regular army and to supply battleships. We shall continue to make and fill comfort bags under directions given by Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, National superintendent of this department of work.

Any local union or individual white ribboner desiring to assist in furnishing base hospitals with the many articles needed for the sick and wounded should apply to the nearest Red Cross unit and secure explicit directions for making these supplies. With the exception of comfort bags, supplies intended for our base hospitals should be standardized by Red Cross rules and distributed through Red Cross channels. Send to National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Evanston, Ill., for the revised "Comfort Bag" leaflet. Note the points of difference in material and filling for bags to be given soldiers and sailors. Soldier boys prefer khaki; sailors like blue denim. Khaki colored thread and darning cotton would be most useful to the soldiers; black thread and darning cotton to the sailors.

The American Red Cross, in its campaigns for funds, distinctly states that membership in the Red Cross carries with it no obligation for service. There are so many pressing demands upon our energies to help our boys in training and mobilization camps, so much to do just now to help secure war prohibition, we urge our W. C. T. U. women to hold steadfastly to the emergency plans of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

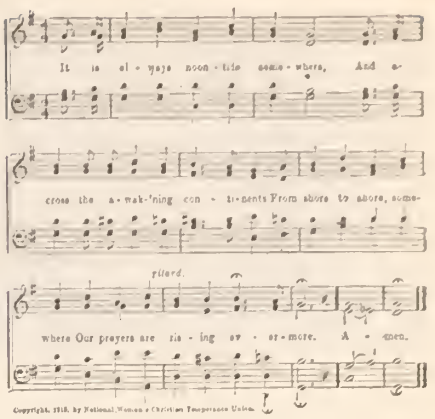
Whenever a large consignment of comfort bags is forwarded to a military camp or naval training station, in order to save duplication of effort, information of the fact should be given to the nearest Red Cross unit; but records of all work done should be carefully kept to be embodied in our reports, as usual, at the end of the W. C. T. U. year.

PERSONAL MENTION

Mrs. Margaret B. Platt, former president of the West Washington W. C. T. U., recently spent a week in Forest county, Pennsylvania, speaking under the auspices of the Forest county W. C. T. U. Her itinerary was arranged by Mrs. E. S. Collins, treasurer of the county union, a former resident of West Washington. In appreciation of the fine work done by Mrs. Platt, Mr. Collins made Mrs. Platt, by the payment of $100, a life patron of the National W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Nelle G. Burger, president of the Missouri W. C. T. U., has been appointed by Governor Gardner a member of the state board of charities and correction. The board consists of the governor, two women and four men, and its efforts are in line with W. C. T. U. work. This appointment is a well-deserved recognition of the tireless devotion of the Missouri W. C. T. U. to the cause of public welfare, and the ability of its state president.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



AT THE NOONTIDE HOUR

At the sacred noontide hour let the white ribboners of the land unite in prayer daily for our country and all other countries, that all may come to see the true Christian and humanitarian point of view in this world crisis; for the protection of "our boys" from the physical and moral deterioration from drink and vice that follow in the wake of war; for our President and his advisers that divine wisdom may rule every decision, that lasting peace may speedily come and the will of the Father of all peoples be done throughout the earth.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. ESTELLE SMITH, a faithful member of the Pine Grove union, Hood River, Oregon.

MR. OTTO GAUTSCHI, New Matamoras, Ohio, an honorary member of the local union. Mrs. Gautschi was for a number of years the faithful and efficient secretary of the New Matamoras union.

J. W. HUGHES, father of Mrs. Daisy Hughes Phipps, Atlanta, Texas, and a loyal friend of the W. C. T. U. and the cause of prohibition.

MRS. LIZZIE M. MASON, an ardent promoter of W. C. T. U. principles and plans, former state superintendent of the Press department, loyal member Highlands union, Denver, Colorado.

MRS. REBECCA E. LIVERMORE, beloved member Highlands W. C. T. U., Denver, Colorado, whose especial interest was the Cottage Home and its inmates.

MRS. JENNIE HARTONG, a devoted Christian, wife and mother, for many years a faithful member North Side W. C. T. U., Denver, Colorado.

MRS. ABBIE S. DARLING, charter member, Greeley union, Colorado, whose eighty-five beautiful years of life were filled with thoughtful service for the unfortunate.

MRS. EVA JEWELL, Salida, Colorado, a sweet-spirited, lovable and loving friend, a royal and loyal supporter of W. C. T. U. work and workers, the devoted mother of the state Y. P. B. secretary, Miss Winona R. Jewell.

MISS STROUT RETURNS TO AMERICA

After five years' strenuous work as World's W. C. T. U. representative in Burma, Miss Flora E. Strout has left that "land of pagodas" for a year's furlough in her own country, America. A farewell reception was given Miss Strout at Moulmein by the Burmese W. C. T. U., the Y. P. B.'s and L. T. L.'s, Ma Mya, president of the W. C. T. U., presiding. Enthusiastic words of appreciation of the splendid work done by Miss Strout were spoken, and she was presented with a beautifully carved ivory paper knife, suitably inscribed. It is expected that Miss Strout will arrive in San Francisco the last of May. During her visit to Ceylon, on her journey home, she addressed sixty meetings, at which the different races had wide representation. A great impetus was given to the cause. Miss Strout will be warmly welcomed by her American white ribbon sisters.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAY

June 9—Flower Mission Day—Birthday of Jennie Casseday

TREASURER'S REPORT

FRANCES E. WILLARD MEMORIAL FUND
LILLIAN STEVENS CAMPAIGN FUND

MARGARET C. MUNNS, Treasurer

The following contributions to the Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund and to the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund have been received since the last report. Contributions to the Memorial Fund are in each case $2 unless otherwise stated:

Memorial Fund

New Mexico: Clovis, Albuquerque, Las Cruces. Total, $6.

Indiana: Poseyville; Columbus; Sims $1; Hose (Princeton); La Porte; Milo $.50; Van Buren; Milan $1; Love; Syracuse; Swayzee $1.50; Amboy; Wabash; S. Marion; Gas City; Bourbon; Oak Chapel $2.10; Hebron; Oak Ridge; Hanfield $.50; Newcastle; Bath (Memorial); Deer Creek; Back Creek $.50; Goshen; Union City $2.50; Tuxedo; Bloomington (West Side); Maple Run $1.50; Griffin $.50; Gary; Jefferson; Homer $2.43; Muncie; Normal City; Marion (Central); Albany; Marion (30th St.) $1.02; Mattie Gibson; Broad Ripple; Little Ridge; Esther $4; North East; Kingsleys; Upland (Eunice Wilson); Vayhinger; Herbst $.50; Spencer; Bluffton; Elkhart; Peru; Markle; Millersburg; Roanoke; Millersburg; Bedford; Boonville $3; Lafayette; Lafayette (Central) $1.50; Alquina; Frances Willard; Connersville; Edgerton; Frankfort; Lebanon; N. Manchester; Mulberry; Kirklin; N. Wabash; Rossville; McCall; Anderson $2.10; Ray; Moores Hill; Bright; Hartford City; Lawrenceburg $.60; Roll; Oxford; Mt. Vernon; Earl Park; W. Richmond; N. Vernon; Richmond (Mary Hill) $1; Wollcottville; Fountain City; Richmond (Frances Willard); Albion; Clinton; Ft. Wayne (L. M. N. Stevens); Morgantown; Crystal; S. Kokomo; Kentland; Caroline Edgerton; Cherubusco; Powers; Farmland; Montpelier; Winona Lake; Newcastle. Total $189.15.

Oregon: Albany; Albina; Ashland; Baker; Bellevue; Brownsville; Creswell; Chehalem Center; Deborah Livingston; Drain $3.66; Gardiner $5; Gresham; Hood View; Medford; Milton; N. Bend; Oakville; Philomath; Pine Grove; Plainview; Richmond $1.25; Roseburg; The Dalles; Union; University Park; Portland (Central). Total $57.91.

New Jersey: Hoboken; Jersey City (Helping Hand) $1; Flemington $3; Somerville; Chatham; Morristown; Clinton; Union Chapel; Dumont; Dover; Madison; Haddonfield; Camden (Stevens); Succasunna; Hackettstown; Rockaway; Roseville $2.12; Elmer; Newark (No. 3); Salem (No. 1) $5; Friesburg; Irvington $4; Soldiers' Home; Hancock's Bridge; Passaic; Miss F. M. Pelletrean; Columbus; Halsey St. M. E. Church; Perth Amboy; Mt. Holly (No. 1); Milltown; Moorestown $8; Medford; Jamesburg; Palmyra; Cranbury; Rancocas; Mt. Holly (Armour); Moorestown Y. P. B.; Allendale. Total $91.12.

Nebraska: University Place; Union; Valentine; Lexington; Fremont. Total $10.

North Dakota: $50.

Wyoming: $25.40.

Massachusetts: $161.50; Middleboro. Total $163.50.

Illinois: $251.25; Cairo $4. Total $255.25.

Oklahoma: $79.55.

Kansas: Heber $1.50; Halstead; Mulberry $1; Wellington $1.50; Oneida. Total $8.

Pennsylvania: Shiremanstown; Corry; North East; Union City; Kelletville; N. Girard; Deidley; Scranton (Central); Jersey Shore (No. 1, Willard); Swiftwater; Montoursville $3; Picture Rocks; Bridgeport; Conshohocken; Hatboro $1; Lansdale; Whitemarsh; Milton; Northumberland; Thorptown; Dewart; Turbotville; Milford; Philadelphia (Local) $25; Matamoras; Forksville; N. Bridgewater; Lewisburg; Russell $4; Tunkhannock; Braintrim; Meshoppen; Factoryville; Dallastown; Freeland; Forty Fort; Beach Haven; Hazelton; Rochester; Ambridge; Beaver; Beaver Falls; College Hills; Fallston; Freedom; Patterson Hts and Riverview; Smith's Ferry and Midland; Vanport; Towanda; E. Smithfield; Camptown; Wyalusing; Milan; Rome; Mars; Jacksonville $4; Slippery Rock; Eau Claire; Zelienople; Butler (Central, S. Side); Petrolia; Beaverdale; Emilie D. Martin; Patton; Van Ormer; Morrellville; Moxham; Johnstown (Central); Sandy Ridge; Cochranville; Spring City; Kennett; Enola; Toughkenamon; Honeybrook; Coatsville; Mechanicsburg; Luzerne; Edwardsville; Nescopeck; Nanticoke; Plain; Pittstown; Shickshiny; W. B. (Anna Gordon, Lillian Stevens, Addie Parsels, Frances Willard); Colgrove; Alexandria; Woodbridge Y. P. B. Total $213.

Colorado: $120; Lamar. Total $122.

Delaware: $33; Wilmington $2.26. Total $35.26.

Georgia: Athens; Marshallville; Hartwell; Midville; Vienna; Calhoun; Camilla $3; Ellaville; Statesboro; Summerville; Ellaville L. T. L. $1; Quitman; Atlanta (Willard, Piedmont W, L. T. L. $1); Elberton; Geneva; Macon; Quitman L. T. L. $1; Norcross; Covington; Lumpkin; Macon L. T. L. $1; Barnesville; La Grange; Commerce; E. Macon $1; Williamson; Winder (W, L. T. L. $1); Sandersville; Williamson L. T. L. $1; Eatonton; Cartersville; Whigham; Union Point; West Point; Greenville; Lithoma; Wrens (W, L. T. L. $1); Americus; Jackson; Meriweather $1; Oxford; Tifton; Buena Vista; Hawkinsville; Milledgeville; Newman; Bremen; Madison; Demorest; Thomasville; Tallapoosa; Thompson; Boston; Douglasville; Blackshear; Davisboro; Dublin; Augusta (Woodlawn, City); Davisboro; Moreland $.50; Fitzgerald; Waycross; Adairsville; Monticello; Columbus (Theresa Griffin, Rose Hill); Cardele; Fort Valley; Richland; College Park; Rockmont; Albany; Douglas; Hephzibah; Dawson; Baxley; Savannah (City, Armor); Temple; Brunswick; Chauncey; Bainbridge; Waynesboro (W, L. T. L. $1); Vidalia $1.35; Oxford Y. P. B. $1. Total $167.85.

Minnesota: Red Wing; St. Paul (Willard, Daytons Bluff, Central); Cottonwood; Minneapolis (Bary Burner, Hobart, Lucy Hayes, Sunrise, Hyland Park, 8th Ward $2.46); Lincoln; Marshall; Beaver; Dassel; Preston; Backus; Mankato (Central); Chatfield; Northfield; Tracy; Morristown; Pipestone; Etna; Delano; Grapeland; Monticello; Granite Falls; Crookston; Albert Lea; Willmar; Pequot; Granada; Marietta; Madelia; Atwater; Elliott; Garden City; Browns Valley; Malta; Winona; New Auburn; Nashville; Le Sueur; N. Mankato; Madison; Rushford; Mabel; Benson; Blue Earth; Amboy; Welcome; Hancock; W. Duluth; Wells; Bricelyn; Mora; Ada; Spring Valley; Aitkin; Fairfax; Elmore; Fergus Falls; Harmony; Brookpark; Redwood Falls; Vernon Center; Clarkfield; Thief River Falls; Warren; Fairmont; Wasica; Truman; Buffalo; Lake Crystal $1; Walters Y. P. B. $1; Madeline Southard $1; Euclid $1; Dundas $1; Walters $1; Rochester $5; Echo $5; Browns Valley $2.10; Dover $2.50. Total $169.06.

Montana: $64; Kalispell. Total $66.

South Idaho: Nampa; $40. Total $42.

Florida: $87.64; Terra Ceia. Total $89.64.

New York: Montezuma $1; Buffalo (S. Side); Clarence Centre; Bath; Painted Post $1; Wayland; Gardiner; Kingston; Milton; Tillson; Ulsterville; Newark; Rose; Katonah; Verona Vestal $1; Arcade; Brainardsville; Brushton; Burke; Chateaugay; Earlville; Malone $10; New York (Fordham, Harlen, Lathrop); Holley; Kendall; Knowlesville; Oneonta; Roseboom $1; Albany (First, Allen, Somerset, Willard); Cohoes; Guilderland Centre; Ravena; Summit; Lansingburgh; Troy (Central); Sand Lake $1; Andover; Angelica; Canaseraga $1; Phillipps Creek; Richburg $2.53; Fulton $10; Hannibal; Minetto; New Haven $3; Orwell; Oswego $1; Palermo $1; Phoenix; S. Hannibal; Gasport; Lockport; Middleport; Niagara Falls (Willard) $5; Olcott; Pendleton $.50; Ridge Road; Tuscarora; Warren's Corners $4; Afton; Bainbridge;

(Continued on Page Eleven)

FLOWER MISSION AND RELIEF WORK

WE CAN DO MUCH TO HELP!

Dear Comrades:

In these heart-stirring days of uncertainty and anxiety when people everywhere are asking "What can we do to help?" let all superintendents of the department of Flower Mission and Relief Work keep their ears to the ground to hear the varied cries of distress and weariness. This department has ever been an active one, has heard and answered these cries in the past, but new conditions create new demands. Our great country has entered into the world war, and it is fitting that this department take its place in the front ranks of the many urgent relief activities. Later on, if the war continues long, which God forbid, this department must be ready in every state to do its part in caring for our brave soldiers' families who will be found in need of comfort, cheer and material aid.

The work for the French orphans continues; local, county and state unions, also individuals, are adopting these unfortunate little ones. I wish every one interested in this department could have listened to the two English women, who spoke recently in Boston on behalf of these French children, as they told how the lack of food would at first be noticed in the indifference of the child to its play, then how it would grow more and more languid until its little body became ripe for the seeds of tuberculosis, when millions of dollars could never save its life! Ten cents a day seems but little indeed to keep well and happy one of these innocent victims of this horrible war, thus averting the dread disease, tuberculosis! I believe no better work can be done through this department, this year, than rescuing from disease and death these fatherless children of France!

Where any superintendents are in the vicinity of mobilization centers, training and military camps, a good work might be accomplished by sending little nosegays to the soldier boys occasionally, also when entraining. The Loyal Temperance Legion could help much. Once more let me urge that all workers in this department work as they have never worked before!

Your loving comrade,

LELLA M. SEWALL

1661 Beacon St., Brookline, Mass.

PROGRAM FOR FLOWER MISSION DAY, JUNE 9

LELLA M. SEWALL, National Superintendent

DONATIONS of flowers, plants, fruits, garments, etc., for the department

HYMN, "Nearer, My God, to Thee"

READING, "Out-Door Music"

PRAYER

SONG, "We Must Win Prohibition," Popular Campaign Songs, page 28

READING and Consideration of the National Report of the Department of Flower Mission and Relief Work

PAPER, "What This Department Can Do to Help Bring National Constitutional Prohibition." Are we doing all we can along these lines? Give ten minutes to the consideration of this question

SONG, "The Advancing Host," Popular Campaign Songs, page 29

READING of the Resolution for War Prohibition

RECITATION, "Why a Flower Mission"

SONG, "Crusade Glory Song," Popular Campaign Songs, page 19

READING, "The Flower Mission Trinity," "Some Phases of Relief Work," or "Sowers of Prohibition Seeds"

DISTRIBUTION of department literature and text cards

SONG, "America"

WHITE RIBBON BENEDICTION, Numbers 6:24-26

Send all donations to the sick and poor as far as possible.

Advertise the meeting in advance by notices in churches and newspapers. Also have it well reported in the papers.

The leaflets mentioned above and all supplies of the department of Flower Mission and Relief Work can be procured from Miss Lella M. Sewall, 1661 Beacon Street, Brookline, Mass.; or of the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Illinois.

TREASURER'S REPORT

(Continued from Page Ten)

Coventry $1; Earlville $1; Otsetic $.50; Columbus and S. Edmeston; Brookton; Coddington Rd; Dryden; Etna $5; Forest Home; Groton; Ithaca $5; Jacksonville; Kennedy's Corners; Myers; Peruville $7; Slaterville; Snyder Hill; Trumansburg; W. Danby; Dryden Y. P. B. $1; E. Syracuse $1; Eastwood; Marcellus; Rockwell Springs; Skaneateles; Savona $1; Syracuse (Central, Clover Leaf, Willard, Mizpah $1, S. Side, W. End); Nunda; Eastwood Y. P. B.; Marcellus Y. P. B. $1; S. Lima; Cayuta Lake; Montour Falls; Ellenville; Plattekill; Barnesville; Carlisle; Charlotteville; Cobleskill $5; E. Cobleskill; Howe's Cave; Lowville; Frankfort; Herkimer; Ilion $3; Poland; Little Falls; Auburn (Willard); E. Auburn; Sherwood; Union Springs; Westford Y. P. B. $1.32; Blodgett Mills; Marathon; Canisteo; Corning; Corning (N. Side) $1; Hornell; Kanona $5; Prattsburg; Wallace; Brooklyn (Bethesda $2.50, Headquarters, E. W. Greenwood, Flatbush $5, Ft. Hamilton, Janes, Lucy Hayes $1, Park Slope, Vigilant $5); Tupper Lake; Binghamton (Charity $1, Willard, N. Side, S. Side, W. End); Cascade Valley $1; Deposit; Endicott; Johnston City; Union (Faith); Vestal Centre; Windsor; Binghamton (S. Side Y. P. B.); Cairo; Catskill; Windham; Hensonville; Prattsville; Elizabethtown; Beacon (East Side, W. Side); Pawling; Clinton Corners $1; Fishkill $2.42; La Grange; Pine Plains; Pleasant Valley $4; Schultzville $1; Washington; Schultzville Y. P. B. $1; Adams; Antwerp; Carthage; Black River; Clayton; Henderson; Lafargeville; Lyme; Philadelphia; Watertown; Sackett's Harbor; Carmel; Patterson (W, Y. P. B., L. T. L.); Cold Spring L. T. L. $1; Allegany; Cattaraugus; Delevan; E. Salamanca; Ellicottville; Little Valley; Machias $1; Portville; Sandusky; Albion; Kuckville; Medina; Morton; Waterport $.75; Transit; Lancaster $1; Coughdenoy $1. Total $428.52.

Michigan: Freeport; Lamont $1.50; Albion; Adrian; Saranac $1; Allegan; Coats Grove $1; Fremont; Harbor Beach; Crystal Falls. Total $17.50.

West Washington: Woodland; Willard (Tacoma); Charleston; Bremerton; Arlington; East Snohomish; Harford (Tacoma); Hoquiam; South Anacortes; Anna Gordon; Bay View; Burlington; Fredonia; Prairie; Rhoda; Riverside; Aberdeen; Quilcene; Auburn; Ravenna; South Park; University; Buckley; Maxwelton; Green Lake; Port Orchard; Seventh Ward; Central (Tacoma); Central (Vancouver); Battle Ground; Delta; Raymond; Thomas and Christopher; Ballard; Washington Boulevard; Kirkland; Willard (Seattle); Queen Anne; Montesano; Elma; Satsop; South Aberdeen; Dungeness; Fairhaven; Excelsior; Central (Bellingham); Enumclaw; Wenatchee; North Anacortes; Belleville; Big Lake; Edison; Hamilton; Harmony; LaConner; Montborne; Mount Vernon; Bellingham North; Puyallup; Sumner; Chehalis $3.00; Coupeville $2.50; Lynden $2.50; Manchester $12. Total $129.

Tennessee: Atwood $2.05; Chattanooga (St. Elmo); Mt. Vincent; Savannah; Lewesburg $2.50; Knoxville (Willard); La Follette; Jackson; Whitlock; Paris $4; Memphis (E. End); Maryville; Martin; Bristol; Grand Junction; Concord $4.95; McKenzie; Erin; Ridgely $1.90; Petersburg; Nashville (S.); Chattanooga (East) $1; Lebanon $2.15; Rogersville $3; Awalt; Fayetteville; Springfield; Chattanooga (S. Side); West Nashville. Total $63.55.

Rhode Island: Providence $5; Centreville; Mt. Pleasant; Greenville; Bradford; Block Island; Apponaug; Woonsocket; Carolina; E. Greenwich; Jamestown; Wakefield; Washington; Greenville Y. P. B. $1; Willard; Portsmouth; Clarks Mills; Frances E. Willard; Tiverton $3; Anna Gordon $3; Westerly $1.29. Total $45.29.

Kentucky: McKinney; Falmouth; Oakland; La Grange; Dawson Springs; Sanford School; Ft. Thomas; Eminence; Franklin; Nicholasville; Maysville; Madisonville; Smithfield; Fulton; Lexington (Central). Total $30.

North Idaho: Sandpoint $3.25; Orofino $3; Laclede $8.35. Total $14.60.

Virginia: Cape Charles; Franktown; Irvington; Ebenezer; Melfa; Lincoln; Onancock; Chase City; Onley; Amelia; Shawsville; Blackstone; Mt. Solon; Norfolk; Deep Creek $1; Atlantic City $4; Fairmount Park $1; Lynchburg $3.30; Waynesboro; Stuarts Draft; Victoria $1.55; Park View; Brughs Mills; Susan Jones, $1.40; Buchanan; Saunders Memorial; Bowling Green; Roberts Memorial; Round Oak; Dispitanta; Keysville $1.50; Roanoke (Central); Chester $2.60; Roanoke (S. W.); Centralia; Salem; Boyce; Bridgewater; Clintwood; Dayton; Surry $4; Mary L. Wells; Hinton $2.15; Phoebus; Honaker; Soldiers' Home; Kiser; Remington $1; Boykins $2.54; Stephens City; Branchville; Winchester; Claremont; Fonticello: Central Hill $1.50; Dendron; Wakefield; Pounding Mill; Richlands; Norton; Wittens Mill; Wise; Luray; Shiloh; Berkley; Marietta Lyon Y. P. B. $1; Blacksburg. Total $134.54.

East Washington: Endicott; Pomeroy; Cloverland; Grandview; N. Yakima; Frances Willard (N. Y.); Almira; Frances Willard (S.); Central (S.); Fairview (N. Y.); Colfax; Union Park (S.) $1; M. B. Platt (S.); Bridgeport; Garfield; Walla Walla $2.26. Total $31.26.

Missouri: St. Joseph (Central); Springfield (S. Side, McDonald, Neva Thomas, Eliza Peterson); Sikeston; Seymour; Tarkio; Uniondale; W. Plains; Webb City; Waverly; Weston; Westboro; Alba; Amity; Atlanta; Kansas City (Morris, Central, McDonald, Hoffman); Linneus; Lebanon; Armstrong; Brookfield; Ludlow; Louisiana $1; Brunswick; Luray; Bonne Terre; Lamar; Liberal; Burlington Jct.; Laredo; Bowling Green; Bethany; Lone Oak; Carthage; Lebanon; Moberly; Chula; Cameron; Mt. Hope; Milton; Clifton Hill; Curryville; Mound; Marshall; Clarksville; Memphis; Cottage Grove; Camden Point; Martinsville; Mt. Washington; Empire Union; Maplewood; Eagleville; Marshfield; Forest Green $1; Fulton; Nixa; New Hartford; Golden City; New Madrid; Gallatin; Odessa; Glasgow; Hazel Hill; Osgood; Pierce City; Higginsville $1; Paynesville $1; Hannibal (Central, W. Side); Pleasant Grove; Ritchey; Hollister (Neva Thomas); Ionia; Rich Hill; Richland; Roanoke; Jefferson City; Jackson; Strawberry; Kirksville; Kingsville; Silex $.75; Skidmore; St. Louis (Cen-

(Continued on Page Fourteen)

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE MOUNTAIN

ADA LOUISE WILCOX

(Continued from last week)

"Some boy, that," he murmured. "What do you know now? Never even batted an eye when I said 'Hicks'!"

As Lynn sped along the pike he changed his mind regarding his destination. Instead of going to Hiwassee, he drove five miles out on the south pike and turned onto the mountain road. Two miles back on it, he stopped before a church, at the side of which lay a neglected graveyard. Owing to the slope many of the graves were built up with rocks to prevent their washing away, and were covered with rough-hewn slabs.

Lynn made his way to the one farthest from the road, stopped, felt for a certain rock, pulled it out, and thrust his arm in.

What he expected to find was there all right. For a moment he hesitated. If he hid in the church, he would have no authority to arrest any one who might come there—no one would come before night. If he ran his car back of the church where it would be hidden by the thick grass, watched by a window in the church, saw the stuff taken out of the grave—let the fellow get started, then gave chase and caught him in Beantown with the goods on—

It was sun-down when he raised a window and dropped into the church.

He turned on his flashlight for an instant and swept the shadows, smiling as the light touched a wall-text and he read, "Strong drink is raging." He stretched himself on a bench and clasped his hands under his head. The western windows framed masses of pine through which the sky glowed fiery red. A young moon peered modestly through an upper pane and dropped hastily behind the trees; the stars came out; the night wind whispered over the graves; owls called; a whip-poor-will cried.

Lynn shivered at the memories the sounds called up. How many times he had heard them, on the other side of the mountain, as he lay hidden behind some rock to warn his father of the approach of a stranger. How bitterly he had resented his life, fear-haunted and full of lies.

The feud spirit of the mountain had burned in him with an intense hatred for the thing that was so often the beginning of dissension. It was then that he promised himself he would fight it some day—to the death. His own sister had run away and married—recklessly, to escape the guard duty at home. Then his mother had died. He recalled her eyes, hunted, furtive.

His father, though, had neither scruples nor fears, always laughing at them for theirs, kindly and outspoken except concerning the still. Men were going to drink, he reasoned, and he might as well get the benefit of it. As for license, federal law had no business on the mountain.

When his father married again, the boy, too, had run away. And because he had it in him to be something better, he had worked, educated himself somehow—studied law because liquor could be fought with law. How long ago was it? Fourteen—fifteen years? He was thirty and he had never been back since. Yet, the recognition between him and the mountaineer that morning had been mutual. The incident gave him no uneasiness, though. His relation to the other side of the mountain would have to be known some time. He could never marry until he took his full name again. Would Hilda marry him, if she knew? The thought of her made his heart warm—suddenly it missed a beat.

Through the window he saw a moving light touching the tops of the trees. A car was coming. He sprang to the window. The rhythmic beat of the machine became audible. It might be a doctor on his way up the mountain—no, it was stopping down the road.

Presently, a man appeared, flashing a tiny will-o'-the-wisp light before him, as he took high, cautious steps over the tangle of grass and weeds. His features were indistinguishable. Four times he passed between the slab-covered grave and his car. On the last trip he stumbled. Lynn heard a crash and a curse. He ducked below the window and hugged his voiceless mirth. Directly followed the cranking of a car.

Before the man struck the pike, Lynn was after him. His own lights were out—he was following near enough to keep the red eye on the rear of the pursued car in sight. He must let the man get into Beantown.

Suddenly, on the edge of the thickly wooded gully the advance car stopped and the lights went out. Lynn had barely time to "shut down" that his own car might not betray him. Something was wrong with the dark mass ahead. Was the man concealing the whisky at that place?

Lynn turned on his lights and his horn honked madly. The dark mass never moved. He glided along side. It remained dark and silent. He looked in. There was no driver. At the moment of this discovery he heard a splash. Some one was crossing the branch at the bottom of the gully.

Lynn got out warily and began a cautious inspection of the car. Again he hugged his voiceless mirth. The gasoline tank was empty!

As he stepped around to the side next the gully his foot struck something hard. He stooped and picked up an old-fashioned silver watch, attached to a broken silk cord, which evidently had caught on the car as the man sprang out and had jerked the watch from his pocket. Under his own light, Lynn opened it. On the inside front cover was a picture of Hilda Tolliver! The man in the car must have been Colonel Tolliver!

In the gray dawn Lynn stood by the window of his stuffy room, his hands thrust deep into his pockets, his eyes fixed somberly on the mountain. He had carried his life beyond the shadow cast by the other side of that mountain, only to get into a deeper shadow on this side.

Hilda might forgive him his father—she would never forgive him her father! Did she know? Was this why she feared for him? Or was it her father she feared for?

The sun looked over the mountain and for a moment threw its glory over the sordidness of Beantown. Lynn felt the comfort of its light and warmth. He flung himself on the bed and slept for two hours. When he opened his eyes, the marshal was gazing meditatively at him.

"Must have been on a joy ride," he grinned.

The twisty corners of Lynn's mouth unwound into a barely perceptible crinkle. He sat up and returned the meditative gaze.

"I'm glad you're here," he said, "I need a confessor." And he plunged into his story.

"This is what the man dropped in the road by the car," he finished; and reaching under his pillow, he drew out the watch.

The marshal did not open it. He shifted himself to the window-sill and turned his face to the street.

"Lynn," he said, slowly, "I've known who you was ever since you come to Beantown. I saw you once when you was small—the other side of the mountain. You had a look on you then that you ain't never lost. I've known about the man that carries this watch, too. It's love of money that makes him risk his reputation on this fool whisky business. He'd sell his front porch for fire-wood, if it wasn't for his women-folks; an' yet, he's wantin' the money for them."

"Why hasn't Beantown found him out?" asked Lynn.

"He wears his sheep's clothin' so easy, that if they ever do suspicion a whiff of wolf, they think it's the smell of all-wool-and-a-yard wide. Besides, Aaron Whittaker's his scape-goat. Aaron's near-beer kin to him, an' years ago the colonel set him up in that cross-road grocery. The colonel holds stock in a Cincinnati distillery. He has it buy an' ship all the groceries Aaron sells, an' smuggles in the whisky at the same time. The colonel's sharp—always has business out of town the week whisky comes in—always is shocked when he gets home an' hears of it. He give out Monday he was goin' to Nashville for the week. He must have come back to Hiwassee that night—I mean, he never did get no farther. When his car stopped, he was afraid to stay an' he put out cross country where he could catch that early train."

"How did you get onto all this?" inquired Lynn.

"That's my secret," chuckled the marshal. "I've been inchin' along an' inchin' along a right smart while. I ain't been sure till now."

Lynn gave him a quick glance and dropped his eyes.

"Is that why you haven't shown him up before?"

The old man turned a dull red. He opened the watch and looked earnestly at the face of the girl.

"Boy," he said gently, "there's a woman back of everything a man does or don't do. Hilda's holdin' you back—I"—he snapped the watch shut—"I—wanted to marry Hilda's mother."

The mayor reached out his hand silently.

"There!" exclaimed the marshal briskly, "we've got that out of our systems. Now we'll settle Dan Tolliver."

"He said he hated to see me in a losing fight," mused Lynn. "If I could only show him up to himself, and not make it public, but if he were common Jake Brown—"

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

Wee mite of pinkness with rosebud face,
The dew of unborn ages on thine eyes,
The heritage of eons, and the prize
Of kings and prelates. At thine elfin grace
Empires fall. Close in her soft embrace,
Madonna-like, the mother sanctifies,
Her earthborn babe in wide-eyed, rapt surmise,
Glimpsing in him the sinews of the race.

A wraith, a gem from out the great unknown,
"A little bit of heaven" sent to men
Down through the rifts of blue, a blossom blown
From fields of asphodel beyond our ken.
Perchance the gates of heaven have slipped ajar.
And thou, the Christ-child's gift, hast come afar.

Mississippi Women Lining Up for Patriotic Service

MADGE MONTGOMERY, Vice-President Mississippi W. C. T. U.

In spite of the fact that at so momentous a time the beloved president of the Mississippi W. C. T. U., Mrs. S. E. Stanley, by reason of illness, has been obliged to commit to others the direction of the state work, the women are adjusting themselves to the change from a neutral nation in a state of peace to one soon to engage in active warfare. Under such conditions a weakened union, or even disorganization, is to be feared, but the tremendous issue at stake, prohibition of the liquor traffic, the importance of which is intensified by war and the removal of home restraints from our soldier boys, averts such a result in this as in other states. Active support of the war emergency prohibition bill has prevented any possible thought of laying down arms in our peaceful warfare.

Mrs. Stanley passed on to the unions the order authorized by the National W. C. T. U., that letters and telegrams urging the enactment of a prohibition measure be sent to President Wilson. In the Mississippi White Ribbon for May was published the patriotic call from the National Executive Committee and the brief but effective one from Miss Gordon.

Mississippi is fortunate in having an efficient superintendent of Work among Soldiers and Sailors, Mrs. Jennie Standifer, of Gulfport, who is co-operating with Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher in intelligently directing the unions in helpful service to the Army and Navy. The state union is planning to rent an electric fan for Fort Bliss or some other hospital. Local unions are co-operating with the Red Cross and in some instances have taken the initiative in forming auxiliaries. Many W. C. T. U. women are taking the helpful courses offered as an aid to patriotic service.

As time progresses and the tri-state camp of Louisiana, Arkansas and Mississippi is located, original ideas of service will develop, but so far the situation is one of co-operation with "Mother National." The attitude of Mississippi women toward the war, however regrettable that event, is one of patriotic service and W. C. T. U. women, with the advantage of a training for loyal endeavor in all that pertains to the honor and welfare of a country beloved, are well forward in the ranks.

Kansas Mid-Year Meeting Shows Outlook Excellent for Proposed Membership Increase

EMMA W. GROVER

The mid-year meeting of the Kansas Woman's Christian Temperance Union was different from any heretofore held, in that it never before took place in the extreme northwest portion of the state, and was, for the first time, a meeting of the official board, the nine districts having been eliminated and the county presidents becoming members of that body. There had been a little doubt on the part of some as to the advisability of the change, but the meeting at Norton seemed to dissipate all such fears, and it is believed that participation by the county presidents in the official work will greatly increase their interest and enthusiasm and that the organization will be correspondingly strengthened.

An important, as well as pleasant, feature of the meeting was the presence of so many county presidents from the western section of the state, who, because of the great distances, have heretofore been unable to attend.

A large amount of business affecting many phases of the state work was dispatched during the three days the women were together, a very helpful institute held, and an evening reception enjoyed, with cordial welcomes from representatives of the different organizations of Norton, the entertaining city. Another evening there was a public meeting, with an excellent address by Mrs. Lillian Mitchner, the state president, and a most interesting report of the National W. C. T. U. Convention by Mrs. Eva Morley Murphy, state recording secretary.

Reports from state superintendents, county presidents, and field workers were full of enthusiasm and showed a remarkable amount of work done in every part of the state. Local unions and counties are being organized, together with Y. P. B.'s and L. T. L.'s, in such splendid numbers that the outlook is excellent for reaching the goal of increase in membership set by the National W. C. T. U.

Miss Zoe Atchison, state Y. P. B. secretary, was present throughout the meeting, arranging for the annual young people's conference to be held in June. Miss Atchison combines so much enthusiasm with her practical plans that the success of the conference is assured, so far as her efforts in that direction are concerned.

The citizens of Norton gave of their best, and the members of the official board most heartily appreciated their loving and generous hospitality.

It was the unanimous opinion that the three days given to consultation and discussion of the work were exceedingly profitable, and that quickened interest and increased activity will result therefrom.

The state convention will be held in Topeka.

Montana's Prohibition Activities

LORA S. LA MANCE, National Organizer

Montana, the third largest state in the Union, has all kinds of experiences in store for the worker who comes into the state. For one thing, the people cannot do enough for the visitor, and for another thing they will not even let her speak. "We carried prohibition. That question is settled. Let's let well enough alone." Ten times in fifteen days that plea was made in the southeastern part of the state. The itinerary the state officers had planned fell apart like a rope of sand.

Sheridan county is larger than Rhode Island, Connecticut, Massachusetts or Delaware. More than thirty saloons are running full blast trying to make all the money they can before they are put out of business January 1, 1919. Twice the county has put up great petitions for a local option election only to have a wet board of county commissioners turn them down on the flimsiest and shabbiest of pretenses. Thirty parties stand ready to go out after new names if there seems the slightest hope that the petitions can get by the wet court. In spite of rain, mud and semi-blizzards the audiences in most places were fine. This county went dry almost two to one in the prohibition battle last fall, a fact which makes it all the more aggravating that three men can "hold up" the will of the people.

At Culbertson this empire county was organized by the writer. Mrs. Carrie Armstrong was made its first president In spite of the long distances three of the four unions were represented. The women intend to organize the whole county for work.

Glasgow, the county seat of another great county, had a flood at the time of the coming of the worker. A third of the town was under water and the hospital and court house were surrounded. A near neighbor is Poplar in an Indian reservation. An Indian school is located here and Indians were present at the meetings.

Richland is the only dry county in the state. At the towns Sidney and Fairview, which are fine examples of prohibition, excellent meetings were held. The Indian reservation towns of Wolf Point and Poplar, in another county, where no liquor can be sold because of the prohibition in force on Indian reservation land, are hives of business and both are growing faster than any of the wet towns near them. Prohibition means prosperity to each and every Montana town that has tried the experiment.

Intake has put out the saloons quite recently. It is so elated over this fact that in spite of storm, snow and mud the meetings were well attended. Glendive sent the speaker to the various schools.

At Baker the union was reorganized and at Hysham a fine new union is now in existence.

Mrs. Ada Wallace Unruh and Mrs. Mary Harris Armor are to be in Montana, also, and great good is expected from their visits. The state officers are anxious to build up public sentiment so that when prohibition goes into effect in 1919 the people will see that the law is enforced.

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE MOUNTAIN

(Continued from Page Twelve)

"Your conscience needn't be hurtin' you; if you can clean up a cess-pool without stenchin' up the whole town, it's better," said the marshal, decidedly. "It don't do folks no good to be gazin' at filth. You've got his watch. Was there a number on the car?"

"No," answered Lynn, "he'd taken it off—"

"I reckon the car is Aaron's," interrupted the marshal.

Lynn's long face shortened to its normal length. He sprang up with a joyous whoop. "I have it," and he unfolded his plan.

That afternoon, to a position opposite the bank, the mayor ran a hoarse-horned little Ford. Across its front hung a sign that read: "Found: at two o'clock this morning, on the south pike, three miles from Beantown, this car containing five gallons of wild-cat whisky. No tag on the car. Owner may have the same on identification of the machine before Saturday, August 29, on which date it will otherwise be sold at auction, and the whisky emptied into the branch.

"LYNN MURRAY, Mayor."

The spectacle caused Beantown's eyes to pop out of its head. For a moment its tongue clove to the roof of its month, then it wagged. Similar notices were sent through the county.

No one claimed the car.

On Saturday, Cake county poured itself, pressed down and running over, into the court-house square.

Beantown had a grim sense of humor. The audacity of the young mayor amused it. Its every-day element jeered and sneered; but its respectability, worn and threadbare, placed itself on a platform, temporary like itself, and prepared to voice its sentiments through the principal of the school.

The marshal confided to Lynn in a gruff whisper that "that man could talk longer on nothin' an' say the least about it of any one in Cake county.

Today, however, the crowd, impatient for the climax, refused to hear liquor statistics. "Even his figures lie," commented the marshal. "Cut out the arithmetic! Get down to business!" yelled a voice. The principal never had been known to get down to business. He turned helplessly to the mayor.

Lynn rose. Like the poles of a magnet his black eyes drew all other eyes and held them; the twisty corners of his mouth unwound into the crinkly smile. The crowd whooped a cheerful response.

"Friends," he cried, and the word in his warm, sympathetic voice compelled silence. "I'm not here to talk temperance. You're intelligent men; I won't insult you with facts every fool knows—that whisky spoils a man as a citizen, a worker, a home-keeper and a gentleman. I'm not here to talk law—but I am here to enforce it. Men make laws for the good of themselves. When they elect officers, they have a right to demand that those laws be executed. As your mayor, I'm dead set on putting through every whisky law Beantown ever passed. Beantown says whisky shall not be sold in its limits. Now I admit that I can't prove this car-load of whisky was coming into Beantown; but judging from the past, I feel that I'm justified in believing that it was intended for the throats of Beantown's men and boys. This I do know—it's wild-cat whisky, unlicensed—"

(Continued on Page Fourteen)

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE MOUNTAIN

(Continued from Page Thirteen)

"How do you know?" snarled Aaron Whittaker, who stood near the platform.

Lynn looked searchingly down at him. "Men don't get any other kind out of the old mountain graveyard," he said coolly.

A ripple of significant laughter swept the crowd.

"It was you," shrieked Aaron, wildly, "that stole my car last Monday night. You think I don't know who you are and what you're up to. Let me get on this platform—I'll tell Beantown—"

The marshal had him by the arm. The crowd stirred and murmured uneasily.

"Let him speak," called Lynn, "this is a free country."

But Aaron's fury was beyond speech.

And then it was that Lynn saw Colonel Tolliver on the outer edge of the square. He was pushing his way to the platform and as he stepped up, beaming pleasantly, the murmur ceased.

"I can't testify to the contents of this car," he began, "not having seen them"—a loudly repeated sneezing from behind a nearby tree caused the colonel momentary embarrassment. "I—that is to say—Aaron here—had already confided to me the loss of his car. I have been out of town until yesterday evening. I regret"—he paused, his face saddened. "It is never a pleasant task to be a breaker of idols, an iconoclast—"

"Speak English," growled a voice.

The colonel swelled; his sheepskin clothing ripped and the wolf showed through. His lips drew slightly back and there was a note as of a howl in his voice. He seemed almost to crouch as he turned to Lynn and cried:

"Ask the mayor of Beantown whether he was elected under his own name? Ask him where he was born? Dare him to deny that for thirty years his father has run a still on the other side of the mountain? Ask him why he should talk about law when he's selling wild-cat whisky under cover of prohibition."

Lynn was on his feet protesting, his face white-hot with anger and amazement at the temerity of the attack; but before he could find his voice some one called from the crowd, "Set still, Mr. Mayor, set still!" The spectators to these moving-tral, Centenary, W. End). Total $177.75.

(Continued on Page Sixteen)

TREASURER'S REPORT

(Continued from Page Eleven)

Ohio: Hicksville; Middlefield; Melbron $.80; Massilon; S. Kirkland; Oxford; Conneant; Savannah; N. Ridge; Springfield (Friends Church); W. Bedford (Willard); Jamestown (Willard) $1; Le Roy $4.50; Hayes; Montra; Sinking Springs; Bellaire; Mayfield; Gnadenhutten; Toledo (Willard); Eaton $.75; Jeffersonville; Greenville; S. W. Akron; Sabina; Highland; Zanesville (Willard) $1; Belfast; Painesville; Mangan $1; Bradford; Ervin Y. P. B. $1; Bethel; E. Portsmouth; Malvern; Fowler $1.50; Madison; E. Hamilton; Viola Romans W. $3.25; Lindenwald; Oxford; Newark (Willard); Phoneton; Berlin Heights; Mineral City $.75; Monroe; Leesburg; Hunter $1; Ridgway; Big Plain; Waynesfield $1; W. Lafayette; Morrisville Y. P. B. $1; N. Jefferson $1; Bealsville Y. P. B. $1; Nova; Dover; Salina (Willard) $2.30; Richwood $1.50; Isabel Miller $3.50; Pataskala; Roscoe; Nashville; Nevada; New Richmond; Granville; Mentor $1.05; Roseville; Attica; Delta $3; Belfast Y. P. B. $1; Carrollton; Elizabeth Mann; Commercial Pt; Derby; Marysville; Mariettta (Willard); Chagrin Falls $6; W. Portsmouth; McGuffey Y. P. B.; Mt. Blanchard; Ruth Stephens $1; Lorain; Wapakoneta; Mirrison; New Lexington; Washington Twp $1; Athens $4; Marion (Willard); Jackson; W. Williamsfield; Jerry City; Peru; Winchester; Pinney; Oldham; Cambridge; Bowling Green; New London $4.90; Sarah A. Struthers; Scotch Ridge; E. Village; Elizabeth Ensign; Tiffin; Cedarville; A. C. Turrell; McClelland; Yellow Springs; Jamestown; Xenia (S. Side); McClelland Y. P. B. $1; S. Charleston; Beach City; Ashland; Marietta; Rising Sun; Tiro; Urbana $3; Crusaders $1; Sidney; Scott $.70; Kent; Corey; Delaware (Central); N. Kenton; Columbus (Central); Woodstock; S. Solon; Sugar Grove; Sugar Grove; W. Salem; Wooster $2.50; Bucyrus; Marion Civic Y. P. B. $1; Schoenbrun; New Holland; La Rue; Xenia; Sharon Center; Sycamore; Short Creek; Ashley; Zanesville; Casstown; Sylvania $1; Doyleston; Coalgrove; Springfield; Bloomdale; Foodstown; Medina; S. Akron; Macksburg; Pancoastburg $1; E. Liberty $1; Norwalk; Batavia; Greenfield; Van Wert (N. Side); Bryan; Sidney; Cary (Willard); Gettysburg; Maplewood; Eagleville $1; Bascom; Upper Sandusky; Slater Y. P. B. $3; Akron (North Hill); Bedford; Garwood; Manchester $5; Kananga; New Concord; Springfield (Willard); Bettsville; Chester; Warsaw $1.05; Cadiz; Cincinnati (Central); Berea (Jaite); Washington Ct. House; Fish Creek; Perrysburg; Cora Daniels; Unionport; Lucy Hayes; Perry; Homeworth; Wauseon; Atlanta; Staunton; Strasburg; Esther Handley; Germano; Springfield; Bellefontaine; Stoorer; Ensign; Rehoboth; Sugar Valley; Totogany $1.40; M. E. Dollarhide; Newton Falls; New Guilford; N. Benton; Mt. Vernon; Berlinville; Neal Dow L. T. L. $.75; Montpelier; Lakeside; Tippecanoe City $1; Lancaster; Troy (Central); Cumberland; Pemberville; Owensville; Benkner Cadiz $1; Lancaster; Mt. Herman; Liberty Center; St. Paris; Ravenna (M. Woodbridge); Five Points $4; Willoughby; Canton (1st) $2.75; Ludlow Falls $1; E. Orwell $3. Total $446.95.

North California: $123.55.

South California: West Long Beach (Central).

Alaska: Sitka $5; Petersburg. Total $7.

New Hampshire: Exeter; Strantham $1.10. Total $3.10.

Maryland: $88.66.

Connecticut: Great Plain.

West Virginia: Clarksburg (Broad Oaks Mothers' Club); $55.25. Total $57.25.

South Dakota: $58.

Vermont: $12; Orleans. Total $14.

Utah: Ogden.

Iowa: Sheffield $1.

Texas: $66.50; San Benito $1.15. Total $67.65.

Maine: Caribou; Elliott; Columbia $1; Presque Isle. Total $7.

Mrs. C. H. Lovett, $100.

Mrs. Louella Stewart, $50.

Royalty, "Temperance Songster," $68.06.

Alice Abbott, $1.

Mrs. Anna S. Benjamin, $1.

Total to date, $9,215.95.

Campaign Fund

Mrs. Anna S. Benjamin $1; Mrs. M. J. Philpot $1; Mrs. Moffett $1; Mrs. Chase $1; Mrs. Thompson $1; Alabama $15; No. California $9.68; No. California $2; Colorado $75; Connecticut $5; Florida $90.51; Georgia $63.50; N. Idaho $14.41; S. Idaho $11; Illinois $43.30; Indiana $5.25; Iowa $3.10; Kansas $119.16; Kentucky $32; Maine $4.20; Maryland $34; Massachusetts $48.88; Michigan $3; Minnesota $58.15; Missouri $19.65; Montana $24; Nebraska $100; New Jersey $26.60; New Mexico $6; New York $86; North Dakota $25; Oklahoma $26; Ohio $361; Oregon $1; Pennsylvania $153.19; Rhode Island $25; South Dakota $5.90; Tennessee $2; Texas $20.51; Vermont $17.55; Virginia $94.95; E. Washington $5.50; W. Washington $33.88; W. Virginia $7; Wisconsin $1; Wyoming $5. Total $1,628.87.

(To be continued)

The Choice of a

COMMENCEMENT GIFT

is easily made and sure to please if selected from the following list:

BOOKS

The Life of Frances E. Willard, Anna A. Gordon. Price $1.50.

The Federal Government and the Liquor Traffic, Wm. E. Johnson. Price, $1.00.

Social Welfare and the Liquor Problem, Henry S. Warner. Price, $1.00.

A Century of Drink Reform in the United States, Aug. F. Fehlandt. Price, $1.00.

The Anti-Alcohol Movement in Europe, Ernest Gordon. Price, $1.50.

The Liquor Problem, Norman E. Richardson. Price, 50 cents.

What Frances E. Willard Said. Compiled by Anna A. Gordon. Price, 75 cents.

What Lillian M. N. Stevens Said. Compiled by Anna A. Gordon, Price, 50c.

Jean Mitchell's School, Angeline W. Ray. Price, $1.00.

A Modern Madonna, Caroline A. Stanley. Price, $1.50.

Nineteen Beautiful Years, Frances E. Willard. Price, 60 cents.

The Man Who Forgot, James Hay, Jr. Price, $1.37.

John Barleycorn, Jack London. Price, $1.42.

Little Sir Galahad, Phoebe Gray. Price, $1.42.

The Golden Lamp, Phoebe Gray. Price, $1.42.

Dear Enemy, Jean Webster. Price, $1.37.

Black Rock, Ralph Connor. Price, 60c.

Sky Pilot, Ralph Connor. Price, 60c.

Two, Edith Smith Davis. Price, 40c.

SOUVENIR SPOONS

Rest Cottage Spoon, sterling silver oxidized. (Rest Cottage in bowl.) Price, $1.50.

W. C. T. U. Teaspoon, sterling silver. (Crusade Church in bowl.) Price, $2.

REST COTTAGE SOUVENIR

A Terra Cotta Placque, with Rest Cottage in bas relief, hand carved, hand tinted. Price, $2.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

For Soldiers and Sailors

To Place in Comfort Bags or for Distribution

Songsters. Each, 7 cents.

Pledge Card, with stub and bearing a profile of Frances E. Willard. Each, 2 cents; 50, 25 cents; 100, 40 cents.

Directions for Comfort Bags. Each, 2 cents; 50, 15 cents; 100, 25 cents.

Protecting the Home Folks (a warning against vice). Each, 2 cents; 50, 25 cents; 100, 40 cents.

Rally on the Flag (for veterans). Each, 2 cents; 50, 20 cents; 100, 30 cents.

Testament and Psalms, 12 cents.

Testament, 10 cents.

Gospels, Matthew, Mark, Luke or John. Each, 3 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

$2.50 PER DAY SALARY PAID ONE PERSON in each town to distribute FREE circulars, and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring. Non-alcoholic. Big demand, steadily increasing. J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7G, E. Harrison St., Chicago.

CONNECTICUT'S PROGRESSIVE PROHIBITION PLANS

WAR TIME ACTIVITIES PUSHED

MARY B. WILSON

Connecticut is experiencing an eventful year along many lines of activity. The fact that this is a legislative year adds to the opportunities of the W. C. T. U. for work, and the women have labored faithfully. Their influence has been strong, but not strong enough to secure the passage of all desirable bills, nor to prevent some undesirable ones from meeting with success. Bills providing for votes by women on excise matters and permitting hotels to sell liquor to guests on Sunday were killed. Measures allowing Sunday ball games and Sunday sales of ice cream, soda, tobacco, gasoline, etc., were passed, but vetoed by Governor Holcomb. A bill calling for a constitutional amendment providing for prohibition, and also one providing for woman suffrage, have passed through the first two stages toward realization, having been favorably reported by the committee having them in charg[illegible] the vote being [illegible] on each, and having passed the House by a very decided vote. "Practically the same men who voted for the prohibition amendment voted to put the suffrage measure also on its passage. In fact, there seemed to be a coalition of the prohibition and suffrage forces on both measures and thus they won out handily." The measures must now go before the Senate and House again in 1919, and if passed by a two-thirds majority of each body, be then put before the general public for a referendum vote. If a majority vote be obtained, we shall have suffrage for women in 1921 and prohibition in 1922.

Bills for limitation of the number of saloons, a state farm for inebriates and a reformatory for women are still under discussion. A movement is on foot to give the governor power to close saloons at his discretion during the war.

Plans are in the making by the temperance forces for strenuous work to send the right kind of men to the next legislature, and for waging a lively campaign for votes on the license question in the various towns next fall. Ninety-one towns out of a total of 168 are now no-license towns, some having become so by a majority of one. In such cases a man might say, "I am but one, but I am one."

Essay and medal contests are being held on every side, rousing interest and spreading knowledge among hundreds of children and their parents. Bridgeport, with its 865 foreign legioners, has held a medal contest among Jewish children, which was repeated at a birthday party in one of the homes, one among Italian children, and is preparing one among the Hungarian children.

Other departments showing special interest are Institutes, Franchise, and Soldiers and Sailors departments. Bridgeport, Meriden, Danbury Central, Milldale, Plantsville, and probably others, are holding special meetings for sewing, knitting, making bandages, comfort bags, etc., for the soldiers and sailors, or are doing these things at regular meetings, while listening to business and discussions, thus following the example set at Chautauqua of "doing fancy work while listening to lectures." Some of the unions are working in connection with the Red Cross Society, but reporting to the W. C. T. U., and others are working along W. C. T. U. lines only.

Bridgeport presented twenty comfort bags to the sailors on the L-5 submarine and received a letter of thanks from Secretary Daniels in his own handwriting. Meriden has sent twenty-five dollars for an electric fan to be used at Fort Bliss, Tex., and has also donated fifteen dollars to the Red Cross work.

The members of the Hartford county convention raised twenty-five dollars for an electric fan for Fort Bliss, and passed a resolution to the effect that every member of every union in Hartford county give at least one glass of jelly or one can of fruit or vegetables to the Red Cross this fall.

More vigorous than ever before is the woman's campaign "For God and Home and Every Land."

FIRST GUN FIRED IN IOWA STATE-WIDE CAMPAIGN

ELLA M. HILL

All Iowa was greatly disappointed that the transcontinental campaign tours had to be abandoned. The necessity for it was apparent to all, but it is hoped that at some future time such a tour may be arranged for, when Iowa may have the delight and honor of entertaining the National officers and workers.

To lessen the disappointment in and around Des Moines, a Polk county W. C. T. U. rally was held on May 3. This was in reality a starter for the amendment campaign. There were represented on the program, among others, the Des Moines Ministerial Association, Business Men's Temperance Association, Prohibitory Amendment Association, Federation of Woman's Clubs, Federation of Mothers' Clubs, Political Equality Club, and the Boy Scouts in a demonstration of first aid. In the evening Miss Margaret Wintringer gave the principal address, "The Temperance Laboratory of the War," Mrs. Linnie Carl, National Y. P. B. field secretary, introducing her. Miss Wintringer's famous collection of war posters was on exhibition, as were also twenty-eight posters made by Des Moines high school students, which were to have been exhibited at the time of the National conference. Mrs. Ida B. Wise Smith, state W. C. T. U. president, offered a prize of five dollars in gold for the best poster. This was awarded to Paul Pearson, a student of the East high school. Honorable mention was given Charles E. Crow, Mary Hall, Dorothy Twitchell and Arthur E. Love. The Polk county W. C. T. U. presented each of these young people with a copy of "Nineteen Beautiful Years." These posters were said by the judges to be remarkable. They will be on exhibition at the state convention, and it is hoped that some of them will find their way to the National W. C. T. U. Convention.

October 15 will be a critical day in Iowa's history. Under the name of The Allied Temperance Committee of Iowa, there has been formed an organization in which are included five temperance societies, the Prohibitory Amendment Association, Business Men's Temperance Association, Prohibition Party, Intercollegiate Prohibition Association and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This will and must be an aggressive campaign. Owing to the fact that so many think that because we have statutory prohibition and "bone dry" laws there is no further need, voters must be aroused in behalf of the constitutional amendment as never before.

Thousands of telegrams from Iowa have gone to President Wilson asking for national prohibition as an emergency war measure. God grant that the prayers of the nation may be heard.

Flower Mission Supplies

THE TEXT CARD should accompany flowers or other gifts on Flower Mission Day.

Flower Mission Scripture Text Card
Frances E. Willard Flower Mission Card
L. T. L. Scripture Text Card
Price, per 100, 12 cents.

Verses of Cheer, a collection of ten beautiful poems, printed on separate cards in the sepia shades. Price, per package, 25 cents.

Comfort Powders. Price, per box, 25 cents.

LEAFLETS

What the Flower Mission Can Do to Help Bring National Constitutional Prohibition.
Each, 2 cents; 50, 12 cents; 100, 20 cents.

What the Flower Mission Should Mean to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Community.
Some Phases of Relief Work.
The Flower Mission Trinity.
Each, 2 cents; 50, 30 cents; 100, 50 cents.

Program for Flower Mission Meetings.
Hints for W. C. T. U. Flower Missions.
Friends in Need.
Each, 2 cents; 50, 15 cents; 100, 25 cents.

Why a Flower Mission?
A Flower Mission Exercise.
The Story of Jennie Casseday.
The Story of the Roof Garden.
Each, 2 cents; 50, 35 cents; 100, 60 cents.

SOME LEAFLETS TO DISTRIBUTE ON FLOWER MISSION DAY:

The Shoemaker and the Little White Shoes.
The Common Joy.
The Story of the Dollars.
Each, 2 cents; 50, 20 cents; 100, 35 cents.

ORDER EARLY

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

The war situation makes our hearts heavy. Many of the white ribboners are saying good-bye to sons and brothers as they leave their homes for training camps. The women are responding loyally to the call for service. Letters and long distance calls asking what can be done are frequent. The directions from the National organization have been gladly received.

Perhaps one of the greatest crusades against the cigaret ever waged in any city is now being carried on in Des Moines. The new state attorney general, H. M. Havner, secured the services of John B. Hammond, the original author of the famous red light injunction law, to take charge of the detective work. He secured evidence of from three to eight sales against 130 places in the city. Raids of more than fifty of the largest establishments in the city were made in one day and thousands of cigaret packages were secured. The law provides a penalty of $300 for any dealer or property owner where cigarets or cigaret papers are kept for sale or gift. Warrants will be served immediately on each individual. The W. C. T. U. printed 15,000 copies of the law and distributed them among all the schools.

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year
Club rate for ten or more subscriptions, 25c a year
No other premium allowed.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

WHY NOT SEND THEM OUR OFFICIAL PAPERS?

What magazines have you in your homes these days? Going over the list as carefully as you please, where will you find the equal of THE UNION SIGNAL and The Young Crusader? Are these in the hands of your young people? If not, why not? Are you putting them into the hands of other young people? At this time, when we are cautioned constantly against waste, we can make no better investment than $1.00 for the weekly coming of THE UNION SIGNAL fifty times a year and $.25 for The Young Crusader, which will arrive twelve times a year—both filled with all sorts of good material and suggestions.

The following quotations from letters recently received will show what others think of these papers and what they consider worth while doing:

A Grandmothers' Club

"I have been trying out a new plan lately for getting new subscriptions for The Young Crusader. I am persuading the grandmothers, of whom we have so many in our organization, to send The Young Crusader to their grandchildren. I tell them I send it to my own grandchildren and they seem to like the idea very much. Most of these subscriptions that I enclose (17) came that way. I am going to keep right on with my grandmothers' club and see how many subscriptions I can get in the next few months.

"ADELAIDE ROOD,
"Lincoln, Neb."

"Pass a Good Thing Along!"—"Pass It On"

"Your Young Crusader has been coming to me the last four months, and I wish to express my gratitude to whoever it is that sends it to me. I had never heard of it before, but am very much pleased with it and believe it ought to be in every home, especially where there are school children, and am sending you a list of names that I want you to include in your subscription list."

What One Worker Has Done

"I have sent 430 subscriptions to the Educational Quarterly published by the National superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction, to schools and colleges, have sent about 550 subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL, to pastors in Fort Worth, Waco, Dallas, Houston, San Antonio, Austin, Galveston, and Beaumont; also to all the colleges in the state, public libraries, Y. M. C. A.'s and Y. W. C. A.'s. These subscriptions, with the exception of two, were for the Campaign Edition."—Extract from Texas W. C. T. U. Paper.

NORTH IDAHO PUSHING PATRIOTIC SERVICE OF MANY KINDS

(Continued from Page Four)

unions, have been sent to President Wilson, and also to our Representatives at the Capitol, asking for prohibition as a war emergency measure, both that our food products may be conserved, and as a safeguard for our boys. It is not the guns of the enemy that the mothers most fear, but the environments, and they demand that these be made as clean as possible, that the manhood of their sons may be preserved.

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

¶We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.
¶Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
118-120 Fifth Ave., New York
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE MOUNTAIN

(Continued from Page Fourteen)

picture-like scenes saw a tall, gaunt mountaineer edge and shove his way to the front. He was the man who, only the Monday before, had hurled epithets at the mayor and his methods.

Now he looked mildly over the gaping, expectant faces. His eyes were black, his lean, lined face was brown, his smile crinkly.

"I reckon the colonel, here, thinks he's tellin' the truth." The mountaineer glanced sideways at the colonel for a moment, then his face suddenly contorted, his lank form shook under loudly explosive sneezes.

The crowd roared with laughter. The colonel sat down, his bumble-dom authority in Beantown forever broken.

The mountaineer recovered.

"As I was sayin', there's truth enough in what the colonel's tellin' for the lies to limp on. Your mayor here is usin' his mother's name—Murray. It's a good name; his mother was a good woman. He'd a legal right to his father's name, but I don't blame him for not wantin' it. His father wasn't so bad, but he did make right smart of whisky till the state declared we'd all got to go dry. Since then he's quit. That ain't so long, but the point is—he's quit. Before that, he 'lowed he'd got as good right as any other man to make his own liquor; an' his neighbors 'lowed 'twas a heap easier to buy of him than to ride to town. He an' the federal government not agreein' on his rights, naturally he kept his still hid. Of course, when a revenue officer bothered him, he handled him some rough.

"The mayor, here, he always did have principles against wild-cat whisky an' tame-cat whisky. The government's agin wild-cat whisky because it don't get no revenue from it, but it ain't so hard on tame-cat whisky—an' whisky's whisky.

"Lynn's mother—died—an' Lynn, he run off, an' he ain't never been the other side of the mountain for fifteen years. But I reckon he remembered when the still men had John Barleycorn jugged, they'd bury him in a grave up to the ridge church buryin' ground. They wasn't to blame if some fool man come along an' dug him up. That's what happened last Monday night, only Lynn's father wasn't the one who'd made John Barleycorn nor yet buried him, an' Lynn, here, wasn't the one who dug him up."

The speaker paused an instant. The crowd was so still that the chirp of the sparrows under the court-house eaves was plainly heard. "I know," went on the man, "for I was there, hidin' in the church, havin' been in Beantown that mornin' an' suspicionin' "—he sneezed violently. "I was some surprised when I see Lynn, here, drivin' up. It was comin' on dark, an' directly I see he was fixin' to hide in the church, too. Not wantin' to interduce myself to him, I clumb into the belfry. An' about one o'clock, we both of us see a man come an' dig up John Barleycorn an' carry him piece by piece to a car. I reckon Lynn, here, saw him, but like enough he didn't know who he was—I did."

He stopped abruptly, then shook his head knowingly. "Nope! I don't speak the name of my past customers"—a violent sneeze threatened him, but he caught it.

"I've been hearin' about the fight the mayor's havin' against whisky—an' I reckoned he was gettin' pay for it—like revenuers; but when I was over here Monday an' see who he was, I knew there wasn't nary copper in it for him, not even credit to the store. When I find a man that's got principles he ain't paid for havin' I feel like givin' him the right hand of fellowship—even if he is my own son an' I'm his prodigal father!"

He turned to Lynn. "Howdy, son," he choked.

A mile away at Beantown station, they said it thundered out of a clear sky. They were mistaken. It was only the mighty voice of Cake county raised in honor of Beantown's mayor—Lynn Murray Hicks.

In the midst of the hilarious uproar, Lynn turned quickly to Colonel Tolliver, who still sat dazed and shaken on the platform. Into his hand he slipped the watch.

"I found it by the side of the car," he whispered. "Colonel, cut out the business, for Hilda's sake." The colonel's face became suddenly that of an old and worn man, his lip trembled, and his eyes blurred. His sheep's clothing still covered him as he walked away, but it hung loose.

Lynn never knew how Hilda got to him. He only knew that he was holding her outstretched hand, and that she was saying in a soft, almost breathless tone:

"I know about father, Lynn. I've known for months—and hated it. I had to tell you because I was afraid you'd think because your father—" She was gazing at him distressfully.

"Hilda!" he whispered, "Hilda!" For an instant Beantown faded away—there was only the majesty of the mountain, and for him the light of life in the glory of the girl's eyes.

Your Flag and My Flag

"Your flag and my flag,
And how it flies today
In your land and my land
And half a world away!"

A hand-colored post-card with poem by Wilbur D. Nesbit.

Price, 5 cents each; 50 cents per doz.

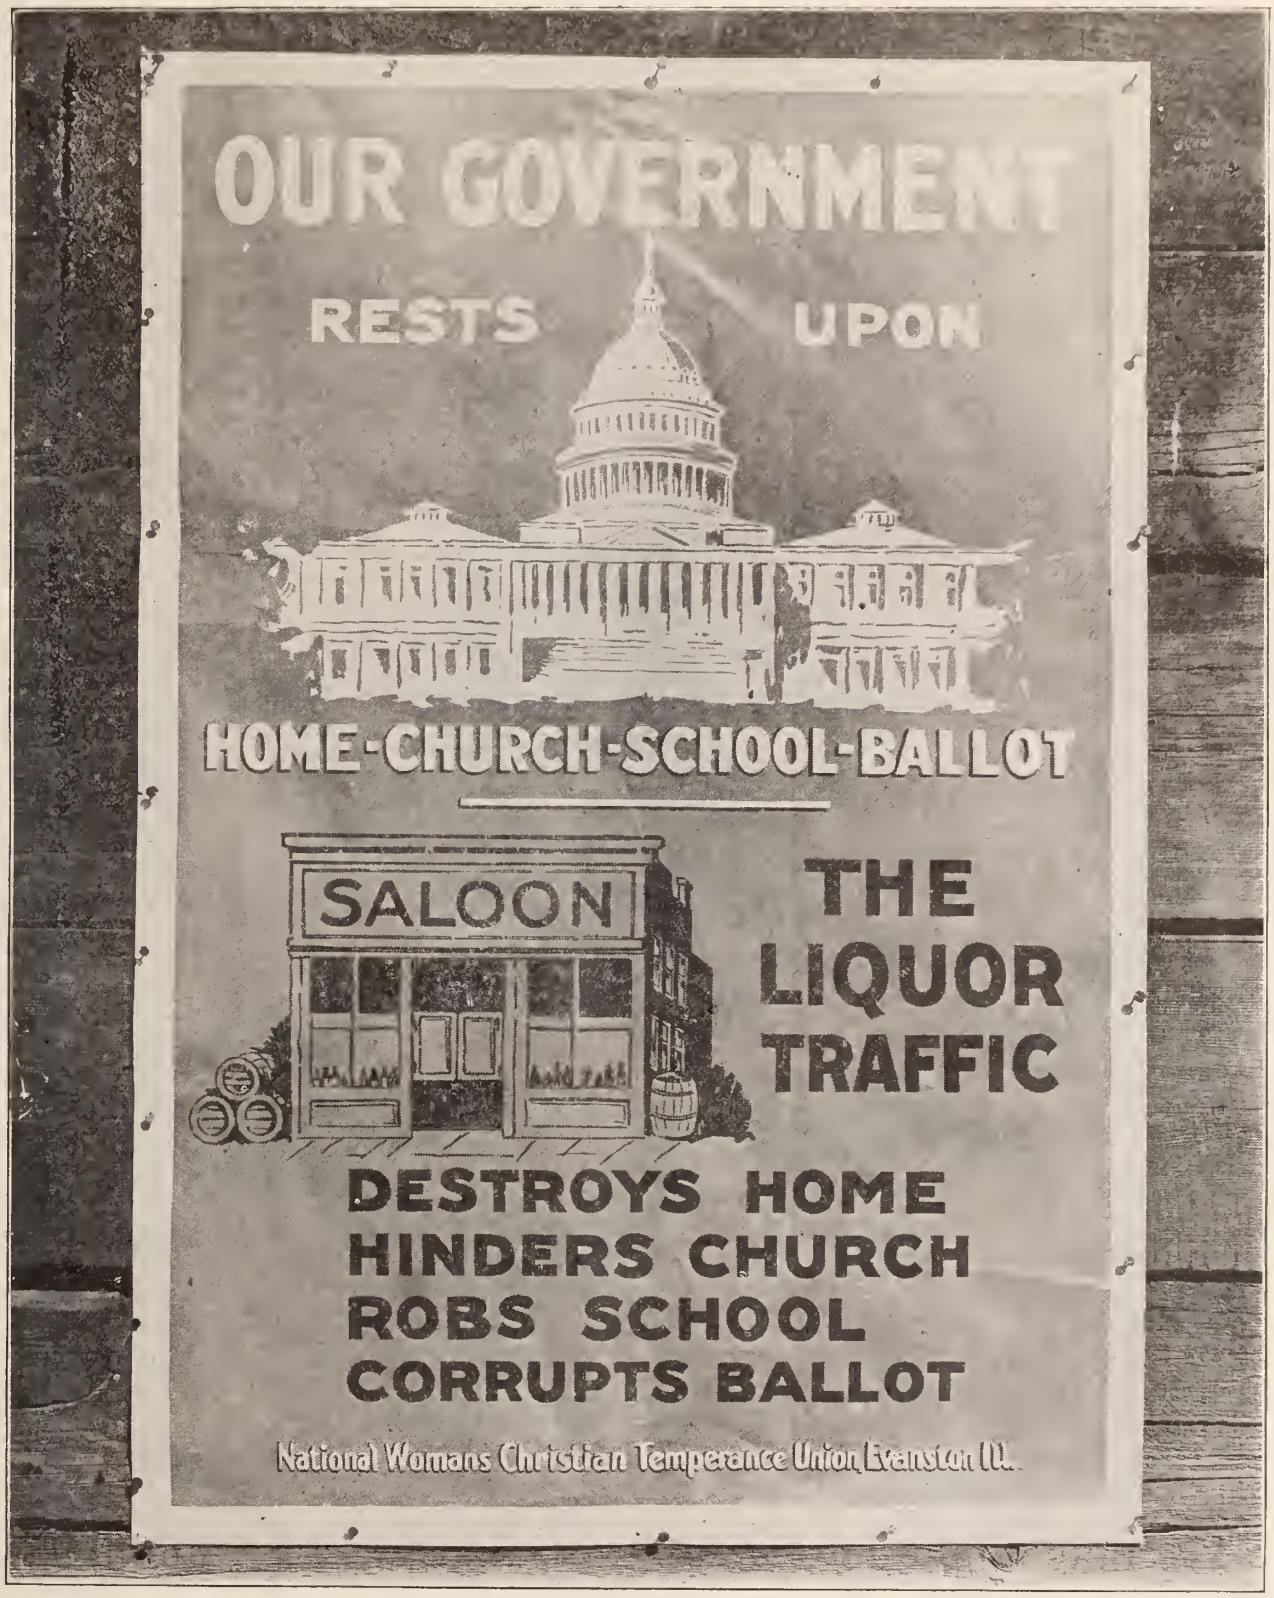
A Motto Card with same poem, also hand-colored, suitable for framing. Size 11x14. Price, 30 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Ill.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., JUNE 7, 1917 | No. 23



KEEP IT UP!

Have You Communicated by Telegram or Brief Letter with the President and Your Senators and Representatives, Urging National Prohibition as a War Measure?

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

CONTINUE TO POUR IN YOUR TELEGRAMS AND LETTERS FOR PROHIBITION AS A WAR MEASURE—OUR BOYS MUST BE PROTECTED FROM DRINK AND VICE

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

Memorial Day, with all its sacred memories, has come and gone. The day is observed with universal interest, but in the District of Columbia, with its numerous national cemeteries, where repose thousands of those who died in defense of their country, there is always a peculiar solemnity attached to the day. On May 30, 1917, it was especially so. The fast thinning ranks of the veterans of the two wars, marching with faltering steps, dressed in uniforms of blue, were supplemented by a host of young, vigorous men in khaki, who are today the nation's defenders in the greatest war in all history. Beautiful Arlington was the scene of general activity. Early in the morning veterans crossed the historic Potomac on a loving pilgrimage, to pay tribute to their comrades who are gone. The flag for which they gave their lives was placed reverently at each headstone, while beautiful flowers were strewn on the graves. The President, Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, spoke to these soldiers of fifty-two years ago at the formal ceremonies in memory of those who fought on the battlefields of the past.

Another particularly interesting service was at Battleground Cemetery, where are buried those who fell fighting to defend the capital from capture on the only occasion when a President of the United States was actually on the firing line. Several survivors of that memorable occasion were present as guests of honor.

Forty-five thousand flags were used by the Grand Army to mark the graves of their dead. Both houses of Congress adjourned for the day and all government departments were closed.

Miss Rankin Makes First Speech

Miss Jeannette Rankin on Monday, May 28, made her first speech in the House of Representatives. During the discussion on the bill to "provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," or the so-called Food Survey bill, Miss Rankin introduced an amendment that "the Secretary of Agriculture shall, so far as practicable, engage the services of women for the work herein provided for." This amendment was carried unanimously. For five minutes Miss Rankin spoke while the usually noisy House sat in silence and, when she took her seat, both sides, Republican and Democrat, burst into vigorous applause, which was continued until the Speaker was forced to rap for order. During Miss Rankin's speech she said, "The work provided for in this paragraph, such as gathering information, extending and enlarging the news service and preventing waste, includes activities that we have been accustomed to seeing women engaged in, and when these activities are so closely related to the home as is the food question, women are especially well fitted by their training and experience to do this work." The address was delivered in a clear, well-modulated voice and was listened to with closest attention. As the result of the passage of the amendment women will be employed in the food census in conjunction with men.

Delegates from fourteen states have come to Washington for a conference with the women's committee of the Council of National Defense. This will be the first of a series of state-group meetings for the discussion of organization plans in the work of mobilizing the women of America for war.

A bill introduced by Senator Poindexter of Seattle, to punish malicious storing of foodstuffs and other necessaries, under penalties of from six months' to three years' imprisonment, was favorably reported by the Senate Judiciary committee. This does not apply to the productions of home raising, but to food materials handled by unprincipled dealers.

Governor Frank L. Houx of Wyoming has wired Secretary of Agriculture Houston indorsing the plan of the government to confiscate 618,000,000 bushels of grain now held in the bins of the breweries and distilleries of the country and also giving his approval of closing these breweries and distilleries for the period of the war.

There come to us very frequently most pathetic appeals from mothers and other interested parties, telling of the shocking conditions around certain military camps where drink and licentiousness—twin evils—hold daily and nightly revels, and asking "if something cannot be done about it." As one mother expressed it, "I would rather a thousand times that my son went to the bottom of the ocean unwarned, but clean and pure, than to have him come back home polluted and tainted from drink and sensuality." This cry from a mother's heart finds a ready response in the hearts of other mothers all over this country. We wish to assure our friends that for months we have worked to secure this legislation, the matter having been laid before the members of the Senate and House. When the Army bill was before the Senate the following amendments were introduced and passed both Houses:

Amendments to Army Bill

"Sec. 12. That the President of the United States, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, is authorized to make such regulations governing the prohibition of alcoholic liquors in or near military camps and to the officers and enlisted men of the Army as he may from time to time deem necessary or advisable: Provided, that no person, corporation, partnership or association shall sell, supply, or have in his or its possession any intoxicating or spirituous liquors at any military station, cantonment, camp, fort, post, officers' or enlisted men's club, which is being used at the time for military purposes under this Act, but the Secretary of War may make regulations permitting the sale and use of intoxicating liquors for medicinal purposes. It shall be unlawful to sell any intoxicating liquor, including beer, ale or wine, to any officer or member of the military forces while in uniform, except as herein provided. Any person, corporation, partnership or association violating the provisions of this section or the regulations made thereunder shall, unless otherwise punishable under the articles of war, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than twelve months, or both.

"Sec. 13. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, empowered and directed during the present war to do everything deemed by him necessary to suppress and prevent the keeping or setting up of houses of ill-fame, brothels, or bawdy houses within such distance as he may deem needful of any military camp, station, fort, post, cantonment, training or mobilization place, and any person, corporation, partnership or association receiving or permitting to be received for immoral purposes any person into any place, structure or building used for the purpose of lewdness, assignation or prostitution within such distance of said places as may be designated, or who shall permit any such person to remain for immoral purposes in any such place, structure, or building as aforesaid, or who shall violate any order, rule, or regulation issued to carry out the object and purpose of this section shall, unless otherwise punishable under the articles of war, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than twelve months, or both."

Your National superintendent of Legislation has just communicated with Secretary of War Baker and finds that when the Army bill became a law word was immediately sent to commanders of army posts, training camps and mobilization centers calling attention to the new law and demanding that its provisions be faithfully carried out. As the Secretary says, "It will take time to purify places that have fostered these dens of vice—in some points for years and in others for months," but that the saloon and brothel shall be done away with in military centers is a foregone conclusion. The United States government heard and answered the appeal of the W. C. T. U. for the unprotected girls in the Philippines and placed its ban on segregation in those far-away islands years ago and we know and believe that the insistent appeal to the President and members of Congress by mothers and friends of the soldier boy will cause the complete overthrow of these direful temptations from their midst. In a letter dated May 26, 1917, the text of which appeared in last week's UNION SIGNAL, the Secretary of War appealed with no uncertain sound to the governors of all the states and to the chairmen of the state Councils of Defense to keep temptation away from these defenders of the nation's honor. I am sending a copy of this letter to each state president, with the request that she give it the widest publicity possible. Let the good people of each state send brief letters to the governor, urging him to co-operate with the Secretary of War in eliminating these points of danger. Have resolutions passed at church meetings and signed by the pastor in behalf of the membership and forward them by mail to his Excellency ....., Governor of the State of .....

Pour in Your Appeals

So much is now being said and done concerning the place women may fill at this crisis that they are somewhat bewildered as to the way they can best serve. Sister, your earnest, womanly appeal to President Wilson and your Senators and Representatives in behalf of national prohibition as a war measure is one of the most effective ways of showing your loyalty at this time. Pour in your telegrams, and your brief letters, which should be typewritten, if possible.

Hotel Driscoll, National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Washington, D. C., June 2, 1917

Wasting Milk Money on Alcohol

Dr. Haven Emerson, commissioner of health of New York, has just concluded some interesting investigations concerning the amount spent for liquor by families of different nationalities in New York city. Of the 500 families visited by the nurses who conducted the investigation only 77 reported abstinence according to the New York Evening Post. Of the families which do not use alcoholic beverages, 48 have a monthly income of less than $61, while of the 49 which spend more than $10 each month for drink 38 earn more than $61. There are more families in the group spending from $3 to $4 per month than in any other class.

When arranged according to nationality, 100 German families, with an income of $7,440, spent $718, or 8.64 per cent, on beverages. The same number of Polish families, earning $6,486, spent $235, or 3.63 per cent. Italians having an income of $5,321, drank up $185, or 3.47 per cent, while Irish families with $8,646 in wages spent $454, or 5.37 per cent.

"Five per cent of a family income of $60 a month," says Commissioner Emerson, "will buy an extra bottle of milk daily. How much better it would have been if this money had been spent for milk instead of beer and liquor!"

Onwentsia Golf Club Votes Itself Bone Dry

Onwentsia Club, near Fort Sheridan, Illinois, in accordance with action taken by the board of governors for patriotic reasons, is bone dry and will remain so for one year, at least.

"We decided that out of respect for patriotic preparedness," said Mr. A. A. Sprague II, president, "we should take the lead in making the territory about Fort Sheridan and the Great Lakes Naval Training station dry. There have been no suggestions from outside sources and the action was taken by the board of governors as indicative of the spirit of the membership."

Workmen's Council of Russia Warns Against Vodka

Let It Disappear Forever Urge Leaders

A faction of the Russian revolutionists known as the Black Hundred, which is still stirring up the populace, is finding a ready weapon in vodka, the native Russian liquor exiled at the beginning of the war. In an appeal against the illicit sale of vodka by this faction the executive committee of the council of workmen's and soldiers' delegates says:

"We notice an increase of drunkenness in Petrograd and other parts of Russia. It is noticeable in the streets, railways, factories and barracks. Vodka is to be found in the villages of the interior, as well as at the front. An examination shows that many deplorable events in the last few weeks were due to drunkenness.

"Formerly the Emperor encouraged drunkenness since it helped to support the imperial throne. Now the Black Hundred is trying to intoxicate the country because it wants to create disorders, cause civil war and the return of the monarchy.

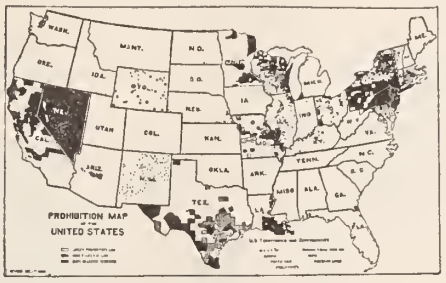
"Massacres will follow the appearance of vodka, villages will fight with each other and then the servants of the old regime will emerge from their hiding places and there will be a repetition of what happened in 1905. The work of the revolution will be drowned in blood by the enemies of the people. No one has the right to buy vodka or to drink it. Let it disappear forever, with the old regime!"

Dr. Charles W. Eliot Says:

"The greatest sap to the efficiency of an army is venereal disease. Now before prostitution always goes the saloon. It seems to me that as a military measure we want prohibition."

Border Army "on Water Wagon"

The border army district went on the water wagon May 25, when Assistant United States Attorney Crawford announced that the provision of the new army law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors to soldiers and officers in uniform would be strictly enforced.



HONOR ROLL

—of—

PROHIBITION STATES AND TERRITORY AND DATE OF GOING INTO EFFECT

Maine			1851
Kansas			†1880
North Dakota			1889
Oklahoma			1907
Georgia			1908
North Carolina			1909
Mississippi			1909
Tennessee			1909
West Virginia			1914
Alabama			1915
Arizona			1915
Virginia			1916
Colorado			1916
Oregon			1916
Washington			1916
Arkansas			1916
Iowa			1916
Idaho			1916
South Carolina			1916
Nebraska	*May	1,	1917
South Dakota	*July	1,	1917
Utah	†Aug.	1,	1917
Dist. of Columbia	†Nov.	1,	1917
Alaska	†Jan.	1,	1918
Indiana	†April	2,	1918
Michigan	*April	30,	1918
Montana	*Dec.	31,	1918
New Hampshire	†May	1,	1918

*Enacted 1916. †Enacted 1917.

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1917

Iowa†† Ohio New Mexico

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1918

Utah†† Missouri Florida
Minnesota Wyoming Nevada

††Now have statutory prohibition. Will vote on constitutional amendment.

STATES HAVING TEMPERANCE DAY IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Alabama Oregon
Tennessee North Dakota
Kansas Missouri
New Mexico South Dakota

Odessa Practices Total Abstinence

"Perfect tranquility continues to prevail, although for the moment Odessa is practically without police," writes the Balkan correspondent to the London Weekly Times. "The whole of the former police force has been disbanded, and its members have enrolled in the army. The duty of maintaining order is entrusted to the militia, a kind of civic guard composed mainly of veteran soldiers, students and others. The satisfying absence of crime may largely be attributed to the strenuous activity that this unprofessional force has displayed in the discovery and sealing up or confiscation of spirituous liquors of all kinds, the consumption of which, though forbidden, was never completely suppressed under the old régime. Today Odessa practices total abstinence and a decrease of crime is among the happy results of enforced sobriety."

Pennsylvania Judge Bars Liquor Sales to Sailors

Judge J. Willis Martin of the license court of Philadelphia, in accordance with the interpretation of United States Attorney General Gregory that sales of liquor to sailors as well as to soldiers are in violation of the prohibition clause of the Federal Conscription bill, has notified saloonkeepers that they will be liable to a revocation of their licenses if found guilty of this offense. District Attorney Francis Fisher Kane has taken like action.

"Any breach of the law, whether federal or local, makes a saloonkeeper subject to a petition that can be filed by any citizen requiring the saloonkeeper to show cause why his license should not be revoked," said Judge Martin. "The saloonkeeper must abide by the law, whether it is on the local or federal statute books.

"Saloonkeeping is a dangerous business, like running a powder factory. The proprietor of a saloon is liable to get in conflict with the law. He knows that when he goes into the business and there is no reason why he should have special notice of any kind when a new law applying to him is placed upon the statute books."

Bishop Brent Pleads for Dry Nation as Winning War Measure

The United States must be dry to win the war, said Bishop Brent of the Philippine Islands, in an address, "The Duty of Women in the War," delivered in Philadelphia recently. In this address, delivered to women, because they are largely in control of the food situation, he said:

"If we go on with the same proportion of waste that we have now, in one year there will not be one ounce of breadstuff in the world.

"There is no alternative; the production of liquor must stop. To win this war this country must go dry for the next few years, and I venture the prediction that once dry it will never again go wet.

"Extravagance, waste or self-indulgence will from this time forth be regarded by those who see it as the taking of the bread of life from the lips of starving people.

"The war is by no means decided. We do not know who may win. But the only nation which has a deciding voice is the American nation, and she can win with only one means—universal service."

ALASKA LEGISLATURE MAKES FINE RECORD ON ENACTMENT OF PROGRESSIVE MEASURES

TWO BILLS DESIGNED TO GIVE "AID AND COMFORT" TO THE LIQUOR INTERESTS WITHDRAWN—ANTI-LIQUOR ADVERTISING AND ANTI-TOBACCO BILLS PASSED

CORNELIA TEMPLETON HATCHER, President Alaska W. C. T. U.

From the vantage point of a seat at the press table, the writer looked, daily, for five weeks, into the faces of the men who represented the people of Alaska in the 1917 session of the territorial legislature. Her mission was, primarily, to influence, so far as possible, the passage of measures of special interest to the moral forces of the territory, and to see that none inimical to our interests "got by."

Alaska's legislative record is, we believe, unparalleled in the early history of commonwealths! From platform and pulpit the writer has called the world of reform movements to witness the fact that the first bill passed by the first territorial legislature (1913) was a bill for the enfranchisement of women! The 1915 legislature gave us the prohibition referendum bill; and the 1917 session put the crowning touch to the federal prohibition bill, passed by the last session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, by enacting a stringent anti-liquor advertising law.

—Mother's Magazine

Alaska always has been regarded as a small part of the United States, indeed. But it isn't, as you can see for yourself from this map. The black part, which covers most of seven populous states, will give you an idea of its size.

The writer left Seattle March 16 on her annual itinerary of the coast towns en route to her home in the Willow Creek mining district, at the head of Cook's Inlet, a distance of some 2,000 miles.

The story of our successful campaign, which culminated in the prompt passage of a "bone dry" prohibition law by Congress and the special work at Washington in connection therewith, must be told to the faithful local workers who had borne so valiant a part in the fight. An average of five days was spent in each of the towns in southeast Alaska, a series of meetings being held at each place for the general upbuilding of our work.

"Withdrawn" Battle Over Prohibition Law

Arriving at the capital city of Juneau, April 1, the discovery that "mine ancient enemy," the special agent of the California Liquor Dealers' Association, was on the ground, and had been particularly active in legislative halls, led to an immediate decision to "camp on the trail." An introduction to the president of the senate and the speaker of the house, the presentation of the ex-editor's credentials as a press correspondent, and a cordial welcome to the press tables of both branches of the legislature, constituted the preliminaries in what proved to be a "withdrawn" battle over the status and integrity of our prohibition law, for two vicious measures—one designed to protect stocks of liquor from confiscation until January 1, 1919, despite the fact that such liquors, under the federal law, become contraband January 1, 1918, and another to license the manufacture and sale of "temperance" drinks, including "wines" "malted liquors," etc., containing "more than 1 per cent of alcohol—" were withdrawn by their sponsors after a proper amount of persuasion concerning the illegality of such measures had been backed up by a judicial opinion from Washington.

When Alaska's prohibition law was drafted for presentation to Congress it included a section to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic liquors in the territory. This section was eliminated for the reason that there were then pending in Congress two bills affecting the distribution of liquor advertising through the United States mails,—the Randall bill, which provided for total prohibition, and an amendment to the postal appropriations bill, which makes such prohibition effective only in states which have declared by statute their desire for such legislation.

It required only a careful presentation of the subject by the W. C. T. U. president, who addressed both senate and house in committee of the whole, to secure the desired enactment of a law that places Alaska on the honor roll of states wherein any publication which carries liquor advertising is barred from circulation.

The one crucial point in Alaska's campaign for prohibition was the dependence of our schools upon the liquor license revenue for support. It constituted the chief argument against prohibition, and it was the unceasing task of the prohibition speaker to point out the viciousness of a system whereby the youth of a state is educated at the expense of the morals of a community, and to reassure the timid voter that despite all dire prophecy in the matter, the schools of Alaska would not be closed as a result of prohibition. To the everlasting credit of the Alaskan voter, the majority vote for prohibition was the largest in proportion to population, ever cast in any commonwealth, despite the fact that we had no assurance that Congress would provide for the deficit in school funds occasioned by the loss of liquor revenue. At every hearing held on the Alaska prohibition bill, when the measure was before Congress, the needs of Alaska's schools were presented, and a plea made for a special appropriation to meet the emergency. Failing to secure this, a bill was introduced which provided for the transference of the control of the schools of Alaska from federal to territorial jurisdiction. On the last afternoon of the last stormy day of the Sixty-fourth Congress, when the great appropriation bills and numberless nominations were lost by reason of the great filibuster, Alaska's modest little school bill was passed, and with its passage the last vestige of the triple alliance between government, education, and the license system in Alaska went out of existence.

To the 1917 session of the legislature, therefore, fell the happy task of creating a uniform system of education for the territory of Alaska, and providing revenues for its support. The task was accomplished satisfactorily in the selection of a territorial board of education consisting of the four senior senators, representing the four judicial divisions, and the election, by them, of a commissioner of education. Appropriation was also made for the establishment of a school of mines and agriculture at Fairbanks; another bill provided for the creation of school districts outside of incorporated towns, to meet the peculiar situation of government controlled towns along the line of the new railroad, which are prohibited from incorporating as municipalities. Provision was also made for the "Nelson" or country schools, and the number of pupils required reduced from twenty to ten; and last, but by no means least, was the establishment of a system of schools of citizenship, i. e., night schools for day toilers who desire the education necessary to a successful application for full citizenship in the United States. This bill was the especial pride of Hon. Chester K. Snow, chairman of the committee on Education and Public Morals, and its enactment placed the seal of "well done" upon a legislative program of education that marks the 1917 legislature as a worthy successor to its 1913-15 predecessors.

Other progressive measures there were, too, chief of which, from our organization point of view, was a bill prohibiting the sale of tobacco in any form to youths under eighteen years of age, prohibiting its use by such minors, and providing a penalty for both sale and use.

A marriage license law, drawn upon accepted standards for the safeguarding of the most important of human ties, rather staggered the several bachelor members of the legislature, but they rose gallantly to the occasion and passed the bill which marks one stage of Alaska's transit from primitive to modern civilization.

Conservation Aim of Victorious Measures

Conservation of Alaska's resources, material and spiritual, was the inspiration of various measures, from the establishment of fish hatcheries to a general eight-hour day law.

The men who were charged with the responsibility of legislating for the welfare of a mighty empire whose interests are as diversified as they are widely scattered, were, in the main, serious of purpose, intelligent in method, and self-controlled and effective in debate. The spectator at the press table, while pursuing her own special interests and aims, felt a thrill of comradeship in the work of the general program, and a sense of achievement in the passage of every measure that marked a step forward in our progress toward an ideal citizenship.

Alaska is still in a formative period—a giant in swaddling clothes, many of its legitimate functions held in abeyance by the encircling bands of governmental red tape. Mayhap we are not yet ready for the complete freedom of legislative control toward which all modern civilization strives. Be that as it may, our faces are turned toward the light, and we see the fulfillment of the prophecy uttered in a welcome address to the first territorial convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in May, 1915: "When Alaska comes into the sisterhood of states, snow-crowned, sun-kissed, she will be wearing the smile of heaven on her face, and a white ribbon on her breast."

CONSERVATION OF GRAIN THE CRYING NEED OF THE HOUR

ELIMINATE HOUSEHOLD WASTE—BUT DON'T FORGET THE MANY FOLD GREATER WASTE OCCASIONED BY THE MANUFACTURE OF INTOXICANTS

MRS. MARGARET B. PLATT

The department of Agriculture, by direction of Secretary Houston, is conducting a stupendous country-wide campaign to minimize food waste. Hundreds of thousands of posters, graphically setting forth the enormity of the annual waste are being sent out and the press is giving wonderful publicity to all plans proposed by the government looking toward conservation of food, elimination of waste, and a reduction of the "high cost of living."

It is stated that the department estimates of the national food loss reveal astounding waste. On the basis of one slice of bread wasted daily by each American family (believed to be a very low estimate) it is shown that 365,000,000 loaves of bread, or 1,500,000 barrels of flour go to waste each year. It is estimated that this is an actual waste of 7,000,000 bushels of wheat on the wasted slice of bread, and it would require 470,000 acres of ground to grow wheat for this lost slice.

These are certainly startling assertions and deserve the thoughtful consideration of every citizen. It is doubtless true that vast quantities of food are wasted because of lack of knowledge on the part of housewives and others to whom is committed the preparation of the raw material. Then, too, comparatively few understand the extent to which "left overs" may be conserved and utilized. There are many ways by which this great loss may be minimized and it is the part of wisdom to continue indefinitely the campaign of education among all our people. The National City Bank of New York considers the present food situation so serious that it has issued a bulletin in which it voices solemn warning as to the gravity of existing conditions and urges the greatest possible measure of co-operation among all our people in every way to increase and conserve the food supply. However, there are other means of conserving the food supply which are overlooked by many who are quick to call the housewife to task for her wastefulness. The Committee of Sixty, of which Professor Irving Fisher of Harvard University is president, makes the statement that immediate national prohibition of the manufacture of liquors would save "11,000,000 loaves of bread a day," and adds that "eminent men in all walks of life recognize the measure"—national prohibition—"as a natural and legitimate part of adequate preparedness for war."

Dr. Alonzo Taylor of the University of Pennsylvania, by direction of the Department of Agriculture, has been studying the liquor question and its relation to the grain supply. Dr. Taylor states that 107,000,000 bushels of grain went into the manufacture of liquor last year, or 100,000,000 bushels more of grain were wasted in strong drink than were wasted by careless housewives at the rate of one slice of bread a day. If it takes 470,000 acres of ground to grow wheat for the lost slice of bread how many acres will it take to grow the 107,000,000 bushels of grain lost in drink? Why not conserve this ground and this grain for the manufacture of food products with which to help feed the world at this crucial time. We should remember, too, that the above estimate is exceedingly conservative, as the distillers and brewers themselves admit that they are now using the trifling amount of 135,000,000 bushels, and it is only a few years since they claimed to use 600,000,000 bushels. How many loaves of bread would that make?

The government need feel no concern about the loss of revenue that might be caused by national prohibition of the manufacture of alcoholic liquors. Necessary revenue will be provided by 100,000,000 sober people. Nor need there be any alarm concerning the demand for compensation made by the brewers and distillers. Dr. Allen Rogers, Ph. D., of the American Chemical Society, in voicing the appeals of the chemists for national prohibition, says: "This is no sentimental demand, nor religious, nor even moral; it is the demand of the nation's chemists, based upon scientific analysis." Nor is the demand to close the breweries and distilleries and let them lie idle. Dr. Rogers expresses the thought in the following language: Don't close the breweries and distilleries. Transform them. Instead of making alcohol for drinks make it for the manufacture of explosives, make it for ether and other medicinal purposes, make it for fuel, make it for dyes and shellacs—make it for every use to which Uncle Sam's chemists can put it in the supreme moment when all things must go to the melting pot to be turned to the nation's greatest good."

—Sioux City (Ia.) Journal.

The National City Bank of New York says the country faces grave disaster through the failure of its winter wheat crop.

The enlistment of young boys to work upon farms or in town gardens is urged; banks are arranging for garden plots for all their clerks. Industrial employers are doing likewise and will provide seeds and instruction. Each community is advised to go ahead and work for intensive cultivation of garden tracts in and adjacent to towns in order to supplement the cereal crops by a large production of vegetables. This is well and very commendable. But why not release for bread grain now used for drink, and set the breweries and distilleries humming for the manufacture of useful articles? The Army and Navy authorities now forbid the sale of liquors to soldiers or sailors. Why should the government continue to legalize their manufacture for civilians? Will the continued manufacture of liquor help to feed the starving nations? Will it help to win the war against the enemy? Will the use of liquor help to create a better brand of patriots among our people? Will it give us a better type of manhood for national defense or better women to mother future generations? Which shall we conserve?

MEMBERS OF THE MINNESOTA UNIVERSITY FACULTY URGE PROHIBITION

"America should free its system of alcohol on entering a fight to a finish for its ideals." This is the message of Dr. L. G. Rowntree, chief of the department of medicine at the University of Minnesota, to President Wilson, in urging national prohibition during the war. Other members of the university community who have wired the president and the congressmen of the state for wartime prohibition are Dr. Cyrus Northrop, president emeritus, and Dr. Thomas Lee, professor of anatomy.

CHICAGO MEDICAL MEN ON LIQUOR EVIL

At a recent meeting of the Chicago Medical Society the scientific portion of the program was devoted to a study of "The Role of Alcohol in Human Welfare." The subject was discussed not only from the viewpoint of the medical practitioner, but others of note who have ample opportunity to observe the effects of alcohol upon the human being spoke freely of their observations, the consensus of opinion among the speakers being that "Alcohol has no place in the welfare of the human race."

Mr. John L. Whitman, superintendent of the Chicago House of Correction, has had personal observation of alcoholics for a period of more than eighteen years, both in official capacity at the county jail and in his present position. His statements should cause an arrest of thought on the part of the tax-paying public for financial reasons if for no others. Mr. Whitman stated that "The Chicago House of Correction has a daily average population of about 2,000, not less than 16,000 commitments being made in a year, and he felt justified in saying that fully 75 per cent of the inmates are suffering from alcoholism. Fifteen per cent have passed through the various stages of alcoholism and are broken down physically and mentally, to the extent that they are useless members of society, spending approximately 300 out of the 365 days of the year in either the House of Correction or some similar institution. At least 30 per cent are in an advanced stage of alcoholism and the chances of their being rehabilitated are not very good, yet there is a possibility of some individual cases being made better citizens after scientific treatment. Another 30 per cent is in the early stages of alcoholism. Among the remainder may be found those who have had little opportunity in life, some are mentally deficient and others have come from the higher walks in life. Many men of prominence gradually drift into this class because of the use of strong drink. The rest are the recruits, and those who are responsible for such institutions are interested to solve the many problems to aid in bringing to a better citizenship the 16,000 that are committed every year. "The prison is not the proper place for those suffering from alcoholism or physical disability," said Mr. Whitman, "and we look to the medical profession to help us work out the problems, but they cannot be solved until the problem of alcoholism is solved."

Dr. Charles E. Sceleth of the Sceleth Hospital of the House of Correction, stated that during the past seventeen years 40,000 cases of chronic alcoholism have passed through that institution for treatment. That did not include the acute alcoholic intoxications occurring in cases of those not suffering from chronic alcoholism. "At present," said Dr. Sceleth, "we are treating between 500 and 600 cases a month, with a traveling population of about 25 per day. Eighty-five per cent of this number are alcoholic. The mortality averages about 200 deaths a year."

Dr. Sceleth was of the opinion that no matter what measures are taken, the manufacture and sale of alcoholic poisons to a laity so generally ignorant of the harm they cause and the real anatomic changes they produce is certain to be restricted. He could not estimate the financial cost of the chronic alcoholic to society, but if the government absolutely prohibited the manufacture of alcoholic liquors he believed "the work of the police department and municipal courts would be cut in half, and that the population of the police stations, workhouses, prisons and reformatories would be reduced 50 per cent, the asylums, 25 per cent, and the poverty and misery of the world, 75 per cent."

Dr. Bernard Fantus discussed the pharmacology and therapeutics of alcohol and said that "while it is popularly classed as a stimulant, it is not a stimulant, except possibly to the stomach. It is a depressant of the central nervous system from the very beginning of its action, though this would probably be challenged by any one who has not studied alcohol from a scientific standpoint." "One of the secrets of the popularity of alcohol," said Dr. Fantus, "is that it serves as a sedative to our critical function, to the uncomfortable doubts that one may have about one's ability, and in this way it gives one confidence in oneself and enables one sometimes to do things they would not otherwise be able to do. It enables us to drown our sorrows, though it has been said it is such a good preservative that it keeps our sorrows for tomorrow. Alcohol is capable of inspiring attitudes of crime as well as attitudes of heroism, for both of these mean doing something with utter disregard of consequences to oneself, the only difference being that crime is detrimental and heroism is of benefit. Alcohol is peculiarly illusive; it seems to warm one up and yet it actually tends to lower body temperature. It is not a true stimulant." Dr. Fantus thought that poor cooking had "something to do with alcoholism, that along with a campaign to stop alcoholism, should go a campaign for better domestic cooking," and that "little can be said of alcohol as a stomachic; alcohol is not indispensable even in therapeutics. If the human race were robbed of alcohol, it would lose a consoler—but would have far less to console. It has no place in the welfare of the human race, and while its loss would lessen the sense of well-being it would increase the welfare of the race."

Discussing the general aspects of the question, Dr. H. I. Davis advanced the thought that "we do not live properly and in trying to recuperate men, we turn to alcohol. . . . There are certain things wrong in the education of our youth, in our pursuing of the almighty dollar which sends us to the whisky bottle."

Dr. Hugh T. Patrick did not agree that a great deal of present day drinking is the result of nerve strain. He believes that "in many instances inebriety is a sign of mental disorder rather than the cause." "The problem before us," said he, "is a study of the nature of the disease and the treatment of alcoholism, before it occurs, by looking after the things which bring it to pass, by thorough-going education, beginning with the child, carried through all ages, propagated by the doctors."

And so we find that, on the whole, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is in accord with advanced medical and scientific thought of the day concerning alcohol. The profession has been slow in coming to the standard raised by the W. C. T. U., but we have today no warmer friends for our cause than those found in the medical and scientific world.

The following excerpt from a communication from Richard C. Cabot, M. D., of Boston, a medical authority of high standing in the United States, evidences the trend of opinion and practice among the medical fraternity at the present time concerning alcohol. Dr. Cabot says: "I am a total abstainer and advise all others to be so. I believe alcohol has no important uses in medicine and I shall rejoice to see national prohibition come, as I believe it will, within ten years. The prohibition sentiment among physicians is growing very fast and is now widespread."

ALCOHOL AND EPILEPSY

It is admitted by many enemies of prohibition that alcohol is harmful in large quantities, but they contend that it is only in excess that danger lurks. Some even assert that "Medical science has never as yet proved that alcohol is injurious in very moderate quantities." Those makng such statement have surely never consulted the records of medical and scientific research, but have taken their cue from the advertisements of certain brands of alcoholic beverages or from the craving of personal appetite. The dictum of modern science is against alcohol in quantities large or small, and the slogan, "Safety First," can never be more applicable than when used as a warning concerning the insidious poison that in varied forms and through diverse channels proves itself the enemy that steals away men's brains. Matthew Woods, M. D., member of the American Medical Association, and the National Association for the Treatment and Care of Epileptics, after an exhaustive study of the relation of alcohol to epilepsy, stated that: "According to the observation of all epileptologists there can be no doubt as to the effects of alcohol in general, as a frequent factor in the production of epilepsy. The difference among observers is one of degree, rather than kind. Maudsley, for example, is responsible for the startling expression that epileptics, because of drink on the part of parents, are as much manufactured articles as are steam engines and calico printing machines."

Further, Dr. Woods states that "Dr. Molli of France has assured us that of all persons inheriting impaired nervous systems from drunken parents, from thirty to forty per cent of them were epileptics. . . . In 150 cases of insane epileptics at the Saltpetriere, eighty-three, or nearly sixty per cent, had intemperate parents; of 2,554 children suffering from idiocy, epilepsy, imbecility and hysteria, 1,053 were the offspring of drunken parents."

Continuing, Dr. Woods quotes Dejerine of France, who asserted that 51.5 per cent of all epilepsies in children are due to parental alcoholism. For Germany Dr. Binswanger declares of epileptics in Germany that twenty-two per cent of them have had their origin in parental inebriation while but eleven per cent were due to paternal epilepsy.

Wine and beer drinking countries are not exempt from the fearful consequences entailed upon innocent child victims of parental alcoholism. Alcohol possesses the same deadly properties, no matter in what guise presented, be it wine, whisky or beer. From the investigations of numerous cases, conducted by various physicians of high repute, evidence is adduced to justify the conclusion that even a single lapse from total abstinence is sufficient to curse the unborn child with an epileptic or insane tendency. Medical science proves that alcohol, even in most moderate quantities and at rare intervals, may produce disastrous results, if not in the person of the drinker then in his offspring. It is due the child that his parents be total abstainers at all times. No human being has any right to that personal liberty that for the sake of even the most moderate indulgence in alcoholic drink would imperil the future of his child.

THE STORY OF GREAT BRITAIN'S HANDICAP

"DEFEAT OR VICTORY" REVEALS STARTLING FACTS CONCERNING DRINK EVIL IN ENGLAND

Of profound significance to America at this time are the startling revelations made in the pamphlet entitled, "Defeat or Victory," written by Arthur Mee and J. Stuart Holden, with an introduction by Dr. C. W. Salceby, published in England for the Strength of Britain Movement. So alarming are the statements made in the little book that it was suppressed by the authorities in England and in Canada.

The loss to Great Britain in food, labor and efficiency as a result of the traffic and indulgence in strong drink during the war is graphically set forth. The assertion is made that the people of London could have been adequately fed for the entire period of time since the war began with the food wasted in the alcoholic beverage business. Every paragraph of this remarkable little volume shouts aloud a warning to the United States at this critical time in its history. The facts therein related should be given widespread publicity that they may arouse the people of this country to demand action by Congress on the prohibition question before the war has progressed farther. We quote at length from the book:

It is not possible to measure the labor drink has stolen from this country during the war, but it must be at least the equivalent of the whole United Kingdom standing idle for 100 days. If that should seem incredible, let us put it at once on the firm foundation of the government's own figures. The War Savings Committee, after spending thousands of pounds in asking women not to wear veils or buy expensive laces, woke up five hundred mornings late to the fact that our people were spending half a million pounds a day on damaging the nation. It said so in a poster, and it said this also—that not only should we save this enormous sum of money by stopping drink, but the gain in national working capacity would be even greater. The loss of national working capacity, therefore, according to this government department, is more than equivalent to the drink bill. The drink bill since the war began is nearer 450 million pounds than 400 millions, but let us call it 400 million pounds only. It is about one-tenth of the cost of the war so far—that is to say, for every sovereign we have spent in fighting Germany we have spent two shillings in fighting and weakening ourselves.

While the law of Britain makes it a crime to give alcohol to a little child, while the law makes it a crime to take a boy of fourteen inside a public house, it is within the power of a government department in this country to take our boys in their decisive years, these boys the law has saved from alcohol, and to drive them whether they will or no, into all the perils and temptations of drink. We guard them from it in their childhood, we protect them in their youth, and when the danger of life begins for them we drive them into it. So, since this war began, we have driven the young manhood of England to live day by day in the atmosphere of its greatest foe; we who say the Lord's Prayer in our churches have led into temptation and delivered unto evil hundreds of thousands of clean British lads who have never touched this thing since they lisped the Lord's Prayer at their mother's knee.

It is one of the marvelous things about the human body that when a man is facing death the sugar in his blood comes to his aid and makes him twice the man he thought he was. At the sight of danger, by the law of a higher power than man, the sugar in a man's blood is increased by one-third, as if Mother Nature knew that her son had need of strength, and it is then, and at that very hour, that the British government gives its men a drink that makes them cold, and that can only be made by the destruction of the sugar that would make them warm. It is unthinkable, incredible, but it is true, and it is not true that there is no alternative. It should be known to every man in the four corners of the United Kingdom that the Y. M. C. A., the most efficient organization in the whole area of the war, is able and ready to relieve the authorities of the labor of dealing out rum, and to supply every man in the firing line with hot tea or coffee or cocoa. There is not a physiologist in this country whose heart would not be glad at the thought of that; there is surely not a patriot who would not leap with joy if it were done.

"Prohibition must come," says the pamphlet which the British ministry suppressed. "Nero will not fiddle while the British empire falls. The nation has only to know the sinister facts. The day will come when it shall be known to all men that prohibition of the drink trade during the war would have—

"Saved in drink expenditure and its results £1,000,000,000 [$5,000,000,000].

"Added 100 days to our war work.

"Saved over 200,000,000 cubic feet of shipping.

"Set free for war work 100,000 trains of 200 tons.

"Saved the waste of 1,000,000 acres of land.

"Released man power enough to raise 60,000,000 tons.

"Enormously relieved the strain on the Red Cross.

"Released thousands of doctors and nurses.

"Saved enough food to feed the nation three months.

"Saved enough food to feed the army and navy during the war."

—Columbus Dispatch.

"And Now He's Coming Over Here!"

The Prime Minister has declared that this trade has sown destruction and devastation in time of peace, and in war has done us more damage than all the German submarines.

The King has banished alcohol from his palaces as a traitor to the state.

General Joffre has declared it the duty of all patriots to fight alcohol in all its forms; by diminishing the moral and material strength of the army it is "a crime against national defense in the face of the enemy."

Lord Kitchener would have nothing to do with drink during the war, and begged his men to keep fit by leaving it alone.

Lord Roberts, in almost his last message to the nation, declared that drink was prejudicial to our chance of victory.

Lord Curzon has declared that drink is a leprous spot eating into the life of our people.

Lord Rosebery warned us long ago of the time that has now come, when, if the state did not control the liquor traffic, the liquor traffic would control the state.

Mr. Chamberlain, the first of our Imperial statesmen, declared that while a priest-ridden nation was to be pitied, a publican-ridden nation is to be despised.

Mr. Bonar Law will not touch alcohol, and is believed to be in favor of prohibition during the war.

Admiral Jellicoe declares that alcohol is the enemy of efficiency and reduces the efficiency of shooting by one-third.

Lord Wolseley declared that drink kills more soldiers than all the new weapons of warfare.

Admiral Beatty has appealed to the nation to rouse itself from its languor, and it can hardly be possible that the drink trade was not in his mind when he said: "The nation is not yet roused out of its state of self-satisfaction. When our people have humility and prayer in their hearts we can count the days to the end."

We are told that not for any reason will the country tolerate prohibition. But the nation is getting rather used to prohibitions now. We are to prohibit "whatever saps our strength," and so the Board of Trade will prohibit—fairs! We have prohibition of white bread, prohibition of light, prohibition of petrol for pigs, prohibition of travel, prohibition of trading, of building and postal facilities, prohibition of cakes in theaters and chocolate tied with ribbons, prohibition of anything or everything except this thing that stands eternally in the way of Britain and of victory. We are to have beefless days and muttonless days and chickenless days —anything but drinkless days. We are not to spend more than 5 s. 6 d. on a dinner, but the drink can always be extra; you have it for breakfast and lunch and supper, too, and you can spend as much money on it as you please. Are we children, or are we fools, that governments should talk to us like this? If we can have all these prohibitions, if the people have sacrificed all these things for their country's sake, what is it that stands in the way of the protection of these islands, the protection of our army and our fleet, the protection of our food supply, from this trade that threatens us and imperils us every hour, that threatens the Allies—what is it and who is it that bolsters up this trade that hangs about our necks like a German millstone?

IF WE HAVE ALL THIS PROHIBITION OF THINGS THAT STRENGTHEN US, WHY, IN THE NAME OF HEAVEN AND EARTH AND VICTORY, CAN WE NOT HAVE PROHIBITION OF THINGS THAT WEAKEN US?

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, June 7, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

The cover page illustration this week is a reproduction of the poster for which Mrs. C. P. Lindsay of Albany, N. Y., was awarded the first prize of $15 in the recent National W. C. T. U. prize poster competition.

KEEP THE ISSUE CLEAR

It is important at this time to keep the issue before us clearly defined in the minds of the people, to consider no compromise and to use every available motive power to influence Congress to act favorably on nation-wide prohibition as a war measure. A strong effort is being put forth by the beer and wine interests to secure the passage of a law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of all intoxicating liquors containing more than ten per cent of alcohol, and a syndicate of big city dailies is giving support to this movement. The public must not be misled or confused by the arguments presented by the advocates of this measure. If by inaction we permit the passage of such a bill we set back the prohibition movement by many years. Professor von Struempell, one of Germany's noted physiologists, says of the national drink, "Nothing is more erroneous from the physician's point of view than to think of diminishing the destructive effects of alcohol by substituting beer for other alcoholic drinks." No half way measure of this character must be permitted to pass either house of Congress. It will not if the intelligent right-minded citizens of the United States are alert to the danger.

Another compromise measure that threatens to block the nation-wide prohibition movement is the imposition of a high tax upon all alcoholic liquors in lieu of prohibiting their manufacture and sale. Such a method of dealing with the liquor problem is wrong in principle and unwise in policy. If the business is vicious what right has the government to share in its profits. To increase the tax on liquors as a war revenue measure would give to the distilling and brewing interests an immeasurable advantage at the close of the war; it would afford them an opportunity of reminding the people that in an emergency the "drink trade" was an indispensable source of income which it would ill become the government to dispense with permanently.

The liquor interests have no arguments upon which to rest their case except the need of the liquor revenue. Surely at this critical time there are other things of more importance. In a heart-breaking way Great Britain is demonstrating that it is saving its liquor revenue at a terrible cost of those things without which a nation cannot continue to live. If you do not believe it read the quotations from "Defeat or Victory" by the Strength of Britain Movement.

"There are times when words seem empty and only action seems great," says President Wilson. Certainly the present emergency demands from every patriot, action, immediate and persistent. Every household in your city should be represented in telegrams and brief letters to the President, your Senators and your Congressmen. Adopt the tactics of the liquorites and make yourself a thorn in the flesh to your associates, friends, relatives, fellow-townsmen, members of your lodge, club and church until you secure their promise to send the telegram that multiplied by thousands will do the work and secure action from Congress.

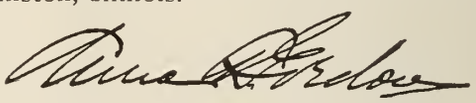
INDEPENDENCE DAY 1917

A celebration of Independence Day this year by anything less than a practical demonstration of patriotism would be sadly out of place. It is no time for spread-eagle oratory or sky-rocket exhibitions. Some communities have already expressed an intention of expending the money that otherwise would be used for an hilarious Fourth of July in the purchase of an ambulance or other equipment for hospital service. It is peculiarly fitting that the day should be devoted largely to intensive and extensive work for the securing from Congress of a war prohibition measure, unless, indeed, that body should take action before the end of this month. The observance of Independence Day as Americanization day will be in perfect harmony with the idea. It will afford an opportunity to enlist both new and long-time Americans in the prohibition movement for the safeguarding and success of our armies in the great war. Begin to plan for programs, parades, window exhibits, poster displays, with the one end in view of awakening the people to the need of bringing pressure to bear upon Congress in the interests of nation-wide prohibition. Gather the younger element among the foreign-speaking people of the town into a community chorus, orchestra or band for the musical part of the patriotic program. Arrange for a field day or street parade of the Sunday schools in which representatives of all the nations of the world shall participate, the national airs of the overseas countries being sung, and the loved songs of our own America closing the exercises. But in all and through all and over all stress the need of freeing our country from the slavery of strong drink, and the responsibility of all residents of the United States, native born, naturalized, and aliens, to help in the effort.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. TO SEND AMBULANCE TO FRANCE

A motor ambulance at the battle front, inscribed as a gift from the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union and floating our white ribbon emblem beside our glorious flag, is a hope I fondly cherish. Such an ambulance with its blessed ministries to the wounded and suffering would emphasize in a peculiar and powerful way the mother love of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

May I affectionately entreat all members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to interest their friends outside as well as within our ranks—men as well as women—in speedily raising the necessary $1,600. For this amount a motor ambulance can be purchased, equipped, transported to France and kept in repair for a year. An additional $600 will provide for a driver for a year. I beg the privilege of giving the first fifty dollars toward a National W. C. T. U. Ambulance Fund. Send all contributions for this fund through local and state treasurers to the treasurer of the National W. C. T. U., Mrs. Margaret C. Munns, Evanston, Illinois.



President National W. C. T. U.

MICHIGAN APPROVES AMBULANCE PLAN

The first state to signify its approval of the plan of sending to France an ambulance as a gift from the National W. C. T. U. is Michigan. The matter was presented to the white ribboners of that state, in convention assembled, by Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National vice-president-at-large, who was one of the speakers on that occasion. Before the plan was given to the public through the press a telegram was received at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters from Mrs. E. L. Calkins, Michigan's state president, reading: "Michigan pledges hearty co-operation in the gift of motor ambulance to battle front."

WILLING TO PAY THE PRICE

Among the champions of prohibition there are many courageous business men who would stand just as squarely for no-license, even though it should mean lessened receipts in their business, as they do when it means increased financial prosperity. Such a firm is the Waterman-Ehrhard Co., of Menomonie, Wisconsin, who, in denying the accusation that they were in favor of license, in a letter published in a paper of the state, took the high ground that any business that might come to them because of the sale of liquor in their city was not in their eyes desirable, and that if lack of business resulted from a dry city, they were willing to pay the price because of the righteousness of prohibition.

But business depression never results from prohibition, we are happy to say, and their testimony that "1916 was the best year we ever had, with collections considerably improved," is quite in line with the experience of business firms in every dry section of the United States.

WHY DR. HARVEY W. WILEY CHANGED HIS MIND

Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, former head of the Federal Health Bureau, conducts a question box in Good Housekeeping. Recently there was submitted to him the following question:

"Would not the reduction of the alcoholic content of our lager beer, and a consequent standardization of the same on a lower alcoholic basis, say three per cent by volume, lead to the reclamation of beer as a true temperance beverage, and the rehabilitation of the brewing industry in all the territory of the United States, as an integral and necessary factor in our economic life?"

In his reply he tells why he abandoned his half-way attitude on the liquor question and came out definitely for prohibition:

"Up to within the last five years I have always believed that the cause of prohibition should be turned into a temperance movement instead. In this temperance movement I looked to see the exclusion of distilled liquors and the standardization of fermented liquors to as low an alcoholic content as could be secured. It would be easy with our modern knowledge of pasteurization and sterilization to make a palatable beer with not to exceed two per cent of alcohol. When my efforts to secure purity of fermented and distilled liquors were negatived by executive action, I realized that no such proposition as that which I have outlined above would meet with favor. My conviction in this matter is accentuated by the fact that the last Congress passed a law legalizing adulterated wine and permitting the addition of sugar to grape-juice and fortification of sweetened wines so as to produce a beverage which in my opinion is highly intoxicating and injurious to health. I have therefore abandoned my temperance propaganda and have come out squarely for prohibition of a nation-wide character."

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do You Know the Answers to These Questions? They May Be Found in THE UNION SIGNAL of May 31

Ten questions, the answers to which will be found in the preceding number of THE UNION SIGNAL, will appear each week. The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. What protection from alcoholic liquors is afforded officers and men in uniform by a provision of the Army bill just passed by Congress?

2. Name the extent of territory covered by the federal anti-liquor advertising law that goes into effect July 1.

3. For what purpose has Secretary Baker of the War department asked the co-operation of the governors of the states?

4. Mention a noted Texas fort that has been made dry by order of a Brigadier General.

5. The governor of which state has recently vetoed a prohibition referendum measure? Give his reported reason for this act.

6. Why can we not afford to permit the continuance of the liquor traffic during the war, according to Major General William Harding Carter of the United States Army?

7. Tell the story of two dinners which throw light upon the much-talked-of $700,000,000 waste.

8. What department of our work is from this time forth to be centralized at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters?

9. Give the list of calamities for which Governor Capper of Kansas says the liquor traffic is responsible.

10. What lesson of war preparedness can the United States learn from the experience of Canada? (See cartoon.)

FORMER SALOONKEEPER PLEADS FOR PROHIBITION

"The little city where I kept a saloon has more than doubled in size since the saloons were voted out," declared Nelson G. Nelson, a former saloonkeeper and bartender, at a meeting in the recent dry campaign at Springfield, Ill.

"They say the saloonkeeper pays a large amount of money into a city," he continued. "Now that is not so. You know that the man who drinks does the paying. The saloon simply collects it. You have two hundred and eleven collectors here in your city; you do not need them. The little city where I had a saloon has more than doubled in size since it voted the saloon out. Show me a town, if you can, where a factory was closed on account of the saloon being closed. John Mitchell says, 'Tear down a brewery and upon its ruins will rise a factory.' The saloon is a non-producing business; it destroys health, home and happiness. I plead with you at this time when we are engaged in the war not to allow these places to run. I have seen the effects of the saloon where the soldiers were in Michigan. We must have sober men at the front and also at the rear."

FIVE HUNDRED COMFORT KITS FOR BATTLESHIP "ARKANSAS"

The Arkansas W. C. T. U. is planning and working for the protection and entertainment when off duty, of the thousands of soldiers stationed at Fort Logan H. Roots, just outside of Little Rock. A silver service for the battleship "Arkansas" is now assured by private subscriptions, and plans are being made to furnish five hundred and fifty "comfort kits," each consisting of a sleeveless sweater, mittens, and mufflers. Five hundred of these are for the battleship "Arkansas" and fifty for the submarine.

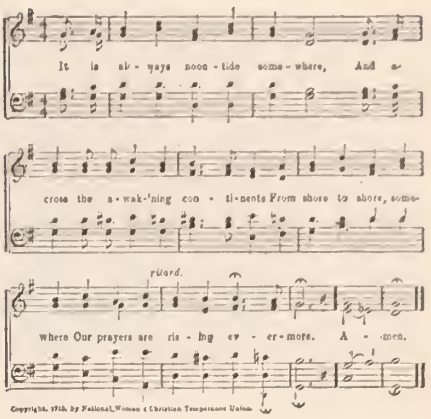
MOTHER LOVE IN ACTION

The W. C. T. U. women of Brooklyn, New York, are busily engaged in making comfort bags for the soldiers. All day meetings are held in the parlors of the Dutch Reformed church, where there is every help and convenience, including a sewing machine run by electricity. Each woman brings her lunch, and coffee and tea, which are donated, are served at five cents a cup, the proceeds being used for the purchase of materials for the bags. One afternoon a hurry call for one hundred bags for a cruiser going out in the early evening was received, and while the order could not be entirely filled the white ribboners strained every nerve to finish and fill as many bags as possible. A comrade writing of the scene, says: "Such a busy, buzzing, eager time as we had in doing the work. Every once in a while this one or that would hasten out to find or buy something extra to slip in for the dear boys. We are all eager to do our bit for these mothers' boys, and it helps more than one of us to keep our courage bolstered up about our own boys going out from home."

CAN YOU USE TWELVE-YEAR UNION SIGNAL FILE?

The kind offer of a complete file of THE UNION SIGNAL for twelve years is made by Mrs. Jane G. Braun of Springfield, South Dakota, to any one interested to send for it. Mrs. Braun desires to retain for the present the 1916 papers but will be glad to supply them later.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



AT THE NOONTIDE HOUR

At the sacred noontide hour let the white ribboners of the land unite in prayer daily for our country and all other countries, that all may come to see the true Christian and humanitarian point of view in this world crisis; for the protection of "our boys" from the physical and moral deterioration from drink and vice that follow in the wake of war; for our President and his advisers that divine wisdom may rule every decision, that lasting peace may speedily come and the will of the Father of all peoples be done throughout the earth.

ANY SOLDIER SON TO HIS MOTHER

If I am taken from this patchwork life
By some swift outthrust of an unseen arm—
The death that strikes my comrades day and night—
I pray you make of it no cause of tears,
I beg you grieve not for me overmuch.
And for your comfort I would pen this thought:
The joy you had of me in childhood's days
When in your arms I played or cried or prayed
(Those soft, warm arms! Can you or I forget?)
Will still remain with you when I am gone.
It is so real now, that memory;
Not death itself can rob you of your child.
The boy I was, the man I grew to be,
Despite the mother's tender hopes and fears,
How distant, how detached and cold they seem.
And so, sweet mother, here I stand to meet
My fate, this night and any night; but still
Your child, imperishable whilst you breathe;
As in the cradle, so until the end.
—N. G. H., in London Spectator.

PERSONAL MENTION

Among the callers recently welcomed at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters was Mrs. S. C. Nutter, for many years president of the New Mexico W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Elizabeth E. Thayer, corresponding secretary of the West Washington W. C. T. U., who succeeded Mrs. Margaret C. Munns when the latter was elected National treasurer.

Because of ill health, Mrs. Nettie R. Chipp, president of the South Idaho W. C. T. U., at the mid-year meeting of the state executive committee, asked to be relieved from the responsibilities of office. The state vice-president-at-large, Mrs. Alice Thompson, will take charge of the work until such time as Mrs. Chipp is again able to assume the duties of the presidency.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAY

June 9—Flower Mission Day—Birthday of Jennie Casseday

TREASURER'S REPORT

FRANCES E. WILLARD MEMORIAL FUND
LILLIAN STEVENS CAMPAIGN FUND

MARGARET C. MUNNS, Treasurer

The following contributions to the Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund and to the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund have been received since the last report. Contributions to the Memorial Fund are in each case $2 unless otherwise stated:

Memorial Fund

Pennsylvania: North Side $1; Oakland; Bowmanstown; Orangeville; Plumville; Blairsville; Bellevue; Wilson; Bloomsburg; Catawissa; Indiana; Pine Flats; Ambrose; Mahoning; Allegheny; West View; Millville $1; Atlantic; Aspinwall; Bethel; Springboro; Hill Top $5; Homer City; Sigel; Lititz; Millersville; Perryville Ave.; McDonald; Rundell; Linesville; Swift $5; Foster; Meadville; Titusville $10; Leola; Manheim; Gayly; McKeesport; Vrooman; Hydetown; Landisville; Columbia; Rohrstown; Denver; Harrisburg; E. Harrisburg; Kaylor; Leechburg; Dayton; Watersonville $2.35; Meade; Steelton; Little Britain; Fairfield; Queenstown; Manorville; Penbrook; Highspire; Ephrata; Octoraro; Hollidaysburg; Athens; Hummelstown; Mt. Joy; New Providence; Lansdowne $5; LeRaysville; N. Towanda $1; Bethel; Williamson School; Normal Y; New Holland; Leroy $1; Gillett $2.50; Broad St.; Rutledge-Morton; Willard; W. Willow; Wiliwana; Makefield; Swarthmore $3.75; Linwood; Quarryville; Hopeland $5; Warrington; Wrightstown; E. Lansdowne; Sharon Hill; Mt. Nebo; Terre Hill; Newtown; Langhorne; Clifton; Darby $5; E. Petersburg; Elizabethtown; Reigelsville; Bristol; Upper Darby; Chester; Lancaster; Christiana; Ellwood; Fallsington; Ridley Park; Media; Quakertown; New Castle (Central); Solebury $0.35; Yardley; Johnsonburg; Ridgway; E. Brook; Hazel Dell; Bensalem; Doylestown; Wilcox; Mt. Pleasant; Highland; Harlansburg; Richboro; Churchville; Erie county $6; Brownsville; Nassau; Plain Grove; Carversville $1; Emporium; Clarington; Tionesta; Scotland; S. Side; Malvern; Kemblesville; Endeavor; Marionville; W. Side; Willard; West Grove; Downington; Ft. London; Mercersburg; Central; Somerset; W. Chester; Dilworthtown; Dry Run; Brock; Macungie; Ashley; Lickingville; Kingsville; Carmichaels; Mt. Morris; Dallas; Kingston; Hawthorne; Strattonville; Brave; Pine Bank $2.50; Milnesville; Huntsville; Avis; Flemington; Waynesburg; Waynesburg (Willard); W. Pittston; Lock Haven; Mill Hall $1; Saltsburg; Marchand; Wilkes Barre (Central); Williamsport (Central); Kane $7.50; Bradford; Lehighton; Juneau; Concord; Crosby; Smethport; Emlenton; Oil City; Franklin (Willard); Victory; Coreyville; Delaware Water Gap; Tobyhanna; Mountain Home; Allegheny; Rocky Grove; E. Stroudsburg $4; Utica; Middle Smithfield; Clintonville; Stroudsburg; Canadensis; Siverly; Warren (Central); Norristown; Collegeville; Garland; Clarendon; Kinzua; Claysville; Shamokin; McEwensville; Eldora; Canonsburg; Washington; Watsontown; Donora; Calkins; Ariel; Waymart; Lake Como; Starucca; Galilee; Pleasant Mount; Hamlin; Beach Lake; Gravity; Pleasant Valley; Greensburg; Avonmore; Scottdale; Trafford; Monessen; Branch $1; Youngwood; W. Newton; New Florence; Seward; Austin; Coudersport; Ellisburg; Irwin; Mt. Pleasant; Harrison Valley; Ulysses; Lemon; Salina; Lake Winolia; W. Bingham; Pottsville; Falls; Lake Carey; Hanover; Cressona; Ashland; Gordon; Shenandoah; F. E. Willard; Shrewsbury; Quakake; Shrewsbury L. T. L. $1; Red Lion; Tamaqua; Schuylkill Haven; Delta; Pine Grove; Mahanoy City; Halstead; Lynn; Springville; S. Montrose; Thompson; Mifflinburg; Vicksburg; Winfield; Philadelphia (Scandinavian; Grace Peck; Logan; F. E. Willard; Faithful; Olney; Franklin; Berean; Sherwood; Memorial; North West; South West; George's Institute; Germantown; W. Philadelphia; A. E. Thomas; Frankford; German; Phila. $5; H. S. French $5; L. M. N. Stevens); McKees Rocks. Total $616.95.

New York: Blasdell; Glens Falls; Glens Falls Mission; Luzerne; N. River; Warrensburg; Avon; S. Lima Y. P. B. $1; Circleville; E. Leptondale; Middle Lope; Montgomery $2.25; Pine Bush; Port Jervis; Warwick; Walden Y. P. B. $1; Highland; Clintondale; Highland L. T. L. $1; New Paltz; Wallkill; Cortland; Apalachin; Berkshire; Lockwood; Newark Valley; Owego; Richford; Spencer; Waverly; Watervliet $1; Cold Spring; Mahopac Falls; E. Branch; Franklin; Hancock; Sidney; Stanford; Walton; Decatur; Edmeston; Laurens; Worcester; Erin $1; Ben Wood; Elmira (F. E. Willard); N. Cheming; S. Elmira; Mexico; Richland $1; Oswego $1; Boston; Buffalo (Cazenovia, Cold Spring $5; Lovejoy, Riverside, West Side $3); Clarence; Eden; Holland $1; Kenmore; Springville; Sardinia $1; New York (Harlem, Scandinavian, West End); Gloversville; Mayfield; Northville $1; Port Ewen; Argyle; Cambridge; Easton; Ft. Ann; Ft. Edward; Greenwich; Hartford; Hudson Falls; N. Granville; Bangor; Bombay; Ft. Covington; Moira; Saranac Lake; Brainardsville Y. P. B. $1; Ulster Park; Reading Centre; Tyrone; Brewster $3; Keeseville; Johnson's Creek; La Salle; Model City; Ransomville; Somerset; Wilson $3; Youngstown; Coxsackie; Elmira (Beecher Central, Post Creek); Suffern; Haverstraw; New City $2.30; Brasher Falls; Canton; Colton; De Kalb; Fine $1; Flackville $1; Gouverneur; Hermon; Henvelton; Lawrenceville $1; Madrid; Massena; Nicholville; Norfolk; Norwood; Parishville; Potsdam; Raymondsville $1; Richville; Rensselaer Falls; W. Hermon; Winthrop; Clinton; Holland Patent; New York Mills; Oriskany Falls; Rome; Sanquoit; Taberg; Utica (Somerset); Westmoreland; Asbury; Enfield; Trumbulls Corners; W. Groton $1; Elmhurst; Hicksville; Maspeth Y. P. B.; Whitestone (collection) $9.60; Ashville; Brocton; Busti; Cassadaga; Dunkirk $1; Falconer; Forestville; Frewsburg; Gerry $1; Hanover Center; Jamestown $10; Kennedy; Levant; Mayville; Niobe; Panama; Ripley; Silver Creek; Stockton; Conewango Valley $1.04; Babylon; Bay Shore; Bridgehampton; Eastport; Coram & Middle Island; Greenport; Jamesport $1; Lindenhurst; Mt. Sinai & Millers Place; Northport; Patchogue; Pt. Jefferson; Riverhead; Sag Harbor; Sayville; Riverhead (Sound Ave.); Smithtown Branch; Southampton; Southold; Westhampton Beach; Mt. Sinai L. T. L. $0.50; Stanford; Cohocton; Haskinsville $1; E. Otto; Perrysburg; Eagle Harbor; W. Kendall; Long Bridge L. T. L. $0.25. Total $379.94.

Minnesota: Duluth (Scandinavian).

Southern California: $132.55.

North Carolina: $30.

Michigan: Portland (South East).

Montana: $2.60; Culbertson $5. Total $7.60.

Tennessee No. 2: Fisk University Y. P. B. $1.

Connecticut: N. Woodbury; Stonington; S. Manchester; Stafford Springs; Stratford; Portland; E. Norwalk; Ivoryton; Milldale; Warehouse Pt.; Bantam; Mystic; Hartford; S. Willington; Wethersfield; Thompson; Chester; Torrington; Clinton; Stamford; Willimantic; E. Canaan; Scotland; Seymour; Thomaston; Ellington; Danielston; Waterbury; Goshen; Middlefield; Niantic; Mill Plain; New London; Bridgeport $5; Terryville $1; Durham $2.33; Bethel $1. Total $75.33.

Kentucky: Harrodsburg; Chilesburg; Louisville (E. End; Central $3; M. P. Hunt); Lacie; Pineville; London; Lexington (Arlington); New Castle Y. P. B. $1; Monticello; Bowling Green; Ashland (East, Central); Calhoun; Hopkinsville; Wilmore $1.65; Cynthiana; West Point; Carlisle; Moorefield; Lancaster; Grayson; Pikeville; Crestwood $1.50. Total $49.15.

New Jersey: Asbury Park (W., Strong Y. P. B., Monmouth Y. P. B.); Avon; Atlantic Highlands $2.50; Matawan (Y. P. B. $1; Lend a Hand L. T. L. $1);

(Continued on Page Eleven)

EFFECTS OF WORLD-WAR UPON CHILDREN

MINNIE U. RUTHERFORD FULLER, Superintendent Juvenile Courts, Industrial Education and Anti-Child Labor

After seeing our country for nearly three years gradually forced into this cataclysm, this brutal warfare upon the freedom of the human race, we realize that there is no liberty in the world for any people, so long as the ruler of any nation can use the entire machinery of the government for selfish ends. Granted, then, that we must enter the war, as we have —what should be our first consideration? Our people, and of that people, those upon whom the future of the nation most depends, the children. If we can but spare them as much as possible, some of the horrors of a world war will be averted. To do this will require great effort, for, as ever, the burden falls most heavily upon the weakest link in the social chain, the women (childhood's guardians) and the children.

The Nation's Special Obligation

"At the present time when war is destroying so much of its best manhood, the nation is under special obligation to provide conditions which shall enable the rising generation to grow up strong and hardy, both in body and character. It is necessary to guard not only against immediate breakdown, but also against the imposition of strains that may stunt future growth and development." "Here in America we must remember this at the start. In our eagerness to do our bit, we must not forget the children."

The above quotations are from a folder sent out by the National Child Labor Committee, the first one being taken from the report of an English Health Committee, after two years of war.

"Adopt a Belgian baby" has become a household maxim in our own country and of the French children of the war zone, it is said that theirs is the most pitiable plight of any on record. Victims of a strange mental disease which has aged and stunted them, orphaned, alone, emaciated, wounded, dazed—most of them have had "life and death revealed to them in guise so terrible that they will never be quite normal again," and these are the future men and women of France!

The segregation of our young men and boys in camps not only subjects them to evils over which their mothers have no control, and which may wreck many of them, as was the case in the Spanish-American war, but will deplete the ranks of workers just at a time when the demands upon the productive abilities of our citizenship are increased an hundred fold, and the tendency will be to force our children out of schools and into industries, thus multiplying the dwarfing processes.

Mothers Desire Absolute Prohibition

In some camps, commanders are issuing orders that young men shall not enter saloons and vice sections, under penalty of court-martial, but the mothers say that the only thing that will deliver these boys and those of the future from evil is the absolute prohibition of the saloon and the vice district. Remove temptation to which boys are much more exposed as soldiers and sailors than when they are leading normal lives; and all mothers know that it is no easy matter to combat these evils under ordinary conditions of life.

In an Arkansas paper recently there was printed an inquiry addressed to the state commissioner of labor by one of our great lumber mills as to the number of hours that they may require women, who have taken the places of men already enlisted, to work in the mills. This question was made necessary by the fact that there is, in this state, a minimum wage and hour law for women workers; but under the present stress, these men seem to think that they ought to be allowed to have the women work more hours a day, provided they manage to obey the law as to hours per week. In this one industry alone, in this remote section, these women, taking the places of men in our great mills, will perforce neglect hundreds of children. In a single European city there were reported at one time, 3,000 munition workers under twelve years of age; and the National Child Labor Committee says that in Berlin there were twice as many crimes committed by children in 1915 as in 1914.

When our teachers enlist, and the mothers go to work, in order to bear the financial burdens of the nation, the schools will no longer assist in the care of the children and the homes will be forgotten. England reports that at least 300,000 children who had been in school were turned out, while thousands more were permitted to leave school to go to work.

What Can We Do About It?

Keep cool heads in this hour of excitement; the spectacular thing is not always the really patriotic thing. Keep business going as usual, just as far as possible. Help enforce child labor and other laws. Register for service, yes, but remember that the aid prayed for by the Allies, through their representatives sent to Washington, is upon a colossal scale, a task which requires workers in the industries. If we undertake to meet these demands and at the same time release from industries more than a million men, we shall need to take care that we do not damage, more than help, the cause of human liberty, by poisoning the stream of human life itself at its very source. In any case, let us sacrifice every other form of wealth which we, as a nation, possess, before we offer up American children.

Little Rock, Ark.

CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP

EMMA L. STARRETT, National Superintendent

Department motto: "Study to show thyself approved, and worthy of citizenship in a great country."

Was there ever a time when the words, Christian Citizenship, meant so much? Was there ever a time when in the consciousness of all Christ-controlled souls, there was so great a desire to be worthy of citizenship? On every lip, and in every heart is the question: How best can I do my bit to show my love for the flag, and my belief in liberty, democracy and the lofty ideals of the fathers of my country? In the hearts of many of us who have sons we thought to raise to serve their country in peace not war, the struggle rages fiercely, and only the Most High who guides the destinies of individuals, as well as nations, can help us to give our best beloved for Christ, our King, and for our country, that He may overrule the evil of this war, and from it bring a new earth. If we are given the assurance that they will be protected from intemperance and vice, the struggle will be easier.

Every man, woman and child can help to hold fast to first things, remembering that the program of the kingdom is not changed by war, and that if our country loses her own soul she is not worth dying for. Shall we not consecrate our lives anew for service, whenever, wherever, our Captain shall call us? Let us labor to hasten the coming of His Kingdom; for only the golden rule of Christ can bring liberty, peace and democracy. We believe the prophecy, "The Lord shall be King over all the earth," is approaching fulfillment.

"The Son of God goes forth to war,
A kingly crown to gain."

Plans for Work among Indians, literature and a full department budget have been sent to all state superintendents of Christian Citizenship and also to superintendents of Work among Indians. If any have failed to receive this material, please inform me by postal card and I will send it forthwith. A new leaflet, "Woman's Influence in Civic Betterment" (per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents), is off the press. Three new ones are listed in the new catalogue: "Only One Vote," "What's the Harm in Gambling?" "Teaching of Citizenship in Public Schools." "Individual Responsibility for Law Enforcement" has been revised and changed into a six-page folder. Some of the material in this leaflet was taken from one written by Mrs. Adrianna Hungerford, and through oversight we neglected to give her credit, which we regret. From the department leaflets several good programs may be evolved. Send five cents for samples. Plan of work will be sent free.

Forty-five dollars in prizes is offered for the best cartoons. A temperance cartoon contest in the public schools is one of the best ways to make sentiment for national prohibition and is of great educational value to the boys and girls. Cartoons can be planned during the summer months. They need not be submitted until six weeks after school begins in September. Send postage for full particulars. The cartoons entered in contests should be displayed in public places, at county fairs, etc. The judges will be Frances E. Beauchamp, president Kentucky W. C. T. U., Clara C. Chapin, editor of Publications, National W. C. T. U., and Julia F. Deane, editor of THE UNION SIGNAL.

Central City, Neb.

TREASURER'S REPORT

(Continued from Page Ten)

Wenonah; Eatontown; Holmdell; Keansburg $1; Huffville; Mullica Hill Y. P. B.; Westville Y. P. B.; Keyport; Marlboro $1; Matawan $2.60; Point Pleasant $3.02; Manahawken; Middletown; Ocean Grove; Wildwood; Cape May City; Red Bank; Ocean City; Ocean Grove (Willard); New Germantown $1; Lebanon; High Bridge; South Bound Brook; Peapack-Gladstone; Liberty Corner; Newton; Lakewood; Trenton No. 1 $10; Yardville-Groveville; Pennington; Cranford; Dunellen; Elizabeth No. 1; Plainfield; Rahway No. 1; Roselle-Roselle Park; Union Hill (Ellis); Bayonne; Bergen Point; Jersey City (Goodwin Y. P. B. $3); Hackensack; Englewood; Rutherford; Blackwood; Collingswood; Camden (Willard, Central); Merchantville. Total $116.12.

Ohio: Coshocton; Circleville $3; Perry Twp.; Tiro; Oak Hill $0.50; Westerville; Oceola; Wellsville; Harrisburg; Minerva; Utica; Barnesville; Concord; New Baltimore; Slope; Brookfield $1.50; Hill Top; Good Hope; Williamsport; Madisonville; Uhricksville; W. Geneva; Bellbrook (W., L. T. L. $1; Lynchburg; Burton; Vaughnsville $1.10; McCutchenville; Darbyville; Anna W. Clark; Mt. Pleasant $1.60; Walnut Twp.; Landonville; Warren; Hartville; Caldwell. Total $66.70.

North Idaho: $6.

Campaign Fund: Mrs. Walter Christie $1; Utah $10; New Jersey $27.14; S. California $14.52; Maine (Presque Isle $0.30); New York $111.36; Phelps $1; North Carolina $14.50; Connecticut $22.04; Pennsylvania $274.19; Kentucky $8.26; N. Idaho $10.

$2.50 PER DAY SALARY PAID ONE PERSON in each town to distribute FREE circulars, and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring. Non-alcoholic. Big demand, steadily increasing. J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7G, E. Harrison St., Chicago.

REAPING THE WHIRLWIND

LEORA M. BLANCHARD

One of the reasons why the days of the liquor traffic are numbered is that the second generations of the families whose financial interests are largely invested in the liquor business are unwilling to be longer connected with a traffic which is becoming increasingly unpopular. They are withdrawing their money and investing it in other lines of business.

During the seven years since Mrs. Randal, the wife of the saloonkeeper of Dexter, had given up her life rather than enjoy with her husband the fruits of the saloon business, the liquor octopus, with its far-reaching tentacles, had claimed many innocent victims in Dexter. Yet still the ruby light in front of Randal's place on Main street enticed boys and young men, and the town, once safe as to home environment, had become a social menace. The so-called town benefit had become the town nuisance. Nevertheless the citizens continued to vote in favor of the dram shop as a public necessity. Mothers mourned the temptation lying in wait for their sons, children of drunkards cried for food, but the voters refused to heed the pleadings of any so long as a golden stream from the saloon flowed into the village coffers.

The saloonkeeper's only son, Will Randal, had passed through high school not without credit. He was a faithful student and a steady youth, but the stigma of his father's business clung to him. Young men of the better sort left him out of their plans and pleasures; and the girls, under parental restraint, avoided him. While tolerating the saloon as a legitimate, tax-paying business, society refused to accept the liquor dealer's son as an equal. Convention has its bounds, its inconsistencies, yet none may question its power.

Will's mother had died from a broken heart which quivered with shame that her husband should be a seller of what she considered a poison, a source of unending misery. Her people had passed into oblivion, so far as the boy was concerned. Yet the dying woman had not prayed for him in vain.

Randal since his wife's death had coarsened in spirit as well as in body, and had no compunction against keeping his son employed at odd jobs around the saloon. Accordingly the youth was growing to manhood accustomed to the rough jests and the carousing that make up the evil life of a saloon. He saw men, once staunch and noble, go steadily downward. He saw boys who had outstripped him in class honors simply through family distinction become tipplers and steady drinkers, and he had time and again conducted many to a secluded retreat upstairs where they could sleep off their debauch. He saw brawls and fights, heard bitter weeping and anathemas intermingled, until his very soul grew sick.

One night, when the drinking was at its height, and the fumes from the bar burned into his very heart, the boy crept forth from the rear door of the saloon, his brain in a tumult, his limbs shaking with fear. The steady clink of the coin as it rolled into the cash drawer, the popping of corks, the coarse songs and coarser laughter all made him so giddy and faint that he sought relief in the coolness of the night. Going out into it, he passed down the alley, out through a side street, and wandered on and on. Suddenly a child's pitiful crying brought him to a sudden halt.

In a fence corner he found her, cuddled from the wind that pierced her scant and ragged clothing.

"My papa's at Randal's saloon, and my mama is sick," the small girl told him. "I am going to fetch him home, 'cause our house is dark and Nellie's afraid. I'm lost—could you find me, please?"

Will picked up the child, and after some questioning, carried her to her home. He found the house dark, the mother sick, even as little Nellie had said. Then with righteous anger burning in his heart, he rushed back to the saloon. Nellie's father—Will knew him well—stood at the bar, drinking a noisy toast with his boon companions. He approached him and whispered in his ear. Mr. Cole swore loudly, and shook off the hand the boy had placed upon his arm.

"Your wife is sick—dying, perhaps—"

"Let her die," the tipsy husband exclaimed with another oath. "I'm tired of her everlasting nagging and fault-finding"

"But little Nellie, sir—"

"Nellie's an angel" The man turned in indecision, but the revelers closed in on him for another drink, and poor Nellie was forgotten.

Will now approached his father. "Cole's house is dark and cold, his wife is sick—"

"Well, I can't help it," retorted Randal, "I have all I can do to attend to my own business."

Will withdrew to one side and looked on. He knew that Cole had just drawn his week's wages, and that they were rapidly being transferred to his father's till. A game of cards was on, and Cole was betting freely. He lost, and as his last dollar passed over the bar for drinks, Will crept cautiously behind the counter. Watching his chance, he secured a handful of coin, and quietly left the saloon.

Later, with the Midas touch of money, the Cole residence was warmed and lighted, a doctor was secured and a new little life was ushered into the world.

That night in the "wee sma' hours" as Will tossed upon his bed, he seemed to see again the sad face and the drooping frame of his mother. Again he was kneeling at her side as in his childhood, her slender finger pointing to God's law in His holy Word, as she said: "It cannot prosper, my son. God's woe is upon it."

The money that had clothed him, fed him, educated him, was blood money—the price of human souls. He had reveled in fatness, while little "Nellies" had starved and suffered. He had eaten the bread that a cruel saloon had snatched from baby fingers and had grumbled at the hardness of his lot. Sorrow and horror were woven into the woof of his clothing, and the beautiful house that sheltered him was splashed with human blood. God saw the crimson stains, even if men did not. The boy shuddered—the soft coverlet he pulled over his ears felt like the silky hair of little Nellie, and with a scream he thrust it away and leaped out of bed.

His cry aroused the house, and old Nora, the servant, caught the fever-crazed boy as he dashed down the stairway. He was forcibly put back to bed and a physician quickly summoned.

"Typhoid—and a bad case,"declared the doctor.

So Will went down amid the shadows, and the river of death rolled darkly at his tired feet; but the mother had not prayed in vain, neither for naught had she taught this pallid, suffering boy. Slowly, very slowly, his grasp on life strengthened, the terrible fever subsided, the fearful fantasies left his brain, and he returned to the activities of Dexter, chastened in spirit, and with a new purpose of life forming within his mind.

Winter passed and the spring election drew near. A fierce fight was on, for the people of Dexter, at last goaded to action, had risen in rebellion against the saloon. While party bosses laughed in derision and artfully handed out candy and cigars, women prayed and carried on the fight. The night before election Will strolled downtown. A crowd of roisterers was in front of his father's saloon, and whisky and beer flowed freely. Wily politicians were at work, booze was gratuitously supplied, and Randal alone was reaping a harvest. The boy was about to turn away in disgust, when from far down the street there came strains of sweet music. Heads turned in surprise, and the clamor about the saloon grew strangely quiet.

On came the little procession, brave with banners and gay bunting—school children marching two by two with solemn tread, their sweet voices chanting the strains of a temperance song, and behind them, a long line of silent women robed in somber black. "Vote To Save Us," Will read on the white banners. Leaping upon an overturned whisky barrel, he raised one arm to command attention, and cried out: "Vote to save the women and children, men. Outlaw the saloon and give the weaker fellows a chance to regain their manhood and self-respect. When you point to the paved streets of Dexter, don't forget the miserable hovels that line her alleys. Don't continue to pour good money into the saloonkeeper's till and get in return liquid fire and damnation, while women's tears and babies' cries are going up to heaven! God's righteous judgment is coming—'Woe to him that buildeth a town with blood and establisheth a city by iniquity!' Vote out the saloon! The streets of Dexter reek with the blood of martyred women and babies; even the new city hall is founded upon depraved manhood. Vote out the saloon!"

"How about your own duds?" a voice interrupted with tipsy gravity.

Will glanced at his spotless broadcloth, and a red stain crept across the whiteness of his cheek. His father had appeared in the doorway of the saloon; the boy saw him and the sarcastic grin on the bloated face of the man who had asked the question stung him to sudden fury.

"Do you think I care for this raiment of purple and fine linen? I tell you I hate it as I would filthy rags. I'm the saloonkeeper's son; the taunt of that title has rung in my ears ever since my childhood. It has darkened my youth and spoiled my life. My mother—" his voice choked in sudden anguish, and he stretched appealing hands to the now silent crowd that had gathered about him and his queer platform—the whisky barrel. Randal drew nearer, and an evil glitter shone from his eyes. Will continued:

"My mother was a noble woman, a Christian, as many of you know. She felt that in living on the proceeds of father's saloon she was his ally in wrong-doing; so she died of a broken heart. You call me the saloonkeeper's son; but from this night on, you shall know that I am also the son of my mother. And—men, tomorrow, in God's name, let us cast the ballot that will close up the doors of this wretched business!"

The words were still on Will's lips, when the crowd heard a muttered curse from the saloonkeeper. There was a hasty movement of his right arm, and a whisky bottle whirled over the heads of the crowd and crashed full in the boy's face.

For a moment the people stood petrified with horror, then pandemonium broke loose. While the poor victim was being carried tenderly away, angry men rushed upon the saloon and its keeper in suddenly aroused fury. The plate-glass windows were stoned into frag-

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

O bright flag, O brave flag,
O flag to lead the free!
The hand of God thy colors blent,
And Heaven to earth thy glory lent,

To shield the weak, and guide the strong,
To make an end of human wrong
And draw a hundred million human hearts
To follow thee. —Henry Van Dyke

TESS AND TED, GARDENERS

MRS. CARL BILBY

When they saw Uncle Frank coming up the front walk, mama and Ted and Tess rushed to open the front door and nearly suffocated him with affectionate greetings. They were so glad to see this big, fat, jolly uncle at whose farm mama and the "kiddies" had spent their summer storing up energy and coats of tan.

"But what's the matter with you, sis? The h. c. of l. about to get you?" demanded the visitor, holding mama off at arms' length and regarding her with shrewd blue eyes.

"Why, nothing. I'm all right. But why do you ask?"

"Well, I thought, somehow, maybe it's because I haven't seen you for some time —that you are rather thin and sallow. My, these youngsters are looking fine, though! Fine! Fine! Much better than I expected to see them!" Here Ted and Tess came in for more kisses and another big bear hug. This was two weeks before Christmas and Uncle Frank helped poor, tired mama tremendously by entertaining the children while she did Christmas shopping and made other preparations for the holiday. He nearly exhausted his stock of exclamations, though, when he heard papa tell mama what the week's grocery bill was, or when mama came in with some article of food of which he inquired the price.

When a ton of coal was delivered he was quite speechless. "Why, that's burglary! A straight holdup!" he vowed.

They all tried very hard to coax their guest to remain at least until after Christmas, but he insisted that he must spend that day with grandma at the farm. Many and genuine tears were shed at his departure, and when mama and the children returned from the station they discovered several five dollar bills sticking about in mysterious and unexpected places.

"Just like Uncle Frank!" laughed mama. "He knew that if he let us have it before, we'd be likely to spend it for Christmas. Now it's too late and we can have it for other expenses."

At intervals all through the rest of the winter came boxes, by freight, express, or parcel post containing such things as beans, potatoes, apples, nuts and many other good things from the farm.

About the middle of March Uncle Frank made another visit. "Just thought I'd run up to see if old h. c. of l. had left you alive," he explained.

Returning from down town one day he bore a mysterious present for Ted. A sack of candy? Oh, no. A "lady's set" of garden tools, consisting of a fork with broad, flat tines and spade-like handle, a rake and a hoe. "Now, Ted, see if you can't turn that back yard out yonder into a fine garden. I'll send you some high grade seeds and expect to find great results when I visit you again next fall."

A few days later there arrived by mail a beautiful little book entitled, "Small Gardens for Small Folks," which so enthused Ted that he at once set to work with his new tools, forking and spatting the soil so that when the seeds were planted the roots could grow down and the plants could grow up.

Oh, there were many, many secrets which Ted and Tess learned that summer from Mother Nature who has no end of them. Said their little book, "Mother Nature is a wise old lady, too, for she does not tell her secrets to those who do not ask her, and sometimes we even have to tease her a bit to learn them."

Because coal was so expensive the family had used some wood for fuel. The wood ashes were used to sweeten the soil. From a nearby barn the children secured manure for the garden, and they made compost all during the season by saving the grass cuttings and vegetable tops and stacking them in a heap to decay.

"Don't You Want a Garden, Too? There is Still Time if You Hurry!"

When the soil was in shape the young gardeners, for of course Tess insisted upon helping Ted, and Ted insisted upon helping her, by the aid of sticks and line did their planting. They made the first line very straight, for they knew all the other lines must be measured from it. Then they drew the handle of the hoe along the line making a dent in the soil about an inch deep. This they sowed with radish seed, the soil being lightly drawn over and firmly spatted down by determined little palms.

Six inches from the radish row was placed a lettuce row, seeds covered, and soil smoothed down. Then followed onions, lima beans, beets, sweet corn. Then came a row containing hills of cantaloupes, watermelons, cucumbers and pumpkins.

Every morning the children ran out to see if the seeds were "coming up." How delightful it was to find the tiny plants peeping through and expanding above the soil. Having attained two pairs of leaves the plants were properly thinned out and cultivated, "for," quoth Ted, "we want short, stocky, dark-green plants, not tall, sickly, yellowish things that can't hold their heads up!"

Later, several rows of potatoes were planted and tomato, cabbage, and pepper plants were set out and carefully nurtured. Along the edges of the vegetable beds Tess planted a border of flowers, lovely cosmos, marigolds and nasturtiums.

When the rows of little green plants began growing in earnest the gardeners' enthusiasm knew no bounds.

"O mama, just come out and see the garden," or "O papa, you must see the garden," at evening. Papa was a mill worker who was wont to eat supper and go "down town" to meet "some of the boys." Usually they met at "Mike's Place" and papa frequently came home rather late, red-eyed and cross and departed the next morning with a grouch.

The gardening proved infectious. At first papa went to view the garden to please the children and would "duck" as soon as possible. Then he began to be irregular and late in his arrivals at "Mike's Place."

"One of the boys," calling one evening, found him with hoe in hand industriously working. "Is this the way for a poor, tired working man to spend his leisure?" demanded the caller, half jokingly.

"It beats any way I've found yet," responded papa quite soberly. Then mama came out and the caller departed unaccompanied. Every evening after that there was a backyard family reunion till dusk, when the family all cuddled up in the big porch swing in front.

How proud and important Ted and Tess felt all that summer when mama served vegetables from their garden and what wonderful letters they wrote to Uncle Frank and grandma about it. "Well, I see old h. c. of l. hasn't got you yet," was Uncle Frank's greeting that fall.

"No, and he's not going to, either. Just see what we've got in the pantry!" Ted proudly led the way.

"Your garden paid pretty well, eh, Ted? How much did it cost you?" Ted scratched his head. "I guess not anything but work."

"That garden is the greatest institution we ever had," declared papa.

"It certainly is!" chimed in mama.

REAPING THE WHIRLWIND

(Continued from Page Twelve)

ments, and the interior of the whisky palace reduced to a mass of ruin. In the melée, Randal escaped and fled toward the house on the hill. Making a hasty change of garments, he went skulking through the alleys, alone, friendless, despised. Out into the night of oblivion he went, the brand of Cain upon his brow. He had chosen the glitter of dross, and the fruits of unrighteousness, and verily, he received his reward.

In the morning the polling places were crowded early with a host of eager voters, and Dexter went dry by a sweeping majority. A few days later willing hands finished the despoliation of the saloon, and the village was cleared from the stain of its existence.

Will Randal did not die. With the disfiguring scar of a whisky bottle upon his face, he fights on, and on; and men today have forgotten that he is the son of a saloonkeeper.

POST THE
NEW ILLUSTRATED POSTER
(Facsimile of cover page)

Our Government Rests Upon Home—School—Ballot

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC
DESTROYS HOME
HINDERS CHURCH
ROBS SCHOOL
CORRUPTS BALLOT

This poster is printed on a flag blue background. Size 28x42.
Price, 10 cents each; 3 for 25 cents.

POST IT EVERYWHERE

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

YOU ARE CONSTANTLY USING A RULER, WHY NOT USE THE PROHIBITION RULER?
(12 Inches Long)
On one side is the text
TOTAL ABSTINENCE THE ONLY SAFE RULE OF LIFE
On the reverse side
RULE OUT ALCOHOL
HELP MAKE A SOBER NATION
Price, 5 cents each; per dozen, 35 cents; per 100, $2.50.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

The Choice of a
COMMENCEMENT GIFT
is easily made and sure to please if selected from the following list:

BOOKS

The Life of Frances E. Willard, Anna A. Gordon. Price $1.50.
The Federal Government and the Liquor Traffic, Wm. E. Johnson. Price, $1.00.
Social Welfare and the Liquor Problem, Henry S. Warner. Price, $1.00.
A Century of Drink Reform in the United States, Aug. F. Fehlandt. Price, $1.00.
The Anti-Alcohol Movement in Europe, Ernest Gordon. Price, $1.50.
The Liquor Problem, Norman E. Richardson. Price, 50 cents.
What Frances E. Willard Said. Compiled by Anna A. Gordon. Price, 75 cents.
What Lillian M. N. Stevens Said. Compiled by Anna A. Gordon, Price, 50c.
Jean Mitchell's School, Angeline W. Ray. Price, $1.00.
A Modern Madonna, Caroline A. Stanley. Price, $1.50.
Nineteen Beautiful Years, Frances E. Willard. Price, 60 cents.
The Man Who Forgot, James Hay, Jr. Price, $1.37.
John Barleycorn, Jack London. Price, $1.42.
Little Sir Galahad, Phoebe Gray. Price, $1.42.
The Golden Lamp, Phoebe Gray. Price, $1.42.
Dear Enemy, Jean Webster. Price, $1.37.
Black Rock, Ralph Connor. Price, 60c.
Sky Pilot, Ralph Connor. Price, 60c.
Two, Edith Smith Davis. Price, 40c.

SOUVENIR SPOONS

Rest Cottage Spoon, sterling silver oxidized. (Rest Cottage in bowl.) Price, $1.50.
W. C. T. U. Teaspoon, sterling silver. (Crusade Church in bowl.) Price, $2.

REST COTTAGE SOUVENIR

A Terra Cotta Placque, with Rest Cottage in bas relief, hand carved, hand tinted. Price, $2.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

AMONG OUR WORKERS

The spring institute of the Essex county (N. J.) W. C. T. U. was held in South Orange, May 17, with Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, National lecturer, as the speaker at the afternoon and evening meetings. The children of the Loyal Temperance Legion presented Mrs. Armor with a bouquet of flowers and sang in her honor an original welcome song. As a result of her exhortations many telegrams were sent to President Wilson asking for national prohibition as a war measure. Mrs. Armor made three addresses in Newark and one in Summit while touring that part of the state, and aroused great interest everywhere she spoke.

Miss Lillian M. Phelps on May 23 finished a two weeks' series of meetings in Washington county, N. Y. On this, Miss Phelps' first visit to this county, she was well received. The treasury was enriched by $30 and new members were gained. "Miss Phelps is a clear and forceful speaker and the work of the county has been advanced by her addresses," writes our local correspondent.

The Maryland tri-county union of Talbot, Dorchester and Caroline has recently organized two live Branches, one in Easton with Miss Margaret Clark as president, the other in Ridgely, under the leadership of C. Wilson Jackson. There is also promise of an organization at Royal Oak very soon, as eight have expressed a desire for it. At a union meeting held in Easton, May 22, it was decided to raise $25 to rent an electric fan at the Fort Bliss hospital.

A correspondent from New Hampshire writes: "Mrs. Ida Van Valkenburg did such good work in our state in her five weeks' campaign there that she has been engaged for another term of six weeks. She arouses great enthusiasm, wherever she goes, which reaches even the pocketbooks of her audiences. She is a success in making prohibition sentiment and in organizing. Possessed of an ardor which no untoward circumstances can dampen, she seems to be able to make much of any field. Her tireless energy has resulted in the formation of eight L. T. L.'s and one union with many members from places where it is not possible to organize."

At a meeting of the three local unions of Frewsburg, Falconer and Jamestown (Swedish), held at Frewsburg, N. Y., May 1, Mrs. Addie B. Parsels, National organizer and vice-president of the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U., made a telling address and welcomed a company of white ribbon recruits.

Miss Mary E. Brown, National superintendent of Moral Education and Race Betterment, spent one week in Sunnyside, Washington, in active service for her department. She addressed the Woman's Club, visited the schools, and spoke several times each day. An informal dinner, at which fifty were present, was given in her honor.

Wyoming county (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. held an enthusiastic and successful institute at Silver Springs on May 15. Mrs. Addie B. Parsels, National organizer, was present and delivered a most interesting address at the evening meeting. A number of new members were secured.

Mrs. Florence Maskrey, a white ribboner and medal contest worker of Iowa, while in Tangipahoa parish, Louisiana, recently, took charge of the medal contest work of the parish. Under her direction each of the six unions has held a silver medal contest and on April 26 a double gold contest was given at the parish meeting in Hammond. Another double gold medal contest is planned for July and possibly a third a little later, so that the six winners of gold medals may compete in a grand gold medal contest at the state convention at Lake Charles this fall.

Each contest, except that held at Independence, made expenses and put money in the treasury. At Independence, an Italian town with no newspaper or Protestant church, posters were printed in both Italian and English.

Mrs. Maskrey has made a total of ninety-two addresses during her stay in Louisiana.

THE FLAG POSTER
most appropriate for display at this time
Use it in your
FOURTH OF JULY DECORATIONS

RALLY
For Our Country's Defense
Against Its Greatest Foe
THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC
Give Us a Saloonless Nation
A Sober People
A Stainless Flag

Printed in red, white and blue
(28x42 inches)
Price, 10 cents each; 3 for 25 cents

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

EVERY WHITE RIBBONER NEEDS TO BE EQUIPPED
with the
LATEST LITERATURE issued at the National Headquarters
Your name upon the subscription list of the
MONTHLY BUDGET OF NEW PUBLICATIONS
makes this possible, and the subscription price is
ONE DOLLAR PER YEAR.
This small investment brings to you at the close of each month a sample of all leaflets, booklets, posters, etc., published during the current month.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

AMONG THE LATEST PUBLICATIONS are

Colorado's First Year on the Water Wagon
Achievements of the National W. C. T. U. (Revised)
Price, per 50, 50 cents; per 100, 90 cents.
Prohibition's Onward March (Revised to May 15). Price, per 50, 25 cents; per 100, 40 cents.
Which Boy Shall It Be?
Why Should We Join the W. C. T. U.?
Why Compensate the Liquor Dealers?
Truth About Cider
Price, per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents.
Directions for Making Comfort Bags
Can the United States Afford to Relinquish the Liquor Revenue?
Booze and Babies (Cartoon)
Price, per 50, 15 cents; per 100, 25 cents.
Do You Love Babies? Price, per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

ILLINOIS' PATRIOTIC PROGRAM OF SERVICE

HELEN L. HOOD, President Illinois W. C. T. U.

Illinois' patriotism is finding expression in many and varied activities. The chief thing on our service program is the making of comfort bags for the boys who are in training at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station near Chicago. There are over 7,000 jackies now stationed there and the government is making this one of the greatest training camps in the country. These boys are being sent in relays every week to the different battleships. We feel, therefore, that to supply their needs is the duty first at hand. Fort Sheridan, which is also near Chicago, is a training center for the officers of the army, though at present not as many men are there as are found at the Naval Station. We are making the bags of blue denim and filling them with the necessary articles, including a Testament, literature, and a motherly letter. Complaint that some of the bags have been overfilled has been made, so that now we are censoring every bag that leaves our headquarters to make sure that it is not oversupplied and that all of the articles in it, such as needles, pins, etc., will pass inspection and be accepted.

Mrs. Almena Parker McDonald, president of Cook county W. C. T. U., and many unions of the county have loyally co-operated with Miss Epha Marshall and the state W. C. T. U. president, who have charge of the work, by cutting bags, making them, and in every way giving valuable and enthusiastic help. Each of the fourteen states over which the Naval Training Station has jurisdiction sends its boys that are enlisting for the Navy to this station, so we feel that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has a splendid opportunity to do a great work by supplying these young men with the comfort bags, which will be of great help to them. Already letters of appreciation for these gifts have been received.

MOSLEM WOMEN LIFT VOICE AGAINST POLYGAMY

In Tomsk, Siberia, a mass meeting of Moslem women was held recently, says a cable from Stockholm, in which the abolition of polygamy as a tenet of the faith was demanded. A society has been formed which may prove the entering wedge to deliver hundreds of millions of these co-religionist women from this inhuman custom. "In Russia the Moslems loom larger than is generally realized abroad," says the cable. "They form twelve per cent of the empire's population, while the Jews constitute only five per cent. The Russian Moslems have the highest percentage of marriages in the empire, even exceeding that of the orthodox church. I have found mosques in almost every Siberian town I have visited and also in many villages. They are also found in most of the big cities in Russia.

"The Moslems are most numerous in east and south Russia, the Caucasus, Siberia, Turkestan and Bokhara. They include almost all the Tartars."

MEMORIAL FOR EX-GOVERNOR ST. JOHN

Friends and admirers of the late ex-Governor St. John are planning to honor his memory by the erection of a great memorial structure to be built at Olathe, Kan., his home for fifty years. The St. John Memorial Association has been organized and incorporated for the purpose of realizing this ambition. The building will be dedicated "to the cause of prohibition in the United States."

Become the woman you wish to be

REGAIN your health, poise and figure. I can help you. I know I can. Not one drop of medicine.

My way is the natural way—a scientific system, combining exercise, bath, diet, sleep and deep breathing.

In a few short weeks, thousands of my pupils have surprised their families

80,000 Women Are My Friends

I have won their friendship and respect because I have made them well, taught them how to keep well, reduced and increased their weight, given them perfect figures—all in the privacy of their rooms—and I have kept their confidence. May I help you?

Physicians approve my work; their wives and daughters are my pupils. Medical magazines advertise my work.

These facts are cited modestly—with only a desire to prove that I can and will do all I promise. Remember,

You Can Be So Well! You Can Weigh What You Should!

It is easy to be free from nagging ailments. Even the most chronic afflictions, in nine cases out of ten, are vastly benefited by my help.

If you have any of the following derangements, mark an X after it and send to me:

Excess flesh in any part of body	Lack of Reserve Nervousness
Thin Bust, Chest, Neck or Arms	Irritability
Round Shoulders	Constipation
Incorrect Standing	Indigestion
Incorrect Walking	Dizziness
Poor Complexion	Weakness
Poor Circulation	Rheumatism
Lame Back	Colds
Headache	Torpid Liver
Sleeplessness	Mal-assimilation

You thoroughly enjoy my simple directions and you feel so satisfied with yourself.

Write to me! Ask for my Booklet No. 24 — sent you without charge. Let me tell you all about my wonderful experience! Then you will understand the great work I am doing for womankind and how I can help you

Susanna Cocroft, Dept. 37, 624 Michigan Ave., Chicago

EXPLODED ARGUMENTS!

"States which have already adapted themselves to prohibition can smile at the arguments advanced by its opponents in New York, for they have already been exploded," says the Portland Oregonian in a discussion of the likelihood of prohibition in New York.

"The lost revenue is already made up by other forms of taxation without hardship or complaint, especially as the effect of prohibition is already becoming apparent in a diminution of crime and insanity and consequently of public burdens. Breweries are applied to other uses than making beer and other retail business has occupied vacant saloons. Former employes of breweries and saloons have found other occupations, for there are practically no unemployed in Oregon who wish to work. States and cities have learned that they can get along without liquor revenue, capital has learned that it can find profitable use for property which was formerly applied to production of revenue and workingmen have found other jobs. The liquor traffic has disappeared and we have quickly closed the gaps which it left."

When a paper formerly opposed to prohibition makes such statements as these in its favor it speaks well for the future of the United States when it shall have secured National Constitutional Prohibition.

OREGON CONFISCATED LIQUORS DESTROYED IN PORTLAND

Two thousand quarts of confiscated whisky, beer, cordials and wines were recently destroyed in Portland, Oregon, by the sheriff and district attorney. This liquor, the result of various raids under the new "bone dry" law of the state, splattered the stone paving of the courtyard of the Multnomah county courthouse, and the atmosphere for blocks was heavy with the aroma as the intoxicants made their way into the sewer. Mrs. Adah Wallace Unruh, National lecturer, assisted in the "bacchanalian massacre."

IS IT ANY WONDER?

"The Chicago Tribune kept a record for ten years and found that 53,556 murders were committed by men under the influence of drink.

"Nathan F. Simpson, warden of the state penitentiary of Michigan, says, 'We find that ninety-two per cent of the men now confined here used liquor to some extent and seventy-five per cent attributed their downfall directly to drink. Of the men who violate their paroles approximately seventy-five per cent do so by frequenting saloons.'

"Mary C. Johnson, superintendent of the Michigan Industrial Home for Girls, Adrian, Michigan, says, 'During the ten years past the number of inmates received was 1,276. Of this number 595 had fathers who drank and 131 had intemperate mothers, a total of 726.'

"The Detroit House of Correction had 3,376 inmates in one year. Only 67 of them were temperate. The other 3,309 were booze drinkers."

Is it any wonder that state after state is voting out booze? The above sentences were published in the Kansas City Star. We reprint them because they reflect just the sort of fact that is drying up the United States a good deal faster than one could have prophesied a dozen years ago. —Collier's Weekly.

MINNEAPOLIS BUSINESS MAN ENDORSES NATIONAL PROHIBITION

E. C. Warner, president of the Midland Linseed Products company of Minneapolis, endorses national prohibition.

"I am satisfied national prohibition would do much to promote military and economic efficiency," wrote Mr. Warner to Secretary of Agriculture Houston, "as well as commercial efficiency among army officers, corporation officers and also among laboring classes, materially increase the quantity of food, preserve food supplies, and provide many a destitute wife and mother with the necessaries of life that she otherwise would not have.

"Prohibiting the manufacture of liquor of every kind and description during the war would do much good and partially accomplish the same purpose."

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year
Club rate for ten or more subscriptions, 25c a year
No other premium allowed.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

WHAT AN ARKANSAS FRIEND THINKS OF THE QUIZ

Why does total abstinence appeal to men as a sensible course of action? What is the attitude toward alcohol in athletic circles according to the statement of an athletic director of the University of Chicago?

Why is national legislation needed to deal with the liquor evil?

How does the personal license of the parent affect the personal liberty of the offspring?

Is the Gothenburg system of regulating the liquor traffic a success in Norway and Sweden?

What two prominent state capitals voted dry in the April election? Can you mention the prominent city in Minnesota that, after a year's trial of prohibition, voted for its retention by a greatly increased majority?

Has prohibition been instrumental in any way in bringing about the Russian revolution.

What action has been taken looking toward the adoption of national prohibition as a war measure?

In what line of service in the present war is the W. C. T. U. planning to assist?

Would you not like to be able to answer the above questions? Would you not feel that you knew a great deal if you could give an intelligent answer to them?

I can tell you how you can do it. Become a reader of THE UNION SIGNAL. How can you afford to be without it? If you realized how much good you would get out of it, you would not wait another day to send in your subscription.

If you realized how anxious I, your friend and comrade, am for you to take it you would yield for that reason, if for no other. You see, I know what it would mean to you. I have not missed a copy of the official paper since the day I enlisted in the W. C. T. U. army nearly thirty years ago.

The questions are asked in one issue and answers are found in the preceding one.

—Arkansas White Ribboner

CAN'T KEEP HOUSE WITHOUT IT

"Enclosed find one dollar for one year's subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL and please continue from the date the last paper was received. I can't keep house without it. After reading the papers myself I give them to the library and can thus reach the most people."

THE OPINION OF ONE FAR-SIGHTED SUPERINTENDENT

"I am making a specialty of putting the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL in the homes outside the W. C. T. U. I believe that issue put in one hundred homes is better than the weekly edition in twenty-five, although I take the weekly when I can get it.

"I am trying hard to get a large order and I desire all the credits possible, as from now on I want so much to have enough to present to every new little country union a subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL."

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

¶We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.
¶Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
118-120 Fifth Ave., New York
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works
Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

SUGGESTIONS FOR PATRIOTS

Let all patriots learn the words and music of the old American songs: "The Star Spangled Banner," "America," "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," "Dixie" and "Old Folks at Home." By familiarity with these melodies they can add to the fervor and volume of patriotic music at religious gatherings and mass meetings.

Organize the children of the Loyal Temperance Legions and Sunday schools into "Feed Yourself Clubs." That is what they are doing in South Carolina. In connection with this movement, they are drilling the children, using for the purpose hoes and rakes instead of rifles and bayonets.

"If there isn't a thinker in your kitchen these days," says Herbert Kaufman, "there may be a hungry family at the table before the year is over."

"It may be necessary this year to make this a 'drying nation' in the matter of food preservation, as well as a dry nation in the matter of booze," remarks Mrs. Anna B. Scott, the food expert of Philadelphia.

"No empty tin cans this year," is the slogan being urged upon housewives by the agricultural school of the Pennsylvania state university. Through its department of home economics there is being carried on a state-wide campaign to encourage the preserving of garden products by canning and drying.

Canning centers will open in the domestic science rooms of some of the Chicago public schools as soon as homegrown vegetables are ready for canning. These centers will be continued all summer.

TEXAS' WAR-TIME SERVICE

From all over Texas telegraphic protests against the use of grains and fruits in the manufacture of alcohol have gone to President Wilson from W. C. T. U. women.

The state W. C. T. U. is also co-operating with the University Extension plans for conserving the food supply in Texas by cultivating every available plot of land and canning all surplus fruit and vegetables. As individuals the white ribboners are enlisting for service in Red Cross work.

WHAT OTHERS ARE DOING IN THE INTERESTS OF CONSERVATION

La Crosse county, Wisconsin, is assured of abundant labor to harvest its crops, says an article in the La Crosse Tribune. Lawyers, physicians and business men in all walks of life have promised the needed help by their signatures to a petition circulated by the Chamber of Commerce which reads: "We hereby agree, when called, to give voluntarily one day's services in labor to the farmers in this vicinity to help harvest the crops for the season 1917."

The Chicago Branch of the Woman's Peace Party is co-operating in the national war-time conservation program by urging the organization of groups of children to plant gardens and raise chickens, rabbits, pigeons and other game and fowl, the observance of rational economy in the use of food and the study of food economy by groups of women meeting for this purpose. A course of lectures on this subject will be given each week at Hull House, Chicago.

The Pennsylvania State College is offering early in June a ten-day course in farming for high school boys who are to work on farms this summer.

Women are being employed to do manual work at the Baltimore and Ohio railroad shops in Cumberland, Md., to take the place of men who have been called to other duties because of the war, it is reported. The women wear overalls while performing their work, which includes cleaning along the tracks, assorting scrap, cleanlng and sweeping about the shops and assisting the machinists' helpers.

Sanitary Drinking Fountains

Also Drinking Fountains for Man and Beast.

Special prices to W. C. T. U. and all Charitable Societies.

This Fountain was erected by the W. C. T. U. of Luray, Va.

Write for Catalogue

J. W. Fiske Iron Works
56 & 58 Park Place
NEW YORK

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., JUNE 14, 1917 | No. 24

Shall It Be Grown For This? —Science Service.

Let Us Continue Increasingly and Unceasingly to Urge Prohibition as a War Measure Through Telegrams and Brief Letters to President Wilson and to Members of Congress.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

CONTINUE TO HAMMER AT THE GATES OF WASHINGTON FOR PROHIBITION AS WAR MEASURE—BOMBARD YOUR SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES WITH TELEGRAPHIC PETITIONS AND LETTERS

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

Washington has been given over to the Confederate veterans this week, 25,000 having visited the city to attend their annual reunion. As I write strains of martial music come to my ear, for this is the day of the great parade and veterans old, bent, and feeble have marched up Pennsylvania avenue, accompanied by the District of Columbia militia, the reserve corps from Fort Myer, high school boys, artillery and infantry, besides many automobiles filled with men not able to do much walking, and matrons and maids from the southland, all passing the White House, where President Wilson, Vice-President Marshall and other notable men reviewed them. It was a pathetic sight to see the men file by, bearing the one flag of a united people.

The Senate and House adjourned for two days to show respect to the visitors. Senator Bankhead of Alabama, in putting the motion to adjourn, in a touching way alluded to his part in the struggle of the Sixties, saying, "I take the liberty of offering this motion since I am the only remaining Senator who served four full years as a Confederate soldier. Think, Senators, of the significance of a spectacle like this. A little more than half a century ago these same men in arms were hammering at the gates of Washington in an effort to sever their relations with the national government. Marching Thursday, with broken body and faltering step, on a mission of peace and love, not of hatred and bloodshed, but in a spirit of resolute reconciliation and absolute loyalty to our flag, they will voice in vibrant tones to all the world an indissoluble Union of the United States. I am grateful that God has spared me to see this day. For four years I marched and fought under the Stars and Bars. Five immediate members of my family are now enlisted under the Stars and Stripes, a son, two grandsons, and two nephews. They will even up our records."

The Senate Finance committee has inserted a clause in the war revenue bill which gives approval to war prohibition if such provision is made by Congress in the way of a prohibitive tax.

On top of the present tax of $2.20 per gallon on liquor, a tax of $20 per bushel upon all grain, cereal or other foodstuffs used in manufacturing whisky, or other distilled spirits for use as beverages, was adopted.

Prohibitive taxes upon whisky and other distilled spirits for beverage purposes, with an embargo on importation, were agreed upon. Taxes fixed by the House on beer and wines were left as they are, for the time being.

Increased taxes of $5 per gallon upon molasses, sirups, and substitutes used in distilleries for beverage purposes were agreed upon. But the amendment makes no provision for 211,000,000 gallons of whisky and other distilled spirits now held in bond which should be re-distilled for munition purposes. The strongest provision in the amendment prohibits the importation into the United States, Porto Rico, and the Philippines of distilled spirits made from any foodstuffs except for industrial, mechanical, or experimental purposes.

What we must have is the Thompson-Webb bill, or one identical with its provisions, viz.: "For the prevention of the waste of the food products of the United States during the period of the war and to prohibit their manufacture into alcoholic liquors, except in certain cases, and to provide for the distillation of liquors in bond or heretofore manufactured," for munition purposes.

Letters, resolutions and petitions for such a measure must continue to pour into Congress in care of your Senators and Representative. The splendid response to our appeals for letters, etc., on the part of temperance friends is being felt, and the country at large must let those in authority know what the wish and desire of the people is. We believe a large majority of the people are in favor of prohibition as a war measure; then let them say so in terms that cannot be misunderstood. The President must continue to be bombarded with communications; as I have said before, a few scattering letters or telegrams will amount to nothing, but a flood will make a stir and cause even the wheels of government to respond. Remember, two letters, resolutions, or petitions are needed when writing Congress, one to a Senator and one to your Representative. Please use pen and ink, or better still, the typewriter. The most excellent letter or petition loses force when written in pencil.

A recent editorial in a leading Washington daily concerning "The President" has some points that are worth our consideration. It says: "A man occupying the White House is at a disadvantage respecting the public. He is seldom in touch with it. He is hedged in by ceremony—he is in a stilted position. So many persons approach him for favors. All manifest in some pronounced way respect for his office. He gets too many rosy accounts of things. Every effort is made to shut out the disagreeable, when at times it is important that he should know the very things being concealed from him.

"If this is true in times of peace, it is doubly true now. Surely the President stands in need of the fullest possible knowledge, not only of what is going on, but of popular interpretations of public performances. So much centers in him. So white a light beats upon his every word and act. So heavy is the burden he bears and necessary is it that he be kept well advised of currents of popular thought."

We are fortunate in having two more men in Congress who favor prohibition, Senator McNary of Oregon, to succeed Senator Lane, deceased, and Representative Burroughs of New Hampshire, who succeeds Cyrus A. Sulloway. Senator McNary says, "I shall advocate national prohibition and national suffrage."

Registration Day was observed very rigidly in Washington, nearly 35,000 young men registering. Miss Gordon, Miss Elizabeth Gordon and I visited one of the school buildings for awhile and watched the procedure. At the entrance to the school yard were two policemen and a military man to keep order, but no disturbance occurred during the day. At the inner entrance stood two young soldiers and sitting at a table was a lady representing the American Suffrage Association, who gave to each man a copy of the President's "War Message." In the room assigned the registrars were two tables, one for each. As the young men entered, each in turn took a chair beside one of the tables and with firm voice answered the many questions propounded. What impressed us very forcibly was the lack of chaffing, so common among young men, and their manly dignity; the solemnity of the occasion seemed to be felt by each individual. In a few instances mothers accompanied their sons and stood by with earnest face as the lads manfully gave their answers; then taking the arms of their sons they walked away with heads erect, proud of the boys at their side, but we knew they carried aching hearts. Five members of the White House force were among those who registered.

An opinion by Attorney General Gregory, made public June 8, declares that the prohibition provisions of the new Army law apply to the Navy and Marine Corps on land or sea, as well as to the Army. Secretary Daniels has telegraphed the ruling to the officers commanding all naval posts.

The law forbids the sale or possession of liquor at military posts, except for medicinal purposes, and makes it unlawful to sell intoxicants to any officer, soldier or sailor in uniform.

Senator Sheppard gave a luncheon at the Capitol recently, to which numerous Senators were invited, to demonstrate a "war bread," for the purpose of conserving wheat. Bread having fifteen per cent of cotton-seed flour mixed with wheat flour, baked at the Bureau of Chemistry, was served and eaten with relish. By using the cotton-seed flour, Senator Sheppard said 115,000,000 bushels of wheat can be saved annually, and the nutritious properties of bread doubled.

Sequoyah, once a leader of the Cherokee Indians and today the most famous son of that tribe, came into his own this week when the Oklahoma delegation in Congress presented a statue of him to the United States. The gift was made in behalf of the state of Oklahoma under the act of Congress authorizing each state to place two statues representing distinguished men in Statuary Hall. Oklahoma, in choosing a statue of Sequoyah as the first to be presented by her, hailed the great Indian as her favorite son. The ceremonies took place in Statuary Hall. Speeches were made by the Oklahoma delegation in Congress and Speaker Clark accepted the statue in behalf of the United States.

Sunday, June 3, a great mass meeting under the auspices of the various temperance societies of the District of Columbia was held in the First Congregational Church, Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National W. C. T. U., presiding. The speakers were United States Senator H. L. Myers of Montana, Representative M. Clyde Kelly of Pennsylvania, Dr. Clarence True Wilson of the M. E. Temperance Society, Dr. W. F. Crafts of the International Reform Bureau, W. J. Calderwood, War Prohibition Committee of Sixty, E. G. Dinwiddie of the Anti-Saloon League of America. Senator Myers said: "The result of the war rests with the people. It will depend upon how soon the people force Congress to pass a national prohibition war measure. If the people demand it, they will get it. How shall the people let grain be used," he asked, "in liquor or bread?" A word to the wise is sufficient.

National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, Washington, D. C., June 8, 1917.

AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION PASSES ANTI-ALCOHOL RESOLUTION

DR. C. H. MAYO, PRESIDENT, DECLARES NATIONAL PROHIBITION WOULD BE WELCOMED BY MEDICAL PROFESSION

The house of delegates of the American Medical Association, representing a membership of 80,000 of the ablest physicians and surgeons of the United States, went on record, at its annual meeting in New York, last week, against alcohol as a beverage or a therapeutic agent.

After some discussion over the wording of a resolution presented by the council of health and public instruction, of which Dr. Frank Billings was chairman, the house of delegates voted in favor of the resolution as quoted herewith.

Dr. Mayo Favors National Prohibition

"Alcohol's only place now is in the arts and sciences. National prohibition would be welcomed by the medical profession," declared Dr. C. H. Mayo, the noted Minnesota surgeon, in his speech before the association upon the occasion of his being installed as its president. The applause of the audience which he addressed indicated its approval of his words. In leading up to his outspoken commendation of prohibition, Dr. Mayo said:

"We must aid in all that will elevate the general standard of and conserve the American citizen. Prohibition is a war measure, the value of which is beyond discussion. Medicine has reached a period when alcohol is rarely employed as a drug, having been displaced by better remedies."

Frequent references to the liquor question were made by speakers. The Rev. Charles Stelzle, field secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, said the toil of 75,000 farmers for six months is required to furnish the grain used to make the country's liquor. He declared 300,000 persons in America serve the liquor traffic whose services are now needed "for the legitimate work of the country."

Dr. Haven Emerson, New York City's commissioner of health, said the nation requires today three times as much alcohol as formerly, but needs it for munitions. "We want it," he added, "to explode in the enemy's trenches and not in our own stomachs."

RESOLUTION

Whereas, We believe that the use of alcohol is detrimental to the human economy, and whereas its use in therapeutics as a tonic or stimulant or for food has no scientific value, therefore

Be it resolved, That the American Medical Association is opposed to the use of alcohol as a beverage; and

Be it further resolved, That the use of alcohol as a therapeutic agent should be further discouraged.

VAST QUANTITIES OF FOODSTUFFS USED YEARLY IN BEER DECLARES WOMEN'S WAR PROHIBITION COMMITTEE IN OPEN LETTER TO ALL PAPERS AND PEOPLE THAT BELIEVE THE BEER FALLACY.

While we understand that the idea of abolishing distilled liquor but of keeping wine and beer sounds well, we believe that study of the facts will convince the open-minded that we should be little if any farther along with the drink evil, if we adhered to this beer policy.

In London, 1916, Lord D'Abernon, chairman British Board of Control, found that out of 903 cases of drunkenness, 40 per cent had become drunk on beer or stout alone.

Joss, in careful experiments made with students, found that one to two glasses of beer reduced the capacity of students to do mental arithmetic 12 per cent.

Georgia (1908-1916) tried the experiment of forbidding distilled liquor but allowing light or near-beer. It failed. Judge Broyles (then of the Police Court, Atlanta) said: "A near-beer law is practically unenforceable as you cannot have a chemist with every barrel to see that the beer is light. Besides men can get drunk on 2 per cent beer if they take enough of it."

Massachusetts tried a beer experiment 1870-73. In 1869 the state was under prohibition. In 1870 beer was allowed. Drunkenness and crime rose at once. In New Bedford, 1872 (year in which beer saloons were opened), number of crimes increased over 68 per cent, cases of drunkenness over 120 per cent.

One great trouble was that beer saloons would sell whisky, too, and there seemed no way to prevent it.

In Germany, about 1850, the upper and middle classes shifted to beer. The result was, that while distilled liquor consumption only slightly declined, beer drinking has risen enormously. Kraepelin says, in Munich, "daily amount runs from 4 to 8 quarts of beer a day." You see men drink for "the kick," and to get it one must drink such quantities of beer that there comes not only drunkenness and brutality, but disease. Out of 5,700 autopsies at the Pathological Institute, Munich, Bollinger found that one out of every sixteen males had died of beer-drinker's heart.

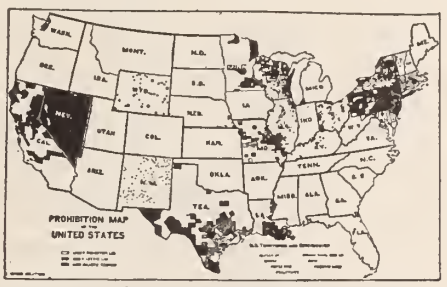
Prof. von Struempell, Germany's noted physiologist, says: "Nothing is more erroneous from the physician's point of view than to think of diminishing the destructive effects of alcohol by substituting beer for other alcoholic drinks."

Professor Mobius of Leipsic says: "I know little of whisky or wine-drinkers. With us it is beer that ruins the people."

The fact is beer is no cure for the drink evil. History proves it and we beg you not to keep back the only thing that history shows to have been effective—the ideal, total abstinence supplemented by prohibition.

As for saying the workingman would revolt if you take away his beer, it is a libel on the workingman. He will co-operate like any other good citizen.

Again, over 3,000,000,000 pounds of food stuffs go yearly into beer. Let us go by history in this matter of war prohibition and not by snap-shot judgment, for only by keeping close to the facts can we be of service to our country in this crisis.



HONOR ROLL

—of—

PROHIBITION STATES AND TERRITORY AND DATE OF GOING INTO EFFECT

Maine			1851
Kansas			1880
North Dakota			1889
Oklahoma			1907
Georgia			1908
North Carolina			1909
Mississippi			1909
Tennessee			1909
West Virginia			1914
Alabama			1915
Arizona			1915
Virginia			1916
Colorado			1916
Oregon			1916
Washington			1916
Arkansas			1916
Iowa			1916
Idaho			1916
South Carolina			1916
Nebraska	*May	1,	1917
South Dakota	*July	1,	1917
Utah	†Aug.	1,	1917
Dist. of Columbia	†Nov.	1,	1917
Alaska	†Jan.	1,	1918
Indiana	†April	2,	1918
Michigan	*April	30,	1918
Montana	*Dec.	31,	1918
New Hampshire	†May	1,	1918

*Enacted 1916. †Enacted 1917.

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1917

Iowa†† Ohio New Mexico

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1918

Utah†† Missouri Florida
Minnesota Wyoming Nevada

††Now have statutory prohibition. Will vote on constitutional amendment.

ALCOHOL LESSENS ENLISTMENT

Nearly every man failing to pass the physical examinations on application for enlistment in the United States Marine Corps, says the Christian Science Monitor, is refused partly because of conditions directly traceable to the use of alcohol before maturity, according to Lieut. W. Randolph Angell, U. S. N. R. F., examining officer of the Boston recruiting station of the Marine Corps. The adverse effects of even the moderate use of intoxicants are revealed in the examinations, he says, and he is right when he declares that the conditions which make such a state of affairs should be abolished at once.

CHICAGO CLUBS REQUESTED TO BECOME DRY

The Illinois branch of the Woman's Committee of the Council of National Defense, in accordance with resolutions adopted by its executive committee, has requested every club in Chicago to refrain from selling liquor during the war. The clubs have signified their willingness to comply with any governmental request of this nature. If no such request is made and a majority of the clubs on their own initiative go dry, there will be no hangers-back. The resolution, a copy of which was sent to every club in the city, was as follows:

"Whereas, This nation is facing a period wherein it must feed not only its own people but the greater portion of the world, and,

"Whereas, We are being urged by those in authority to conserve all foods, particularly grains, and,

"Whereas, A large amount of grain so needed for food is consumed in the manufacture of alcoholic liquors, and,

"Whereas, By the terms of the conscription act men in uniform who must bear the heaviest burden of the war may not be served with alcoholic beverages;

"Therefore Be It Resolved, That we, the executive committee of the Woman's Committee of the Council of National Defense, Illinois division, request all clubs, on the grounds of economy and justice, not to serve alcoholic beverages during the war times."

CHANGING ATTITUDE OF THE WORLD TOWARD ALCOHOL

IRVING FISHER, Professor of Political Economy, Yale College

The day will come, I believe, when alcohol, as a beverage, will be practically abandoned. There are at any rate, several good reasons to hope so. In the first place, social ideals are changing. Alcohol won its popularity in those bygone ages when the ideal life was supposed to be a life of leisure. But in this modern age, when the ideal life is recognized to be a life of work, alcohol is sure to become less of an "institution." When leisure was the great object, bacchanalian revels were a crude and primitive way of enjoying it; and the use of alcohol, therefore, gradually became a kind of social badge, to prove that the person indulging in these revels had the leisure to do so. There was a time when the English gentleman thought that to prove he was a gentleman he must get drunk at least once a week. Thus he showed that he had the time to spare for lordly amusements. Those were the days when the royal courts were scenes of conviviality and when a king regarded it as beneath his dignity to do any useful work. But today the highest classes in all lands are workers; and while there is still a class of idle rich who drink and carouse, they are looked down upon by the real leaders of the world. Kings and presidents and nearly all who set the fashions for mankind now have no time for much drinking; and what is more important, they do not wish to waste their working power in this way. Today the man whom men most admire is not the strutting, leisurely tipsy "gentleman" who has nothing to do but "enjoy himself"; he is rather the leader in industry or in politics,—firm-limbed, clear-headed, useful, efficient, who lets alcohol severely alone.

Since the war began King George in the interests of greater working efficiency among employes making armaments, set the example of total abstinence to England. So also, the Kaiser of Germany and the Czar of Russia, have encouraged the anti-alcohol movement; the Kaiser, even before the war, spoke against alcohol, gave it up himself, and selected the university to which to send his son on the basis largely of the fact that that university had less of the fashion of beer drinking than any other university of Germany. Ex-President Taft has become a total abstainer. President Emeritus Eliot, of Harvard University, has taken a strong position against the use of alcohol, even "in moderation."

The universities are moving in this direction. At Cornell, the senior classes the last two years have voted for dry banquets, which almost established that practice as a "tradition." At Yale, Sigma Xi and Phi Beta Kappa have recently excluded alcohol from their banquets. Five of the secret societies at Yale have abolished its use within their walls. At the banquet of a leading Yale journal a short time ago no alcohol was served except the "Rhine" glass. This was a distinct departure from old traditions. The use of alcohol in fraternity houses is not generally allowed at the University of Minnesota, and it is as a rule omitted from the banquets of graduating classes and from the banquets of returning classes. At Chicago there is a rule which forbids the use of alcoholic liquors in the fraternity houses and in connection with any secret societies. Also, there is no liquor served at the general meeting of the alumni, which is also true at Yale. The University of California seems to have gone the farthest in this direction and it has made this progress under student government. The students themselves have prohibited alcohol from the campus entirely. There seems to be a tendency against alcohol at all of our colleges.

The present war in Europe has given an impetus to the movement against alcohol. The ban on vodka by the Russian government and the almost desperate attitude of the English government are evidences of the direction in which the world is now moving. The war has forced the governments into legal prohibition of the waste now going on through alcohol. During times of peace the nations did not feel that their lives were threatened because of the use of alcohol, but now that the demands are so great upon them, every leak must be stopped and the leak caused by alcohol, being so enormous, is one of the first attacked.

(Continued on Page Five)

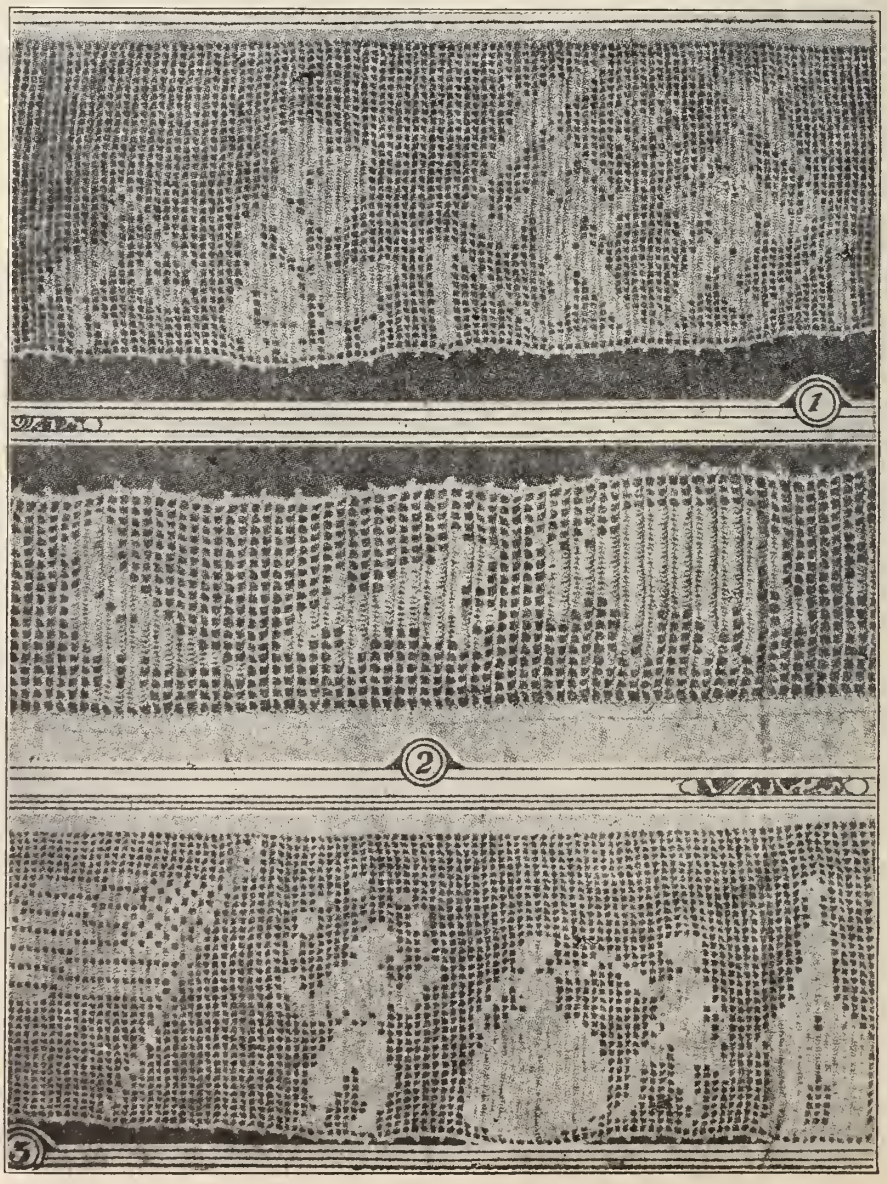
OREGON LEGISLATIVE PROCEEDINGS PICTURED IN LACE BY STATE W. C. T. U. PRESIDENT

A unique record of the 1917 session of the Oregon legislature is that worked into lace by Mrs. Jennie M. Kemp, president of the Oregon W. C. T. U., as she listened to the discussions in senate and house. The lace, which now adorns a dresser scarf, contains in all thirty-four figures. Among those especially interesting to white ribboners are the Carrie Nation hatchet, representing the "bone dry" law, and the double cross which symbolizes the anti-cigaret measure, or rather the fact that it was amended in opposition to the wishes of the backers of the measure. The lace has attracted considerable attention and more than one of the legislators would have been glad to purchase it. The picture shows a few of the figures, as follows:

1. Stork, representing illegitimate child act; woman bending over washtub, representing widows' pension act; two rival gubernatorial candidates disporting themselves before the other members.

2. Chinese pheasant, representing legislation on that subject; the sheep-killing dog, against whom severe restrictive legislation was enacted; and the livestock that was prohibited from running at large.

3. Our flag, which represents spirit of legislators on severance of diplomatic relations with Germany; member in attitude of juggling bills; male members dancing around Mrs. Thompson, representing their attitude toward the only woman legislator; the church, which it was proposed should pay taxes.



WOMAN AND WAR

DEBORAH KNOX LIVINGSTON, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Franchise

The cataclysm of horror into which the world has been plunged during the past three years has involved man, woman and child alike, and yet in a very real sense woman has borne the most sacrificial part in the great war.

It is a war that will go down in history as disproving not only the divine right of kings but the divine right of sex. In this titanic struggle for a world-wide democracy over an old world autocracy women are coming into their own, and all the previous prejudices that have divided the sexes are being obliterated in face of the fact that woman is meeting every demand that is being made upon her, physically, mentally and spiritually.

When the war broke out the women of the world were in a state of unrest. They were struggling for political rights, as they had struggled for the right of education, for the right of organization, for the right to a place in the industrial world and in the professions and arts—rights hitherto enjoyed largely by man.

The call to arms in the great warring nations of Europe and Great Britain, was as surely a call to women to rally to the defense of their country, as to men. Thousands and tens of thousands of women immediately assumed the responsibilities laid down by men, and for every male who left the farm or the factory, the mine or the munition plant, a woman stood ready to take his place, that the necessities for war might continue to be provided. Who of this generation will ever forget the unparalleled heroism of the women of France, who in the autumn of 1914, against tremendous odds harvested that great crop? Or who will be able to describe for future generations the magnificent self-sacrificing efforts of the women of Russia and Great Britain to do "their bit" for the defense of their country. One wonders if the story of the women of Belgium and Poland can ever be written in words sufficiently adequate to portray their matchless sacrifice. Courage and fortitude, under terrific strain and stress, self-renunciation even to death, are not qualities peculiar to one sex as against the other, but are common to both man and woman alike.

One of the arguments long held by those opposed to woman suffrage has been that as women could not bear arms, they had no right to the suffrage; in other words, ballots were dependent upon bullets. The present world war has forever shattered that opinion. We have learned that the man who digs the trench in which the gun is placed is dependent upon the man (or woman) who digs the trench in which the potato or grain is placed. The armies who go forth to battle are dependent upon the armies who remain to plant, produce and manufacture that which is necessary to make possible the support of the regiments at the front, and many women have enlisted in this service. Women are taking the places of men everywhere in the warring nations. More than that, women have given to the world the men who are fighting the great fight for democracy. We recall the famous words of Lucy Stone: "Women have borne the armies of the world; let men bear the arms." But in this great conflict women have had to bear arms also, that they might defend the sanctity of their homes, the sacredness of their persons and the lives of their children.

What effect will the war have upon the political freedom of women is a much asked question. That it will have a tremendous reflex influence for good we confidently believe. This great struggle for democracy, which means "government of the people, for the people, by the people," cannot exclude women. The British parliament is now fully awake to that fact and full parliamentary suffrage will soon be conferred upon the women of Great Britain. Province after province of Canada has granted suffrage to women since the outbreak of the war, and two of the three leading parties in Russia are committed to the granting of political rights to women in the establishment of the new government. Even Germany, in its long promised extension of the suffrage, is being forced to consider the necessity of granting some form of it to the women of the empire.

The mighty conflict which now rages and must continue until justice and equity are once more established upon the earth, will insure for woman, as well as for man, larger opportunities for service. It will demand a recognition of the contribution which woman can and must make to government for the welfare of the race.

Great problems will confront us at the close of the war, which can only be solved by government enactment, and as women will be vitally affected they should be given a voice in their solution. There will be the adjustments in the industrial world, the settling of social questions, the care of dependents, which class will be greatly increased by the ravages of war. All the issues with which women are concerned today—the conservation of public health, food production, food preparation, food consumption, etc.—will gain in importance. There are today between ten and twelve million women in industry and in the next year as men leave the field of industry for the field of war, countless thousands will be added to the ranks. What shall be done with these women when men return to the peaceful pursuits of commerce and industry? Great social questions will arise which it will be peculiarly the duty of women to face. Widows and orphans, and others who will become dependents—all these will be the care of the government, and women will desire to share in that care.

No war in the history of the world will bring such great problems or lay such grievous burdens upon woman as the mighty conflict in which we are now engaged, and her best and greatest service will be required to meet the situation when the war ends.

As a matter of efficiency, economy and preparedness (words much used in these days) the women of the United States should be granted all privileges of the franchise equally with men. The number of voting women in the United States is 8,557,308. Of the forty-one legislatures that have convened, or are scheduled to convene, in 1917, thirteen have already taken favorable action. Seven (North Dakota, Ohio, Indiana, Arkansas, Rhode Island, Michigan and Nebraska) have passed presidential suffrage; five (Vermont, Indiana, North Dakota, Arkansas, at primaries, and Nebraska) have passed municipal suffrage measures; seven (Iowa, North Dakota, Oklahoma, New York, South Dakota, Michigan and Maine) have passed constitutional amendment measures. In New York and Maine the measure goes to the voters this autumn; in Oklahoma, Michigan and South Dakota in 1918. In Iowa and North Dakota the amendment must pass the next legislature before the voters can act upon it. The Florida legislature, which convened in April, has suffrage measures before it. Georgia's legislature, which convenes in June, still has a chance to distinguish itself on the suffrage question.

It may not be wise to force action at this special session of the 65th Congress, but with the opening of the regular session in December we must renew our efforts for the submission of a Federal amendment as a "war measure." Women will not be less, but better and more intelligent patriots, if they are voters. In this world-wide struggle for democracy let the republic of the United States be the first great nation of the earth to grant to its women full suffrage, that for all time man and woman may share equally in the affairs of government.

SUFFRAGE STATUS

States and Territory Where Women Have Full Suffrage:

WYOMING	KANSAS
COLORADO	OREGON
IDAHO	ARIZONA
UTAH	NEVADA
WASHINGTON	MONTANA
CALIFORNIA	ALASKA

Presidential and Municipal Suffrage:

ILLINOIS	NEBRASKA
INDIANA	NORTH DAKOTA

Presidential Suffrage:

MICHIGAN OHIO
RHODE ISLAND

Suffrage at Primaries:
ARKANSAS

Municipal Suffrage:
VERMONT

States Which Will Vote:

MAINE	SOUTH DAKOTA
NEW YORK	OKLAHOMA
MICHIGAN

THE CHANGING ATTITUDE OF THE WORLD TOWARD ALCOHOL

(Continued from Page Four)

Whatever degree of power alcohol still possesses is kept alive chiefly by the force or inertia of old traditions, by the assumption that so prevalent a practice must have virtues, by the fear of individuals to break away from custom, and by the well known difficulty of emancipating one's self from any drug habit. If we look at the alcohol-habit squarely, we see that it is merely one of the harmful drug-habits—like opium in China, hasheesh in Turkey, cocaine, etc. Alcohol is a poison, and its evil effects are so great that every courageous man should help to eliminate them.

If personal hygiene is a duty, it is the duty of every man to recognize the danger from alcohol to himself and to society. Instead of copying the habits of others, he may consider the responsibility of causing others to copy his. Today this requires very little courage. For so far has the anti-alcohol movement in the colleges proceeded that a man who frankly opposes the use of alcohol is more respected than the man who condones it.

BOOZE OR BREAD

Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, former government food expert, in an address in Atlantic City recently, made a plea for national prohibition as the greatest practical stroke for economy and the solution of the food problems of the day.

"Food for the allies is as important, and perhaps more so, than new forces of trained men for the battle fronts, so why threaten the supply by waste in the manufacture of alcoholic beverages?" Dr. Wiley asked.

"Booze or bread; there stands your selection. In view of the fact that the latest scientific investigations show that alcohol is never helpful, not even in small quantities, we should, without question, choose the bread end of the conundrum.

"The argument I make here is not the ethical or moral argument in favor of prohibition, strong as these points are, but simply a plea for efficiency in the food supply of this country and for the allies."

National General Secretary
MARY FRANCES WILLARD ANDERSON
79 Trowbridge St., Cambridge, Mass.

"Attempt Great Things for God. Expect Great Things from God."

National College Secretary
CHRISTINE I. TINLING
605 Westover Ave., Norfolk, Va.

EXCEPTIONAL OPPORTUNITY FOR PATRIOTIC AND CHRISTIAN SERVICE BY THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

MARY FRANCES WILLARD ANDERSON

Through the open window near my desk comes the sound of drum beats, the bugle's blare, the tramp of feet and voices shouting, "Left! Right!" The boys from the grammar and high schools are drilling. The younger members of these schoolboy units will not be called for military service at this time, but there they are with heads erect, shoulders squared, and with all the enthusiasm of youth, preparing with patriotic ardor for the future.

It is a great object lesson for us who are fighting for the annihilation of the "great enemy that has destroyed more lives than war, pestilence and famine combined." At this time of national crisis, when many of our own Young People's Branch members are being called to the colors there is need of greater activity among our membership. We must not only fill the places of those who are leaving, but we want to work untiringly to fortify the hundreds and thousands of young men outside our ranks by pledging them to total abstinence and purity. There never was a time in the history of our Y. P. B. when greater patriotic and Christian service could be rendered than at the present moment. The following paragraph from The North American Student emphasizes the vital need: "To say that for men of the army every temptation of ordinary life is multiplied a thousand fold and that many new ones will make their appearance is simply to state the facts. The experience of the armies of Canada and the European combatants proves that the moral courage and endurance of the men are tested far more severely off the battlefield than on it."

From every village, town and city in our land mothers' sons will soon be going. In the name of our Master let us see to it that the boys are pledged to total abstinence from all that would defile and with their promises and our prayers let us help keep them pure and strong.

Our loved Frances E. Willard's words come to mind at this time: "We wage a war fiercer than that of bullet and bayonet and far more vital to human good. It is a struggle whose echoes reach the stars and enlist the hosts of heaven. Step to the front and give yourself, your powers and your means to stay the enemy of God and man."

We cannot rest until national prohibition has been won, and the promise has been given, "Through God we shall do valiantly, for he it is that shall tread down our enemies."

A Crisis, a Need and a Call

ELLA A. BOOLE, National Vice-President-at-Large

A pedestrian stood on a corner. Finally he attempted to cross the street. Autos were whizzing by in both directions; a taxi approached from one side, directly in his path, and a truck from the other. Bewildered and afraid, he lifted his eyes only to be confronted by an aeroplane hovering over him. Unable to turn in any direction, he saw what he thought was an open manhole and jumped into it only to be run over by a subway train and killed.

King Alcohol is being hemmed in on all sides. State after state has driven him out. Big business has no use for him. "Safety First" has said to the laboring man that he must give up his allegiance to King Alcohol. Public health boards have attacked him on one side and efficiency experts on the other. Patriotism asserts that loyalty to the flag means a citizenship of men and women with strong bodies and clear brains as the result of total abstinence. Where can King Alcohol flee? He appeals to public sentiment, but that, too, is ready to crush him.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has been in the forefront of the prohibition movement. Filled with that new patriotism born of a great conviction and the knowledge of an enemy in our midst, it appeals to the young men and women trained in our public schools, and being prepared for leadership, to join the hosts who are attacking King Alcohol, for we are determined to continue our warfare until the liquor traffic is dead and buried through a prohibition amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The Young People's Branch is training young men and women not only as helpers but as leaders, and every community should have its recruiting station for our great reform which needs the young people and which the young people need, and it is only through such an organization as the Young People's Branch that definite training is accomplished.

SUGGESTIVE PROGRAMS FOR JUNE

First Meeting

(Program in charge of Flower Mission and Medical Temperance superintendents.)

Song—"Day by Day," page 11.

Previously ask each member to bring flowers or some delicacy and after the song and business meeting, have members arrange bouquets for the Flower Mission committee to carry to the sick or aged of the community.

Plan a program to be given at the old people's home, hospital or alms-house. This is "Scatter Sunshine" month. Let every Y. P. B. help.

Part II

Signs of Victory—"The Decrease in the Use of Alcoholic Medicines." Invite interested physician to give fifteen minute talk on this phase of medical temperance.)

Symposium—Members, "One Widely Advertised Medicine I Know to be Injurious."

A talk or paper on "Harmful Summer Soft Drinks" might be substituted.

Second Meeting

Study Review.

Department—Anti-narcotics.

Social—Reception to W. C. T. U.

HAVE YOU?

Have you paid your Y. P. B. dues?

Have you subscribed for THE UNION SIGNAL?

Have you put up any of our attractive posters in public places?

Have you had a young people's temperance meeting with the young people's church societies?

Have you given the young people of the town anything helpful as a substitute for the pool-room, saloon and other harmful places of amusements?

Have you enclosed any of our Y. P. B. leaflets in your letters to your friends?

Have you planned that temperance picnic?

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH NOTES

Ohio's energetic Y. P. B. secretary reports twenty new Branches as April's gain. Three cheers for Ohio!

The Florida Y. P. B. camp is now in session at Coronado. For ten days the young people are to enjoy the Y. P. B. classes and entertainments. We feel sure this is one of the best ways in which to train workers for future service.

The eighth annual convention of the New York state Y. P. B. federation is to be held July 2-7 at Ithaca. A most interesting program has been prepared.

Ohio's summer Y. P. B. encampment is to be held at Lakeside, July 16-18.

Missouri, Kansas and Southern California Y. P. B's. are planning summer conferences.

"Let us move directly to train boys in habits which conserve their fitness and fit them to serve." "Abstinence will add

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

ISABELLA

A MESSAGE FOR THE SWEET GIRL GRADUATE

CHRISTINE I. TINLING

Brothers are not in the habit of paying compliments to their sisters; flattery usually comes from another quarter. So, in "Measure for Measure," when Claudio praises his fair sister Isabella he is evidently telling the simple truth, and indeed, poor fellow, he is in too much trouble to speak otherwise than in sincerity. Hear what he says:

"In her youth
There is a prone and speechless dialect
Such as moves men; besides she hath prosperous art
When she will play with reason and discourse
And well she can persuade."

The first of these statements is true of every girl; the second is specially true of the college graduate. All have in greater or less degree the power of personality; college training gives the added power of logical thought clad in persuasive speech. You are to be congratulated on this double possession. But now, pardon the question, to what end will you use it? Have you a purpose? Power without a purpose is like a pile of bricks without an architect. Nothing comes of it.

You can "move men" and you will move them. Will you move them only or chiefly to admiration of yourself, of your gifts and graces and your womanly charms? Or will you lift life's standard so high and hold it so steadily that they will be moved to follow, even into the thick of the fight, for right against wrong?

We have come to a crisis in our country's history. The battle for National Prohibition has reached its climax. All the reserves must be brought up. Will you take your place and do your part or will you be left out? Your country needs you, needs the influence of your winsome personality and the force of your trained and well-stored mind. You can go straight out from college into society, into the church circle, into professional life, to "move men" to vote right and to outlaw once for all the traffic that is such a deadly foe to women and children and the home.

Do you, like Isabella, feel afraid of failing? She dared not claim the ability that was attributed to her and cried in her hesitation, "What poor ability's in me? My power? I doubt . . . ." Then came the answer:

"Our doubts are traitors
And make us lose the good we oft might win
By fearing to attempt."

We should do well to remember this. There is no harm, however, in doubting our own power if we rely instead on a higher Power. Indeed, that is what every one of us needs continually to do if we are at all to move mankind to nobler living. Take heart, then, and work for the betterment of humanity, realizing always that it is God that worketh in you.

And since union is strength and comradeship brings cheer and joy, will you not unite with those other women who have the same high ideal and the same bright hope, and identify yourself with the local Woman's Christian Temperance Union or its Young People's Branch? Thus, by the "speechless dialect" of your sweet young womanhood and by the "reason and discourse" with which you are equipped by education, you will help America to win the priceless boon of National Constitutional Prohibition.

Young Women Members of the Liberty (N. Y.) Y. P. B. Who Represented Red Cross Nurses in the Memorial Day Parade

The fifty young men members of the Y. P. B. marched with the high school forces in order that the school ranks might not be too greatly depleted. The young women of the Y. P. B. also assisted the white ribboners in serving dinner to the veterans and soldiers on this occasion. This was the first public appearance of the Liberty Y. P. B. and the first time the banner of the organization was shown.

THE I. P. A. AND THE W. C. T. U.

The occasion for patriotic service in the prohibition field comes with renewed emphasis to college women this year.

As young men leave for the front a proportionately larger share of the burden of conserving, back at home, the health and strength of the nation falls upon young women. This is true in the prohibition movement as in other fields. That this movement, so vital to the safety of the nation, may go forward to full completion, greater service must be rendered, and a greater share of the positions be "manned" by graduates of this year than has ever been required before.

From the origin of the temperance movement women have been prominent among its leaders. At times and in certain spheres they have been almost its only leaders. The one great outstanding organization, world-wide in its sweep, perhaps the greatest organization of women in the world, is the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, reaching in its scope. It is and has been for years permanently represented in the legislative councils at Washington; its educational work has given a rock foundation in every community throughout the nation to the prohibition cause of today.

To college women graduating this year, this organization offers a field of practical service, universal, near at hand and sure to yield early results. Student life has its organizations keyed to the psychology of student life. The I. P. A. is a student organization which can do little work beyond college life. But where the work of the I. P. A. ends that of the great temperance organizations begins, and to the fruitful field offered by the W. C. T. U. the I. P. A. commends the young women of our prohibition leagues. To this they may well add, when returning home, the educated enthusiasm of the student who has had the privilege of college life and the activities peculiar to college life.—Intercollegiate

RAVAGE WORKED BY ALCOHOL AMONG STAR BASEBALL PLAYERS

In the Farm and Fireside are figures gathered by Hugh S. Fullerton which show the ravage worked by alcohol among the star players of big baseball leagues. He eliminated the hard drinkers from his experiments and confined himself to the "bottle of beer" man.

He kept tab of the records and batting averages of thirty-two moderate drinkers and twenty-four players who did not drink. After eleven years only two of the original thirty-two drinking players are on the diamond, while eight of the twenty-four non-drinkers are still playing. Furthermore, only five of the drinkers are prosperous as opposed to fourteen of the non-drinkers. Six of the beer contingent are down and out, eight are dead and one is missing—but only three of the non-drinkers are either dead or ruined.

The non-drinkers have won more games and pitched more games, stolen more bases and kept up a better batting average, although at the beginning of the eleven years the drinkers surpassed them.

It was his knowledge of such facts as these that led Connie Mack to say: "Alcohol slows a man down. I don't bother

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, The Union Signal, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under. The Date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

Remittances should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

Change of Address. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
Campaign Edition (Monthly) 35c a Year

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, June 14, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

AMBULANCE FUND GROWS

The plan of sending to France a National W. C. T. U. ambulance is meeting with hearty approval. Michigan, Illinois, Colorado, Minnesota, Utah and New York have promised co-operation and the county presidents' conference of the Iowa W. C. T. U. has wired a contribution of $100. It is hoped and expected that within a few weeks not only the necessary $1,600 for the purchase, equipment, transportation to France and upkeep for a year of a motor ambulance will have been raised, but an additional $600 secured to cover the service of a driver for one year.

IS IT IN YOUR LIBRARY?

Our attention has been called to the fact that the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association is furnishing the public libraries with copies of "The Anti-Prohibition Manual," a neat little booklet filled from cover to cover with misrepresentations, false statements and misleading half truths and statistics. The book is an interesting piece of literature for the prohibition campaigner, who should be informed concerning the character of the ammunition used by our opponents, but such a compilation of falsehoods ought not to be left within easy reach of the young patrons of public libraries. A word to the wise is sufficient!

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, 561 Thirty-third St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

DO YOU REALIZE?

That the beer interests and their friends are trying to influence Congress to enact prohibition legislation that will affect only the distilling interests and exempt the brewers;

That efforts are being put forth to secure the imposition of an increased tax on liquors, especially whisky, such a measure to take the place of an out-and-out national prohibition law;

That through the influence of the liquorites a petition signed by 2,000,000 men purporting to come from the ranks of labor has been presented to President Wilson, requesting that he refuse to take from them their beer, etc.;

That the liquor interests through lobbyists, petitions, letters, telegrams and in every other way are besieging Congress and the President to enact no prohibition measures;

That the efforts of these anti-prohibitionists may be successful if you and other intelligent, conscientious citizens do not act and act immediately and energetically in arousing the public and bringing pressure to bear upon Senators and Representatives and upon President Wilson in favor of national prohibition as a war measure;

That it is your duty as a patriot and a Christian to mobilize your club, your church, your business associates and get them to co-operate with you in bombarding Washington with telegraphic petitions and letters urging prohibition as a war measure.

ONE HUNDRED PER CENT PATRIOTS

If there are any below-par patriots in your community, Independence Day will be an opportune time to bring their devotion to country up to the 100 per cent average. How can it be done? There is, we believe, one virtually infallible recipe for its accomplishment!

Get in communication with the new Americans of your town, especially the younger ones, who perhaps through lack of knowledge are still what President John Adams termed only eight per cent patriots. Stir within their souls a sense of responsibility for helping to make this nation victorious in the great war for democracy, by means of war prohibition which will transform it into a sober and therefore an irresistible national force. Organize these new citizens into community musical societies and enthuse them by getting them to sing our national melodies, and our prohibition songs, that without realizing it they may come to think of prohibition and patriotism as synonymous. Secure their participation in prohibition parades, field day exercises and similar demonstrations suitable for the Fourth of July, Americanization Day and Prohibition Rally Day.

Enlist the interest of native-born Americans who through indifference, inertia or prejudice are perhaps only ten per cent patriots, and by argument and persuasion make them realize their obligation to help win prohibition as a war measure. Call attention to the long list of great men of every class who are lending their influence to this movement and make them ashamed not to be one of this notable company.

Harness the sky-rocket, fire-cracker patriotism of your neighborhood and your city to the great cause of prohibition and through the enthusiasm and energy generated by the Independence Day demonstrations assure the success of the movement.

A WORD OF EXPLANATION

There has been an unavoidable delay in the shipment of orders for white ribbon pins coming to your publishing house. This is due to the manufacturer's disappointment in receiving enamel promptly, also to the loss of workers by enlistment. They are doing their best to get our work out and within a very short time all orders will be taken care of and goods delivered.

We appreciate the patience of our customers and assure you that every effort is being made to care for orders at the earliest moment. Unprecedented conditions prevail throughout our country and when a delay of this kind occurs it should be understood that it is not due to carelessness, but is occasioned by circumstances over which we have no control, and that we are making every effort to serve you as promptly as possible.

FEAR AN APPEAL TO THE PEOPLE

It is a matter of history that from the beginning of anti-liquor agitation friends and promoters of the drink traffic have persistently fought every effort made anywhere to allow the people to decide the question of saloon or no saloon. No sooner is a measure introduced in any law-making body looking toward the curtailment or abolition of the traffic than the trade summons its cohorts to the battle. From even the most local of local option or local regulations on to state prohibition no victory has ever been won over the beer barons and whisky lords without the most strenuous and persistent agitation and endeavor before the people could even secure the right to be heard. Above all the traffic has feared a fight in the open and more than all else has dreaded such action as would permit the people to say by their ballots whether they would or would not have the saloon to reign over them. Beyond doubt, millions of dollars have been expended by "the trade" in efforts to persuade legislators that a traffic which lives and grows rich by debauching, degrading and defrauding men, women and children should at all hazards be protected from the just indignation of its victims.

But why should any legislature deem it a part of its duty to protect the alcoholic liquor traffic from an appeal to the people? Is the business afraid to come out in the open, stand upon its record, state its merits (?) and fight for its life? Why should it cringe and skulk and barricade itself behind a few recreant legislators? Right never fears to fight in the open, appeal its case to the world and await a just decision. But the alcoholic liquor traffic knows too well its own shame, its abominations, its hatefulness, the devastation and ruin it has wrought, and it dares not face the verdict of the people. A legislature may again and again deny the voters of a state the right to judge the case of the people vs. John Barleycorn, but despite his trickery, chicanery and ruthless disregard of right and decency, his doom is sealed. His epitaph will soon be written and among the other titles on his tombstone none will speak more truly than the word, "Coward."

CONCERNING W. C. T. U. COMFORT BAGS

There seems still to be some misunderstanding about the need of the comfort bags made by the W. C. T. U. being standardized according to Red Cross rules. We therefore repeat what has been stated heretofore, that only hospital supplies come under this rule. In the matter of making and filling comfort bags the W. C. T. U. follows its own plans and specifications, and the bags are not required to pass through the Red Cross society before delivery to the recipients.

FOOD CONSERVATION THE VITAL ISSUE

In a recent issue the Seattle Daily Times observes:

"National prohibition will come just so soon as Congress is made to understand that all food products must be conserved for human use and that this country cannot exert its maximum powers during the war if the sale of intoxicants is permitted. Food conservation is a vital issue now. After the government has taken a food census of the country and has obtained definite figures on output, reserve stocks and consumption, both the Senate and the House may be forced to concede the necessity for even more stringent legislation.

"However, even if the food situation does not prove sufficiently serious to force action this year, the necessity for increased efficiency in industry may spur Congress on to the passage of prohibition legislation later in the year. The demands upon America's mills, factories and shipyards are increasing daily. By midsummer, production will be at high tide, with labor in demand everywhere and increased output the slogan of the nation.

"Britain's experience furnishes proof that liquor and efficiency never go hand in hand. The experience of such states as Washington furnishes proof that prohibition and efficiency do go hand in hand. A realization of these circumstances is certain to strengthen the hands of the dry advocates in Congress, both at this session and at every other held during the continuance of the war."

We venture to commend to Congress the thoughtful consideration of these statements as indicating the sentiment of a very large proportion of the press of America, with the people saying "Amen."

THROUGH THE JACKIE MILL

A prospective jackie at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station is put through a rigid "course of sprouts" by the recruiting officer in charge. Among the commands brought home to the would-be navy recruit is one to the effect that while he is at the station alcoholic beverages and "coffin nails" must be eschewed by him. Following his written application the youth is sent in to the doctor for a physical examination. Upon his return from the medical examiners, and after having taken the oath, he is sent to detention, which, under normal conditions, would extend over a period of two weeks; but, at present, because of the necessity of preparing men for battleship duty in the shortest possible time, the jackie is not kept in detention longer than a day.

Picture a vast crowd of young men of all types—some from the sunny south, others from the west, city boys, country boys, those who have come up from the race tracks—herded together in a great hall.

"Line up in three ranks," comes the command. A man who carries a huge basket is talking.

"While you men are at the training station you are not allowed to possess cigarets, liquor, or loose matches."

The boys are to make their first sacrifice for their country. Cigarets and matches are tossed into the basket as the recruits file by.

"Come forward when your name is called," is the second order.

"Horton Coon! What is your religion? Protestant or Catholic?"

"Protestant, sir."

"Step over to the right."

After the men have been classified according to their religion and assigned to companies they are taken to the disposition tent. Here they dispose of their civilian clothing. Some of the lads send their togs home; others leave them with the officer in charge. In this event the clothes are given to charity.

"Now go over to West G."

Here the lads pay their respects to the doctor. Every one is given a thorough bath. In many cases this is welcomed: in other instances it is a disagreeable feature. A bugle sounds.

"Fall in," is the command. "You men are now to be outfitted."

How proud they are in the new uniforms! They are at last real sailors!

MAKING UP THE FLAG

A flag was raised over the Jamestown worsted mill. From the owner of the mill itself we learn:

The flag was made of wool from American sheep.
Sorted by an American.
Carded by an Italian.
Spun by a Swede.
Warped by a German.
Dressed by an Englishman.
Drawn in by a Scotchman.
Woven by a Belgian.
Supervised by a Frenchman.
Inspected by an American.
Scoured by an Albanian.
Dyed by a Turk.
Examined by an Irishman.
Pressed by a Pole.

Where else could this be true except in the "land of the free and home of the brave?"—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do You Know the Answers to These Questions? They May Be Found in THE UNION SIGNAL of June 7

Ten questions, the answers to which will be found in the preceding number of THE UNION SIGNAL, will appear each week. The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. How much would Great Britain have saved in money if it had prohibited the sale and manufacture of alcoholic liquors at the beginning of the war?

2. How many days of labor would such a course have added to its war work?

3. State the energy in man power that might have been thus released for legitimate work.

4. For what period of time could the Army and Navy of Great Britain have been fed on the money wasted in the alcohol traffic?

5. Tell why the argument that Great Britain will not tolerate prohibition is unreasonable at this time.

6. What is the direct issue before the people of the United States at this time?

7. In what way is an effort being made to cloud it?

8. Suggest two themes especially desirable for Independence Day programs and plans.

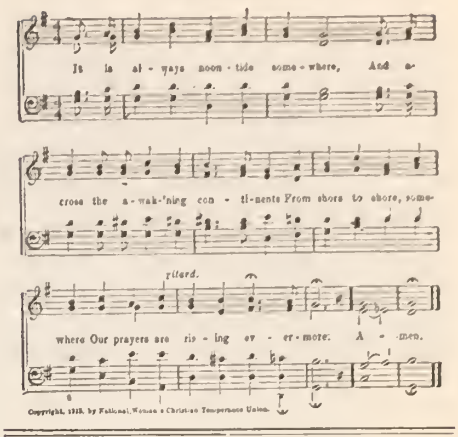
9. What new war relief enterprise of the National W. C. T. U. has just been announced?

10. Give opinions of prominent physicians concerning the relation of alcoholism to epilepsy.

PATRIOTIC PROGRAM OF WELLESLEY GIRLS

Nearly 1,000 Wellesley girls are enlisted in a campaign of economy and self-discipline for the period of the war. Among other things they have pledged themselves to eat no candy, ice cream or other delicacy between meals, to practice economy in dress, to wear no high-heeled shoes, to work eight hours, sleep eight hours, use eight hours for recreation, and take up Red Cross first aid, navy league or special welfare work during part of the recreation hours. Weekly drill and daily flag ceremonies are included in the plan.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



AT THE NOONTIDE HOUR

At the sacred noontide hour let the white ribboners of the land unite in prayer daily for our country and all other countries, that all may come to see the true Christian and humanitarian point of view in this world crisis; for the protection of "our boys" from the physical and moral deterioration from drink and vice that follow in the wake of war; for our President and his advisers that divine wisdom may rule every decision, that lasting peace may speedily come and the will of the Father of all peoples be done throughout the earth.

TEMPERANCE PIONEER PROMOTED

Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, a well known pioneer temperance worker of the country, and for forty years president of the Central union of Chicago, passed on to the other world on June 3. For over a year she had made her home with one of her sons at Park-Hill-on-the-Hudson, N. Y., and her death took place at his residence. During her long life of eighty-three years Mrs. Carse had been active not only in work for the temperance cause but in other reforms. She was one of the first women members of the Chicago board of education and was a member of the women's board of managers of the World's Columbian Exposition. She founded the Bethesda and Talcott Nurseries and the Women's Temperance Publishing Association, having served for many years as the president of the last named society. She is probably best known for her connection with the Woman's Temple of Chicago, to which she devoted much of her life. She was laid at rest in Rose Hill, a service being held at the time of the burial and a memorial service taking place later at the North Shore Congregational Church, of which she was a member.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF MISSOURI ENDORSES PROHIBITION

The Episcopal church of Missouri in convention in St. Louis recently endorsed national prohibition. Bishop Coadjutor Frederick Foote Johnson, in his annual address, appealed to the delegates as Christian men to do all in their power to bring about the end of the liquor business. He deplored the custom of social drinking. "If it takes nerve to stop this practice have we less nerve than the men in the Barnes Hospital unit, who left a week ago for France?" demanded the bishop.

"Moral suasion for the drinking man,
Mental suasion for the thinking man,
Legal suasion for the drunkard-maker,
Prison suasion for the statute-breaker."

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:
PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAY

July 4—National Independence Day—Americanization Day.
July 21—Loyal Temperance Legion Day—Birthday of Anna A. Gordon.
July 31—White Ribbon Missionary Day—Birthday of Mary Allen West.

COLORADO'S RESPONSE TO CALL FOR WARTIME SERVICE

ADRIANNA HUNGERFORD, President Colorado W. C. T. U.

Colorado white ribboners are alive to the need of increased production, discriminating economy, no waste and general all-around sacrifice in response to our country's call to patriotic service. Some of the women have opened their homes as registration centers, paid "voluntary military poll tax" for the benefit of enlisted men or are making hospital supplies. One W. C. T. U. worker represented many others when she said, "I am trying to do my bit; I have a garden, am helping with Red Cross work and have purchased a liberty bond."

Definite suggestions have gone to every union that all work for soldiers and sailors be done through the department whose superintendent is Mrs. Rose Carlson, for two years the "first lady" in our state. There is to be co-operation with local Red Cross chapters when practical. Remote places are to report to the state superintendent the number of women who desire to do sewing or knitting in the home and the amount of money that will be raised to pay for material which will be supplied at cost from Red Cross headquarters and which will be sent to localities asking for it, with patterns or definite instructions for cutting, making or knitting.

Special emphasis is given to the preparation of absolute necessities for hospitals as the need for it is so great. It is also recommended that unions supply the boys from their communities with comfort bags to be made according to W. C. T. U. instructions. The state union will furnish a testament, "Red, White and Blue Songster," pledge card and leaflets for every receptacle made by a local union or an individual member.

Miss Winona R. Jewell, state Y. P. B. secretary, is in the field organizing, winning recruits and stimulating activity. These new demands of patriotism have gripped her imagination and she is enthusiastically and successfully helping to meet them and persuading others to do their share in that direction.

WAR EMERGENCY ACTIVITIES IN ALABAMA

Alabama W. C. T. U. is entering heartily into the movement for universal patriotic activity. Mrs. Mary T. Jeffries, vice-president, writes: "We have sent to our local unions a 'service program' for work among soldiers and sailors, following National plans and suggestions culled from state plans published in THE UNION SIGNAL. Jefferson county at its recent convention voted to send 1,520 Bibles to the First Alabama Cavalry. This was done at the request of General Bibb Graves."

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA'S PATRIOTIC PURPOSES

MARY HELEN McLEAN, State Superintendent Press and Publicity

In California the efficient superintendent of Work Among Soldiers and Sailors, Mrs. B. F. Willhoit of San Francisco, has her work well in hand. She has sent two letters throughout the state, the first to county presidents, and the other, in which she was joined by Mrs. Sara J. Dorr, to local presidents, urging every local and county union to take up this department and push it. Every county which has held its spring convention has appointed such a superintendent, and many local unions also have taken similar action. Letters asking for instructions are coming to Mrs. Willhoit by every mail. Besides the comfort bags, our women are making the tray cloths, napkins and substitutes for handkerchiefs.

We are also planning on saving all we can, but we cannot reason out why the women should save every spoonful of milk while the men continue to turn themselves into human chimneys, or why the women should save every crust of bread when the men will not save 11,000,000 loaves a day by stopping the manufacture of alcoholic beverages during the war.

The white ribboners are also planning to put up jams, jellies and fruits, and later to dry fruits for use in the hospitals as the season advances.

Many pathetic appeals from mothers have been received at the state headquarters, 3 City Hall Ave., San Francisco, asking that the W. C. T. U. women find their boys and help keep them safe from the pitfalls of a great city. Mrs. Willhoit, Mrs. Frances C. Gilmore, county president, and others will visit the Presidio and other military posts and get in touch with the young defenders of the nation. Many of the San Francisco women are planning to open their homes one night each week to the soldier and sailor boys.

One hundred thousand women were represented at the meeting at which the organization of the California division of the Women's Committee of the Council of National Defense was completed. A president was elected and two vice-chairmen, one of whom is Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, president of the Southern California W. C. T. U.

The California W. C. T. U. is striving to do its part in this terrible war, that the peace of our Lord Jesus Christ may come more quickly.

ARIZONA WHITE RIBBONERS MEET IN CONVENTION

Special Correspondence

The state convention of the Arizona W. C. T. U., held at Globe, re-elected the officers of the past year, as follows: President, Mrs. Imogen La Chance; vice-president, Mrs. Florence L. Day; corresponding secretary, Mrs. F. B. Stevens; recording secretary, Mrs. E. E. Morrison; treasurer, Mrs. Hattie E. Buck. Among the interesting features of the program were the day and evening addresses by Mrs. Grady Gammage, state organizer, and one of the foremost workers in driving the liquor traffic from the state; a paper on "Suppose America Goes Dry," by Mrs. Noble of Douglas, an address by Rev. Riddle, and readings by Mrs. Boone and Mrs. Roberts. A beautiful memorial service was conducted by Mrs. E. E. Morrison, state recording secretary, and the state song, composed by the corresponding secretary, Mrs. F. B. Stevens, was sung by Rev. Herbert E. Nixon, a temperance worker of Arizona who was about to leave the state to help in the prohibition campaign in Ohio. Resolutions commending Mr. Nixon to the Ohio workers and praying that the state may this year be added to the dry ranks were adopted. The visiting officers and delegates were most graciously entertained in Globe, and it was a pleasure to award to the Globe union, for a 60 per cent membership increase, the banner which had formerly been held by the Cochise union. Excellent lunches were served by the Epworth League.

AMONG THE LATEST PUBLICATIONS are

Colorado's First Year on the Water Wagon

Achievements of the National W. C. T. U. (Revised)
Price, per 50, 50 cents; per 100, 90 cents.

Prohibition's Onward March (Revised to May 15). Price, per 50, 25 cents; per 100, 40 cents.

Which Boy Shall It Be?

Why Should We Join the W. C. T. U.?

Why Compensate the Liquor Dealers?

Truth About Cider
Price, per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents.

Directions for Making Comfort Bags

Can the United States Afford to Relinquish the Liquor Revenue?

Booze and Babies (Cartoon)
Price, per 50, 15 cents; per 100, 25 cents.

Do You Love Babies?

Different and Yet the Same

The Grain Saver's League

Stop Letting Drink Alone!

Russia's Health-Conserving Experiment

An Example of Law Enforcement
Price per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents.

Franchise Poster, "S. O. S."
Price, 5 cents each; per 100, $3.50.

Poster, "Our Government"
Price, 10 cents each; per 100, $7.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

THE LAST TRENCHES

GEORGE STEWART, Jr.

In the forward movement of any cause there is an area, apparently impregnable, given us by God to test our arguments and to challenge our faith. The eastern seaboard of the United States, and of New England especially, presents such an area to the cause of prohibition.

Two difficulties present themselves in this region. First, a large population of Slavic, Teutonic and Latin stock, who are accustomed to drink a great deal of beer and light wines. In these states there is a considerable portion of the factory population of the whole country. These people are not well trained in political economy or personal health and to them prohibition appears an imposition on personal liberty.

The second difficulty is that the native population is jealous of their ideals, yet unwilling to exchange the old order for the new. This sentiment is crystallized in the great universities and colleges of the east, such as Dartmouth, Williams, Amherst, Harvard, Yale and Princeton. For years many of their class reunions have been disgracefully marked by drunkenness. Graduates and undergraduates have either lacked the initiative to resist or have been ignorant of the issues involved. The western and southern colleges have looked to the historic New England college in vain for leadership in this matter. However, the old order changeth.

A tremendous movement has started at Yale. The senior class in Yale Sheffield Scientific School, by an overwhelming majority, has passed a resolution, by means of a petition, abolishing the serving of liquor at all class functions, such as banquets and reunions. The senior class in Yale college, by a vote of 169 to 41, has done away with the use of class funds for liquor at banquets and reunions.

A "White Book," containing the communications, editorials and articles which have appeared from time to time in The Yale Daily News, The Yale Record, The Yale Sheffield Monthly, and other papers, has been sent to the graduates, and a letter explaining the action of the undergraduates and urging the graduates to a similar move, has been sent to the 19,000 men now living who have received Yale degrees. This letter is signed by a "Committee of Seventy-one" undergraduates and alumni, who are not only willing to speak upon the proposition embraced in the letter, but are willing to support it. William Howard Taft, ex-president of the United States, is chairman of the committee, whose members include many of Yale's most distinguished sons. With the letter, when sent out, is enclosed a postal card with several votes on it; for instance: "Should class funds be expended for liquor at class functions?" These cards, when returned, will be filed for reference, thus forming an index of the opinion of the entire Yale body on the liquor question.

"Tad" Jones, the famous Yale football coach, writes concerning the movement at Yale:

"If there were any arguments in favor of the use of alcohol one might set down some objections; but morally, physically or socially there is nothing in its favor. How ridiculous to hear a mentally sound man say that it is necessary to drink to be sociable, or that a person would be dead without liquor! If the success of a class party is dependent upon the amount of alcohol consumed, then I should say that it would be far better to cut out class parties."

Float of the North Avalon (Pa.) W. C. T. U. in the Pittsburgh Charter Centennial Parade

In the center of the float Madam W. C. T. U. was working on a large prohibition map of the United States. The states which are soon to vote on prohibition stood about her pleading that she paint them white on the map. The women representing these states were dressed in white with black sashes on which were the words, "Make Me White."

ference in the land the liquor issue will be adequately presented. The Intercollegiate Prohibition Association has done a monumental work—a work which will go down in history.

To take the last trenches every man must act, not merely sympathize.—The North American Student.

WHAT THE FISK UNIVERSITY Y. P. B. IS ACCOMPLISHING

STELLA C. BUCKNER, Vice-President Y. P. B. Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn.

In the fall of 1907 the National superintendent of Work Among Colored People organized at Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn., a Y. P. B. Ever since that time the organization has continued steadily at work. The young men and women are received on equal terms of membership. The dues received from the men, however, are not sent to the National W. C. T. U., but are used in other ways by the society. It has usually been the custom to have a young woman as president and a young man as vice-president, but this year the custom is reversed.

There is one feature in the nature of our organization that has proved a binding link, insuring the continuity of the work, in spite of the changes in membership that come in any student body from year to year. This is the fact that we have one of our faculty members as an advisor. She is deeply interested in the Branch and supplements the young people's initiative with suggestions and advice.

During the school year the regular meeting is held on the first Sunday evening of each month. Friends of the society, as well as the members, are always welcome and the attendance is usually large. It is a fact of which we are proud that during these ten years not a month has passed without our coming together. We have had several speakers from outside the university address our meetings and these talks never fail to prove helpful. The usual program consists of discussions on the various phases of the temperance work—the medicinal value of alcohol, its effect on the working efficiency, physical and mental; and other topics. On several occasions the Y. P. B. has assisted the local W. C. T. U. in its programs.

On New Year's day, it has been our custom to have a social to which all the students are invited. Pledges and literature are circulated and "temperance" [illegible] torical contests has never been pushed on account of the many other demands for student activities along similar lines, but there is no reluctance in writing on the subject; for example, year before last, the prize graduating essay was on the subject of temperance.

Last year our total paid membership was sixty. For this year it is fifty to date, but there are quite a number of pledge-signers who are not at present dues-paying members.

As we strive for the growth of our organization, thus preparing more stu[illegible]nts for active work in their home communities, we also extend our best wishes [illegible]r continued growth and success to the other Y. P. B.'s throughout the country.

PROHIBITION FANS

not only cool the air but tell the wonderful story of prohibition progress.

On one side appears the map showing the dry states; on the reverse side the pertinent slogan—

PROTECT OUR AMERICAN YOUTH
by
PROHIBITING THE LIQUOR
TRAFFIC

Place these fans in your churches, your Chautauqua assemblies, your homes, and send them to the sick soldier boys in camps nearest to you.

Price, per dozen, 35 cents; per hundred, $2.00; per five hundred, $8.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

For Soldiers and Sailors

To Place in Comfort Bags or for Distribution

Songsters. Each, 7 cents.

Pledge Card, with stub and bearing a profile of Frances E. Willard. Each, 2 cents; 50, 25 cents; 100, 40 cents.

Directions for Comfort Bags. Each, 2 cents; 50, 15 cents; 100, 25 cents.

Protecting the Home Folks (a warning against vice). Each, 2 cents; 50, 25 cents; 100, 40 cents.

Rally on the Flag (for veterans). Each, 2 cents; 50, 20 cents; 100, 30 cents.

Testament and Psalms, 12 cents.

Testament, 10 cents.

Gospels, Matthew, Mark, Luke or John. Each, 3 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

TWO CASES WON

ANNIE M. BARNES

"Then it's 'yes,' Nellie?"

The young man's voice vibrated with happiness.

"It is, Arthur; a big, glad yes."

Her eyes, a woman's heart shining in them, steadily regarded him. Suddenly she bent toward him and drew his cheek to hers.

"I am going to tell you the reason for my answer, Arthur, a most unusual thing for a woman to do."

"But this young woman is herself most unusual," he declared proudly.

"Arthur, I have something to say to you." She sat down opposite him.

"Is this a court of inquiry?" he asked lightly, but the emotion that stirred him at that moment, with those pure eyes looking straight down into his soul, was nothing less than deep.

"Perhaps it is overstepping the bounds, Arthur," Eleanor Curtis began, "for a woman to declare her affection as frankly and as completely as I am doing now. I do love you, as a woman loves the man who has become all in all to her. And I love you not alone because you are good to look upon, straight and lithe of form, bright and clear of eye, with the wholesome hue of clean living in your cheeks; but I love you for your qualities of heart and of mind; for your strength of character, the sterling reputation you have among men; your gentleness, your chivalry to women."

"O Nellie! Nellie!" the young man cried, covered with confusion, yet glowing with pleasure. "You are giving me far more praise than I deserve."

"No. This is no fulsome tribute. I am just showing you what in my heart I know you to be; what others as well as myself, have had proof that you are. Listen, Arthur:

"Years ago, before I had reached the portals of womanhood; when I had the customary dreams of the romantic girl, and before my mind's eye passed the pictures of the one I was to meet and love and finally marry, it was always a man whose clean life showed in his clear, frank eyes, in his steady hand, and in lips unstained by the pollution of alcoholic liquor."

"Liquor!" echoed Arthur Vance quickly. "Why should a young girl be thinking of a thing like that, Nellie. Why should you be thinking of it now, dear?"

"Why, Arthur? Because it is the blackest cloud that can gather upon the horizon of a woman's life; the sharpest sword that can hang above her head; the one thing that can most quickly steal the roses from her cheeks, sap the life blood from her heart; bring her down into the very dust of humiliation and woe."

"Eleanor!" the young man ejaculated, astonished by the emotion that rang in the girl's voice. "I did not dream that you felt so strongly on the subject."

"Could a woman feel it too keenly, Arthur? Could she set herself too resolutely against an evil that has wrecked more lives, sent more men to prison, stamped more brows with the brand of Cain, made more orphans, and desolated more homes than any other malevolent agency with which the world is cursed?"

"O Arthur!" She stood up before him, her fingers clinched tightly against her palms. "O Arthur, my beloved, tell me now, candidly, truthfully, as we both have to stand before the great Judge at the last day, is my confidence in you in any degree misplaced? Is there anything in your life that—that is not—is not—"

"That is not fit for your pure eyes to look upon?" he finished for her. He had gotten quickly to his feet and taken her hand, his big, strong fingers gently straightening out her slender, clinched ones. He looked into her eyes with his own steadfast and fearless. "No, no, no, Eleanor, as God is my witness! By God's grace and help I have had manhood sufficient to keep myself clean for the woman I love.

"It is true," he continued, and now his eyes fell for a moment, "that there have been times in years past when I have not held out against temptation; when there have been sins indulged in; when my lips have been tainted by liquor, for there was a weakness there, dearest"—his voice was trembling now. "I have had to fight against it hard, hard, Nellie, with all the strength of my manhood. But for three years my feet have walked a straight way. The life I offer you now, dear, is clean, as clean as your own. If it were not, I would not dare look into your pure eyes."

Arthur Vance left the home of his betrothed walking buoyantly, his heart beating with a tumultuous happiness. The future gleamed rosily before him. He was young, he was in fine health, he had a splendid law practice, he was immensely popular; and now the supreme joy of life had been granted him, the love and confidence of the woman he adored. With such incentives as these, what might he not accomplish? Even the district attorneyship might not be beyond his grasp. He thought of it with a flush of pride. There had been assurances given him by men of political influence. There seemed good ground for hope.

He reached his office, a suite of rooms on the third story of one of the city's prominent buildings. They were comfortably, even handsomely furnished, giving evidence of the firm's prosperity. In fact, the law firm of Vance and Nichols had usually about all the cases it could handle.

Arthur entered to find Lemuel Nichols, his junior partner, busy at a desk in the outer office.

"Sorry to have deserted you this morning, Lem," he said, smiling upon the young man; "but there was a very urgent matter I felt couldn't well be delayed."

Lemuel looked up with a grin, and nodded knowingly. He thought he could venture more than a guess as to the nature of the business which required Arthur's personal attention, especially as an hour ago he had seen the young man turning in at the gate of the Curtis residence.

"Got the papers ready in the Lester case?" Arthur asked, as he hung up his coat and hat.

"Ready to a T. I'll bring them in to you."

Arthur passed on into the private office. The room had recently been swept and put in order. A cheerful fire burned in the grate. He threw himself into a lounging chair, and stretched out his feet to the blaze.

There was a knock, and young Nichols entered with the papers.

"Put them there on the desk," Arthur directed; "and see here, old man, don't let me be disturbed unless—well, unless it is really urgent. I must concentrate on these notes for the Lester trial."

Nichols left the room, but, as time passed on, Arthur made no movement toward the papers on the desk. He was still enthralled by happiness; a prisoner in the custody of remembrance. His blood glowed; every nerve in him was thrilled as he recalled the words the dearest lips in the world had uttered, the soft fire that had been in her eyes, the sweetness of the curved red mouth that had voiced her faith in him.

There was another knock at the door.

"Come in!" he called, somewhat impatiently.

Lemuel Nichols stuck his head through the opening.

"I hate to disturb you, but it seems unavoidable. Mr. David Haley is here, and will take no denial. Says it is urgent, and that he is not going away till he sees you. I think it must be about his son. I forgot to tell you that young Fred got into a nasty scrape last night."

David Haley, his father's friend and his own, the man who had given him more than one friendly lift, was not to be denied.

"Tell him I will see him, Lem."

Arthur rose and stood waiting for Haley to enter. He came in, his face white and haggard, his shoulders bowed in grief. He caught Arthur's hand and clung to it, the tears rolling down his cheeks.

"It's our boy, Arthur, our only boy. He's been getting into bad company and going at a rapid pace of late. We didn't dream of such a thing, though we saw something was wrong. Last night he was in a gambling den. A row arose that ended in a bloody fight. One man was killed and two badly cut up. Now they are accusing my boy of doing the killing. It's a frame-up, Arthur; not only I, but others think so—a frame-up on the part of the men who are really guilty. I've come to you, Arthur. You must save my son!"

Arthur Vance drew a chair forward; his hand rested affectionately upon the shoulder of the trembling man.

"Sit down, old friend, and tell me all about it, as clearly as you can."

Even when related by the father, circumstances seemed very much against the boy, as Arthur had to admit when the story was concluded. It was a case with many snarls to be disentangled—a case calling for a mind with more skill in the technique of the criminal court than Arthur felt he possessed.

"Old friend," he said at length, "I will be perfectly frank with you. While my sympathy and interest are with you—you know that without the telling—and I would do anything in my power to clear your boy, yet candor compels me to say

THE MOTHER ON THE SIDEWALK

The mother on the sidewalk as the troops are marching by
Is the mother of Old Glory that is waving in the sky.
Men have fought to keep it splendid, men have died to keep it bright,
But that flag was born of woman and her sufferings day and night;
'Tis her sacrifice has made it, and once more we ought to pray
For the brave and loyal mother of the boy that goes away.
There are days of grief before her, there are hours that she will weep,
There are nights of anxious waiting when her fear will banish sleep;
She has heard her country calling and has risen to the test,
And has placed upon the altar of the nation's need, her best.
And no man shall ever suffer in the turmoil of the fray
The anguish of the mother of the boy who goes away.
You may boast men's deeds of glory, you may tell their courage great,
But to die is easier service than alone to sit and wait,
And I hail the little mother, with the tear-stained face and grace
Who has given the Flag a soldier—she's the bravest of the brave.
And that banner we are proud of, with its red and blue and white
Is a lasting tribute holy to all mothers' love of right.

Copyright, 1917, by Edgar A. Guest in Philadelphia North American.

O bright flag, O brave flag,
O flag to lead the free!
The hand of God thy colors blent,
And Heaven to earth thy glory lent,

To shield the weak, and guide the strong,
To make an end of human wrong
And draw a hundred million human hearts
To follow thee. —Henry Van Dyke

to you that you need far greater skill than mine. You must go to Reuben Connelly. He is the greatest criminal lawyer in the state. He will free your son, if any man can."

But Haley shook his head emphatically, a sudden gleam coming into his eyes.

"No, Arthur; I don't place my boy's life in the hands of a man who is in the power of the whisky devil."

"What do you mean?" asked Arthur, amazed.

"Just what I've said. Reuben Connelly has recourse to liquor when he wants to be buoyed up for his hardest cases. It was suspected for some time; it has come out now since that recent fiasco in the Morrowtown court room, when he completely lost himself while pleading in the Dandridge case, and had to be led out, too drunk to walk straight by himself."

"Why, I hadn't heard of that!" Arthur exclaimed. "It surely is astounding. I didn't dream Connelly ever touched the stuff."

"Seems that he didn't in the days of his first great cases. But, after a time, when he got all fagged out, and he had to go into the court room with a tired feeling, he'd flirt just the least bit with the fiery beverage, take a cautious amount as a bracer. But the habit grew on him; he began to imbibe more and more liberally till it ended as I have told you. There you have the tragedy, Arthur, as great as any ever enacted on the stage, the foremost legal mind of the state wrecked by the curse of whisky. But come and see my boy and talk to him. If anybody can save him, it's you, Arthur, with your clear head and your senses unbefogged."

Arthur found young Fred Haley in a dazed and frightened condition from the terrors of the night and dread of what yet lay before him.

"I didn't do it, Mr. Vance!" he cried. "As God is my witness, I didn't! But how am I going to prove it with all those fellows against me? They're a cunning set and they are standing together in their testimony."

"You had been drinking?" Arthur queried crisply.

"Yes, I had taken a glass or two," he admitted, "so I don't remember altogether clearly what did happen. But I know I didn't do what they said I did."

The longer Arthur talked with the boy, the more he became convinced that he was innocent; yet the evidence, as it had been piled up against him, was so strong, it was going to take master strokes to clear him.

Arthur worked on the case, worked harder than he had ever worked on one before, night and day. He dared not slacken his energy, for each time he felt the inclination to pause in his work, to seek relaxation, the grief-stricken face and bowed shoulders of the father, and the tears and pleas of the boy's mother would come before his mental vision to hold him to his task.

The trial was but two days off. Arthur felt that he had well in hand every point that could be used in the boy's favor. One of his first moves had been to place under espionage the men who had used Fred to shield themselves, and in this way some very strong evidence had been gathered. But it all depended upon the skill with which the presentation was made to the jury.

The morning of the trial had come. In his private office Arthur sat crouched over his desk, for the first time in his life a prey to nerves. He had worked too hard; he had drawn too lavishly upon the stores of brain and body. He could see it plainly now. In an hour he must be in the court room. His notes lay before him, and he took just pride in the fact that he had worked out a strong case.

But now he felt no enthusiasm with which to present it; no touch of that exhilarating knowledge that always quickened his pulse and put fire into every vein, the knowledge of the gift of eloquence, the power of presenting even the most ordinary fact with compelling force.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING FOR UNCLE SAM?

What are you doing for Uncle Sam?
Canning fruit or making jam?
Or doing the same thing that I am—
Giving advice to Uncle Sam?

What are you doing for U. S. A.?
Raising corn or making hay?
Well, I'll tell you, it's not the way—
Just give advice to U. S. A.

What are you doing to help the French?
Joining the troops in sloppy trench?
Giving advice in such a pinch
Is what I'd do to help the French.

Giving advice,
Giving advice,
Oh, how easy, and oh, how nice.
Mice like rice,
And cooks like spice,
But what I like is giving advice.

—S. A. S., in Southern Ruralist.

He was listless, there was no energy in his body; his hand shook. Dared he go into court in this depleted mental and physical condition, when a man's life hung in the balance?

He straightened suddenly, reached for a pad on his desk, scribbled a few lines, folded the sheet, put it in an envelope, sealed and directed it. Then his teeth gripped hard upon his lip; he walked to the door, opened it and peered out.

"Lem," he said, "take this note down stairs to Jim Austin, and bring me as quickly as you can what he will give you."

In a moment he would have the bottle of magic power, the liquid that could put life and glow and vitality into a man, give wit to his brain and nimbleness to his tongue. How many times in the old days, after one glass, he had received round after round of applause from his mates for a brilliant flow of words!

Suddenly the face of the woman he loved seemed to reproach him. But a life depended upon it, he argued with himself. One glass now, and another just before he started his main speech for the defense, and the jury would be won. Fred Haley would be free.

Resting in the confidence of the effects of the stimulant, he threw himself on the couch for a moment's relaxation, as he waited for Lem to return.

The court had convened. The trial was under way. The evidence was in. Arthur Vance had begun his cross-questioning of the chief witnesses; but somehow he was not doing it with the success he had expected. What was the matter with him? Why was his brain so sluggish? Why had that drink, instead of putting fire into his veins, given him a benumbed feeling? He must take another at the first opportunity.

Now the current was running through him, little devils were dancing in his veins, for he had taken not only the second but the third drink. Yet the effect was not at all what he had hoped. Instead of seeing clearly, he was dazed. Instead of his mind acting quickly, there was a weight holding it down. Not only was his brain warmed up, but it was on fire. And here he was at the most critical moment in all the trial, the time for the summing up for the defense.

He had not proceeded far when he realized that instead of bringing to bear upon judge and jury clear and convincing points of argument, what he was saying was having just the opposite effect. He could see it in the puzzled face of the judge, in the perplexed faces of the jury; in the wondering glances cast at him from various parts of the court room; in the despairing look in the face of David Haley, as he sat beside the bowed figure of his boy. Then the sickening truth dawned upon Arthur Vance. He was not only wandering helplessly in a maze himself, but he had others wandering with him.

Now it was over. He knew what the verdict would be before the jury brought it in, which they did in barely an hour's time. It was guilty with a recommendation to mercy, because of the youth of the accused, and his previous good character. The boy would get a life sentence, or at least twenty or thirty years. And he, Arthur Vance, had done it by the liquor he had poured down his throat to steal his brain, to take away his manhood and leave in its place a maudlin idiocy. He must get quickly away, anywhere, so that he might hide himself for a time at least, from the eyes of self-respecting men and women. And what was he to say to her, the girl of his heart, the woman who had loved and trusted him, into whose eyes he had looked fearlessly in the strength of a clean manhood?

He passed out by a side entrance, and there came unwittingly upon a scene which piled agony upon his already heavy burden of misery. They were taking the boy back to prison. His mother was clinging to him frantically, seeking to wrest him from the law's officers, and calling heaven to witness that he was innocent, and that it was the law's blunder that had condemned him to a wrecked life.

The father stood near, his face working convulsively. Arthur held out his hand to him.

"I am so sorry," he said. "This is most painful to me. God knows I would have saved him if I could."

The hand was knocked aside.

"Get out of my sight!" David Haley cried in a frenzy. "I never want to lay eyes upon you again, you imposter, you cheat with the face of an honest man! I put my boy's life into your hands, and how have you repaid the trust? By yielding to the whisky devil and betraying

(Continued on Page Fourteen)

MISSOURI'S PATRIOTIC AND PROHIBITION ACTIVITIES

Special Correspondence

Our first concern just now is to follow out Mother National's instruction to secure national prohibition as a war measure. The loyal women of Missouri are sending telegrams, letters and petitions and keeping the public generally stirred up to do the same. Kansas City W. C. T. U. and church federation circulated 1,500 petitions Temperance Sunday and other counties and local unions are equally active.

No Booze to Guardsmen

When Camp Nichols was first established in Kansas City, Mo., two months ago, the police commissioners issued an order to saloon men forbidding them the privilege of selling liquor to National Guardsmen in uniform. The mothers of the city urged that the order be applied to all soldiers.

"Bartenders Enlist"

David E. Allan, bartender, Kansas City, sent this communication to the public through the Star. "We make this suggestion to the brewers, barkeepers and their helpers: Inasmuch as the country at this great crisis needs all her available men and needs them sober and efficient, with all their faculties intact, and, whereas, heretofore, our business has just about cost the United States $3,500,000,000 annually (the amount now desired by Uncle Sam to put his Navy in fighting shape) that we in one body offer ourselves to Uncle Sam in this hour of our country's peril." Verily Kansas City is on the map of prohibition progress!

Missouri Division of Council for National Defense

The Missouri W. C. T. U. is a part of the state division of the council for national defense, with Mrs. Nelle G. Burger as one of the vice-chairmen. The W. C. T. U. will do such work as comes to its peculiar field of endeavor. Mrs. Burger in her characteristically thorough manner has portioned out the relief activities, making it possible for each union and individual member to do her part intelligently. The state superintendent of Work among Soldiers and Sailors, Mrs. Inez Keepers of Carthage, with years of experience, is instructing and inspiring the women in this patriotic service. A stirring appeal is being made to Missouri women to join the W. C. T. U. and aid by their loyal service in this national crisis.

Newspaper Publicity

Prohibition plate matter is published in one paper in each of the ninety-eight counties of Missouri. This is done through an arrangement made by the state and National W. C. T. U. Publicity Bureau. This plate service does not interfere with the National W. C. T. U. temperance column on the ready-print sheet of county papers because the plate matter is used by the large papers in the counties which do not use the ready-print sheets. This plate service is in addition to ready prints used and the many columns edited by the local and county Press superintendents, which amounts to several thousand columns a year.

Institutes

Many admirable spring institutes have been held in Missouri; Mrs. E. A. Gough, Press superintendent of Bates county, sends a fine report of their county institute held in Star church near Butler. In addition to the talks by delegates from local unions, the Rev. Hillard, president of Lone Oak Y. P. B., made an address. They were fortunate in having Mrs. Nelle G. Burger for two addresses. The Loyal Sons Bible Class of Butler (15 members) sent a letter of commendation to the W. C. T. U. Petitions and letters for prohibition to state senators and President Wilson were sent out from the meeting. Mrs. Greenup of the Virginia union gave a fine paper on "The Prohibition Situation in Missouri." Other topics were "The Cause of the 1916 Wet Vote," "What is the Church Doing?" "Push the Temperance Work in Sunday Schools," "Growth of Prohibition Sentiment in the Business World," "THE UNION SIGNAL in Each Home." Many interesting and instructive incidents were given from Rich Hill and other unions. The severe rain did not dampen the ardor and dry spirit of this fine county institute.

Y. P. B. Convention

Columbia, the home city of our state university, will be hostess to the eighth state Y. P. B. convention, June 19-21. An unusually attractive program is arranged and "the best ever convention" is expected. The Y. P. B.'s of the state are responding beautifully to the call to come to the nation's defense against the deadly enemy, John Barleycorn. It is a young people's fight, and the Y. P. B. recruiting stations of Missouri are sending the call to young people all over the state to enlist now.

The St. Louis (Mo.) federated W. C. T. U. had printed 2,000 copies of the message which appeared on the cover page of THE UNION SIGNAL of May 3, urging the fathers and mothers of this country to appeal to the president in behalf of their boys. These were sent to the pastors of St. Louis with blank petition forms asking that the petition be presented to churches, Sunday schools and affiliated societies.

TWO CASES WON

(Continued from Page Thirteen)

him! His wrecked life be upon your head, Arthur Vance!"

Arthur turned away, sick and dizzy. He felt now that he was the criminal and not the boy who was being led away. If he had what he deserved, the handcuffs would be snapped on his wrists.

The spectators were coming down from the gallery. They, too, used the side entrance. Despite his efforts to slink away, Arthur was caught in the throng. He heard his name spoken and lifted his head. The woman he loved was standing there beside him. He had not known that she was in the court room. Her face was white and quivering, her eyes the eyes of the accusing angel.

"That boy is innocent," she said with pallid lips. "You know it, and you could have saved him, if—if you had not been drunk. You are drunk now. O Arthur! Arthur! how ruthlessly you have betrayed my faith! You have broken my heart! You have ruined both our lives!"

This was more than he could bear! He turned and pushed frenziedly through the throng. Anywhere now, so that he could get beyond the torture of those accusing eyes.

He reached his office at last. On the threshold of the outer room he paused, stricken motionless by a fresh horror. Lemuel Nichols sat there with his head prone upon his desk, his shoulders heaving convulsively. The boy was crying. Never before had Arthur seen that strong young form bowed in tears. He raised his face, pallid with emotion, in his eyes the look of one who has seen life's highest ideals shattered.

"You lost the case!" he cried. "O Arthur, how did it happen? You were surely not yourself!"

Beyond the power of speech, Arthur passed on into his private office. He could endure no more. His nerves were at the snapping point. Only one thing left in life for him now—whisky—whisky—his very soul was on fire.

A hand had fallen on his shoulder. Some one was calling his name. It was Lemuel Nichols.

"Why, Art, you've been asleep! It's almost time you were in court. There's a lady at the telephone calling for you. I put the stuff you sent for in the top drawer of your desk."

Arthur Vance rose dazedly. He passed his hand swiftly across his eyes. So, all that horror, thank God! had been but a dream.

He was still white and shaken when he went to the telephone.

"Yes, it's Nellie, Arthur. I am so happy! I wish you could see my 'shiney eyes,' as my little niece Nellie would say. There is to be a big prohibition rally at the court house Friday night, and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union insists that you make the principal address. Oh, I know you are going to cover yourself with glory and make me proud, my big, eloquent boy! Come around tonight, Arthur. I've got some things to tell you that will help you give some smashing blows to old John Barleycorn."

"There will be no need for you to tell me, dear," Arthur murmured as he turned away; "I know!"

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

The address of Mrs. W. A. Loyne, National superintendent of Work among Lumbermen and Miners, has been changed from Warren, N. H., to 10 Brown St., Methuen, Mass.

"SONGS AND SAYINGS" is a rare book of thrilling reading and of soul-moving songs. It contains "Jim and Me," "A Saloonless Nation 1920," and other very fine songs. You need it, your W. C. T. U. needs it, your prohibition campaign is not complete without a supply of it. Price, 25c, 5 copies for $1. Order today of Rev. L. L. Pickett, Wilmore, Ky.

$2.50 PER DAY SALARY PAID ONE PERSON in each town to distribute FREE circulars, and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring. Non-alcoholic. Big demand, steadily increasing. J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7G, E. Harrison St., Chicago

New Franchise Posters

WHAT IS WOMAN'S WORK?

FEEDING THE FAMILY
Production and consumption of food is controlled by Government.

CLOTHING THE CHILDREN
Manufacture from raw material to finished product is controlled by Government

HOME-MAKING AND HOUSEKEEPING
Sanitation, health, taxes food, clothing, education are all controlled by Government

Women Must Have the Vote

* * *

S. O. S.

SUFFRAGE
has been granted to women in twenty states and in Alaska—why not in this state?

OPPORTUNITY
belongs to women equally with men in Education and Business—why not in Government

SERVICE is demanded of women for Children
Community
Country

Suffrage Gives Women Opportunity for Success

Size 19 x 25. Printed in black on yellow paper. Price, 5 cents; per 100, $3.50.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

WYOMING WILL WIN!

LORA S. LA MANCE, National Organizer

Wyoming is a great wet island surrounded by dry Idaho, Colorado, and Nebraska, with Utah, South Dakota and Montana drawing near to the time when their prohibition laws will make them delightfully arid. Bad men and bad women are coming across the line into Wyoming. Newcastle is gasping for breath, its saloonkeepers re-enforced by the wholesale liquor dealers coming in from the Black Hills of South Dakota. Cheyenne is swamped with undesirables; Sheridan, Buffalo, Sundance, Gillette all feel this influx of "toughs" and ne'er-do-wells, who are fleeing from the dry states.

As one man put it, "Wyoming has to go dry. It means suicide if she does not."

It is the common opinion of both wets and drys that Wyoming will vote out John Barleycorn in November, 1918, and in this over-confidence of the drys lies the only chance of the retention of the state by the wets.

Mrs. Anna Allison, president of the Wyoming W. C. T. U., does not intend to be caught napping. She is already stirring the over-confident people to vigorous action.

In May Mrs. Lottie Hannon visited the southern part of the state. She is a great favorite in the Rocky Mountain region, and has the enviable reputation of never having lost a campaign. Despite bad weather she has done good work and will give further service.

The writer was sent to the northeastern part of the state. A more disagreeable May was never known in Wyoming. When it did not snow it rained, and winds and blizzards were stirred in for good measure, the gumbo mud helping to make things cheerful.

For the journey from Ranchester to Dayton, a distance of seven miles, it took two hours and a half each way. Even with four horses we all but stuck in the mud! It took one straight day, with double teams, to go from Upton to Sundance, thirty miles, and as long to get back. Whenever the route lay away from the railroad it rained, except at Buffalo, and that enterprising place, the only one that missed having rain and snow, got up a dust storm!

Nevertheless, one union, that at Moorcroft, was re-organized, and three new ones started at Ranchester, Gillette and Sundance. Except for rain at least two more unions would have materialized.

A number of mining towns with insufficient workers to maintain individual unions will co-operate with nearby unions, arrange for speakers and distribute literature. Carneyville, Monarch, Dietz, mining towns out from Sheridan, have promised, in addition, to do work among soldiers and sailors and report it to the state W. C. T. U. superintendent of the department.

Sheridan, Buffalo, Ranchester, Gillette, Moorcroft and Sundance are each planning to supply an electric fan for the soldier boys.

Cambria is a coal mining camp with a population of about 1,200. It has inhabitants of fourteen nationalities. The managers are prohibition men and allow no saloons in the town. Those in Newcastle, four miles away, are a constant menace. While rain washed away any chance of organizing a union, the leading Cambria women stand ready to do house-to-house work and distribute literature printed in fourteen languages, according to the W. C. T. U. plans. It would have delighted Mrs. Ella B. Black, National superintendent of Work among Foreign Speaking People, to have seen the Decoration Day parade at Cambria. Up the narrow shoestring streets came a half dozen societies marching in the rain and mud, the Italian Masons in the lead, immediately after the band, every division headed by a large American flag. Their enthusiasm was unmistakable. These foreigners were a clean, well-dressed, open-faced set of men. It pays to work to win naturalized citizens such as these to the idea of a dry state. Sheridan has quite a number of colored residents. The writer was honored by being chosen as one of the speakers at the annual celebration of the colored Odd Fellows. Their attitude toward prohibition is very friendly. Sheridan also sent the speaker to the railroad shops and to six of the schools.

Wyoming intends to win and she surely will.

W. C. T. U. AND Y. P. B. ACTIVITIES IN PENNSYLVANIA

Venango county (Pa.) W. C. T. U. is making heroic efforts to reach the standard of excellence set by the state. Posters have been secured and sent to every local union, and June 30 will probably be widely observed as Poster Day.

Mrs. S. Canfield Wilson, Pennsylvania state organizer, spent a week in Venango county in May visiting the unions at Rouseville, Cooperstown, Franklin, Bradleytown, Polk, Rocky Grove and Victory. The membership of each of these unions was increased, the gain being nearly one hundred in all. An institute at Victory, conducted by Mrs. Eliza Smith, president, was attended by a large company of busy women, including the county president and corresponding secretary. Mrs. Wilson addressed a large audience in the County church in the evening. At this meeting twelve new members were added to the previous enrollment of 138. This union was organized about two years ago with a membership of eight. Willard, the oldest and largest union in the county, was also increased by twelve members.

The Alice Dunbar colored union of Oil City held its first institute in April at which time a fine program was carried out. The young people of the Harper colored union of Franklin, assisted by the county corresponding secretary, are preparing a temperance program including the playlet, "Yesterday and Today."

Mothers' meetings are being held once a month in the Salvation Army barracks in Oil City. The federation of the five Oil City unions held its third institute May 25, under the direction of the president, Mrs. Alice R. McWilliams. Arrangements are being made to have Mrs. Addie B. Parsels, National organizer, in the county several days in June.

Columbia county, Pennsylvania, recently enjoyed the services, for a week, of Mrs. Maude B. Perkins, one of the National Y. P. B. field secretaries, and New York state Y. P. B. secretary. She spoke before the United Young People's societies in the Presbyterian church in Bloomsburg, the high school both there and at Millville, the Normal school of eight hundred young men and women, and the graded schools of Catawissa; also addressing several church services in these and other places. Lightstreet, Espy and Berwick were also visited by her and at the second named place she organized a Young People's Branch, with Miss Dorothy Edgar, a capable young worker, as president. The Branch is gaining in membership and bids fair to make a fine record. "Mrs. Perkins is so popular with the young people because of her ability, enthusiasm and charm of manner that her work is of a lasting quality," writes a white ribboner of Columbia county. "High commendation of her work has been expressed by pastors, educators and individuals." It is hoped to have a county Y. P. B. rally in June, with the thought of organizing the county for more effective work.

THE FLAG POSTER

most appropriate for display at this time
Use it in your

FOURTH OF JULY DECORATIONS

RALLY
For Our Country's Defense
Against Its Greatest Foe
THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC
Give Us a Saloonless Nation
A Sober People
A Stainless Flag

Printed in red, white and blue
(28x42 inches)
Price, 10 cents each; 3 for 25 cents

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

EVERY WHITE RIBBONER NEEDS TO BE EQUIPPED

with the

LATEST LITERATURE issued at the National Headquarters

Your name upon the subscription list of the

MONTHLY BUDGET OF NEW PUBLICATIONS

makes this possible, and the subscription price is

ONE DOLLAR PER YEAR.

This small investment brings to you at the close of each month a sample of all leaflets, booklets, posters, etc., published during the current month.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

WARTIME PROHIBITION RESOLUTIONS

"We have got to cut out rum, abolish alcohol entirely, if we are going to win this war," declared Governor Brumbaugh of Pennsylvania, recently to a Philadelphia audience. "I hope the president will see fit by some means to free us of its curse and protect our young soldiers and sailors from its damnable temptations."

The American Society for Clinical Investigation at a meeting in Atlantic City, May 1, adopted a resolution recommending that the manufacture of alcoholic beverages and their importation to the United States be prohibited for the duration of the war and for at least one year thereafter. This action, it is reported, was based solely on medical grounds as it was felt that the present time affords an unprecedented opportunity for inaugurating a convincing demonstration as to the value of abstinence from alcoholic beverages.

The Woman's Bar Association of Illinois, Catharine Waugh McCulloch, president, has gone on record as approving "national prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor as a beverage, as a war measure, also the establishment of a white zone about every military camp."

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year
Club rate for ten or more subscriptions, 25c a year
No other premium allowed.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

NECESSITIES OR LUXURIES—WHICH?

VIDA THOMPSON, Circulation Manager

JUST NOW WE ARE ALL thinking how best to reduce expenses. We are asking ourselves what are the necessities which we must have and what are the luxuries we may lay aside. In which class do our papers and magazines belong? Do you say luxuries? Doesn't it depend upon the paper? Dare we class as simple luxuries those publications which are influencing us and others for good, and which are broadening our lives, giving us the information we need, and helping us to do for others intelligently?

Read What Others Have to Say

Following are a few of the many statements about THE UNION SIGNAL and The Young Crusader which are received daily. The writers evidently do not call these papers merely luxuries:

"I make good use of THE UNION SIGNAL and often have in three different newspapers extracts copied from THE UNION SIGNAL."

"I have been away and have neglected sending for my dear paper, but I must have it as I pass it on to others. It is full of good things."

Old Copies Used

"I have been sending my old copies of THE UNION SIGNAL to the Sunday school of my district as I am temperance superintendent."—MRS. JENNIE BRONG, Saylorsburg, Pa.

What One Y. P. B. Member Did—What Have You Done?

"Please send one year's subscription to the Y. P. B. Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL to each of the 42 persons named on the enclosed list. These names were obtained by one member of our Y. P. B."—MISS MARGARET TOWNSEND, Schultz Y. P. B., Whitestone, N. Y.

"Enclosed find one dollar for THE UNION SIGNAL. I am growing old with the paper but I have had some victories. I can only half see but the paper will be read and I place each issue where it will do the most good."

Do YOU know some "mother's problem" the solution of which would be helped by subscription to a clean story paper?

"Enclosed find one dollar for which please send The Young Crusader one year from date to the persons named. The first one is a lad who has lately learned to smoke and is his mother's problem; the rest are my school pupils, the parents of whom I hope to awaken more keenly to temperance truths. Not all of them read English well, so the children may read to them from The Crusader, you see."

Why not subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL and The Young Crusader for the invalids of different ages in your community? What could be a better contribution for the different wards in the hospital?

"Enclosed find 25 cents for a subscription to The Young Crusader. I am sending it for one year to a brave neighbor boy who was working in a field with a team and three miles from home broke his leg. He has been attending our Sunday school."

Prizes Its Influence

"I am getting The Young Crusader into as many homes as I can as I am sure it will be read by some of the older people as well as the boys and girls. I am glad to recommend such a good paper to the children."

A BAD DRINK

Recently a representative of a temperance society was speaking to the juvenile Sunday school.

"I will now," he remarked, "place the letters of the alphabet upon the blackboard. As I write each letter I wish you to tell me the name of a bad drink that begins with the letter I put on the board."

He then chalked the letter "A," and one of the children called, "Ale!" Next "B," and a youth volunteered, "Beer."

A silence when he wrote the letter "C" caused the lecturer to ask, "Is there nobody here who can name a bad drink beginning with 'C'?" He pointed his finger at a small boy in the front row and said encouragingly, "There is a little man who can tell me the name of a bad drink that begins with 'C.'"

To which the youth replied: "Sure I can. Castor-oil!"

—Harper's Magazine

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

¶We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.
¶Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
118-120 Fifth Ave., New York
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

POST THE NEW ILLUSTRATED POSTER

Our Government Rests Upon Home—School—Ballot

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC
DESTROYS HOME
HINDERS CHURCH
ROBS SCHOOL
CORRUPTS BALLOT

This poster is printed on a flag blue background. Size 28x42.
Price, 10 cents each; 3 for 25 cents.
POST IT EVERYWHERE
NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

YOU ARE CONSTANTLY USING A RULER, WHY NOT USE THE PROHIBITION RULER?
(12 Inches Long)
On one side is the text
TOTAL ABSTINENCE THE ONLY SAFE RULE OF LIFE
On the reverse side
RULE OUT ALCOHOL
HELP MAKE A SOBER NATION
Price, 5 cents each; per dozen, 35 cents; per 100, $2.50.
NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Cruise for Vacation on the Lakes

The Magnificent Steel Steamship "Minnesota" to BUFFALO (NIAGARA FALLS) and RETURN $50 Including Meals and Berth
via Charlevoix, Harbor Springs and historic Mackinac Island, stopping at Detroit and viewing both ways by daylight the beautiful scenery of the Detroit River and St. Clair Flats, stopping at all points of interest. Eight-hour stop at Buffalo allows plenty of time to see Niagara Falls. One way, $30, including berth and meals. During season leaves Chicago Saturdays 1:30 p. m.

The Elegant Steel Steamship "Missouri" to SAULT STE. MARIE and RETURN $29.50 Including Meals and Berth
via Charlevoix, Petoskey, Harbor Spgs & Mackinac Island—running the "Soo" River by daylight, returning via a portion of Georgian Bay and the scenic Grand Traverse Bay, stopping at all points of interest. One way, $15, including meals & berth. During season leaves Chicago Mondays 4:00 p. m.
S. S. "Missouri" also makes a special trip each week to Onekama, Frankfort, Glen Haven and Glen Arbor, leaving Chicago Saturdays at 4:00 p. m.

Our line of steamers offers you the greatest possible opportunity for real rest and genuine pleasure.

The Elegant Steel Steamships
MINNESOTA, MISSOURI, MANITOU, ILLINOIS

offer unrivaled service between Chicago, Charlevoix, Petoskey, Bay View, Harbor Springs, Mackinac Island, Ludington, Manistee, Onekama, Frankfort, Glen Haven, Glen Arbor, Leland (via auto or connecting steamer from Glen Haven), and Traverse Bay ports, Sault Ste. Marie, Detroit and Buffalo, connecting with all lines for Lake Superior and Eastern Points. Book of tours and folder mailed on request.

Northern Michigan Transportation Co.
J. C. CONLEY, Gen. Pass. Agt., New Municipal Pier (East End Grand Ave)., Chicago, Ill.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII EVANSTON, ILL., JUNE 21, 1917 No. 25

Form 260

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAM

GEORGE W. E. ATKINS, VICE-PRESIDENT NEWCOMB CARLTON, PRESIDENT BELVIDERE BROOKS, VICE-PRESIDENT

RECEIVER'S No.	TIME FILED	CHECK

SEND the following Telegram, subject to the terms on back hereof, which are hereby agreed to

President Wilson and the United States Congress:

In the interests of conservation of food and of the health and efficiency of the men in our Army and Navy, we urge immediate national prohibition of the liquor traffic as a war measure.

PATRIOTIC CITIZENS

Let Us Continue Increasingly and Unceasingly to Urge Prohibition as a War Measure Through Telegrams and Brief Letters to President Wilson and to Members of Congress.

CAMPAIGN EDITION

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION SURE TO COME—CONTINUE TO DELUGE THE PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS WITH APPEALS FOR PROHIBITION AS WAR MEASURE

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

The Senate Judiciary Committee on Monday, June 11, voted 14 to 3 to report favorably to the Senate the Sheppard amendment to the Federal Constitution. Senator Sheppard, in speaking of this action on the part of the committee, stated to a fricnd of temperance that he had every assurance that the amendment would be agreed to by the present Congress, if not at this extra session, certainly at no distant date. In predicting the passage of the amendment Senator Sheppard has the support of many members in both houses of Congress.

National Prohibition Bound to Come

Senator Overman of North Carolina, for the Judiciary Committee, made the report to the Senate in which the committee stated that the time for national prohibition "seemed to be at hand," and that every means should be exerted to put all the nation's energy into the prosecution of the war. "In years past," the report goes on, "the people have waged a fight for nation-wide prohibition, but without encouragement of national legislation. The efforts of the state and local forces to make prohibition really effective have been weakened by this lack of national law that would put the force of the government behind it." The majority of the committee believes "that the minds of the most careful and conservative students of the liquor problem are rapidly coming to the conclusion that this national evil must and only can be removed by national legislation, enforced by the national will, in co-operation with the states."

The three dissenting members of the Judiciary Committee were Senator Culberson of Texas, chairman of the committee, Senator Reed of Missouri and Senator Brandegee of Connecticut.

Continue to Work for War Prohibition

We are certainly rejoiced at this clear understanding of the need of federal action on the part of this committee, but we must not lose sight of the fact that ten more states are needed to ratify the amendment, after a two-thirds vote in each house of Congress to submit the question to them. All of this will, of necessity, take time and in the interim we must have prohibition of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages as a war measure. For this we must continue to deluge the President, as well as senators and representatives, with our appeals by telegrams and brief letters. A letter received this morning from a mother who has five sons the government can claim, says, "To just write a letter to those in authority seems such a little thing to do," and my heart responded: Yes, one snowflake is a very little thing, but one at a time, falling so quietly but so persistently, can stop the swiftest express train. These persistent appeals from the mothers who are yielding up their sons, the boys for whom they have given their young womanhood, their freshness and strength, who have sacrificed and loved and cared for them, must be heeded. These mothers have the right to demand of the government protection for their boys who will fight for their flag in this country, or, if ordered to European battlefields, protection there from this enemy which ruins body and soul.

Senate Agricultural Committee Agrees to Fundamentals of War Prohibition Bill

The Senate Agricultural Committee, Senator Gore, chairman, agreed to the fundamentals of a war prohibition bill based on the policy of conservation of food and food products. The terms of the measure will be offered as a substitute for all pending bills relating to food conservation and prohibition and will prohibit the use of non-perishable foods and foodstuffs in the manufacture of intoxicants. The President will be empowered to prohibit the use of perishables in the manufacture of intoxicants. He also will be authorized and directed by the bill to commandeer all stocks of distilled liquors in the United States for military usage, if this is necessary.

The Senate Finance Committee has further increased the tax on foodstuffs in the manufacture of liquors and written it in the war tax bill. The new rate is $60 per hundred pounds, instead of $20 per bushel. Rates on distilled spirits, malt liquors, wine and soft drinks would raise an aggregate of $166,000,000. These bills as introduced by the committee must be acted upon by Senate and House and there will be time for protests against a tax on any intoxicating liquor, if sent speedily.

Kansas Refuses Youths for War or Farm Service Unless Grain Used in Liquors Is Conserved

Kansas has served notice on Congress that it will not send its youths to the war or to the farms to increase the product of food crops if the grain produced is to be used by the brewers and distillers in making liquors. Petitions signed by about 30,000 people have already been sent to President Wilson, urging that the manufacture of liquors be prohibited during the period of the war and now the college men of the state, and particularly the officers of the college, are sending in their protests against the proposed plan to double the tax on liquors during the war.

A resolution passed by the Federal Trades Council of Colorado Springs was read in the House on Monday, urging a prompt and favorable report on the suffrage amendment by the Judiciary Committee. It calls attention to the fact that "as the United States has entered into an international war to fight for democracy, it is imperative that we first establish democracy in our own country by giving political freedom to our women citizens."

Hereafter in filling clerical positions in the government departments, preference is to be given women. Conditions governing the employment of women in Europe are to become common in Washington at once. The War Department in making the change reversed a custom of long standing. Up to February 1 of this year, out of 212 persons appointed to clerical positions, there were 211 men and one woman.

Why the Navy Desires Secrecy

A query comes to my desk from a distressed mother as follows: "Why did the Navy issue the order that our sons may not tell of their surroundings, their health, or those things a mother is most interested in knowing?"

This is the explanation: The Navy Department has reason to believe that information valuable to the enemy, and which might prove most disastrous to the Navy, has in some way reached the enemy. Therefore, it was found necessary to issue the following order:

"Officers, enlisted personnel and civilian employes are directed not to discuss any question relating to the disposition, movements, or proposed movements of naval or military forces (including personnel), at any time except officially, either among themselves, or with any person outside the naval service. It should be clearly understood that families and relatives are to be considered as outside the naval service."

As will be seen, this order enters only into the military life of the sailor and does not affect his personal affairs.

National W. C. T. U. Ever at Its Post in Washington

As the question of prohibition has come more and more to the front in the halls of Congress, the work of the National W. C. T. U. department of Legislation has grown by leaps and bounds and is far in excess of what it formerly was. For several years Mrs. Stevens and Miss Gordon spent some time in Washington during the sessions of Congress, especially when a particular piece of legislation was under way, that they might hold interviews, attend hearings, etc. Toward the closing weeks of the last Congress, when the work kept piling up, Miss Anna A. Gordon, our president, realizing the situation, came to Washington early in the winter, since which time she has given much of her time, strength and influence in helping to carry forward the work at this pivotal point. We were exceedingly fortunate, also, in being able to secure the aid of Mrs. Lenna Lowe Yost, president of the West Virginia W. C. T. U., who was able to leave her home and spend most of the winter in Washington. Her experience during the campaign for state-wide prohibition in her own state, in which she was the acknowledged leader, makes her specially well fitted to help in the prosecution of our work.

When the United States entered into a war with a foreign foe and an extraordinary session of Congress was called, again these trusted, tried women came to the fore and in season and out of season have worked for the "cause that needs assistance." When we realize that there are upwards of five hundred men in Congress, many of whom are strangely ignorant concerning reform work, it behooves us to be ready, as Miss Willard said, "To meet argument with argument, denunciation with kindness, misjudgment with patience, and all our dangers and difficulties with prayer."

National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, Washington, D. C., June 15, 1917

JOHN BARLEYCORN AND THE MEDICAL MEN

"The Anti-Prohibition Manual for 1917" tells a touching tale of "One boy that prohibition did not save," because his physician, in dry Oregon, could not get the brandy he wanted to give as a medicine, and as a consequence (so the story goes) the lad did not survive. The most charitable interpretation of the incident is that the physician was woefully behind the times. He was deplorably ignorant of the action taken by the National Pharmacopoeia Committee of 1915 in striking from the new edition of the pharmacopoeia, whisky and brandy. He should have attended the recent meeting of the American Medical Association in New York City, representing over 80,000 able and reputable physicians, at which it adopted a resolution to the effect that "the use of alcoholics in therapeutics as a tonic or stimulant or for food has no scientific value."

In view of the present attitude of the medical world toward John Barleycorn the less said by the liquor interests concerning the medical value of alcohol the better for them.

"BOOZE" CORNER IN DRUG STORES CONDEMNED BY NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF DRUG CLERKS

The National Association of Drug Clerks, in convention in Chicago, passed a resolution condemning the "booze" corner in drug stores. In commenting on the action of the convention, Paul Mandelback, who introduced the resolution, is reported by the Chicago papers to have said, "The liquor interests must not be allowed to turn drug stores into grog shops."

PROHIBITION SENTIMENT IN PORTO RICO SHOWS ENCOURAGING INCREASE

In an interesting article in Record of Christian Work, Rev. A. R. Thompson of the Porto Rico Presbyterian Mission tells of the remarkable movement for prohibition in the island, both inside and outside the churches. The approaching election on July 16, at which time the people will vote on prohibition, has brought the question definitely to the minds of the citizens, and they are showing a truly commendable desire to be forever done with the drink traffic. Mr. Thompson describes the movement of sentiment as a prairie fire. In Yauco a mass meeting on the public plaza was attended by thousands, all in favor of prohibition. At Mayaguez a number of meetings have been held, one of them being so crowded that a number of the people had to stand and an overflow meeting was held on the plaza. The following night 800 attended the meeting. At a meeting for women in the city hall an enthusiastic member, wife of a former island Congressman, made the motion that a letter be sent to the distillers asking them to take no action against the extermination of liquor in the island and pledging the Porto Rican women to indemnify them with their savings in dress and otherwise. The socialists and the federation of labor are both on fire for prohibition, the latter threatening to tear down any platform built for liquor speakers. The article in the Record of Christian Work says further:

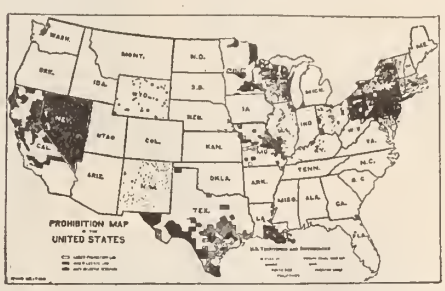
"The Puerto Rico Evangelico prints a page of similar items. At Barranquitas almost the whole town will vote dry. A paper signed by the Protestant pastor, the Catholic priest and the liquor sellers themselves (!) comes out for prohibition. At Hatillo the prohibition committee has on its membership the judge, chief of police, principal of the schools, secretary of the municipality and collector of internal revenues. In the Caguas District the enthusiasm is declared to be tremendous. Gurabo, Juncos and Aguas Buenas, towns of the vicinity, have gone on record for prohibition. Students in the high school of Caguas are collecting money, holding meetings and publishing articles favoring a dry Porto Rico. At Juana Diaz the alcalde and other dignitaries are strong partisans of the prohibition movement. The propaganda committee is proposing to extend its labors to all the villages of the neighborhood. The Catholic priest of that town is active.

"Such news coming from all over the island seems to indicate that Porto Rico, which spends $14,000,000 in alcoholic drinks yearly, while her people are in many places on the edge of chronic famine, is to enter upon a new era of temperance and prosperity."



HONOR ROLL

—of—

PROHIBITION STATES AND TERRITORY AND DATE OF GOING INTO EFFECT

Maine		1851
Kansas		1880
North Dakota		1889
Oklahoma		1907
Georgia		1908
North Carolina		1909
Mississippi		1909
Tennessee		1909
West Virginia		1914
Alabama		1915
Arizona		1915
Virginia		1916
Colorado		1916
Oregon		1916
Washington		1916
Arkansas		1916
Iowa		1916
Idaho		1916
South Carolina		1916
Nebraska	*May	1, 1917
South Dakota	*July	1, 1917
Utah	†Aug.	1, 1917
Dist. of Columbia	†Nov.	1, 1917
Alaska	†Jan.	1, 1918
Indiana	†April	2, 1918
Michigan	*April	30, 1918
Montana	*Dec.	31, 1918
New Hampshire	†May	1, 1918

*Enacted 1916. †Enacted 1917.

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1917

Iowa†† Ohio New Mexico

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1918

Utah††	Missouri	Florida
Minnesota	Wyoming	Nevada

††Now have statutory prohibition. Will vote on constitutional amendment.

STATES HAVING TEMPERANCE DAY IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Alabama	Oregon
Tennessee	North Dakota
Kansas	Missouri
New Mexico	South Dakota

MOBILIZATION CAMPS TO BE ESTABLISHED IN DRY TERRITORY

The thirteenth division mobilization camp, where 35,000 soldiers will be received between September 1 and 15, is to be located at Des Moines, Iowa. The fact that Iowa is prohibition territory is the reason for the selection of Des Moines instead of St. Paul and Minneapolis. With Attorney General Havner and the red light injunction law "on the job" it is believed there is little possibility of segregated districts springing up. The camp will have 1,000 army wagons, 627 motor trucks, 34 motor cars, 106 motorcycles, 6,000 horses, 2,000 mules and 12 aeroplanes, it is reported.

The new Illinois cantonment, where 40,000 men will be trained, is also to be located in dry territory. The city of Rockford, which has been dry for some years, was chosen in preference to Springfield or Peoria.

JULY 1, "BONE DRY DAY"

On the first day of July two far-reaching and important Federal anti-liquor laws go into effect. One prohibits the shipment of all alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes into states which have adopted laws prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcohol. The other forbids the use of the mails for the advertising or soliciting of orders for intoxicating liquors in any state or at any point or place in any state in which it is by local or state law forbidden to advertise or to solicit orders for liquors.

All of the prohibition states come under the provisions of the first named law, but those which have enacted statutes in harmony with the Federal law will have a decided advantage when it comes to enforcement, for they will possess the machinery whereby to make the law effective.

The Postoffice Department has recently issued a bulletin naming the states that in whole, or in part, will be affected by the anti-liquor advertising law. The substance of this information was published in THE UNION SIGNAL a few weeks ago.

Congressman Charles H. Randall suggests that those cities or towns not included in the territory named should take measures to secure the passage by the city council of an ordinance to the same effect as the Federal measure, in order that they may receive the benefit of the new Federal anti-liquor advertising law.

LIQUOR ADVERTISEMENT ADMITS NATIONAL PROHIBITION NEAR

A St. Louis liquor dealer in advertising a bargain sale in wet goods gives as his reason for offering his stock at a great reduction the imminence of national prohibition. The advertisement reads as follows:

NATION-WIDE DRY BILL NOW NEARER THAN EVER,

Is View of Lawmakers

Passage of Measure Barring Use of Grain in Beverages Expected at Any Time

WE SEE THE HANDWRITING ON THE WALL

In our opinion it will be only a short time until newspapers throughout the United States will not receive liquor advertisements. Therefore we offer our elaborate Liquor Stock at a reduction of from 60c to 80c on the dollar.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CHARITIES FAVORS "DRY U. S."

The 3,500 delegates attending the National Conference of Charities and Correction unanimously passed a resolution urging Congress to enact a law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor in the United States for the period of the war and for one year thereafter. Passage of the resolution marked one of the few times that the conference has taken a stand on any public issue.

PRESS OF DRY STATES ENTHUSIASTIC FOR PROHIBITION

An impartial inquiry of the editors of the newspapers of prohibition states by the Literary Digest recently elicited some interesting testimonials to the value of prohibition. Two questions were asked by the Digest of the editors of papers in nineteen prohibition states: First, whether in their state prohibition is a success; second, whether they would recommend it to other states. We quote briefly from a few of the papers whose replies were published:

Maine

"A fair test of the general prosperity of a people is found in the per capita amount of individual deposits in their banks and in the increase in the value of all taxable property," says the Portland Express. "Wisconsin, Delaware, Ohio, Illinois, New Jersey, Maryland, and Pennsylvania would not be cited by any intelligent citizen as states where the general prosperity of the people had suffered through legal opposition to the liquor traffic. How do they compare with Maine in the amount of per capita individual deposits in their banks? The comptroller's report for 1910 shows that Wisconsin had $142 per capita; Delaware, $170; Ohio, $175; Illinois, $198; New Jersey, $205; Maryland, $205; Pennsylvania, $210; while Maine had $256 per capita of individual deposits in all her banks. Prohibition was enacted in Maine, as we have seen, in 1851, and between 1850 and 1912, as shown by the census of 1910, Maine had increased the value of her taxable property of all kinds by a larger percentage than had any state whose shores are washed by the waters of the Atlantic or the Gulf of Mexico, save only the Empire state of New York, and that great state exceeded Maine by only eight-one hundredths of one per cent."

Kansas

Prohibition is the "greatest asset of Kansas," remarks the Concordia Blade-Empire, which tells us that there can be no question of the economic benefits it has brought to the state, while the moral gain is incalculable. The Lindsborg News claims that one of the results of prohibition in Kansas has been that no state in the Union has been so vilified by the brewery interests, for they have realized all along in their losing fight that the only way to keep the traffic going has been "along the line of disillusionment."

North Dakota

The Jamestown Capital reminds us that every time the people of the state have an opportunity to vote upon the question of prohibition they "overwhelmingly strengthen the law," which is a financial success that has been worth millions to the people of the state. Merely as a business proposition, therefore, they do not want anything to do with the liquor business.

Georgia

The Waycross Journal-Herald says that in its observation the present Georgia dry laws are more generally accepted as being successful "than any similar laws that this state or any other state has ever had." It claims even that thousands of so-called local optionists in Georgia have been so impressed that they are openly advocating laws so rigid that liquor "can neither be advertised, sold, nor shipped" into the state.

Oklahoma

The Vinita Leader writes that "every time the state votes on the question of prohibition the majority favoring it increases," for Oklahoma is dry "for keeps."

Mississippi

The Grenada Sentinel is firm in its conviction that prohibition is a success, for those places that once vote the saloon out never vote it back. Mississippi would not turn back if she could and she could not if she would. The Issue (Jackson) also recalls that under the saloon régime "liquor largely controlled politics," but when the saloons were driven out the political regeneration of Mississippi followed swiftly, and "today it is the cleanest politically of any state in the Union."

—Pioneer

Prevent Such an Occurrence as This by a National Prohibition War Measure

North Carolina

Prohibition pays, says the Lexington Dispatch, and every demonstration of its value has deepened the sentiment for still more strenuous legislation, and proof of its success is in the marvelous industrial growth of the state during recent years and the fact that North Carolinians are "a happier, sober, more ambitious people, freer to work for state building without the discouraging presence of liquor, destroyer of mind and body."

Tennessee

The Commercial Appeal points out among the advantages of prohibition already noticeable in the city of Memphis the following:

"We have an enormous Negro population, and the reduction of the supply of liquor to irresponsible Negroes has already been followed by a reduction in fighting and killing.

"It has also cut down loafing and reduced idleness among a certain class of Negroes. There have been fewer arrests of both whites and blacks in Memphis during the last six months than during any other six months for ten years. There has been a reduction of tragedies which have their origin in liquor.

"Prohibition has already materially dimmed the lights in the red-light district. With liquor out of the red-light district it will shrivel up from lack of patronage.

"Under prohibition workingmen are taking more of their money home to their wives and to their children than they previously did.

"Under prohibition the occasional drinker does not run the risk of becoming an occasional drunkard. . . .

"Prohibition has also interfered with the gambling industry. Retail merchants find their collections better under prohibition than they did before prohibition was in order. . . .

"If the present wave is not dissipated there will be national prohibition within six years."

Arizona

In Arizona, the Phœnix Arizona Gazette has no hesitancy in avowing that prohibition has been of very great benefit to the state. It has resulted in the decrease of crime, according to the reports of the officials of penal institutions and peace-officers, and, according to reports of bankers and mining men, has proved of great economic advantage. In the city of Phœnix alone the average number of arrests for drunkenness has been less per month than it was daily under the saloon régime. But the election figures furnish the best argument that can be produced, showing that the people recognize the benefits of prohibition, according to this journal, which adds:

"The 'bone-dry' amendment, or the measure to strengthen the one previously adopted, by cutting out the 'personal-use' feature, was carried by thirteen counties out of fourteen, by a majority of 11,094, one county only voting against it, and it by one majority only.

"To the citizens of states having hundreds of thousands of votes these majorities may not look large, but in Arizona, with less than 250,000 population, the total vote amounted to a little less than 50,000, from which it will be seen that the percentage is quite large."

Virginia

In Virginia the Richmond Evening Journal says that in January, 1916, the

(Continued on Page Nine)

TURNING THE LIGHT ON 1917 "ANTI-PROHIBITION MANUAL"

ARGUMENTS OF LIQUOR MEN COMPOSED OF HALF TRUTHS, GARBLED STATISTICS AND FALSE DEDUCTIONS

PROF. JOHN A. NICHOLLS

The wonderful ingenuity and untiring activity displayed by the publicity department of the liquor interests are surely worthy of a better cause. The ability displayed in the presentation of alleged facts is certainly great enough to accomplish wonders if it were used in a proper manner, and not perverted to the bolstering up of a lost cause. But as one reads the "Anti-Prohibition Manual," the "National Bulletin," and other liquor publications, and notes how fact and fiction, truth and falsehood are skilfully blended with sophistry in order to present the liquor traffic in the garb of an angel of light, it would almost seem as if the prophet Isaiah, looking across the centuries with prophetic vision, was thinking of these champions of the dark traffic in drink when he said: "Woe unto them that call evil good and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter." For surely no stronger illustration of an attempt to do the very things named can be found than in the widely distributed documents of the liquor organizations. Many good and well meaning people have been misled and deceived in the past, but fortunately, as Abraham Lincoln so aptly put it, "You can't fool all the people all the time," and the dissemination of facts, the wide extension of prohibition territory, and the world-wide interest in the discussion of the liquor problem, lessen to a very large extent the danger arising from the constant efforts to deceive put forth by the selfish liquor forces.

Sentiment Has Changed Since Then

And it is rather late in the day to hope to bolster up the drink habit and the drink traffic by the statement that George Washington had a distillery upon his plantation in Virginia over one hundred twenty-five years ago. He also had slaves there, and it would be just as logical to say that because of that fact slavery ought to be continued, as to urge the continuance of the manufacture of alcoholic beverages because they were made on the estate of the first president of the United States. We have learned something during the last one hundred years about slavery and alcohol; scientific investigation, and economic research have placed us in possession of the facts, and as our flag waves over an undivided republic, without a slave, so ere long will it float over a nation emancipated from partnership with the liquor traffic. The attempt in the "Anti-Prohibition Manual" to identify Abraham Lincoln with the liquor traffic because it is alleged that he bought brandy in a drug store is on a par with the attempt to hide behind the Washington distillery. Mr. Lincoln's temperance principles were so pronounced, and his views so widely known, that even an inmate of a lunatic asylum could hardly be deceived by such sophistry. Years ago thousands of doctors used and prescribed brandy for medical purposes, believing it to possess special virtues. Today its use has been largely abandoned as more careful research has shown it to be a dangerous narcotic depressant drug. We know now that alcohol will preserve a man when he is dead, but its use will not tend to keep him alive.

Another startling headline informs us that "Drinking Nations Lead, and Have Led the World." The writer declares that, "Instead of being a curse, alcohol is the handmaiden of intellectual and material progress, and that history abundantly proves it." The writer's knowledge of history must certainly be very shallow if he really believes this absurd statement. Drink was the weakness, and not the strength of the great nations of the past, and the story of their rise and fall is one continuous warning against strong drink. Even Babylon, the pride and the glory of the world, went down because of alcohol's mighty power, while men who moved like giants for a time in the world's arena perished miserably because of its destructive force.

Another declaration from the same article states that "Races are vigorous in body and virile in mind almost in the ratio that they consume alcohol." The writer certainly ought to attend a primary school, and take a few lessons in ancient and modern history, winding up with a course in scientific temperance. Another interesting display line informs us that "The South is staggering under dry laws." Well—not so that you can notice it. In fact, all the evidence, coming as it does from governors, mayors, judges, and public officials, seems to show that the South has ceased to stagger, and is now traveling briskly on the highway to prosperity, with a decrease in crime, and an increase in property valuation, and marked beneficial results in moral uplift and good order.

—San Francisco Call

Menacing our Bread Supply.

We are also informed that "National prohibition is a farce," although it has never yet been tried, and we get a repetition of the old statement that "The saloon is the poor man's club." Some time ago, in a remarkable arraignment of the saloon, a prominent beer bottler of Boston said: "No consistent or logical argument can be advanced for its continuance, unless it be the hackneyed one that it is the poor man's club. If it is the poor man's club then I contend that the dues are too high; it costs too much to keep the club steward in a prosperous condition, and therefore should be disbanded for the benefit of the club members, their families and the community at large." This seems to be a very complete answer to the claim of the "Anti-Prohibition Manual."

But when it comes to the "Magnitude of the Liquor Industry" we get some idea of the vivid imagination of the "Manual's" author. Quoting, and correctly, from the United States Statistical Abstract, the cost of materials used in the manufacture of distilled, malt and vinous liquors is given as $139,199,000. In another place we are informed that "Prohibition would cost from $3,000,000,000 to $5,000,000,000," and are also told that the farmers receive hundreds of millions annually from the brewers and distillers, and that prohibition would result in the loss of billions of dollars to wholesale grocers and others, in addition to the loss of billions of dollars in assets and annual business to barrel and stave manufacturers, lumber men, bottle makers, and those engaged in other collateral lines of business. Insurance men, we are told, would lose millions of dollars in premiums. Inasmuch as the official census returns for 1909 place the valuation of all alcoholic beverages at $592,560,000 it is very evident that the untold billions that are to be lost by the adoption of prohibition, like Falstaff's men in Buckram, exist only in the fertile brain of the defender of the liquor interests. As to the number of persons dependent upon the so-called liquor industry, to that computation there seems to be no end. In one place the "Manual" states that 200,000 are directly employed, making a living for 1,000,000 people. Another statement places the number to be provided for at 4,000,000, but this soon grows to 1,100,000 directly employed, and the number dependent upon the business reaches 8,000,000. In another place we are informed, upon the authority of the Philadelphia Sunday Despatch, that 10,000,000 persons are dependent on the liquor traffic for a living. Talk about Barnum's lightning calculator. Even he, in his most palmy days, could not multiply as fast as the statisticians of the brewers and distillers.

Prohibition not Responsible for Conditions Before its Enactment

But the skill of the compiler shows to great advantage in the tables comparing wet and dry states. With the methods adopted it is possible to prove anything under the sun. For instance, take the illiteracy table, a comparison of seven dry and seven wet states: By picking out four southern states, where the percentage of illiteracy is notoriously large, it is possible to compare them with northern states in such a manner as to swell the percentage of illiteracy to the great apparent disadvantage of the dry states. That prohibition is in no way responsible for this condition, is well known to everybody. In West Virginia, one of the seven states included in the table, prohibition did not go into operation until five years after the census returns quoted were collected. But a little thing like that does not trouble the anti-prohibitionist. The same method is used in all the comparisons. The evident hope of the compiler is that the reader will have no knowledge of conditions, and trusting to the honesty of the writer will be an easy dupe.

The very methods adopted show the desperate straits in which the liquor traffickers find themselves. Garbled statistics, false statements, and wild assertions may sometimes deceive for a time, but in the long run honesty is the best policy. Morally, economically and socially wrong, the liquor traffic will have to go. Given a fair trial through the long years of the past, it has been found guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors against humanity. Every form of regulation has been tried with that intent, and failed. The decision of the American people, fast hastening to consummation, is that it must be ended. This decision will ere long be engrafted upon the organic law of the nation in the form of National Constitutional Prohibition, thus bringing to us happier homes, greater prosperity, and a better land.

No. 1 No. 2 No. 3

Scenes at El Paso, Texas, During Mobilization of Troops on Mexican Border

"WILL HISTORY REPEAT ITSELF?"

KATHARINE LENT STEVENSON

That was a pertinent question which THE UNION SIGNAL recently asked through its editorial columns, "Will History Repeat Itself?" the answer to which must be given unequivocally in the affirmative, and we rejoice that the campaign against vice which the Woman's Christian Temperance Union waged for the Philippine Islands is being duplicated by an even more widespread and aggressive campaign for our army camps of the present day.

The article by Dr. M. J. Exner, which appeared in the April issue of Social Hygiene, is appalling in its revelations of conditions on the Mexican border while our troops were encamped there. It should be in the hands of every member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, if that be possible. It should certainly be in the hands of state, county and local presidents and of all who hold positions of leadership. Only a few weeks ago one of my own state superintendents denied with great vigor the charges of prostitution in the Army and the establishment of prophylaxis tents. Her own son had been on the border and she was sure if such things had existed she would have known of them from him. But Dr. Exner has proved their existence and many more sons, all over the land have, without doubt, kept from their mothers knowledge which they have realized would bring anguish to their hearts even though they themselves might have escaped the deadly pollution.

There has recently come into my hands remarkable confirmation of the facts of Dr. Exner's article. A young Massachusetts soldier, who was converted while on the border and who is consumed with the true convert's zeal for setting the wrong right, came to me in my office to tell me of some of the things he had seen and placed in my hands photographs which he had taken himself while in camp at El Paso. For obvious reasons I withhold his name, although he would be more than willing to take any consequences which might come from having it known if he could be assured that thereby he might aid in doing away with these twin evils in the Army camp—the saloon and the brothel. He is circulating petitions for prohibition, speaking wherever an opportunity offers and making a splendid fight for the protection of the flag.

He affirms unhesitatingly that drink is the producing cause of a vast majority of the cases of prostitution in the Army camps. Moreover, he is equally certain that the anti-canteen law is constantly violated,—indeed, he was surprised beyond measure when told that that law had not been repealed. He realizes that the saloons which cluster close around the boundary lines of the camps are the places where the greatest amount of drunkenness is to be found, but he affirms as positively as a veteran white ribboner could that it is the few drinks taken at the bar of the Army canteen which arouse the appetite and send the men to the stronger drink outside. He said, in answer to a question: "Well, maybe it was not beer, but only near beer. All I can say is that it acted like beer."

Through his great interest I am able to send to THE UNION SIGNAL the accompanying illustrations, all taken by him. No. 1 is self-explanatory, and yet I should not say that, for it was not self-explanatory to me. My first thought was that it represented a battle-field and I asked in all innocence: "Is that man wounded?" "Yes," he said, "I guess he's wounded all right. That is one of those houses." No. 2 represents soldiers entering one of the houses, all of which are close to the banks of the Rio Grande, looking towards Mexico. During the year and a half this young man was at the front he saw the evolution of a single home into a great caravansary. There was first built a saloon with wings reaching in two directions in which are the rooms, or cribs, for the women. One after another the additions were made until they cover an entire block. (See No. 3). With a strong magnifying glass one may see the women in the doors and windows of some of the rooms, as they are seen in Japan, China and Burma today.

EDITOR'S NOTE—Since this article was written Secretary Baker of the War Department has taken action looking toward the moral protection of the soldier. On May 25 he made public a letter addressed to the governors of all states, calling for co-operation in keeping the Army mobilization camps free from improper surroundings and immoral influences. "Our responsibility in this matter is not open to question," the Secretary wrote. "We cannot allow these young men, most of whom will have been drafted to service, to be surrounded by a vicious and demoralizing environment, nor can we leave anything undone which will protect them from unhealthy influences and crude forms of temptation."

But these are not snapshots of Japan, or China, or Burma, but of the United States of America, the state of Texas and the city of El Paso. Small wonder that there is a municipal ordinance forbidding the taking of snapshots on the streets of El Paso! We are glad that the civic authorities are not willing to have their shame known to the world. But it is not the shame of El Paso or Texas alone, but of the entire nation, and it is against the duplication of such scenes in numerous concentration camps all over our country that the united moral forces of the land are protesting

One thing Dr. Exner's article brings out clearly and that is that the responsibility for the existence of these sinks of iniquity rests with the individual commanders and that the condition is not one which of necessity attends the whole army. From one camp saloon and brothel were almost wholly excluded by the sheer determination and the sole authority of the commander. If this be true, then why may not the Commander-in-Chief of the United States Army, through the aid of Congress, or without that aid if it be withheld,—say that the men of our nation who are risking their lives that the nation may be preserved shall be saved from a more deadly enemy than submarine or machine gun, a foe which will destroy alike body, mind and soul?

That startling book published by the Strength of Britain movement, "Defeat or Victory," gives an awful picture of the conditions to which the British army has been subjected during this war. Small wonder that its publication was stopped, the issue already in existence destroyed and a fine attached to the possession of a copy in some of the provinces. But the truth must be heard whether governments like to hear it or not, and Canadian and Australian mothers and fathers have a right to ask, as they are asking, if they are to continue to send their sons out from the shelter of a prohibition home into the horrors of a drunken, licentious army camp. It is asserted on competent authority that, during the first eighteen months of the war more men from one of the great powers were in the hospitals from venereal diseases than from wounds sustained on the battlefields.

Is this to be America's experience? God forbid! Let us continue to pour in our appeals to the President and to Congress for prohibition as a war measure and for the protection of the young manhood, which in very truth is a nation's soul.

NEXT LOGICAL STEP

PROF. IRVING FISHER, of Yale University

The theory that alcohol in small quantities is beneficial has been forever exploded by exact scientific tests. The use of even one or two glasses of beer daily has been proved to slow down the entire nervous system, and the myth that alcohol is a stimulant is no longer accepted by the medical profession. Alcohol is not a stimulant, it is a narcotic poison; it does not stimulate the heart, it removes the normal brakes of the heart.

That wipes out the non-prohibition argument that people who can exercise self-control have a right to drink. They have no such right, since drink, even in small quantities, is poison. We have compulsory education; we have just adopted compulsory draft; prohibition is a compulsion of almost as great a value to a nation at war as compulsory registration.

When eighty per cent of our square miles and sixty per cent of our population, our national capital and our army and navy are dry, it seems the logical thing to do to make it nation-wide.

—Copyright by Harris & Ewing
Hon. Josephus Daniels,
Secretary of the Navy

Safeguard Soldiers and Sailors!

Secretary Daniels and Secretary Baker have expressed the intention of doing everything in their power to safeguard the training and mobilization camps of the Army and the Navy, and they urge the co-operation of the state officials and the people to that end.

Wherever these camps are located, the W. C. T. U. has a fine opportunity to exercise all possible influence with the governors to secure an anti-liquor and an anti-vice zone for the protection of the enlisted men. Where these camps are situated in prohibition states and localities letters should be sent to the governor, urging strict enforcement of existing laws.

—Copyright by Harris & Ewing
Hon. Newton D. Baker,
Secretary of War

WHY ABRAHAM LINCOLN SIGNED THE LIQUOR REVENUE BILL

REV. DUNCAN C. MILNER

A chapter of war history of special significance at this time, in view of pending war revenue legislation.

Perhaps the most serious mistake in the wonderful political career of Abraham Lincoln was that he signed the internal revenue bill which, in laying a tax on liquors, did it in such a way that their manufacture and sale were put under the protection of the national government.

The story of the passage of the bill and Mr. Lincoln's approval is of great interest. It was the second year of the great war and the expenditures of the government were enormous in comparison with any previous experience of the republic. It was also a critical time in military affairs. The Union armies had met with some serious defeats. The soldiers were unpaid. The proposed internal revenue bill exacted a heavy tax on everything upon which such a burden could be laid. The proposal to exact a large tax from liquor makers and sellers provoked bitter debates in both houses of Congress. Among the leaders were sincere champions of prohibition and they were divided on the bill. Senator Henry Wilson of Massachusetts made serious objection to the measure because it was a form of licensing the liquor traffic. He said, "I look upon the liquor trade as grossly immoral, carrying more evil than anything else in this country, and I think the Federal government ought not to derive a revenue from the retail of intoxicating drinks."

He had the foresight to prophesy that it would give the business of liquor selling a respectable position and that "It will be hailed from one end of the country to the other by the whole rum selling interests of the country. . . . It will give immense power and strength to the liquor selling interests." Senator Grimes of Iowa and Senator Pomeroy of Kansas stood with Senator Wilson.

Secretary of the Treasury Chase pressed Mr. Lincoln in behalf of the empty treasury and made the plea that the soldiers and sailors and their families were in great need and money must be furnished. The secretary and friends of prohibition treated it as an emergency measure that would be revoked as soon as the war was over.

The testimony of Major James B. Merwin, an old friend of Mr. Lincoln and a co-worker with him for temperance, is of interest and value. In a letter to the writer he said, "There were tens of thousands of soldiers, faithful, self-denying, patriotic and true, who had not been paid for months. Secretary Chase, a most accomplished and successful financier, had exhausted every resource of the country. The families of soldiers, to my certain knowledge, were without food and some of them without shelter. Napoleon said, 'Make the vices pay the bills,' and so they came to President Lincoln and pleaded with him to recoup the empty treasury by taxing liquors. He revolted at once! 'Never,' said he, 'will I consent to that infamy.' Lincoln, great as he was and good as he was, was not so great as his party. He had to yield to the pressure—to my certain knowledge with the specific agreement that it was only and distinctly 'a war measure' to be repealed as soon as the war was over. I know positively how the great Lincoln struggled days over this matter, but a person not conversant with existing conditions can form no idea of the pressure."

In another letter to me, Major Merwin wrote, "Mr. Chase sent for me for two consultations on the matter, he was so much afraid I should advise against it. I told Mr. Lincoln, 'I dare not advise you one way or another. I know the pressure for money to pay the troops.' Please always stand on the positive agreement that it was to end with the war. To my personal knowledge that consent was obtained for Mr. Lincoln's signature to the bill."

At the Anti-Saloon League convention at Columbus, Ohio, a few years ago, Major Merwin gave similar testimony. He declared that in the presence of Senator Wilson, Secretary Chase and himself, Mr. Chase said, "Mr. Lincoln, we have got to have the resources of evil as well as good to end this rebellion and we must have the resources. Mr. Lincoln, we cannot stand it any longer."

Then Mr. Lincoln said, "I had rather lose my right hand than to sign a document that shall perpetuate the liquor traffic, but as soon as the exigencies pass away I will turn my attention to the repeal of that document."

If Mr. Lincoln had survived the war there can hardly be any question that he would have sought the repeal of this law that was so shrewdly manipulated by the liquor interests, to give an air of respectability to their business and so intrench it in law, and add to their enormous financial gains.

It may be well to recall the fact that for nearly fifty years before the war there was no Federal tax on the liquor traffic. There were customs duties on imported liquors. While at this time there was no financial burden put upon the liquor business it was the time of the inauguration of the modern temperance reform. During that period there had arisen the American Temperance Society, the American Temperance Union, the Washingtonian and Father Mathew total abstinence crusades and the beginning of the fraternal temperance societies of which the Sons of Temperance was the pioneer. By the close of 1855 fourteen states were under prohibitory laws. Agitation for both slavery and temperance was before the country, but finally the slavery question took the leading place until it was settled by the war. After the war the liquor makers found that the paying of so large a share of the expenses of the government by the revenue, gave them place and power and made friends for them among many people who were not unwilling to save taxes even at the shameful price of partnership with a business so destructive and dangerous.

On the last day of Mr. Lincoln's life Major Merwin was a guest at the White House. He was to go as a special messenger from the President to Horace Greeley and others to get their influence in forwarding a plan to employ colored troops in the construction of the Panama Canal. After Mr. Lincoln had given the papers and instructions he said, "Merwin, we have cleared up a colossal job. Slavery is abolished. After reconstruction the next great question will be the overthrow and suppression of the legalized liquor traffic and you know that my head and heart, my hand and my purse will go into the contest for victory. In 1842, less than a quarter of a century ago, I predicted that the day would come when there would be neither a slave nor a drunkard in the land. I have lived to see one prediction fulfilled. I hope to live to see the other."

Mr. Merwin wrote, "We shook hands and I left for Philadelphia and New York. That night the bullet of the assassin sent him into eternal silence."

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, June 21, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

AMBULANCE PLAN POPULAR

The plan of the National W. C. T. U. to purchase, equip and send to France a motor ambulance is receiving hearty support from the state organizations. A gift of $50 has been received from Mrs. Caroline McDowell, National superintendent of Temperance and Missions.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. SENDS REPRESENTATIVE TO HELP IN PORTO RICAN CAMPAIGN

Rev. Paul Barnhart sails June 23 for Porto Rico to represent the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union in the prohibition campaign now in progress. Mr. Barnhart is peculiarly fitted for this service. He has spent several years in Chili as a missionary of the Methodist Episcopal church and is thoroughly familiar with the language, literature and ways of the Spanish-speaking peoples. Porto Rico votes on prohibition July 16 and our correspondents in the island write most optimistically of the prospects for success.

WHO WILL DECIDE THE ISSUE?

There is little danger of the average American citizen forgetting that this is a government "of the people and for the people," but occasionally he needs to be reminded that it is likewise a government "by the people," and that as one of them he has certain definite obligations to meet. Professor Irving Fisher, in speaking recently on wartime prohibition to an audience in Philadelphia said, "It is people like you who are to decide the issue. If you 'let George do it' he may fail you. I tell you it is nip and tuck in Washington on this question, and every day the situation mysteriously shifts. The liquor interests are fighting with their backs to the wall. If we don't fight we lose."

Your activity in arousing your friends and fellow citizens will have much to do with the decision of the administration and Congress on this question.

Send telegrams and brief letters to President Wilson, your two Senators and your Congressman, urging prohibition as a war emergency measure for the conservation of our material resources and for the health and efficiency of the nation's defenders.

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, 561 Thirty-third St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

SPECIALIZE ON COMFORT BAGS

All local unions in planning for patriotic service should keep in mind that "the Navy goes first," and that the work to be pushed at the present time is the making of comfort bags to supply the naval recruits that are crowding into the four great training stations: Great Lakes Naval Training Station, near Chicago; San Francisco; Newport, Rhode Island, and Norfolk, Virginia. Hurry up calls are coming to W. C. T. U. headquarters for large quantities of these bags. About a week ago the president of the Illinois W. C. T. U., with headquarters at Chicago, received a call from the Y. M. C. A. secretary at the Great Lakes station for 1,400 bags for immediate use. "We want W. C. T. U. comfort bags" said the secretary in his message. Remember that this comfort bag work is to be done independently of the Red Cross Society. The bags are to be made and filled according to the plans and specifications of our National department of Work among Soldiers and Sailors, and they will contain nothing to which the mother of any enlisted boy can object. In each will be placed a little Testament and a motherly letter of cheer and encouragement.

ONE "BONE DRY" DAY

Prohibition does not and cannot prohibit? Of that fact there can be no doubt since we are assured of it on the solemn word of the liquor fraternity, which cannot be mistaken. And yet, while we bow to their infallibility, we must confess that certain very strange things sometimes occur in places where prohibition has only a sporadic existence, as well as in territory where it is the settled policy. If prohibition does not prohibit, then it comes dangerously near to doing so even in the midst of untoward circumstances.

For example, the worst foe of the city of Boston, Massachusetts, cannot accuse it of being prohibition ground. The liquor traffic has free course, runs and is glorified both in the Boston City Hall and under the gilded dome on Beacon Hill. One assertion made persistently throughout the years since the prohibitory law was repealed to make way for high license has been that the law was so shamelessly violated that it had to be repealed in the interests of decency and morality. Whatever might be the facts concerning prohibition elsewhere, it could never be enforced in Boston, has come to be a truism on the lips of "cultured" Bostonians.

And yet, here are the very latest facts concerning prohibition in Boston: On Tuesday, June fifth, the city was "bone dry." Governor McCall had requested the liquor dealers of the state to refrain from selling on registration day. How far this request was acceded to throughout the state we do not yet know, but in Boston every hotel, save one, all the saloons and clubs, save two or three of the "exclusive" sort, complied. The governor affirmed that he had not the power to demand the closing of the saloons. The Boston licensing board was equally sure of its limitations, but the "patriotic liquor dealers" realized that "Safety First," so far as their continued existence was concerned, lay in obeying this request. At a banquet given in the evening in honor of ex-Governor Brackett's election to the constitutional convention, at which five ex-governors sat at table among many other notables, ex-Governor Foss stated: "If Massachusetts were to be as dry for thirty days as it has been today it would never go back and be wet."

What justified that assertion? Up to five o'clock on the afternoon of the fifth there had not been one arrest for drunkenness, and up to midnight only twenty in a city where, at the most conservative estimate, 750,000 people had been gathered during all or part of the day. Without doubt the number exceeded 750,000, as the young men were coming in from all parts of the state to register for military service. There was absolutely no disturbance of any kind and the number registered exceeded the estimate made.

But prohibition does not prohibit apparently and Massachusetts has sat too long at the feet of the brewers and distillers to learn from experience or observation. "What fools we mortals be!"

PROTECTION FOR THE UNIFORM

Congress has passed a law against the sale of intoxicating liquors to men in uniform. The Attorney General has interpreted it to apply to enlisted men not only in the Army but in the Navy and the Marines. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are urging the cooperation of state officials and of citizens to make the measure effective.

In order to insure the perfect enforcement of this law, all citizens should lend their assistance. Influence should be brought to bear upon governors and state officials to create a dry zone around every training or mobilization camp and public sentiment should demand of all local officers that they do their utmost to help enforce the provision. Private citizens should be self-constituted detectives to note and report law violations of liquor dealers. The patriotic people of all communities in the vicinity of these camps should co-operate with the Y. M. C. A. and officers in charge in furnishing wholesome recreation to offset temptations offered by vicious interests.

LABOR MISREPRESENTED

The anti-prohibition petition signed by 2,000,000 men, purporting to have come from the labor unions, recently presented to President Wilson, grossly misrepresents the labor interests of this country. Certainly the Virginia Federation of Labor which at its recent meeting at Roanoke endorsed the principle of national prohibition, declaring alcohol to be the enemy of the workingman, could not have been included in this petition.

Colorado could hardly have been represented, for the Denver Labor Bulletin says positively in a recent utterance: "Today it is practically impossible to find a member of organized labor in Colorado advocating a return to former conditions with the open saloon and its accompanying crime."

Obviously the labor unions of Washington would not sympathize with such a movement, for the president of that organization said not long ago: "I voted against the prohibition law two years ago. I did not believe it would work because of the fact that we had several thousand men and women, good, tried unionists, making a livelihood from the liquor business, but from my observation covering a period of ten months the state has been dry I would state emphatically that I would never vote for a return of the saloon system."

We venture the conjecture that an analysis of the two million names signed to the petition would disclose the fact that it represented not legitimate labor interests, but the men employed by the distillers, brewers and allied trades and hangers-on around saloons who are practically unfit for any form of physical labor.

SHALL WE MAKE THE LIQUOR DEALERS OUR TAX COLLECTORS?

SENATOR K. D. McKELLAR of Tennessee

I am unwilling to debauch the American people in order to raise revenue for the government. I would gladly vote today to abolish the sale of liquors throughout the United States and lose every dollar of the revenue. We have threshed this revenue argument out time and time again. We have had it up in Tennessee, where we have lost all the revenue that came from liquor, but at the same time our state is more prosperous and the people are happier and better able to pay taxes than they have ever been before. I believe that if we had no liquor and no revenue from liquor our Nation would be happier and more prosperous and better able to pay these extraordinary taxes that we must impose. In taxing liquor we merely tax the people who drink liquor, and make the liquor dealer our tax-collector.

TWO IRRESISTIBLE ARGUMENTS FOR WAR PROHIBITION

From Journal American Medical Association

The prohibition movement appears to be growing steadily stronger and stronger. In view of the increasing strength of the sentiment in favor of prohibition, it is not at all surprising that a powerful effort should be made to secure some form of nation-wide prohibition at least during the war. Besides the usual reasons urged in favor of prohibition, special emphasis is now directed to the necessity of stopping the manufacture of alcoholic beverages in order to conserve the food supply and to turn additional labor into channels concerning the usefulness and necessity of which there can be no question.

But of all reasons that may be urged against the use of alcoholic drinks, the two that must appeal to physicians with irresistible force are (1) the action of alcohol in lessening all forms of efficiency, physical, intellectual and moral, and (2) the intimate connection always found between drinking, prostitution and the spread of venereal diseases.

The evidence against alcohol on these accounts is so overwhelming, so well established, and so generally known, that it does not seem necessary at this time to go into details, quote figures or cite examples. Only the other day an experiment was mentioned in The Journal which showed that 50 gm. of brandy causes a depreciation in the marksmanship of expert shots of 30 per cent in rapid firing and 50 per cent in slow firing. What sense is there in training men to become efficient and then sit idly by and let the hard-won efficiency be taken away by alcohol? We know that wars heretofore have resulted in tremendous increase in venereal diseases, not only in the military but also in the civil population. Students of history tell us that such increase may be sufficient to place the stamp of physical deterioration on entire nations. To ask another question—what sense is there in laboriously selecting and training the flower of our young manhood to make soldiers, sailors, marines, and then do nothing decisive to save them from the far-reaching disasters to themselves and others of venereal disease?

The fate of the movement to secure nation-wide war prohibition through legislative action and in other ways is uncertain. As the first duty of the medical profession is to prevent disease and loss of human efficiency, we must do all in our power to favor such movements. In the meanwhile no time should be lost in putting into effect the excellent recommendations of the General Medical Board to the Council of National Defense that every military command be surrounded by a protected zone in which prostitution and the sale of alcoholic drinks shall be prohibited, and that special efforts be directed toward furnishing the men with suitable opportunities for wholesome recreation.

PRESS OF DRY STATES ENTHUSIASTIC FOR PROHIBITION

(Continued from Page Four)

monthly average of arrests in Richmond was 1,200, and the police records this year show only half that number for the same month, the reduction being mainly in the "drunks and disorderlies." Hoboes are avoiding the state, and while forty-four applications for free beds were recorded by the police for New Year's Day, 1916, just four asked to be accommodated on the same day in 1917. "In place of saloons have come candy shops, grocery stores, delicatessen shops—in short, a proportion of all the varied retail industries that find support in any community in the trading centers. . . . Of course, the city's income has been curtailed by reason of the loss of revenue in licenses, but with the money formerly wasted on liquor now being distributed among the merchants the increased business can stand the slight raise in the tax rate."

Arkansas

In Arkansas we hear from the Fort Smith Times-Record that prohibition has been the best moral and economic investment the state has had in years. There is more general prosperity now, more hopefulness, more cheerfulness than ever before known, and this journal is of the opinion that Arkansas has just one further duty to perform, which is to help make the nation dry. "What has proved so good for us, what has lessened our crime and increased our prosperity," The Times-Record claims, "belongs to the nation as well as to us, and we should help push it along." The Little Rock Arkansas Gazette thinks there can be no doubt that prohibition in Arkansas is generally conceded to have brought many benefits.

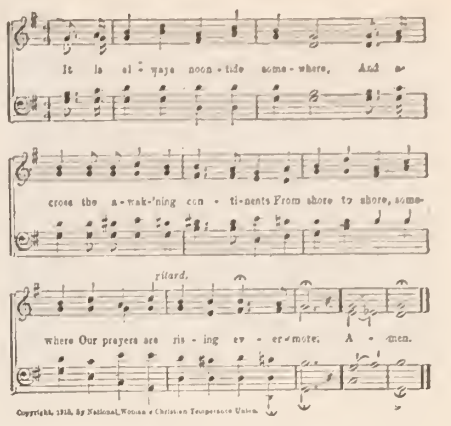
Colorado

In Colorado we hear from the Pueblo Chieftain that prohibition is not a live issue in that state, because, as with woman suffrage, it has been settled permanently, and the number of persons who desire a reopening of the discussion is politically inconsiderable. No one who is honest and intelligent can deny that prohibition has been a success in Colorado, this journal goes on to say, and mainly for two reasons. First, the state has a good law, and, secondly, the law has been well enforced.

Iowa

The Des Moines Register-Tribune claims that the steady progress of anti-liquor legislation in a state where there is relatively a large foreign-born population is a sufficient answer to any question as to the success of prohibition there. The saloon and liquor interests lost ground continuously and "but little distinction is drawn now between laws to drive the saloon out and laws to drive liquor out," and this journal predicts that in the very near future it will be impossible to secure liquor for use as a beverage. The Des Moines Capital also believes that Iowa is satisfied with prohibition and that it will never return to licensed saloons.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



AT THE NOONTIDE HOUR

At the sacred noontide hour let the white ribboners of the land unite in prayer daily for our country and all other countries, that all may come to see the true Christian and humanitarian point of view in this world crisis; for the protection of "our boys" from the physical and moral deterioration from drink and vice that follow in the wake of war; for our President and his advisers that divine wisdom may rule every decision, that lasting peace may speedily come and the will of the Father of all peoples be done throughout the earth.

WHAT MAKES A NATION GREAT?

Not serried ranks with flags unfurled,
Nor armored ships that gird the world,
Not hoarded wealth nor busy mills,
Not cattle on a thousand hills,
Not sages wise, nor schools, nor laws,
Not boasted deeds in freedom's cause—
All these may be and yet the state
In the eye of God be far from great.

That land is great which knows the Lord,
Whose songs are guided by His word;
Where justice rules 'twixt man and man,
Where love controls in act and plan,
Where breathing in his native air
Each soul finds joy in praise and prayer—
Thus may our country, good and great,
Be God's delight—man's best estate.

—Alexander Blackburn

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do You Know the Answers to These Questions? They May Be Found in THE UNION SIGNAL of June 14

Ten questions, the answers to which will be found in the preceding number of THE UNION SIGNAL, will appear each week. The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. Give substance of a pronouncement against the use of alcohol made within the past two weeks by a leading national medical society.

2. How does the opinion of Attorney General Gregory, recently given, affect the "personal liberty" of all men wearing the United States uniform?

3. Suggest three arguments that throw light on the beer fallacy.

4. In how many states do the women have some form of suffrage?

5. Name these states.

6. How many voting women are there in the United States?

7. How is the war likely to affect the status of woman suffrage?

8. What argument does Dr. Harvey Wiley advance in favor of war prohibition?

9. Why is the recent anti-alcohol movement at Yale University of great significance?

10. What line of action is urged by the National W. C. T. U. Legislative superintendent in order to secure national prohibition as a war measure?

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

July 4—National Independence Day—Americanization Day.
July 21—Loyal Temperance Legion Day—Birthday of Anna A. Gordon.
July 31—White Ribbon Missionary Day—Birthday of Mary Allen West.

SUPERINTENDENTS

EVANGELISTIC DEPARTMENT

MARY E. KUHL

It is of supreme moment at this time that every white ribboner be in earnest prayer for the passage of the wartime prohibition measure now pending in our national Congress. Local, state and National evangelists, five hundred strong, have entered into a special prayer covenant for this purpose, the hour appointed for prayer being nine o'clock each morning. Great pressure can be brought to bear upon President Wilson and the national Congress if this prayer is supplemented by action. George Mueller once said, "Pray with all your might; then work with all your might." Prayer and work, coupled with an unwavering faith in God, will bring things to pass. This is the opportunity to show our faith by our works, and if the eye of faith is steadfastly fixed on Christ there can be no such word as fail, for He will keep His eye on the action of our national executive officials and Congressmen.

Prayer by way of the cross, prayer put into practice, prayer like a gatling gun, turned on tremendous difficulties, will clear the way and move the hearts of men to do the right.

Lord, teach us how to pray and help Thou our unbelief.

If China a few years ago called upon Christian America to pray for their nation in a time of deep crisis, how much more ought we to be in prayer for our own nation to cleanse itself of the wickedness of the liquor traffic as the first necessary step in the cruel war. Men ought always to pray and not to faint.

From June 21 until September 1 the address of your superintendent will be 710 S. Prairie St., Champaign, Ill.

SOCIAL MEETINGS AND RED LETTER DAYS

MARY DAVIS TOMLINSON

I am being asked by some women the questions, "How can we conduct social meetings?" "How many socials should we hold during the year?" "Which leaflets should we distribute?" I have endeavored in my leaflets to answer these and many other inquiries that may arise in the minds of the new local superintendents. My leaflets, "What? When? Who? Why?" "Do and Don't," "What a Superintendent Should Know" and "Hints and Helps," give the needful information.

I wonder if we women realize the opportunity that is ours during the war of utilizing this department for the good of the soldiers who are mobilizing near us? Invite these men to your homes, furnish music and recitations, provide simple refreshments and give them, upon leaving, an appropriate leaflet. The Young People's Branch can assist in many ways. The entertainment need not be limited to our own membership, for certainly the women in every community, if invited, will be glad to lend a hand.

Socials might be held once a week, to make and fill comfort bags, for thousands of them will be needed for the soldiers and sailors. One of the members might read articles from THE UNION SIGNAL, the state paper or from the valuable leaflet, "Achievements of the National W. C. T. U.," recently revised and published by the National W. C. T. U., Evanston, Illinois.

The Red Letter Days that come during the summer months can all be observed and the booklets concerning the loyal patriotic women whose birthdays are thus remembered might be read. The summer Red Letter Days are: July 21, the birthday of the National W. C. T. U. president, Anna A. Gordon; July 31, the birthday of Mary Allen West; August 3, the birthday of Lady Henry Somerset; August 28, the birthday of Lucy Webb Hayes; September 28, the birthday of Frances E. Willard.

May each one do her duty; "'Tis nobleness to serve."

212 E. 7th St., Plainfield, N. J.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. SARAH ROBERTS MORRIS, West New Brighton, N. Y. From the commencement of the W. C. T. U. movement Mrs. Morris has been one of the most earnest workers. She was a charter member of the first union organized in Trenton, N. J. Upon making her home on Staten Island she became a member of West New Brighton union, of which she was president for twenty-seven years. In 1894 she succeeded Mrs. Ella A. Boole as president of Richmond county and held the position continuously for twenty-one years, resigning last December on account of failing health. She was a life member of the state, the National, and World's W. C. T. U. She was unflinching in her devotion to the cause, was practical in her methods and had the privilege of seeing great things accomplished in the progress of the W. C. T. U. on Staten Island. On May 22, at the county convention, a memorial service was held, with Mrs. Boole in charge, and the next afternoon, at Trinity church, the beautiful W. C. T. U. ritual was used, in connection with the regular funeral service.

WILLARD ADDISON HODGE, a noted reform worker of Madison, Wis. Mr. Hodge, a namesake of Frances Willard, was born on a farm near Janesville adjoining the old Willard homestead. In his promotion the reform movement has lost an earnest worker.

MRS. CORA STEWART, Albany, Oregon, sister-in-law of Mrs. Henrietta Brown. Mrs. Stewart was a leader in church and temperance work, a devoted wife and mother, and will be greatly missed.

MRS. CERES O. STAHLEY, Forreston, Ill., for more than twenty-five years a member of the local union, having served nearly that length of time as president.

PORTRAIT OF SILENA MOORE HOLMAN GIVEN PLACE IN TENNESSEE'S HALL OF FAME

The unveiling of the magnificent oil portrait of Tennessee's "white ribbon magician of love," Silena Moore Holman, at the state capitol, May 10, was a beautiful service, and one worthy of the undaunted soul who for sixteen years splendidly led the W. C. T. U. hosts to victory after victory. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the state legislature, which through Mrs. Holman's influence had passed numerous prohibition and home protection laws, united to do her this honor. Hers is the second portrait of a woman to hang in the hall of fame and the first to be placed there authoritatively because of patriotic service rendered the state.

The state library could not accommodate the people present from every section of Tennessee. The chief feature of the beautiful program was an address delivered by ex-United States Senator W. R. Webb. Addresses were made by Senator Fleming, in behalf of the state legislature, and by Dr. Carre, president of the Anti-Saloon League. The state president, Mrs. Mary P. Bang, being unable to be present because of illness, the vice-president, Mrs. Minnie A. Welsh, presided. Mrs. Elizabeth D. Collins, state treasurer, reminded her hearers of Mrs. Holman's last message, "Tell the women to go forward in the work." Mrs. Grace William Robins gave the story of Mrs. Holman's life, as told to her by the great leader not long before her translation. The beautiful portrait, painted by Mrs. Willie Betty Newman of Nashville, was unveiled by Holman and John D. Marsh, handsome little grandsons of Mrs. Holman. Governor Rye accepted the gift for the state, and Miss Skeffington for the library. Among other things, the governor said: "It is proper for the state to place it among this galaxy of statesmen, warriors and jurists. Has she not led the greatest army that ever marched to battle in civilization? Has she not given a complete system of laws for the establishment of temperance? She has stormed the citadel of King Alcohol and conquered it. I accept this gift in the name of all the people of Tennessee, but especially in the name of the mothers."

The service closed with a touching prayer by Mrs. Estelle Knox, state corresponding secretary.

HANDWRITING ON THE WALL!

The stock of the Distilleries Securities Corporation (sometimes called the "Whisky Trust") is selling as low as $14 a share (par is $100), though the stock has been declaring dividends of six per cent and the figures for the last fiscal year indicate earnings by the corporation of 10.3 per cent! Its five per cent bonds are selling at a little over 63.—Current Opinion for June.

ENFORCING THE LAW

U. S. REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM C. HOUSTON of Tennessee

The opponents of prohibition measures insist that laws to prevent the sale and use of liquor cannot be enforced. This argument is as applicable to every statute for the preservation of law and order and for the protection of mankind.

Right here in the capital of the nation it is impossible to enforce laws against robbery and highway assaults so as to entirely prevent them, as is shown by their frequent occurrence; yet I take it that no man for this reason would favor an abrogation of the laws against robbery and larceny. When the American people shall surrender to this doctrine that a wholesome law cannot be enforced, they are ready to surrender their manhood as a civilized and progressive nation. The spirit that supported and sustained our ancestors in carving out this republic, in establishing law and authority over all opposition, is abandoned when we, as a people, say we cannot enforce a law that the enlightened conscience of the nation says is right.

The laws on this subject have been and will be evaded and circumvented, as all laws are to some extent, but every man of common sense knows, that the farther away liquor is put from a man or a community and the more difficult it is made to get it, the less of it will be used by that man or that community. No argument can refute that statement. I believe that the American people can enforce any law if they are alive to its importance and realize that it is best for the welfare and happiness of humanity. When we realize, as we are doing more and more, that "we are our brother's keeper" and that men should "as brothers be o'er all the world," we can enforce a prohibition law or any other law.

MICHIGAN STATE CONVENTION JUBILANT OVER PROHIBITION VICTORIES AND AFLAME WITH PATRIOTIC ZEAL

Special Correspondence

The two characteristic features of Michigan's forty-third annual state convention, held in Kalamazoo, May 29-June 1, inclusive, were jubilation over the victories of 1916 and 1917 and loyalty to our country through patriotic service. A large delegation from all over the state was present and reports were filled to overflowing with data relative to the great amount of work accomplished.

The state organization will ask Governor Sleeper to call an extra session of the legislature to pass a prohibition law as a war measure, and it will also appeal to President Wilson for national prohibition at this crucial time.

Aside from the regulation state work for the coming year, including zealous work for suffrage, extensive plans will be published in The Michigan Union and THE UNION SIGNAL for Michigan's work for national defense.

Mrs. E. L. Calkins, state president, having been appointed head of the department of Protection of Military Camps in the Michigan division of the Women's Committee of the Council for National Defense, with her assistant, the state vice-president, Mrs. Stella B. Roben, will formulate plans whereby every union in the state will contribute its efforts to this important work.

Already the birthday of Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National W. C. T. U., has been named as Motor Ambulance Day by this state, and it will be celebrated by the raising of funds which shall be used to help provide and maintain a National W. C. T. U. ambulance.

Twelve thousand dollars for Liberty Bonds was subscribed in about ten minutes.

Plans for making for our soldier boys hospital supplies, housewives and comfort bags, the latter to contain a Testament, pledge card and a motherly letter, were also adopted.

A beautiful pledge card containing a picture of the flag in colors, with the flag pledge, was presented to the delegates by the entertaining district and all were urged to sell these cards to their unions for patriotic uses. Accordingly, 10,000 were ordered for this purpose.

Among the speakers were Mrs. Ella A. Boole of New York, vice-president-at-large of the National W. C. T. U., who emphasized the prospects of a dry nation as a war measure and cited the fact that Congress has already passed a law that no liquor can be served to our soldiers in uniform, and that the defenders of our nation are required to wear their Army dress at all times, and Mrs. Caroline Bartlett Crane of Kalamazoo, chairman Michigan division of the Women's Committee of the Council for National Defense, who spoke on the work of the Red Cross.

Mrs. Nellie Sawyer Clark of Kalamazoo gave an address on suffrage. The delegates were twice entertained at tea at Suffrage headquarters. Mrs. Clark was assisted by Mrs. F. B. Perkins of Ann Arbor.

Dr. Kellogg of Battle Creek Sanatarium gave a very forceful talk on foods.

The officers were all re-elected, Mrs. E. L. Calkins, president; Mrs. Stella B. Roben, vice-president-at-large; Mrs. Norma F. Mudge, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Myrta Lockwood, recording secretary; and Mrs. Matie W. Jones, treasurer.

CONVERTED BEER KEGS

If ever beer kegs were treated to a dose of real surprise it has been since Colorado went dry. Presto, change! they have become bee hives. They still retain the "sting," but it isn't of the "variety" administered in former days by the enemy of all mankind. The conversion of disreputable ex-beer kegs into substantial bee hives is an experiment worthy of notice, and one which is actually being tried, as the picture shown above proves.

TRANSFORMED BREWERIES

Former breweries in prohibition states, with a comparatively small amount of alteration, are being found suitable for a wide variety of uses. Apple juice, logan berry juice and soft drinks are being manufactured. Ice cream factories, ice factories, cold storage, packing plants, canning factories, bottling works, dairies, malted milk and yeast plants are proving worthy successors of the breweries. One brewery has been turned into a church, another into a hospital; still another is a moving picture studio. A Bible house is being conducted in a former saloon. In Lansing, Mich., one brewery is making automobile parts. The Benwood (W. Va.) brewery is now a chemical and soap plant.

One of the encouraging facts about the production now going on in these plants is that employment is provided for greatly increased numbers of workmen. The Pacific Coast brewery, Portland, now a shoe factory, employs 2,500 persons, as against 125 when beer was manufactured. The Rainier brewery in the same city, since becoming a tannery, employs 1,600 in comparison with 156, the total number needed for the brewing industry. The Portland Brewing company, employing 100 men, is now a furniture factory with 500 employes.

"MOTHER COOKED" MEALS FOR NEW JERSEY SOLDIER BOYS

Plans Under Way for Caring for Thousands Who Are to Be Stationed in New Jersey Mobilization Camps

JENNIE W. PATTERSON, Superintendent of the New Jersey Department of Work Among Soldiers and Sailors

The New Jersey white ribboners are very generally responding to the patriotic call to "do their bit" for their country. With one of the government training camps for boys, where 33,000 will probably be mobilized, located in one county, a camp for Naval Reserves and Coast Defense guards in another, and the signal corps in still another, it will be no small task to look after the boys encamped in New Jersey.

The department of Work among Soldiers and Sailors expects to rise fully to the opportunity. It is assured of the active co-operation of the four state officers and will especially claim the National superintendent, Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, who makes her residence in the state a part of the year.

Work has been begun on comfort bags, to be made and filled after the W. C. T. U. plan (which was followed in the making of those presented to the officers and men of the battleship "New Jersey") and it is the aim to provide every soldier in a New Jersey camp with a bag.

The dwindling ranks of our brave veterans also deserve attention and these heroes of the sixties were especially remembered on their red letter day, May 30.

Many of the unions, especially the larger ones, are forming themselves into units and the regular weekly or semi-weekly meetings find the members busily sewing and knitting articles made after the Red Cross dimensions and patterns, and, when finished, given to it for distribution. "No id'e fingers" is our slogan and nearly everyone has pick-up work for home as well as for the meetings. White ribboners are placing the Red Cross button beside their white ribbon badge and may be found among other members of that organization making the bandages and surgical dressings so sorely needed.

Individual work has been done for the soldiers detailed for guard duty in many of our towns. For example, one union provides a rest room for the boys and each day sends them a hot "mother-cooked" meal. Others send boxes of home delicacies, invite the lads to social affairs and in every way try to add a touch of mother love to their lives.

Some of our unions took part in registration day parades and exercises. Banners making strong pleas for the conservation by war prohibition of grain and of our boys and girls told their story from appropriately decorated autos.

Great impetus has been given the movement for gardens in vacant lots and backyards, but the W. C. T. U. can claim the credit for this in part only. Much is due the governor's proclamation and the activities of scout masters and others.

"THE GREATEST OF THESE IS LOVE"

NORMAN W. TWIDDY

A white expanse of four walls, relieved only by the inevitable thermometer; a strange blending of the perfume of roses with the pungent odor of iodoform; a nurse in white starched uniform preparing the chart for an exacting house surgeon—these comprised the everyday world of the hospital chaplain. But there was something else; something unusually pathetic in that crumpled masculine figure in the chair by the bedside, head bowed forward in his hands, the black hair shot with grey brushing the whiteness of the pillow.

The smooth patches of skin, the arched lips, and the tip-tilted nose defied the tyranny of two broad bandages and betrayed the sex of the still form upon the bed.

The nurse touched the man on the shoulder. "The chaplain is here, Mr. Browne," she said.

Gradually his head raised and then, as if drawn by a magnet, the entire body turned. The eyes, glassy at first, took on a new vitality as they rested on the black broadcloth under the white rim of the visitor's collar.

"Chaplain,"—in a tone of suppressed eagerness, "I am glad you have come. I sent for you—they told you?"

The Reverend Warren Hampton smiled. It was the same slow, soothing smile which always came as a benediction whether in the private room or the free ward.

"Yes, I received your request. I am here to do anything in my power."

A certain imperiousness in the firmly hewn jaw of the man to whom he spoke was softened by the sorrow in two haggard, grey-blue eyes and a grief-sagged mouth. The chaplain was, by practice, a diagnostician of men; he understood the reason for the averted profile, the diamond-ringed finger fumbling with the gold watch chain. Here was a man of breeding accustomed to having his own way—a law unto himself—an autocrat. That tightening jaw showed the progress of the battle of inclination against tradition—against the traditions of a caste which walls its emotions behind barriers of reserve.

With a nurse's instinct for the apropos, that busy little person, with blond head half hidden under professional linen cap, disappeared into the corridor, leaving the men alone with the motionless figure, whose faint breathing was the only indication that an ember of life still glowed.

At the click of the closing door the man started as if roughly awakened.

"Chaplain, pardon my rudeness." His voice was the modulated voice of the gentleman. "I was—thinking."

"I understand—that is my profession, to understand people. A minister's greatest privilege is service. Tell me—it may help."

The simple words are the ones which oftentimes level the highest barriers.

The man paced to the window and stood for a moment looking across the city of numberless roofs and factory chimneys belching their smoke in the face of heaven, to the commerce-dotted waters of the unruffled bay.

"I registered here as Maxwell Browne. With my last ounce of self-respect I lied. I shrank from publicity as from a leper." His eyes fastened reassuringly on the gold cross gleaming from the chaplain's waistcoat. "I am Maxwell Barker, of Barker & Manering, 50 Wall Street."

It was the name of the head of one of the strongest brokerage firms in the street—the man whom the Wall Street Journal called the greatest single power in the stock exchange! Hampton swallowed hard, his jaw tightened. That name represented more than a moneymaster to him. What dormant recollections flashed into being at its mention!

"And she?" he stammered through lips strangely dry.

"My wife."

The chaplain wondered whether he altogether imagined the reverential tone. He strove to speak; he could not. His staring eyes focused on the bandaged face on the pillow. He heard Barker's voice as if the words were being shouted through a hurricane.

"Five days she has lain silent,—not knowing my face, not hearing my voice—five days of racking brain, of burning eyes and a nameless fear. I have lived fifty years in these five days." Barker, hands clenching and unclenching behind his broad back, paced again to the window. "My ambition for power commenced when I ruled an indulgent household from my cradle." A flickering, soulless smile trembled on his lips. "I was going to play the game fair—oh, yes—but I had resolved to win. My whole life has been built on a desire for possession, fame, honor—to have—and to hold. My unquenchable craving has been for power."

Hampton nodded. His eyes left the strongly chiselled countenance of the speaker and traveled uncontrollably, it seemed, to the pathetic, mummy-like face and the snow-white arm outside the coverlet.

"And you have attained all you dreamed of?" The chaplain's glance was averted.

Maxwell Barker toyed with his watch chain. "All the material things, yes, but I would give them all to undo two maddening hours—to wake and find them only a horrible phantom. To think that when she sees me again—if she ever does—she will remember—everything—everything!"

He struggled for control; the firm features twitched with a pain not physical; the inflexible eyes narrowed.

Hampton stepped closer. He laid a hand across the bowed shoulders and whispered softly, "There is One who can help you—God."

"God," repeated Barker, "God. Yes—I have needed Him in these five days. I wanted wealth—I got it. I wanted power—I got it. I wanted love,"—the voice hesitated and shook a trifle—"I got it. I wanted God—but I did not find Him until now—in you."

The chaplain's hand dropped from the man's shoulder; his eyes studied the brownish grain in the hardwood floor.

"Chaplain, have you ever loved—loved so that a day's separation was an eternity?"

Hampton still studied the floor pattern; he bit his lower lip. "Yes, once," never raising his eyes from the graining, "but I—we—never married."

"And the girl—did she make you sort of the Alpha and Omega of her devotion?" Barker's jaw lumped and receded suspiciously.

"For a time and then—then there was another man. He had everything I had not—promising future, wealth and a niche in what is called society."

Hampton examined the gold cross on his waistcoat. He listened curiously to his own quick intakes of breath and wondered vaguely why the perfume of those American Beauty roses on the dresser should span a chasm of years. Then it came to his groping brain; the little girl of twenty-one at her birthday dance, all white frills and ruffles, wearing the roses—the roses he had given her—her dark brown eyes shining like twin June stars, as happy as when she had received her first doll.

"Then you will be able to appreciate my story." Barker recalled the chaplain's vagrant thoughts. "I was the guest at a dinner given by a few club friends at the Ritz. There were cocktails and champagne and, after the courses, more buckets of cracked ice with wine and champagne." He hesitated, brushing a hand through his hair as if to erase the recollection.

"I always drank—socially I called it—but then I had what I conceitedly called will-power. I could stop when I chose—so I thought.

"I talked—I babbled like a dolt—I, Maxwell Barker. My head swam, I heard the laughter and the clink of glasses; I suppose I was laughing, too. I was one of the prattling fools. The only difference between me and the bum lying in a Bowery gutter was a million dollars and a full-dress suit."

Barker dropped into his chair by the bedside, his forehead wrinkled, staring into space. The chaplain stood with his back to the window, silent. The man continued:

"I have a vague recollection of ordering up more drinks, of tipping the man in the cloak-room, then saying goodnight to the boys and murmuring my thanks. The attendant at the entrance knew me. My car was waiting at the curb on Madison avenue.

"I noticed the anxious look of my towheaded chauffeur as he held open the door. A soft hand touched mine and then I understood." Barker's left hand tightened on his knee. "'I thought I would come with Meyer and surprise you,' my wife said. I answered something foolish, but all the while I was seeing those sad, frightened brown eyes with what little remaining sense I had. My mind no longer controlled my tongue or my actions; I was drunk to the silly stage." His teeth ground in self-scorn.

"We turned into Riverside Drive—I knew where we were by the chug of some belated yacht trying to find its moorings. I could see the yellow lights shimmering in the blackness of the river. A mad, irresistible impulse to drive seized me. In spite of my wife's pleading and her two white arms about my neck—" again he hesitated; his eyes closed.

The chaplain gazed once more toward the brown graining of the floor; his nostrils were filled with the scent of roses.

"I climbed out and into the chauffeur's seat. 'I am going to drive,' I told him. He protested—a new thing for Meyer, he knows only the word obedience, but, doglike, he yielded to his master. I took the wheel. I stormed at Meyer for trying to guide my arm, I shook him off and then—" Barker's head rested in his hands, "then I threw in high and ran head-on into a truck loaded with paving stones. By some strange miracle I was thrown from my seat into the roadway. I landed in a sprawling heap, stunned but unhurt! I scrambled, or rather jumped to my feet. I was sober then! Two of the men from the truck were carrying

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

FACTS THAT MUST BE FACED NOW OR LATER

1. The British drink trade has destroyed during the war sufficient food to have supplied the entire British army during that time.

2. If Great Britain had prohibited drink in August, 1914, she would today have had a surplus of food equal to three months' supply, instead of being faced by near-famine.

3. The British drink trade has during the war wasted shipping space equivalent to one trip of 5,400,000 tons.

4. The British drink trade has during the war wasted labor equivalent to the idleness for 100 days of the entire United Kingdom.

5. The British drink trade has during the war resulted in a money waste equivalent to the last gigantic British loan of $5,000,000,000.

Lost millions, lost food, lost labor, lost shipping space, lost men!

The vital question of the hour is: ARE WE GOING TO ALLOW DRINK TO DO THE SAME THING TO US?

—Methodist Episcopal Temperance Committee

THE FLAG GOES BY

Hats off!
Along the street there comes
A blare of bugles, a ruffle of drums,
A flash of color beneath the sky:
Hats off!
The flag is passing by!

Blue and crimson and white it shines,
Over the steel-tipped, ordered lines.
Hats off!
The colors before us fly;
But more than the flag is passing by.

Sea-fights and land-fights, grim and great,
Fought to make and to save the state:
Weary marches and sinking ships;
Cheers of victory on dying lips;

Days of plenty and years of peace;
March of strong land's swift increase;
Equal justice, right, and law,
Stately honor and reverent awe;

Sign of a nation, great and strong
To ward her people from foreign wrong:
Pride and glory and honor—all
Live in the colors to stand or fall.

Hats off!
Along the street there comes
A blare of bugles, a ruffle of drums;
And loyal hearts are beating high:
Hats off!
The flag is passing by!

—Henry Holcomb Bennett

AMERICA'S BIG MEN PRESENT UNANSWERABLE ARGUMENTS IN FAVOR OF PROHIBITION AS A WAR MEASURE

KANSAS INSISTS THAT ITS GRAIN SHALL BE USED FOR THE BENEFIT OF HUMANITY

GOV. ARTHUR CAPPER of Kansas

The people of Kansas who are straining every nerve to increase the food supply, are for their part demanding that the greatest national waste of all be eliminated at once, that President Wilson urge Congress as a war measure, to enact legislation prohibiting the use of food products in the manufacture of alcoholic liquor for beverage purposes, thus conserving the food supply of the country to the utmost. I have not only put that demand up to President Wilson and to Congress, but I have requested the forty-eight governors to join me in that appeal. Twenty-six governors already have assured me they will file in Washington a strong second to the motion made by Kansas.

VENEREAL DISEASES DEPENDENT UPON ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES

DR. HAVEN EMERSON, Health Commissioner of New York City

The greater part of the venereal diseases, syphilis and gonorrhœa, throughout the country would be prevented if the manufacture, importation and sale of alcoholic beverages were prohibited. Total abstinence is required in our Navy. The sale of alcoholic beverages is to be forbidden in and near all military camps. We can do no less than support the President by insisting upon national prohibition during the war and for at least one year thereafter.

TREASON TO PERMIT WASTE OF GRAIN FOR ALCOHOLIC LIQUORS

UPTON SINCLAIR

The Constitution defines treason as giving aid and comfort to the enemy. It seems to me that this definition should include legislators who, with starvation threatening our allies, would vote to permit grain to be wasted in alcoholic beverages.

PREVENT A FAMINE BEFORE IT OCCURS

JOHN. F. CUNNEEN

Within a year's time there may be more people needing grain in the United States than there were in Ireland in 1847. We should not wait until great numbers of people are dying of starvation before the manufacture of grain into poison is stopped. Prohibition put into effect at once will mean the saving of many lives and prevent much suffering and help greatly our country to triumph in its fight for the right.

LOVE OF COUNTRY ABOVE LOVE OF ALCOHOL

PROF. IRVING FISHER of Yale University

Unless the war ends soon we shall be driven with the other nations to prohibition. We shall be wise if we adopt it before we have food riots on our hands. There is absolutely no valid argument against it, so far as I can see. It is simple common sense, obvious war economy, the logic of events. The great majority of the people see it already. It is a pleasure to note that liquor dealers in Cleveland and Chicago have voted to stand by their country if their country demands prohibition. Users of alcoholic beverages can do no less. The nation demands that they put love of country above love of whisky.

"THE GREATEST OF THESE IS LOVE"

(Continued from Page Twelve)

the limp Meyer to the sidewalk, the third was running, evidently to call an ambulance. The machine lay like a junk pile in the street. Somewhere in that mass—somewhere beneath it—! I called madly for help. My brain was on fire, but I knew—I remembered. We pulled her—Helen—my wife, from the wrecked tonneau. I knelt at her side, I called to her; she could not answer. Two red scars showed across her death-like face—"

In the silence the only sounds were the measured breathing of the unconscious woman and the quicker, sharper breathing of the two men. Something greater than sympathy was holding the Reverend Warren Hampton.

"The ambulance came," proceeded Barker with audible effort, "skull fracture—intense depression of bone-fragment,—she would live if no complications set in after the operation, the surgeon told me. Meyer's scalp was ripped and his left arm broken. My mentality seemed to snap. One thing I saw clearly—two white arms about my neck imploring. . . . Since then I have not felt them—she has not spoken—five days—five days of hell!"

Only the black hair, streaked with iron-grey, showed; the wide shoulders lifted convulsively; the broad forehead and aristocratic features were buried in two strong hands. The chaplain had seen the small breeze sown to reap the whirlwind many times before. He understood. The harvest was always a bitter one. The love of wife and the love of God had not really crystallized until then.

"Sometimes it is only through our tears that we earn the right to smile." The clergyman spoke softly, one hand on the shoulder of the man while in his nostrils still lingered the perfume of roses. "I often think that only in sorrow do we really meet our God."

"If He would only grant that she might forget—" came the muffled voice, "forget that half-hour—oh, if only He would blot it out. But, no! If she lives she must remember!"

The chaplain bent over him. "Possibly not," he said.

The door opened quietly and the nurse entered. Hampton did not hear the click of the lock. He was staring at a small white hand opening and closing on the counterpane. The bandaged head moved slowly from side to side. The nurse crossed quickly to the bed.

"Warry, dear—" The patient was speaking slowly, dreamily. Hampton stood transfixed; Barker fell to his knees at the bedside.

"Unconscious cerebration—the patient is passing from the coma," remarked the nurse, but it is doubtful if either man heard her.

"Warry, dear," again came those spirit-like tones, "how you must detest me. I was weak—I could not wait for you. I could never be a minister's wife; I am too selfish, too fond of the things of this world; I built on material happiness. Warry, I love you, but—" The voice trailed into silence.

Maxwell Barker turned blankly toward the straight, tall form of the chaplain. Hampton's eyes were strangely moist and they were riveted on the vase of roses on the dresser.

The nurse gently raised her patient's head from the pillow. The long black lashes crept slowly away from the chalky skin and two dark brown depths opened in an empty stare.

Barker took one slender hand in his, but his wife was looking past him toward the figure in black broadcloth.

Hampton roused himself from an almost forgotten land at that glance. The backs of Maxwell Barker and the nurse were toward him. He had caught a world of conflicting meanings in that one brief, questioning look; his name, he imagined, was already rushing to her lips. One long finger went quickly to his own lips, his head shook slowly, even sadly, and then inclined toward the husband kneeling by the bedside. The chaplain's eyes were unutterably sad, but a faint gleam of something not akin to sorrow was creeping into them.

Barker's eyes raised to his wife's face. "Helen, do you—do you remember?" he whispered brokenly.

Hampton stepped quickly forward until he could again see those brown, wondering eyes. Emphatically he shook his head; his mouth formed the word, no. After all, a minister's greatest joy should be in service.

The seconds must have seemed centuries to the waiting man at the bedside. At length the woman spoke. "Remember? I only remember that I love you, and that you love me—my husband," she said softly.

"Thank God—thank God." Barker's words were so low as to be almost inaudible.

The blonde-haired nurse turned toward the chaplain, but the Reverend Warren Hampton was already disappearing into the corridor, away from the roses—and memories.

Your Flag and My Flag

"Your flag and my flag,
And how it flies today
In your land and my land
And half a world away!"

A hand-colored post-card with poem by Wilbur D. Nesbit.
Price, 5 cents each; 50 cents per dozen.

A Motto Card with same poem, also hand-colored, suitable for framing. Size 11x14. Price, 30 cents.

FLAGS FOR DECORATION
Printed Muslin, mounted.
2½ in. x 4 in., 60 cents per gross.
3½ in. x 6 in., 80 cents per gross.
20 in. x 36 in., 15 cents each.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

FOR
Soldiers and Sailors

Directions for Comfort Bags. Each, 2 cents; 50, 15 cents; 100, 25 cents.

TO PLACE IN COMFORT BAGS OR FOR DISTRIBUTION
Songsters. Each, 7 cents.
Pledge Card, with stub and bearing a profile of Frances E. Willard. Each, 2 cents; 50, 25 cents; 100, 40 cents.
Testament and Psalms, 12 cents.
Testament, 10 cents.
Gospels, Matthew, Mark, Luke or John. Each, 3 cents.

LEAFLETS
Protecting the Home Folks (a warning against vice). Each, 2 cents; 50, 25 cents; 100, 40 cents.
An Example of Law Enforcement.
Stop Letting Drink Alone.
The Grain Savers' League.
Different and Yet the Same.
As Others Heard Him.
The Children Who Followed My Example.
Price, per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

"SONGS AND SAYINGS" is a rare book of thrilling reading and of soul-moving songs. It contains "Jim and Me," "A Saloonless Nation 1920," and other very fine songs. You need it, your W. C. T. U. needs it, your prohibition campaign is not complete without a supply of it. Price, 25c, 5 copies for $1. Order today of Rev. L. L. Pickett, Wilmore, Ky.

$2.50 PER DAY SALARY PAID ONE PERSON in each town to distribute FREE circulars, and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring. Non-alcoholic. Big demand, steadily increasing. J. S. ZIEALER CO., 7G, E. Harrison St., Chicago

PATRIOTIC PROGRAM OF THE VIRGINIA W. C. T. U.

MRS. GERTRUDE B. BOSS, Editor Virginia Call

Ever foremost in the reponse to patriotism's call, Virginia is in her accustomed place in this trying time when the world war demands her best. Virginia women stood at the polls, on June 5, from sunrise to sunset, and ushered her sons to the registration booths, adding a word of cheer here and admiration there to those offering their lives, as it were a living sacrifice to the cause of suffering humanity. Literature was distributed, prayers silently sent heavenward as a strip of khaki was tied around the arms of the enlisted men, or cards pinned on the lapel of their coats bearing these words, "We've done our bit, now do yours. Buy a Liberty Bond." These same women have mailed thousands of cards to President Wilson pleading for the safeguarding of the soldiers. Telegrams innumerable urging prohibition as a war measure have been dispatched to Congress and President Wilson.

Intensive farming is fostered in both city and country, and a wide publicity campaign for this purpose has been inaugurated. One large daily carries columns each week, while many weeklies publish encouraging articles by white ribboners, setting forth the needs of the hour. Some cities are employing a garden inspector who works with the Boy Scouts, L. T. L.'s, Sunday school classes, etc. In one city a speaker is sent to every woman's club, explaining the plan of co-operation in the conservation of food, asking volunteers to offer the use of their kitchens for canning demonstrations by a representative of the county canning club, the ladies attending to give in turn similar neighborhood demonstrations.

Cans have been bought with money loaned for the purpose and will be distributed from the War Service Bureau's headquarters at cost, plus expense of handling, each woman's club doing the work a week at a time.

Unions throughout the state are endorsing John Garland Pollard for governor, recognizing in him the great friend of the prohibition movement, while in one municipal election the union, en masse, went on record for a city treasurer who is in sympathy with clean tax records, on which the vote must depend. In still another town the W. C. T. U. has lined up for a state superintendent of schools who will annul the certificate of any teacher of a public school addicted to the drug or drink habit.

In Roanoke, where the second Virginia regiment has headquarters and where three recruiting stations are maintained for southwest Virginia, the superintendent of Work among Soldiers and Sailors has invited the soldiers to attend the Sunday school. The writer has visited the camp and been cordially welcomed. All movies are free to the soldiers, the Y. M. C. A. gives them welcome, and the most exclusive social circles invite them to high class entertainments.

The state mobilization camp is at Petersburg, and a large local and county organization is doing a great work there. The state superintendent of Work among Soldiers and Sailors is at Fort Monroe, where she works personally among the thousands at the forts and in training camps along the coast. The Virginia Call in its next issue will carry into 2,000 homes the "Suggestions for War Time Work" given in THE UNION SIGNAL.

In one city alone there were 300 essays written in the spring essay contest. Thus in the work of the hour, the need of which is so pressing, we are not letting up on that line of the work which makes for a better future generation.

Sanitary Drinking Fountains

Also Drinking Fountains for Man and Beast.

Special prices to W. C. T. U. and all Charitable Societies.

This Fountain was erected by the W. C. T. U. of Luray, Va.

Write for Catalogue

J. W. Fiske Iron Works
56 & 58 Park Place
NEW YORK

HELPS
for those engaged in the
Americanization of Foreign-Speaking People

Americanization of Immigrant Women
Price per 50, 50 cents; per 100, 90 cents.
Citizens in the Making
Price per 50, 40 cents; per 100, 75 cents.
Americanizing the Foreigner
Price per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents.

FOR DISTRIBUTION
a large variety of leaflets has been prepared in the following languages:

Arabic	German	Portuguese
Bohemian	Holland	Roumanian
Chinese	Hebrew	Russian
Croatian	Hungarian	Slovac
Danish	Italian	Spanish
Finnish	Norwegian	Swedish
French	Polish

Price per 100, 30, 25, 20 and 15 cents

POSTCARDS
Of Interest to Wage Earners
What Every Merchant Knows
Prosperity Statistics
Of Interest to Bankers
Of Interest to Taxpayers

German	Norwegian	Spanish
Italian	Polish	Swedish

Price per 50, 60 cents; per 100, $1.00
Send for catalogue

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.
Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
118-120 Fifth Ave., New York
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works
Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

EFFORTS OF LIQUOR MEN FOR REFERENDUM ON NORTH DAKOTA SUFFRAGE MEASURE FAIL

White Ribboners Busily Engaged in Making Red Cross Supplies

BARBARA H. WYLIE, Corresponding Secretary North Dakota W. C. T. U.

North Dakota white ribboners and other friends of suffrage are rejoicing in the failure of petitions circulated for a referendum on the bill for presidential and municipal suffrage, passed by the legislature last winter, and to become effective July 1.

Mrs. Harriett D. Hall of Illinois, National organizer and a favorite in North Dakota, is filling a month's engagement in the southern part of the state.

Mrs. Lillie B. Bowers, the faithful state worker, has met with considerable success in organizing local unions and L. T. L.'s. Mrs. Bowers is the author of the new "Opening Service for Local Unions," also of a dainty white-covered gift book, "The Golden Age of Girlhood."

District conventions, which are being quite generally held, are marked by good attendance and enthusiasm.

W. C. T. U. institutes will be held, as usual, at Chautauqua assemblies. The state convention meets at Valley City September 21-24.

Under Mrs. O. L. Sateren of Grand Forks, state superintendent of the department of Work among Soldiers and Sailors, the women all over the state are busy "doing their bit," working under our own organization and in co-operation with the Red Cross Association.

The University Y. P. B. recently gave a luncheon at the noon hour, at which the state corresponding secretary, Mrs. Barbara H. Wylie, was the guest of honor and made an address. The annual election of officers followed.

Although 150 young men from the University have responded to the country's call for service and every part of the regular work has suffered, the interest shown by the members of the Y. P. B. is encouraging. The essay contest has been held and the anti-narcotic lectures, by Dr. Gillette, have been well attended. Mrs. Alice V. Hull is employed by the state as Y. P. B. supervisor.

Four Temperance Lectures

Illustrated by Stereopticon Slides

A delightful entertainment easily planned for afternoon or evening by the use of one of these lectures.

John Barleycorn.
Thirty slides. Price.....$15.00

The Fight of Science Against Alcohol and Illustrated Story of "Two." Fifty-one slides. Price..$20.00

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union in Song and Story.
Fifty-three slides. Price.....$20.00

The World on the Water Wagon.
Fifty-three slides. Price.....$20.00

These slides are carefully packed and shipped at our risk, carriage prepaid.

Special rental schedule furnished upon application.

A carefully prepared lecture is sent with each set of slides.

N. B. We have on hand a limited number of duplicate slides which would be a valuable addition to any collection. These may be had at the nominal price of 20 cents each. A list of titles will be gladly submitted.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Become the woman you wish to be

REGAIN your health, poise and figure. I can help you. I know I can. Not one drop of medicine.

My way is the natural way—a scientific system, combining exercise, bath, diet, sleep and deep breathing.

In a few short weeks, thousands of my pupils have surprised their families

80,000 Women Are My Friends

I have won their friendship and respect because I have made them well, taught them how to keep well, reduced and increased their weight, given them perfect figures—all in the privacy of their rooms—and I have kept their confidence. May I help you?

Physicians approve my work; their wives and daughters are my pupils. Medical magazines advertise my work.

These facts are cited modestly—with only a desire to prove that I can and will do all I promise. Remember,

You Can Be So Well! You Can Weigh What You Should!

It is easy to be free from nagging ailments. Even the most chronic afflictions, in nine cases out of ten, are vastly benefited by my help.

You thoroughly enjoy my simple directions and you feel so satisfied with yourself.

Write to me! Ask for my Booklet No. 24—sent you without charge. Let me tell you all about my wonderful experience! Then you will understand the great work I am doing for womankind and how I can help you

If you have any of the following derangements, mark an X after it and send to me:

Excess flesh in any part of body	Lack of Reserve
Thin Bust, Chest, Neck or Arms	Nervousness
Round Shoulders	Irritability
Incorrect Standing	Constipation
Incorrect Walking	Indigestion
Poor Complexion	Dizziness
Poor Circulation	Weakness
Lame Back	Rheumatism
Headache	Colds
Sleeplessness	Torpid Liver
	Mal-assimilation

Susanna Cocroft, Dept. 37, 624 Michigan Ave., Chicago

PATRIOTISM THE DOMINANT NOTE OF THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA W. C. T. U. CONVENTION

The thirty-fifth annual convention of the Southern California Woman's Christian Temperance Union met in Los Angeles, May 22-25, with Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, state W. C. T. U. president, as the presiding officer. It was a splendidly alert gathering, with a full attendance of more than 350 delegates, many visitors, able addresses and fine music. At this wartime convention, the radiant glory of the loved national flag was in evidence everywhere. In practically every speech and address, devotional service and report, there was some reference to woman's share in the great responsibility under the new conditions. Patriotism was the dominant note throughout, and each morning there was given most reverently the beautiful salute to the flag, as follows:

"I give my head, my heart and this right hand, for God, and home and native land.

"One country! One language! One flag! One God! To whom be praise forevermore!"

The president's message, and the official reports were full of enthusiasm for many victories. The daily efficiency conferences in which departmental work was discussed by superintendents proved of unusual interest, as did the legislative and civic hours, the peace program and the Loyal Temperance Legion demonstration, in which scores of wide-awake children took part.

There were perhaps more unique features than at any previous convention. The county presidents came bringing in the sheaves for the year. Each bore a sheaf of wheat until a good-sized shock was ready to be tied by the white ribbon.

Then came the shower. This was indeed a most unique and beautiful scene. The president was seated in a chair and she was literally bound with hundreds of membership cards.

Flowers in every shape followed the shower of members, eleven county presidents participating. Mrs. Wheeler, a state lecturer, Mrs. Hattie C. Doughty, state secretary of the Y. P. B., and Mrs. Ellen D. Blair, state secretary of the Loyal Temperance Legion, also brought new members. Three very unexpected expressions of love and appreciation were shown in the crowning, to music, of Mrs. S. D. Warner as "May Queen," in grateful recognition of her long years of faithful work; in the gift of fifty dollars to Mrs. Hester T. Griffith as a token of the love of the white ribboners for their vice-president who insisted upon resigning; and a gift to Mrs. Alice Woertendyke, who has done efficient work as state corresponding secretary and who retired to take general charge of the Temple.

The strong appeal of Dr. R. A. Barton, executive secretary of the Morals Efficiency committee, for the enforcement of the red light abatement law, resulted in pledges of more than $700, while the call from the treasurer, Miss Mary E. Stewart, for pledges to state work resulted in the securing of more than four hundred dollars.

The anti-cigaret clinic held during the four days and evenings of the convention, in charge of Mrs. Jennie Hobson Milligan of New York, was very successful, forty-six men and boys taking the treatment.

The officers for the new year are as follows: President, Mrs. Stella B. Irvine; vice-president, Mrs. Eva C. Wheeler; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Kara Smart Root, former World's missionary to Japan and now a resident of Glendale; recording secretary, Mrs. Hattie C. Young; treasurer, Miss Mary E. Stewart.

BEFORE AND AFTER PROHIBITION

At a marriage license window in Nebraska the story came to light of one family to which prohibition brought happiness. Hand in hand the father and mother of five children came for a license to remarry after a period of separation on account of booze.

"Booze made me a bad man. I believe prohibition will enable me to be a good one," said the father. "I have got a job and my wife and the kids are going to have the best I can get for them.

"I used to be one of the 'good fellows' among the 'boozers.' I didn't know when to stop. I wanted to quit, but the temptation was always there."

"I am so glad my husband is not going to be tempted to drink everywhere he goes," said the mother, her eyes brimming with happy tears. "I know that with the saloons gone he will be all right."

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year
Club rate for ten or more subscriptions, 25c a year
No other premium allowed.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

IF YOU WOULD BE WISE ALONG PROHIBITION AND PATRIOTIC LINES, TAKE THE UNION SIGNAL

VIDA THOMPSON, Circulation Manager

DO YOU WANT TO KNOW what is being accomplished along prohibition lines everywhere, but especially at Washington, our national capital, and in these days of history-making, do you want your knowledge to be both broad and up-to-date?

TAKE THE UNION SIGNAL!

DO YOU WANT TO KNOW the names of the scientific, professional and military men of note who are being added every week, and even every day, to the ranks of those arrayed on the side of prohibition? Do you want your young people and older people, too,—to realize how great are the forces for the right? Do you want them to voluntarily place themselves in the ranks of those who are banded together for the world's betterment?

TAKE THE UNION SIGNAL!

DO YOU WANT TO KNOW what you can do to help prohibition win the day? Are you anxious to find some way of helping our boys in army and navy? Do you want to do your bit in the world war?

TAKE THE UNION SIGNAL!

Anti-Beer Publications

LEAFLETS

Beer From an Economic Standpoint
Truth About Beer
Beer, Fact and Fiction
Beer a Dangerous Drink
What a Beerless Army Did
Beer Drinking and Its Effects Upon Human Progeny
Beer and Wine
Beer an Insidious Poison
Boy or Beer Barrel (cartoon)
The Brewer's Slaves (cartoon)
Is Beer a Liquid Food?
Beer or Flour
Revelation of Science Concerning Beer
The Food Value in Beer
What Two Beers a Day Will Buy

Price, per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred, 25 cents.

Beer Not a Hygienic Drink

Price, per fifty, 10 cents; per hundred, 15 cents.

Beer Drinking Injures Health

Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents.

Beer the So-Called Temperance Drink

Price, per fifty, 50 cents; per hundred, 90 cents.

POSTERS

Beer
Beware (English or German)

Price, 5 cents each; per fifty, $2.00; per hundred, $3.50.

Beer or Flour

Price, 10 cents each; per fifty, $2.00; per hundred, $4.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

POSTERS!

POST THE
NEW ILLUSTRATED POSTER

Our Government Rests Upon Home—School—Ballot

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC
DESTROYS HOME
HINDERS CHURCH
ROBS SCHOOL
CORRUPTS BALLOT

This poster is printed on a flag blue background. Size 28x42.

Price, 10 cents each; 3 for 25 cents.

POST IT EVERYWHERE

* * *

THE FLAG POSTER

most appropriate for display at this time
Use it in your

FOURTH OF JULY DECORATIONS

RALLY
For Our Country's Defense
Against Its Greatest Foe
THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC
Give Us a Saloonless Nation
A Sober People
A Stainless Flag

Printed in red, white and blue (28x42 inches)

Price, 10 cents each; 3 for 25 cents

* * *

POSTERS!

Which Will You Protect?
Do You Know These Facts?
Alcohol
Beer
Drink Robs the Working Man
The License Voter Gets What?
Attention, Voters!
Figures Tell
Saloons Increase Taxes
Successful Men
Prohibition in Kansas
Compare These Figures
Not By My Vote
State Prohibition and Local Option
What the Governors Say
Beware!
Railroads and Alcoholic Liquor
The Factory and Alcoholic Liquor
The Zeppelin

SUFFRAGE POSTERS

Woman's Interests
Home Problems
Women Wage-Earners
What Is Woman's Work?
S. O. S.

Size, 19x25

Price, 5 cents each; per 50, $2.00; Per 100, $3.50

* * *

The Man Who Drinks
Out for Prohibition
The Nation's Going Dry
Protect the Children
The Liquor Traffic Must Go
A Business Proposition
The Drink Traffic and Revenue

Size, 28x42

Price, 10 cents each; three for 25 cents; per 100, $7.00

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

COUNT TOLSTOY GIVES APPROVAL OF PROHIBITION IN RUSSIA

Count Ilya Tolstoy, noted Russian author and lecturer, second son of the late Count Leo Tolstoy, has recently been on a lecture tour in America. In an address at the Metropolitan Theater in Seattle, Washington, delivered but a few days before he sailed for Russia, Count Tolstoy emphasized the thought that it was not the force of any class, organization or body of people, but rather a general upheaval that brought about the revolution in Russia.

"It was the enlightenment of the nation as a whole," said the count, "that precipitated the climax so swiftly, with such dramatic suddenness, and this enlightenment was the work of generations of Russians who saw from afar the glory of the coming liberty."

Count Tolstoy gave his approval of the dry regime in Russia. "From the sale of vodka, the opium of Russia," said he, "the government derived its principal revenue. The government deliberately kept its subjects intoxicated and unenlightened. The stopping of the vodka traffic made it possible for the Russian people to sober up. It made it possible for them to think, and to realize their possibilities and opportunities. The regeneration of Russia is to a great extent the result of sobering up.

"Lack of education in Russia was the twin evil of the vodka habit," continued the count. "The primary schools, as I remember them from childhood, were disgraceful. Only a small percentage of the peasantry were taught reading and writing, and these very imperfectly."

ANYTHING SHORT OF TOTAL PROHIBITION A FAILURE

How ineffective restricted liquor areas about military camps and one prohibition law for soldiers and another for civilians prove in operation, are set forth by Capt. Paul Goforth of the Canadian Expeditionary Force in a letter in the Financial Post of Canada, quoted in the Christian Science Monitor. After citing the deplorable experiences of the Canadian forces with such a futile and less than half-way measure, he says: "Liquor in the Army is bound up with the question of liquor in the nation. As long as the manufacture and sale of liquor as a beverage remain unprohibited in Canada, Great Britain or France, so long will our armies be hampered in their struggle; and lives that are priceless to some one will be sacrificed in vain. On the ground of efficiency and national economy alone, the French, British and Canadian governments can afford to waste no time in abolishing the liquor traffic. As in the Army, so in the nation, all attempts at 'control' short of total prohibition are exasperating failures. The damage to war work caused by drunken civilians will never be estimated, and who will say that all the guilt must be borne by the drunkard—not by the brewer and the distiller? There is no place for the liquor traffic in a nation at war or at peace."

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., JUNE 28, 1917 | No. 26

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES VOTES FOR WAR PROHIBITION

DRASTIC ANTI-LIQUOR PROVISIONS CONTAINED IN FOOD CONTROL MEASURE PASSED BY HOUSE

Washington, D. C., June 23.—[Special.]—The administration food control bill was passed by the House tonight after amendments had been written into it putting into effect what amounts to nation-wide prohibition for the duration of the war. These amendments provide:

1. No person shall use any foods, foodstuffs, or feeds, except for governmental, industrial, scientific, or sacramental purposes, in the production of alcoholic beverages. Any person who violates this section shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than two years, or by both.

2. The President is authorized, if in his opinion, it is necessary, to require any person having control of alcoholic or distilled liquors, to turn them, or any proportion of them necessary, over to the government for use or redistillation for use in the manufacture of munitions or other military or hospital supplies.

The anti-liquor amendments were adopted by the House while sitting as a committee of the whole. The vote on the amendment cutting off the manufacture of liquors was adopted, 132 to 114. It was submitted by Representative Barkley of Kentucky, Democrat. The amendment was proposed as a substitute for the committee amendment, which left the prohibition question to the President's discretion.

On the amendment authorizing government use of distilled spirits there was no roll call. Only a few scattered nays were heard on the viva voce vote. Originally proposed by Representative Webb of North Carolina, it was accepted by Chairman Lever of the Agriculture committee and was adopted on his motion.

When the bill came up in the House proper the anti-prohibition faction did not demand that the amendment be voted on again.

The bill, as a whole, then was passed by the House by a vote of 365 to 5.

The bill now goes to the Senate, where it probably will be substituted early next week for a similar measure already under consideration. Leaders hope to get the measure to conference by July 1, the date demanded by the President.—From Chicago Tribune

Wire Your Senators to Vote for Prohibition Amendment to Food Control Bill

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

During the past week two more war missions have reached Washington, coming from war-stricken Europe. On Monday last the envoys from Belgium arrived and a vast crowd surrounded the Union Station to welcome the representatives of that brave, courageous nation. All along Pennsylvania avenue, also, people were standing, waving flags and cheering as the cavalcade of cavalry surrounding the automobiles swept by. The guests were escorted to a beautiful private home, that of Larz Anderson, former American minister to Belgium, which he has placed at their disposal during their stay in the city. The following day they were received formally by the President, who also entertained them at dinner at the White House, when promineut men in Congress were present. Tomorrow they will appear before the Senate to formally express the gratitude of their people to the entire American nation for its munificent generosity in their hour of distress.

The next day, Tuesday, the members of the special diplomatic mission from Russia arrived. Attired in the quaint Russian uniform, khaki coat, blue trousers and black knee boots, and most of them wearing long beards, they were an impressive sight as they alighted from the train. Big crowds greeted them all along the way and showed the warmest interest in those who had traveled half way around the world to visit this sister republic. Five weeks ago they left the Russian capital, but have kept in touch with the home situation by telegraph, wireless and cable, and will be able to proceed immediately to business with this government. It is rumored that other countries are arranging to send missions to the United States, among them being Japan and Ireland.

Food Conservation Thought of the Hour

Conservation of food has been the thought of the hour. Both branches of Congress took up the administration food conservation bill on Tuesday with determination. It is evident in the House, at least, that the bill will probably come to a vote by the end of the week. During the debate yesterday Representative Thompson of Oklahoma read a statement of a tourist, just returned from London, comparing restaurant rates in that city after three years of war, with the rates in Washington, before a battle has been fought by American troops. In London tomato soup costs twenty-five cents, here thirty cents. Onions are eight cents a portion, here thirty-five cents. A comparison of the prices charged for other vegetables shows practically the same result. Lamb chops cost ninety cents here, seventy-two cents there. Puddings that are thirty cents here cost nine cents in London. Fruits are nearly 100 per cent higher here than in London, so are coffee and tea. Potatoes sell for $2.10 a bushel there and $3.70 here. Flour sells for $8.20 a barrel there and $17.60 here. Bread sells for five cents a loaf in Germany and eight and ten cents here. These figures were given to demonstrate the great need of the most drastic legislation possible to reduce waste, to prevent speculation and to assure fair food prices.

While both branches of Congress continued desultory debate on Wednesday on the government's food control bill, Mr. H C. Hoover, food administrator spent four hours at the Capitol emphasizing to a score of Senators gathered informally to hear him. the vital importance of this legislation to success in the war. He declared that speculators were making $50,000,000 a month at the present time on flour alone. Federal commissions to control wheat, sugar and a few other "prime commodities" by regulation of production, storage, transportation and sale are contemplated, he told the Senators, but instead of injuring farmers, as some have claimed, both producers and consumers will benefit without curtailment of middlemen's normal and fair profits. Mr. Hoover will return to the Capitol on Friday to clear up congressional and public misconceptions and hasten action.

Representative Webb Introduces Prohibition Amendment to Food Bill

On Thursday Mr. Webb of North Carolina, one of the most active of the prohibition leaders in the House, prepared and introduced an amendment to the food bill providing authority for the President to commandeer all existing stocks of alcoholic liquors, and to use the liquor taken over in the process of redistillation in the manufacture of spirits for munition purposes. Speaking of his amendment, Mr. Webb said, "There are in existence in this country hundreds of millions of gallons of whisky containing a large percentage of alcohol, and I propose to offer an amendment giving the President the right to commandeer so much of this whisky as is necessary to redistill into alcohol for munitions, hospital uses, etc."

DELUGE UNITED STATES SENATE WITH TELEGRAMS

Telegrams by the thousands should go immediately to all members of the United States Senate urging favorable action on the prohibition amendment to the Food Control Bill. To save expense let six or eight individuals combine in sending a night lettergram.

These are trying days in Congress and every man needs to hold himself well in hand. One afternoon this week, when the temperature kept rising higher and higher, Representative Mason of Illinois, familiarly known as "Billy" Mason, was supposed to be speaking on the food bill but wandered away from his subject and launched into a severe attack on conscription, which so aroused the ire of Representative Hastings of Oklahoma that he declared in a shouting voice, "I cannot allow myself to listen to such a treasonable speech without expressing my disapproval." Instantly there was a tumult in the House. Representative Mason walked quickly and threateningly toward his opponent, with upraised fist, demanding that the words of Mr. Hastings be taken down and voted upon by the House. The incident went very little further, friends persuading Mr. Hastings to withdraw his remark, which he did. and quiet was restored.

Secretary Daniels Appeals to Rhode Island Governor to Aid in Protecting Navy Boys from Liquor and Vice

Sensational charges that naval recruits at the training station at Newport, R. I., are exposed to open gambling houses, immoral resorts and illegal sales of liquor were made by Secretary of the Navy Daniels this week in announcing that he had appealed to the governor of the state to aid in the enforcement of law. In announcing his action Secretary Daniels said, "At Newport and other places are gathered several thousand of the finest youth of the land, who have offered their lives for the service of their country. Most of them have come from carefully guarded homes and their parents have given them in sacred trust that the government will safeguard them from unnecessary perils. I am charged with the duty of training these young men for service in the Navy. State and local officers are charged with the duty of seeing that the laws of their states and of the United States are safely executed. There lies upon us morally, to a degree far outreaching any technical responsibility, the duty of leaving nothing undone to protect these young men from that contamination of their bodies which will not only impair their military efficiency, but blast their lives for the future, and return them to their families a source of danger to their own dear ones and to the community at large. If we fail in vigilance under these conditions, the mothers and fathers of these lads will rightly hold us responsible." I have quoted Secretary Daniels at some length to show that the men at the top are desirous of throwing about these young men all the protection possible.

It will be remembered that the Act of Congress pertaining to the Army contained only one mandatory prohibition with respect to liquor. that none should be sold to a soldier in uniform. It gave discretionary power to the President, however, to impose such regulations as he thought desirable. When the regulations concerning the sale of liquor near these camps are issued it is understood that the President will require that no liquor be sold within two miles of a cantonment.

W. C. T. U. Opens Recreation and Rest Rooms in Washington

Recreation and rest rooms for enlisted men have been opened by the District of Columbia W. C. T. U. at 1418 Pennsylvania Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C., under the supervision of Mrs Ella Hoover Thacher, National superintendent of Work among Soldiers and Sailors. This was done to help meet the exigency of these days, when the streets of Washington are filled with boys in khaki. It is the belief that many a homesick lad will find his way thither, and there receive the motherly comfort and assistance he so longs for. There is a movement on foot, also, to convert the saloons of the District, which will be closed after November 1, into khaki club houses, under the direction of the War Department commission on training camp activities. Women employed by the Navy Department are to receive the same pay as men holding similar positions. In response to a query relative to this subject the Secretary made answer, "I can assure you there is no intention on the part of this department to discriminate against women employes. All positions in the department are graded, and the same rate of pay applies to each position regardless of the sex of the incumbent."

After a very busy two weeks at National W. C. T. U. headquarters at Washington, Miss Gordon left for Evanston on the afternoon of June 20. During her frequent visits to Washington the past winter Miss Gordon has made many friends both in the hotel and outside as well. All regard her as "one of the great women of this day" and follow her work with continued interest.

National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, Washington, D. C., June 22, 1917

A Memorial to the United States Congress

FROM THE NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

—Washington (D. C.) Star

Patriotic women of the United States will respond to the food-saving appeal of Mr. Hoover. However, they will insist that Uncle Sam shall conserve for food the one hundred million bushels of grain now worse than wasted each year in making alcoholic liquors.

HARVARD 1917 REUNION "BONE DRY"

For the first time in the history of Harvard University reunions the 1917 celebration was conducted according to a "bone dry" schedule. The change, which officers of the university are reported to have said could not have been brought about in a generation of peace, included the elimination of punch and other alcoholic drinks at class celebrations. Even the class of '67, fifty years out of college, did not serve champagne, the custom of fifty-year classes from time immemorial.

RAILWAY TRAINMEN OPPOSE SALOONS

The Ashtabula (Ohio) lodge of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, at a regular meeting recently, went on record as strongly opposed to the saloon. It is reported that only three of the men present refused to vote for the passage of the resolution.

CONGRESSMAN'S ANTI-PROHIBITION SPEECH THE WORK OF ANOTHER AND STILL UNPAID FOR

United States Congressman Jacob Meeker, from St. Louis, is being given some undesirable publicity just now. Congressman Meeker made a speech in Congress last March attacking the proposed national prohibition measure, which, it now appears, was written for Mr. Meeker by Paul S. Conwell, who declared he was hired by Conrad Mann, general manager of the Breweries company, to write it. In a suit filed by Mr. Conwell, he affirms that Mr. Mann agreed to pay him $1,600 for writing the Meeker speech and some other incidental publicity work. To date only $200 of this money has been paid, and Mr. Conwell is endeavoring to secure the payment of the remaining $1,400.

CAPT. MOFFETT TO CLOSE SALOONS IF COUNTY BOARD FAILS TO ACT

Captain W. A. Moffett, in command of the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, is taking vigorous measures to secure the closing of saloons in the vicinity of the training station. At a conference with the board of supervisors of Lake county, in which the Naval Station is located, he and Colonel Nicholson of Fort Sheridan told of the injury to men in the service from liquor secured at nearby saloons.

"I am authorized by Washington to take steps to prevent the men under my charge from securing liquor," said Captain Moffett. "The President and the Secretary of the Navy are interested in this step. I am telling you this to inform you that if you do not take decisive action in closing those saloons, I will do it for you. I appeared before you to give you a chance to exert your patriotism in this matter, but if you do not take action, we will."

Snap-shot of National W. C. T. U. President and World's Secretary of the Loyal Temperance Legion

LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION DAY, JULY 21

Less than a month distant is Loyal Temperance Legion Day, the birthday of our National president and World's secretary of the Loyal Temperance Legion Branch. July 21 is one of the most important red letter days of the organization and plans for its observance should be carefully made. In the words of Miss Gordon, "Let us use every 'bright and shining light of God' to lift the children of our nation into the light of a clear and steady brain, a pure heart and an untrembling hand. Teach them, and share with them, the joy of service as Young Campaigners for Prohibition in local, state and national campaigns. Freely circulate our none-such temperance paper for the young folks, The Young Crusader, subscribing for it for all the children in your neighborhood, and everywhere placing it in the hands of public school and Sunday school teachers. Let our infinite tenderness and sympathy for 'Christ's little ones' lead us to keep close to them and to set for them in all things an example safe to follow. Let us win them as workers for our cause today, and as well-equipped leaders of the temperance reform in the glorious tomorrow of National Constitutional Prohibition."

St. Cloud (Fla.) Legioners as They Appeared in the Parade on Lincoln's Birthday

THE LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION AN IDEAL ORGANIZATION FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

LILLIE B. BOWERS, Associate L. T. L. Secretary of North Dakota

Between the ages of eight and fourteen children are interested in everything under the sun. They like to do good and helpful things, but if they are not encouraged in that direction they will occupy their time with mischievous and evil activities. At these ages boys and girls feel that they can revolutionize the world, and if given a chance they will help to do it. In this fact lies the opportunity of the Loyal Temperance Legion. The children need the things that it has to offer and it can be made to fit them "to a T."

How the L. T. L. Fits the Child

First: It provides work for the child. You can do many things for boys and girls, but you can't do their work for them.

Second: There is action in it. There are colors, mottoes, yells, salutes, songs, —yes, and stories—not the goody-goody kind, but stories that appeal to the child's sense of justice and independence.

Third: In all the work they are getting somewhere, working for graduation and a diploma.

Fourth: Between these ages children begin to make decisions. At this time in their lives they are eager to declare their principles. They are willing to take the pledge to refrain from strong drink, tobacco and profanity. Later it will not be so easy to secure from them such a promise.

Fifth: They have a desire to be like "grown up folks." Conducting their own meetings and having an interest in the good of the community impress upon them the real value of their work. Moreover, there are important things that boys and girls can do better than any one else.

Six departments of work that especially fit the boys and girls should be taken

(Continued on Page Five)

A CALL TO THE COLORS

MARY B. ERVIN, National General Secretary L. T. L. Branch

"We're the army that has come
To resist the giant Rum,
And we'll drive him from the land we love so well;
Then a spotless flag shall fly
'Neath our nation's shining sky,
And we'll shout, as loud our victor's song shall swell!"

Patriotism, loyalty, love for God and humanity—these are the fundamental principles of the Loyal Temperance Legion. Our colors—red, white, and blue—symbolize a membership constantly heeding the "call to the colors," ever alert against the enemies of Old Glory!

Living for our country, promoting its highest welfare and safeguarding it from enemies within and without, should ever be our greatest joy and noblest service as patriotic Americans.

John Barleycorn has brought more ruin, sorrow and devastation than any other enemy within our borders and today is readily recognized under the name, "The Great Destroyer."

That is why our Loyal Temperance Legion boys and girls have been responding so heartily to the "call to the colors" and are singing and shouting and praying that "The Liquor Traffic Must Go!"

Our legioners and Young Campaigners for Prohibition love Old Glory so well that they expect to stay in the fight until every legalized saloon shall be driven from our land.

Our legioners are also "doing their bit" raising food supplies in gardens and on farms. Some are bending their energies along this line to increase farm and garden products generally. Others are applying the money derived from the same to relief work. We trust that our legioners everywhere may make some special effort at this time to increase their finances and respond to some of the special relief appeals of the hour.

It would be fine to co-operate with the mother unions in making comfort bags for our soldier and sailor boys. Then, too, does not every legion want to contribute something to our L. T. L. French orphan fund? The amount required is $36.50 and a contribution of 25 cents, 50 cents or $1 from a number of legions will enable us to secure the desired amount and "adopt a French orphan." The appeal has come to us from Miss Lella Sewall, National Flower Mission superintendent. The money goes to provide a few extra comforts for the fatherless child. Would you not like to have a part in this noble movement? If so, please send your offering at once to Mrs. Margaret C. Munns, National W. C. T. U. treasurer, Evanston, Illinois.

Economy, conservation and sympathy for the oppressed are the watchwords of the hour and our legioners and Young Campaigners for Prohibition can be depended upon to measure up to the responsibilities and opportunities which are theirs.

Let the boys and girls in America today, who want to show their colors, enlist in our splendid Loyal Temperance Legion army and help hasten the "children's happy day" when there shall reign supreme peace, purity, patriotism and prohibition!

A Pennsylvania Legioner

"GOD BLESS THEM, EVERY ONE"

Wide-awake boys and winsome girls—thousands upon thousands of them—in public school, Sunday school and Loyal Temperance Legion, are singing, praying, marching, playing, whistling, speaking and working for our great temperance cause. In twenty-six states, in the District of Columbia, and in Alaska, as Young Campaigners for Prohibition, children have bravely borne their impressive part in the magnificent victories achieved.

Twelve times a year in our children's paper, The Young Crusader, boys and girls are told delightful temperance stories and are given scientific facts about the harmfulness of alcohol and tobacco. Once a year in THE UNION SIGNAL we extend a special welcome to all the boys and girls in our ranks. No work is more important than that of the Loyal Temperance Legion Branch, whose beloved National leader and others speak to us in this issue of our national paper.

The little people of today must keep our total abstinence and prohibition banners flying at the front in the tomorrow of international peace and world-wide prohibition. The children are the joy of our hearts and the chief inspiration of our untiring efforts to secure national constitutional prohibition. "God bless them, every one."

Anna A. Gordon

THE LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION AN IDEAL ORGANIZATION FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

(Continued from Page Four)

up by the L. T. L.: Medal Contests, Prize Essays, School Savings, Bands of Mercy, Flower Mission and White Ribbon Recruits.

The Value of Medal Contests

Whatever is learned and recited as one's own, becomes a part of one's belief and life. Thus the message of the medal contest selection helps to form the character of the child. The training in public speaking is also of great value. Parents who can be reached in no other way are often won through the words of their children.

Prize Essays a Means of Character Formation

In essay writing the subject is approached with a view to ascertaining the aspects favorable to the subject upon which the pupil is to write, and these facts, written out, become a force in character formation.

School Savings Make for a Life of Thrift

The encouragement of thrift is very important. Many dimes will be earned for deposit and money will not be spent for things injurious.

Band of Mercy Develops a Spirit of Kindliness

Kindness to animals proves a highly refining influence. This work in the Band of Mercy affords an opportunity for studying animals in a way that will awaken great interest in boys and girls.

Importance of Flower Mission Work

Any kindness shown to human beings, the sending to the sick of flowers, jelly or any comfort are a part of Flower Mission work; likewise the planting and care of trees, shrubs and flowers, and the doing of anything that makes the community a more desirable place in which to live.

Interest the Children in White Ribbon Recruits

Few objects are so interesting, especially to girls, as a baby. The mother of every baby in the community should be asked to train her baby for temperance and purity, and the baby should be listed as a white ribbon recruit, remembered by a card on its birthday, and helps provided to assist the mother in its care and training.

All boys and girls would like to have a part in this interesting work and they may, because the L. T. L. belongs to no nation and to no church. Observe the birthday of our National president and World's secretary of the Loyal Temperance Legion, Miss Anna A. Gordon, by the organization of a Loyal Temperance Legion if there is none in your community. If the children are already organized, resolve to secure new members and to put more care and thought into plans for the work of the boys and girls, that these future citizens may have the best training that it is possible to provide for them.

THE OPPORTUNITY OF THE NURSE

A nurse occupies a unique place in the life of a community, and through her position as a teacher of health unusual opportunities come to her to speak a word of warning against alcohol. Miss E. Bertha Bradley, R. N., associate superintendent of the Medical Temperance department of the World's and National W. C. T. U., in an article in The Pacific Coast Journal of Nursing, entitled "Nurses and Alcohol," emphasizes the duty of nurses to sound a warning against intoxicants. She says, in part:

"Few women have such opportunity in this line as the nurses in the different departments of health work. Think, for instance, of the influence of a nurse in a large industrial plant or store, health counselor and often confidential friend to hundreds of girls whose weal or woe may lie in the taking or refusal of an offered glass, and of the school nurse who goes in and out of homes where mothers drink beer to make milk for their babies, in perfect good faith, believing that it is the right thing to do. There is not one of us but has her own field of influence, however humble her work or position. Often it is the quiet, personal work that tells most, and the modest woman who thinks she does little and that her efforts are useless would often be greatly surprised if she knew their rich fruitage."

Why National Prohibition for the War?

To conserve the food materials that are now wasted in the manufacture of alcoholic beverages.

Professor Irving Fisher says:

"With the submarine threatening England with starvation, and with 20,000,000 men taken from productive energies in Europe, and with a deficit in our own grain crop of 189,000,000 bushels for this year, to waste one bushel—even on a harmless luxury—would be criminal. And liquor is not harmless. By giving it up we would add 11,000,000 loaves of bread a day to our output, enough to feed every British and every French soldier on the European battlefields."

To conserve for patriotic purposes the labor of thousands of men now employed in the breweries and distilleries.

"It would seem to be a poor sort of patriotism that would permit a business so destructive as the liquor traffic to continue using the labor of more than 100,000 men—not counting saloonists and retail dealers—while the nation's best blood goes forth to war," says Governor Capper of Kansas.

To help preserve the health of the soldiers and sailors of the nation.

No less an authority on health subjects than Dr. Haven Emerson is responsible for this statement:

"The greater part of the venereal diseases, syphilis and gonorrhœa, throughout the country, would be prevented if the manufacture, importation and sale of alcoholic beverages were prohibited."

To promote the efficiency of all defenders of the country, whether in the Army, the Navy, on the farms or in the office or factory.

"America needs every man at his best today. The liquor traffic will give to the armies of our national progress trembling limbs, blinded eyes, deafened ears, palsied arms, poverty of purse and of soul, hearts that are too frail to pump the blood of mighty deeds."

John Barleycorn is the prince of slackers, the king of wasters, and the veriest glutton in all the world. In this year of threatened famine he will, unless he is curbed, swallow more food than will the wide Atlantic, aided by the entire fleet of German U boats. Eighty million bushels of sound grain, 120,000,000 gallons of molasses—that is only a part of the good foodstuffs that will go to glut his monstrous appetite. And meanwhile Europe starves; our Allies cry for food. In answer to that cry we sound the alarm for grain, more grain and ships, more ships, to put it in. We suffer panic from our lack of farm lands and farm hands.

The war will be won in the trenches of France and in the furrows of America, so we are told. We set ourselves to the task of training a million men in a year, of bringing new acres under the plow, and yet during the course of that twelve months we will consume in the form of alcoholic beverages alone enough grain to feed 11,000,000 mouths.

It is all wrong. It is colossal waste. It is extravagance which the world cannot tolerate in this hour of stress.

—Rex Beach.

FLORA E. STROUT, WORLD'S W. C. T. U. REPRESENTATIVE IN BURMA, IN VISIT TO NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS, REPORTS RAPIDLY IMPROVING CONDITIONS ALONG ANTI-LIQUOR, ANTI-TOBACCO AND ANTI-VICE LINES

The workers at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters had the pleasure last week of a visit from Miss Flora E. Strout, for the past five years World's W. C. T. U. representative in Burma. Miss Strout stopped for a day in Evanston on her way from San Francisco to her home in Baltimore. She had a most delightful and encouraging story to tell of the work that has been accomplished during the last five years in "the land of pagodas." During that period she has seen a wonderful growth in anti-alcohol sentiment, greatly increased interest in scientific temperance instruction in the public schools and a remarkable advance in the anti-vice movement.

Burma W. C. T. U. Practically Self-Supporting

During the entire period of Miss Strout's service the W. C. T. U. has been self-supporting, with the exception of the amount paid to her as salary and gifts from the World's W. C. T. U. organization and white ribboners in the United States for special purposes. This maintenance has included the support of one or two workers and the up-keep of headquarters at Rangoon. The Methodists gave the W. C. T. U. the use of a fine room sufficiently large to seat seventy-five or eighty people. It is equipped with telephone, typewriter, and a piano (the latter being the gift of the Anglo-Indian Y. P. B.) A part of the equipment is a folding organ, presented by a Rangoon dealer in musical instruments, and used for the many street meetings that are held in the city. The headquarters is also supplied with abundant table linen, silver, and china for use at social affairs. A collection of books is being made as a foundation for a permanent library. The W. C. T. U. of Burma receives its support from dues paid by the various local unions, special gifts, regular weekly and monthly contributions which are solicited by the workers, also offerings on World's Temperance Sunday, when the Sunday schools and churches are asked, and usually consent, to donate their collections.

Miss Strout's Unofficial Censorship Work

Miss Strout referred to herself, half laughingly, as the "unofficial censor" of Rangoon. Very soon after her arrival in the city she discovered that there were displayed in the theaters some most objectionable cinemas. She felt it her duty to become a self-appointed censor and very frequently visited the various places of entertainment to determine the character of the photo-plays presented. Whenever she noted an immoral play, or one that she thought would be harmful to the audience, she brought the matter before the police and asked to have it suppressed. So great was her influence that invariably she secured the desired co-operation and the objectionable films were cut out. She told an amusing incident indicating the way in which her name had become associated with the censorship of pictures. On one occasion the captain of an Irrawaddi boat was calling at the home of a resident of Rangoon when Miss May Mack, one of Miss Strout's assistants, was there. He happened to remark to his hostess that the night before he had witnessed a cinema at a certain theater—the Globe—which was absolutely "Strout perfect." It is interesting to know that this theater, the largest and cleanest in the city of Rangoon, once a year permits its auditorium to be used, rent free, for a temperance meeting and furnishes Miss Strout, without charge, any two films she may select.

Temperance Teaching in Buddhist, Missionary and Government Schools

Some idea of the increase in public sentiment along temperance lines is indicated by the fact that a certain amount of scientific temperance instruction is given in all the Buddhist, missionary and government schools, including also anti-tobacco and anti-betel teaching. Soon after Miss Strout's arrival in Burma the director of public instruction expressed a desire to have her co-operate with him in securing this instruction; gave her full permission to distribute anti-alcohol and anti-tobacco literature, and asked her to select a group of English-speaking people who would deliver a course of temperance lectures in the schools, using a syllabus compiled by her. Wherever Miss Strout has gone she has been invited to speak on the scientific temperance phase of the alcohol evil and has also conducted classes for teachers. It is significant that, while the smoking of cigarets and the chewing of betel were very common among the pupils of the schools when she first went to Burma, on the walls of the government schools now appear these words, "No smoking or betel chewing allowed on these premises."

There is a spirit of most cordial co-operation existing between the W. C. T. U., the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A., and the wife of the general secretary of the former organization, and the home secretary of the Y. W. C. A. are among the most efficient W. C. T. U. superintendents of departments.

English Women Co-operate in Purity Work

Miss Strout was able to reach many of the English-speaking people through temperance and purity meetings held in drawing rooms of English ladies of social position who were very willing to offer their homes for this purpose.

In some respects Rangoon seems to be ahead of our large American cities. The tram-car company gave Miss Strout permission to place in six of their cars for six months, free of charge, temperance posters in Burmese and English. The municipal committee gave her permission to display war temperance posters anywhere she chose. Just before she left Rangoon there was inaugurated among the boys and girls a total abstinence poster competition—a prize being offered for the best drawing. Permission was given to post all over the city announcements of this contest, and the director of public instruction brought it to the attention of the schools and published in the school magazine information concerning it.

The W. C. T. U. has been enabled during the last few years to do a work of great magnitude along purity lines. Through its unceasing efforts, a regular

(Continued on Page Seven)

LIQUOR MEN MISREPRESENT TRADE UNIONISTS IN NEWSPAPER ADVERTISEMENT

What the liquor men probably regard as a tremendously fine stroke in their favor was the publication of a two-page advertisement in the Washington Post on the morning of June 13, which contained the following headline:

"2,082,637 Workingmen Petition the President and Congress Against Cutting Off a Habitual Temperance Beverage"

The names of something like five hundred different organizations, with the number of members affiliated with each of them, filled two pages. The number appeared to total 2,082,637.

To the average person who is unfamiliar with trade union affairs this advertisement must have seemed very impressive, but the National Temperance Society and Commission on Temperance of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, purchased two pages of advertising in the Washington Star of June 15 for the purpose of answering the liquor men's advertisement —for the liquor men no doubt paid for it—making a careful analysis of the organizations and members and presenting some constructive arguments in favor of war prohibition.

It is interesting to note that the liquor men, in the advertisement, had more workingmen enumerated as signers of the petition to the President in the twenty-two states mentioned, than there are members in the American Federation of Labor throughout the country. Also, hundreds of thousands of names were duplicated many times in the different organizations tabulated.

Furthermore, only 445 local labor unions signed the petition, although there are 22,000 such labor bodies throughout the country, which means that over 21,500 local unions had failed to sign the petition. As a matter of fact, no individual workingmen were asked to sign the petition, which was presented to President Wilson and Congress by President Samuel Gompers. What actually happened was that a small minority of trade unionists assumed to speak for the entire membership of their various organizations.

It would appear from this petition that every trade unionist in America was petitioning Congress to "save his beer"—although actually there are hundreds of thousands of trade unionists who do not patronize the saloon nor use intoxicating liquor and who have been grossly slandered by this petition, which, it is alleged, represents organized labor.

These are the Facts

First: According to the latest official report of the secretary, there are less than 2,082,637 members in the American Federation of Labor.

Second: Yet the number of alleged signers of this petition from but twenty-two states is greater than the total membership of the American Federation of Labor throughout the entire country.

Third: As a matter of fact, this petition was not signed by individual workingmen.

Fourth: In most cases a small minority of the members of the organizations mentioned presumed to speak for their entire membership.

Fifth: Only 445 local bodies out of 22,000 local labor unions are listed as having signed the petition.

Sixth: Only local labor bodies have a right to speak officially for the great mass of American workingmen, and more than 21,500 of these did not sign the petition.

Seventh: Such state federations of labor and central labor bodies as are dominated by bartenders and brewery workers do not represent the great majority of American workingmen.

Eighth: In many cases in the unsigned advertisement individual trade unionists are counted again and again in the petition presented to the President and Congress, being counted: 1st, in their international organizations; 2nd, in the state bodies; 3rd, in the central labor unions; 4th, in the local unions; 5th, in such organizations as Personal Liberty Leagues, Mutual Benefit Societies, etc.

Ninth: Over 150,000 of those enumerated as being identified with Union Label Trades Departments, Labor Temple Associations, Sick Benefit Funds, Mutual Benefit Societies and Personal Liberty Leagues are counted a second time in bona fide labor unions.

There are many other perfectly obvious attempts to pad the numbers, which efforts will not deceive any one familiar with the American Labor movement.

This petition says that these alleged signers "have the fullest realization of the problems which the war has developed and the heartiest desire to assist in their solution."

What are the problems which require solution? We are in urgent need of an adequate food supply. It is imperative that we should have a larger supply of labor. It is necessary that we should preserve human life. That the liquor traffic wastes foodstuffs, wastes labor and wastes human life has been amply demonstrated.

The soldier who is going to the trenches is ready to lay down his life for the nation and the nation has declared that he shall not be given intoxicating liquor —he has been deprived of the use of beer. Why isn't it fair to ask those of us who stay at home to make at least an equal sacrifice in this particular?

Millions of people in Poland, in Belgium and other countries among the Allies are starving and it is not unlikely that there will be many in this country who will suffer on account of the lack of food. What right have two million workingmen to petition the President and Congress to give them the privilege of continuing to use foodstuffs for liquor while others are starving for the want of the food which is being wasted through the use of this grain?

It is argued by the liquor men that they use only one per cent of the grain in the manufacture of beer. This, of course, does not include the molasses and sugar and other ingredients that are employed, but, assuming that what the liquor men say is true—namely, that they use only one per cent of the grain—it is obvious that this amount of grain will feed one per cent of the people. One per cent of the population of 100,000,000 means 1,000,000 people who are being deprived of the food products used in the manufacture of liquor.

All of the foregoing facts, and others not enumerated, were inserted in the Federal Council advertisements in the Washington Star. There is no doubt that the advertisement of the liquor men will react against them because of the perfectly obvious attempt to deceive President Wilson and the United States Congress.

FLORA E. STROUT REPORTS RAPIDLY IMPROVING CONDITIONS IN BURMA ALONG ANTI-LIQUOR, ANTI-TOBACCO AND ANTI-VICE LINES.

(Continued from Page Six)

censorship of films has been established, 114 houses of ill-repute have been closed, and forty women rescued, the government has abolished segregation, and erected a hospital for women, and lectures on purity have been given in the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. and in schools. There has been distributed a large amount of purity literature, written by one of the finest doctors in Burma, and a genuine public sentiment against vice has been aroused. Upon Miss Strout's departure from Burma her duties in connection with the purity work were assumed by the daughter of a former lieutenant governor, showing the official recognition that is now being given to this subject.

The vigilance committee, which grew out of the purity work of the W. C. T. U., was publicly thanked by the lieutenant governor for its excellent service, and the police commissioner's report on the social evil was submitted to Miss Strout, as secretary of the committee, for comment before it went to the governor.

Some little time ago, as a result of complaints which the purity committee had entered concerning the condition of the streets which had improved and then seemed to grow worse because they were not thoroughly picketed, the governor sent the superintendent of police, who had charge of this district, over to India and Ceylon to investigate and report. As a result of this visit, the man told Miss Strout that he was advocating certain reforms that the W. C. T. U. had wanted for a long time.

An especially interesting event in Miss Strout's five-year stay in Burma was her appointment, as the only lady delegate, on a deputation arranged by the All-India Temperance Association, to wait on Lord Harding, viceroy of India. The purpose of the deputation was to give the viceroy an idea of existing conditions and if possible to secure his aid in certain reforms. Miss Strout was presented at a social function to Lady Harding and received a most gracious greeting, Lady Harding taking occasion to express her interest in W. C. T. U. work and to voice the hope that Lord Harding had granted to the deputation that which they had requested.

Shortly before Miss Strout left for America she received from the police a gratifying appreciation of the work she had been doing. At the request of a police inspector she and another woman accompanied him through the houses of the Chinese district to see if any minors were to be found therein. When Miss Strout said good-bye to the commissioner she remarked: "You must be glad that I am leaving, I have worried you so much." To which he replied, "No, indeed. The Lord be with you. When you come back you will find a cleaner Rangoon than when you went away."

NEBRASKA'S FIRST MONTH OF PROHIBITION

The enforcement of the new prohibition law in Nebraska is a matter that is receiving careful consideration by local and county officials. For June, the first month of prohibition, the reports are for the most part highly satisfactory. At Lincoln for several successive Sundays the jail population has not been large enough to warrant holding services, a most unusual condition. The police judge declares that his business has been reduced to a minimum. The night work of the force is a minus quantity, auto thieves being the only factor that keeps things lively. Inquiries which have gone out from the state W. C. T. U. headquarters to many Nebraska towns concerning the results of prohibition are bringing encouraging replies. U. S. Rohrer of Hastings says:

"There is no question of the good effects of prohibition already being visible to anyone at Hastings.

"Business men on First street, formerly crowded with drunken men, tell me they have seen no drunken men on that street since May 1 last."

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, June 28, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

We suggest that local unions give wide publicity through their local newspapers to the anti-alcohol resolutions passed by the house of delegates of the American Medical Association, as reported in an article by Mrs. M. M. Allen on page 10.

THE AMBULANCE FUND

One cannot read of the sufferings of the victims of the mighty conflict in Europe without longing to help alleviate their agony. We who sit in ease and comfort in a land not yet ravaged by war can have little appreciation of what the brave souls on the other side are enduring. There are many ways, however, in which we as white ribboners can very definitely help, and important among them is the opportunity to contribute to a fund for the purchase of a National W. C. T. U. motor ambulance. As stated heretofore, for the sum of $1,600 a motor ambulance can be purchased, equipped, transported to France, and kept in repair for a year. An additional $600 will provide for a driver for one year. Every one who reads this paragraph will desire to have a part in this beneficent enterprise for our brothers overseas. Send in your gift, be it large or small, and appeal to your friends and neighbors to join you in contributing to the Ambulance Fund. Among the gifts received during the past week was a check for $25, the personal contribution of Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, National superintendent of Work among Soldiers and Sailors.

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, 561 Thirty-third St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

LET YOUR SENATORS HEAR FROM YOU!

Not in vain have the patriots of this country appealed by telegrams and letters to their Congressmen for the passage of a nation-wide war prohibition measure. The voice of the people has been heard and the House of Representatives has acted in accordance with their demands. Grateful and appreciative words of commendation should go from every community to the members of this legislative body who have responded so royally to the pleas of the people. Previous to the action taken on Saturday evening by the House, the cartoons, on page 3, with the answer of the patriotic women to Mr. Hoover's request, were ready to send to all members of Congress. Now that the immediate need for an appeal of this nature is past, they will be sent to all members of the House who voted for the prohibition measure, with a note of appreciation, and to all Senators, with the expectation that they will vote to ratify the action of the House of Representatives.

The immediate and peremptory need of the hour is for telegrams to be sent to your United States Senators, insisting that the Senate act favorably upon the prohibition provision of the Lever Food bill. This more conservative body of Congress must be bombarded with telegrams, so that there will be in their minds no doubt of what the people desire. Do not delay an hour. Send your own message to your two Senators and call up all your friends, business associates and acquaintances and urge them to keep the wires hot with messages to the Senators. The question may be decided in the next few days and the demand from THE PEOPLE will be the decisive factor in the action taken by the Senate.

"THE NAVY FIRST"

In every state in the Union mother-hearted women are meeting each week to make and fill comfort bags for the enlisting boys. With every stitch taken goes loving, tender thought for the lads who are doing not just their "bit" but who are risking life itself for the privilege of defending their country in battle, thus aiding what they believe to be a righteous cause, that of democracy against autocracy. Recruits by the thousands are gathering at the four great naval stations: Great Lakes, near Chicago; San Francisco, Norfolk, Va., and Newport, Rhode Island. Remember "the Navy goes first" and the jackies must be equipped with W. C. T. U. comfort bags as soon as possible. A large consignment of bags from the Missouri W. C. T. U. for the W. C. T. U. comfort bag distributing station for the Great Lakes, is ready for shipment, and other state organizations are busily at work preparing their quota. If your local union has not yet taken up this branch of patriotic service, do not fail to remind the members of the opportunity they are missing.

"WE ARE NOT AFRAID OF THE WHOLE TRUTH"

A comparison of the utterances of the liquor publicity bureaus a few years ago regarding the amount of grain used in the manufacture of alcoholic liquors with their present statements is, to say the least, illuminating. In the Anti-Prohibition Manual for 1915, published by the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association of America, they discourse at length on the enormous quantity of farm products which are used in the production of alcoholic liquors. "Destroy this market and you reduce the purchasing power of the farmers $200,000,000 a year," was their warning. "This means a corresponding reduction in the volume of all business—the output of the mines, mills and factories. When you hear a prohibition speech you would imagine that only corn, and a small per cent of that, is used in the production of liquor. They do not tell you the whole truth. They never intimate that barley, rye, hops and fruits go into the production of liquor. We are not afraid of the whole truth. The brewers and distillers of Peoria alone consume the entire surplus corn crop of Iowa and Illinois after feeding and seeding. Figure out what that means in dollars and cents to the farmers of this country."

Contrast these assertions for a moment, if you will, with the statement in the last issue of Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular:

"There are many forces at work to destroy our business. They are attacking us at the most vulnerable point, which is the conservation of food. It has been shown how little, how insignificant a bearing the quantity of grain used in distilling and brewing has to do with the food question, but the anti-liquor forces disregard the truth, and by constant repetition of false statements and exaggerated claims seek to scare the public."

Whether or not the liquorites were "not afraid of the whole truth" in 1915, they seem, by their vigorous denials of their statements of two years ago, to have a wholesome dread of their being believed at the present time.

ANTI-ALCOHOL INDEPENDENCE DAY

We confidently anticipate final favorable action by Congress on nation-wide prohibition as a war measure before July Fourth. In such event, Independence Day will be one of rejoicing over our emancipation as a nation from the legalized liquor traffic. Some of the state councils of defense are recommending the observance of our great national anniversary in a "seriously, purposeful and broadly patriotic" way, and suggesting the holding of religious services in every church of every denomination, with the purpose of bringing home to every man, woman and child the high significance of Independence day. If by July Fourth Congress has not, as a whole, adopted a war prohibition measure, nation-wide in scope, the advocates of our cause in every community should endeavor to have a strong plea for a Declaration of Independence of this nation from King Alcohol incorporated in every address delivered from platform and pulpit, and in every way arouse the interest of the public in this righteous movement.

MILK INSTEAD OF BEER

The men employed in the Seattle shipbuilding plants are "heavy drinkers," according to the statements of some of the dairy companies who supply that city with milk. At the Skinner & Eddy Construction plant, employing 4,000 men, there is a rush for the milk stands as soon as the noon whistle blows. It is said the demand is so great that usually the last men out have to be satisfied with coffee or water, as the milk supply seldom equals the demand. This does not include the milk used in the plant restaurant.

It would seem that a good opportunity here awaits some of the men thrown out of employment by prohibition. Several of them might pool their resources and take up the dairy business. There is no present indication of the milk and butter market being over supplied. Moreover, physicians prescribe milk as a "healthful stimulant."

NATIONAL PRESIDENT UPON RETURN TO NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS TELLS OF MEETING OF WOMAN'S COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE AND OPENING OF RECREATION ROOMS FOR ENLISTED MEN IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Upon her return to Evanston from Washington, June 21, Miss Gordon reported that the temperance forces at the nation's capital, in spite of the delay in the passage of anti-liquor legislation, felt hopeful that a satisfactory war prohibition measure would be secured. Efforts are being made by various interests to deal in their own way with the liquor problem, some urging taxation so high that it will be prohibitive; others endeavoring to secure prohibition of distilled liquors only, exempting beer and wine. "The W. C. T. U. is opposed teetotally as a matter of principle, to taxing alcoholic liquors," declared Miss Gordon. "We must keep clearly before us the issue for which we are working—conservation of food products and protection of the enlisted men from liquor and vice."

Meetings of Women's Organizations Addressed by Mr. Hoover

The week before leaving Washington Miss Gordon attended a meeting called by the Woman's Committee of the Council of National Defense, Dr. Anna H. Shaw, chairman, at which nearly seventy national women's organizations were represented. In speaking of the purpose of the Woman's Committee, Dr. Shaw said it was "to unify woman's power" in this national crisis, "to co-ordinate the emergency service of women" and "to seek to have the women's organizations work one with another." She spoke appreciatively of the splendid response from the state divisions of the Council of National Defense, and said the object of the meeting was to learn from each representative of a national woman's organization its plan of service and to ask its national president to become a member of an honorary committee of the Woman's Committee of the Council of National Defense. In a five-minute speech each president told of the special activities of her society. In the afternoon Mr. Herbert C. Hoover addressed the company in regard to a plan for the conservation of food, submitting to them the following pledge:

"Mr. Herbert C. Hoover:

"I am glad to join you in the service of food conservation for our nation, and I hereby accept membership in the United States food administration, pledging myself to carry out the directions and advice of the food administrator in the conduct of my household, in so far as my circumstances permit."

Mr. Hoover pleaded with the women to bring this pledge to the attention of their respective constituencies.

"I realized," said Miss Gordon, in telling of this meeting, "that I had a unique opportunity to secure the signatures of a number of presidents of the large women's organizations to a resolution that could be presented to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House and be published in the Congressional Record. I therefore asked, and was given the opportunity, of reading to the entire committee the following resolution:

"'WHEREAS, the world shortage of food is a most serious war problem—our total cereal shortage last year being more than a billion bushels, and

"'WHEREAS, the yearly consumption of food stuffs by the distilleries and breweries of the nation amounts to one hundred million bushels,

"'RESOLVED, that the undersigned representing the national women's organizations indicated, while patriotically responding for their various societies to Mr. Hoover's conservation appeal, feel justified in demanding that the government shall lead in conservation of food products by prohibiting their use in the manufacture of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes for the period of the war.'

"I personally saw many of the presidents," said Miss Gordon, "and asked for the signatures of those who were in sympathy with the conservation of food products by prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors for the period of the war. I found most of the leaders of the women's organizations heartily in accord with us on this question."

Red Cross Society in Sympathy with W. C. T. U.

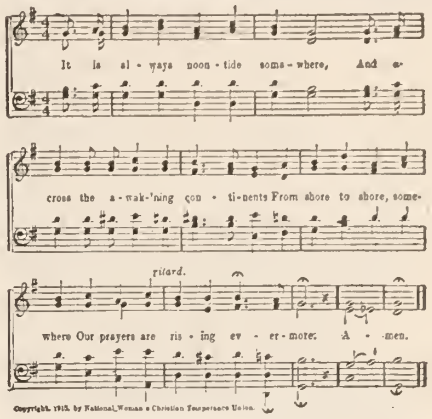
While in Washington Miss Gordon called at the headquarters of the Red Cross Society to see Miss Jane Delano, head of the nursing service of the American Red Cross, who although greatly preoccupied very graciously consented to an interview. "My object," said Miss Gordon, "was specially to thank her for her assurance to Miss E. Bertha Bradley, our National associate superintendent of Medical Temperance, that the recipes containing alcohol in the appendix to the American Red Cross Text book on 'Elementary Hygiene and Home Care of the Sick,' would be omitted in the next edition, to come out next September." "Miss Delano assured me of her willingness to co-operate in every way possible," said Miss Gordon, "and stated that the Red Cross organization was in entire sympathy with the temperance movement."

"I was glad to note in the latest 'Red Cross Manual'," added Miss Gordon, "that in the specifications for the filling of comfort bags there was no reference to tobacco, cigaret papers or playing cards."

"One of the most interesting recent events in W. C. T. U. circles in Washington," said Miss Gordon, in reply to a question, "was the opening of a recreation room for enlisted men in a fine location on Pennsylvania Avenue, directly opposite the New Willard Hotel. The building is owned by the government, which made a generous reduction in the rental to the District of Columbia W. C. T. U., because of the purpose for which the rooms were to be used. Already the boys of the Navy and Army are making themselves quite at home in these rooms, using the W. C. T. U. stationery supplied for writing letters, playing games, reading the magazines and daily papers and enjoying themselves generally. Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, National superintendent of Work among Soldiers and Sailors, has loaned a piano for the reception room and a number of local merchants have responded to her appeal for rugs and chairs, so the rooms have a very homelike appearance. A good talking machine is a source of great enjoyment, some fine records having been contributed by friends. The plans for entertaining and for refreshments are very systematically arranged, the local unions of the District taking turns in giving their services. Mrs. Emma S. Shelton, president of the District W. C. T. U., says the response on the part of the unions has been most enthusiastic."

"Many incidents might be told evidencing the hearty appreciation of the homesick boys who gather at this social center," said Miss Gordon. "One of the lads the other day came to the matron in charge, who has had much experience in this work and knows how to meet the needs of the boys, and asked her for her photograph. When she laughingly inquired why he wanted it, he explained that he would like to send it to his mother to show her how a good W. C. T. U. mother was helping her boy in Washington."

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



AT THE NOONTIDE HOUR

At the sacred noontide hour let the white ribboners of the land unite in prayer daily for our country and all other countries, that all may come to see the true Christian and humanitarian point of view in this world crisis; for the protection of "our boys" from the physical and moral deterioration from drink and vice that follow in the wake of war; for our President and his advisers that divine wisdom may rule every decision, that lasting peace may speedily come and the will of the Father of all peoples be done throughout the earth.

SOUTHERN W. C. T. U. LEADER PROMOTED

After an illness extending over many months Mrs. Jennie Hart Sibley was promoted June 19. Her spirit passed on to the other world from her beautiful home, "Hawthorne Heights," in Union Point, Georgia. Mrs. Sibley was a pioneer Georgia white ribboner, a friend of Frances E. Willard, Lillian M. N. Stevens and Anna A. Gordon. She held many offices in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, serving as state president of Georgia from 1900 to 1905. She was personally charming, of distinguished ancestry and social prestige, was "given to hospitality," cultured, traveled, consecrated, standing always four-square for temperance and prohibition in the days of its unpopularity, and giving generously of her influence, time and service for all social uplift movements.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

July 4—National Independence Day—Americanization Day.
July 21—Loyal Temperance Legion Day—Birthday of Anna A. Gordon.
July 31—White Ribbon Missionary Day—Birthday of Mary Allen West.

AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION DECLARES ALCOHOL DETRIMENTAL AS A BEVERAGE, AND ITS USE AS A MEDICINE WITHOUT SCIENTIFIC BASIS

MARTHA M. ALLEN, Superintendent of Medical Temperance for the World's and National W. C. T. U.

In June, 1916, when the American Medical Association held its annual meeting in Detroit, the department of Medical Temperance of the National W. C. T. U. prepared and submitted a memorial to that body asking for a warning against alcohol equal to that which the great medical society of Russia had sent out in 1915. The memorial, which was signed by Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National W. C. T. U., and by Mrs. Allen, National superintendent of Medical Temperance, was well received and was referred to the Council on Health and Public Instruction for consideration and reply.

At the 1917 meeting of the American Medical Association, held in New York City during the first week of June, the reply came in the form of resolutions, Dr. Frank Billings of Chicago, one of the foremost physicians of America, introducing them as chairman of the council which had them in charge. The resolutions, as introduced, were as follows:

"Whereas, it is the unanimous opinion of the Council on Health and Public Instruction of the American Medical Association that alcohol has no drug value, either as a stimulant, as a tonic, or as a therapeutic agent, and that it has no food value; and

"Whereas, its use as a beverage or as a therapeutic agent is detrimental rather than beneficial to the individual; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the house of delegates of the American Medical Association, at its sixty-eighth annual session, declares it is opposed to the use of alcohol by individuals either as a medicine or as a beverage; and be it further

"Resolved, That its use in medicine is permissible only in the preparation and preservation of pharmaceutical products."

These resolutions are interesting as showing the opinion of alcohol held by such men as Dr. Frank Billings, but they did not pass the house of delegates without amendment. As passed they are very strong, however. The amended resolutions follow:

"Whereas, we believe that the use of alcohol as a beverage is detrimental to the human economy; and

"Whereas its use in therapeutics as a tonic, or a stimulant, or as a food has no scientific basis; therefore be it

"Resolved, That the American Medical Association opposes the use of alcohol as a beverage; and be it further

"Resolved, That the use of alcohol as a therapeutic agent should be discouraged."

Substitutes for these resolutions weakening them were offered by two men from New York, but the substitutes were lost.

Thus the American Medical Association lends its mighty influence to the fight against the great enemy of man's health and efficiency.

It remains for all temperance people now to eliminate the words "as a beverage" from the pledge. These words have taught the people that the use of whisky as medicine was good and necessary, a terrible blunder as is now known. Fortunately the National W. C. T. U. has not had this provision for liquor using in its pledge for thirty years or more, and some of the state unions, most of them, in fact, have had the full pledge against all use of alcohol. But pledges used in many Sunday schools and in the young people's societies of the churches will need to be changed to meet the new thought as to alcoholic liquors.

A very prominent temperance man recently related in the New York Christian Advocate some of his campaign experiences. In these he told of a man who asked him at a street meeting if he would use whisky as a medicine. The temperance speaker said he would, and his interlocutor turned the laugh on him by saying, "Well, I would not." Had this temperance speaker and other temperance speakers outside the W. C. T. U. ranks obtained the information that they could have had freely from the W. C. T. U. department of Medical Temperance we should not be having the trouble we now have with provisions for the medicinal sale of alcohol in prohibition territory. It remains now for temperance people to use this weapon provided by the American Medical Association in fighting the sale of liquors for all internal use.

Red Cross First Aid Books and Alcohol

It was a matter of deep concern to W. C. T. U. workers who wanted to affiliate with Red Cross work that the first aid books advocated the use of alcohol to some extent. Letters to the authors of these books were very courteously answered, thanking the Medical Temperance superintendent and her assistant, Miss Bradley, for calling attention to the old errors in the books as to alcohol, and promising that such mistakes would be eliminated in future editions.

Dr. Charles H. Mayo, one of the famous Mayo surgeons of Rochester, Minnesota, in his presidential address before the American Medical Association, said: "Prohibition is a war measure the value of which is beyond discussion. . . . Medicine has reached a period when alcohol is rarely employed as a drug, being displaced by better remedies. Alcohol's only place now is in the arts and sciences. National prohibition would be welcomed by the medical profession."

Forest Hills, Long Island, N. Y.

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do You Know the Answers to These Questions? They May Be Found in THE UNION SIGNAL of June 21

Ten questions, the answers to which will be found in the preceding number of THE UNION SIGNAL, will appear each week. The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. What is the immediate duty of all patriotic citizens in the prosecution of the campaign to secure national prohibition as a war measure?

2. How are the false statements and half truths of the 1917 "Anti-Prohibition Manual" to be dealt with?

3. Tell something of the liquor and vice conditions on the Mexican border which emphasize the need for action to prevent similar occurrences in the training camps throughout the United States.

4. Name one way in which white ribboners may co-operate with Secretary of the Navy Daniels and Secretary of War Baker in the safeguarding of soldiers and sailors.

5. Tell the story of Abraham Lincoln's attitude toward the Civil War revenue bill, as related by an intimate friend of Mr. Lincoln.

6. Give two irrefutable arguments for wartime prohibition which have appeared in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

7. What, in effect, is the result of taxing liquor?

8. What honor has been paid a promoted member of the white ribbon sisterhood?

9. Name some of the industries which are being successfully conducted in former breweries.

10. Give the arguments of five representative Americans in support of prohibition as a war measure.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. MARGARET E. DINWIDDIE, one of the founders and for many years president of the union at Maroa, Illinois, later prominent in the Champaign and Englewood unions and at Los Angeles, Calif.

MRS. EDWIN A. WHITE, Alexander, New York, president of Genesee county W. C. T. U., a faithful county president, deeply interested in the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

MRS. FLORENCE E. KIMBERLIN, Roseland, Louisiana, Medal Contest superintendent, an earnest, public spirited white ribboner.

W. C. T. U. Day at the Billy Sunday tabernacle in New York City was marked by the attendance of nearly 3,000 white ribboners from New York, Kings, Richmond, Queens-Nassau, Suffolk, and Westchester counties, New York, and Hudson and Essex counties, New Jersey. More than half of these women, carrying posters and banners and led by a prohibition band, marched to the tabernacle. Printed invitations to sign the pledge and join the W. C. T. U. were distributed.

NEW YORK'S PROGRAM OF PROGRESS

ELLA A. BOOLE, President New York W. C. T. U.

Governor Charles S. Whitman ordered a census taken June 11-25 of all the inhabitants of the state between the ages of sixteen and fifty, inclusive. The work is being done by volunteers and women are in charge in most places in Greater New York. The question blanks for men and women differ somewhat, but every one between the ages noted must have a registration card and the failure to register means arrest and punishment therefor.

It is one of the best object lessons I know of what would happen if women had the vote. Men and women go together to register, or do it separately. The registration booths are in churches, schools, department stores, real estate offices, vacant buildings, and in all sorts of shops.

While the newspapers have stated that some delays were caused by the refusal of women to tell their age, so far as my personal information is concerned, this is not true. I have been assisting in registration and not one woman has hesitated about answering that question, although it is the very first one on the blank, even before that asking for the name. One thing that is being discovered, however, is that there are many women who do not know how to do any of the things that are listed as preparation for war service. I have been surprised at the number who have said they did not know how to sew, who could not even make a garment, and some of these women were mothers with families.

Whatever delay there has been in the census has been due to the failure on the part of those in charge to have a sufficient number of blanks for enrollment. In order to make it easy, people were told that they did not need to register in their own assembly district, but could register anywhere in the city. The result is that some places have been much more popular than others. I should think the answering of the questions would arouse in the minds of some people a desire to learn how to help humanity.

Large Vote for Suffrage Anticipated

New York is to vote on woman suffrage again this fall. Notwithstanding the war excitement, interest in the campaign is increasing and it looks as if woman suffrage would receive a larger vote this fall than it did two years ago. The leadership of the campaign lies with the Woman Suffrage party, but the W. C. T. U. is distributing large quantities of literature. Our two superintendents, Dr. Lavinia R. Davis of Oneida, who has served for twenty-five years, and Mrs. L. M. De Silva of Eastwood, are actively presenting methods and pushing the work.

Bills Signed By Governor

The governor signed the bill raising the age for the sale of tobacco to minors from sixteen to eighteen years. He vetoed the bill which would have repealed the present laws protecting women and children as to hours of labor. He signed the Hill-Wheeler bill, which extends the local option privilege to all cities in the state, the vote to be taken every three years on petition of twenty-five per cent of the voters, except in the city of New York, where it is to occur every five years, but must first be taken on the question as to whether local option shall be applicable to the city of New York. He also signed the Brown bill, which limits the number of licenses in any community to one to every five hundred people.

MASSACHUSETTS SNAP SHOTS

Special Correspondence

Boston Central union, under the presidency of Mrs. Helen H. Foster, has just entered upon its summer holiday after a very successful year of work. Its meetings have been of unusual interest and well attended. Some quite unique features have been introduced, such as a medal contest among young men with original orations, which must lead to larger work in the same direction. The Central union also took the initiative in giving a prize for an essay contest among the young women students of Boston University on the general subject of War Prohibition. The state seconded Mrs. Foster's efforts and an exceedingly interesting contest was held, five young women taking part. It is hoped that in the autumn a Y. P. B. may prove a possibility in the University. Flower Mission Day was observed at the Old Ladies' Home in Roxbury, where the oldest member of the union lives, and it proved a delightful occasion. The annual outing at the home of Mrs. W. F. Worthen at Nantasket Beach will round up a year of increased membership and efficiency.

Mrs. Emma H. Howland, National and state organizer, is giving the month of June to her own state of Massachusetts. She spent the first week in Hampden county, under the direction of Mrs. Rhena Mosher Holyoke, with results that quite exceeded the hopes of the workers, in view of the bad weather she had to encounter everywhere. New members were gained and the foundations laid for two new unions at West Springfield and North Wilbraham. Mrs. Howland is now in Essex county, which boasts of the largest union in the state—that at Lawrence of 519 members.

Mrs. Etta G. Luce, Massachusetts superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction, has just finished a most successful month of work in Vermont. She attended the county conventions and also visited many of the unions. Everywhere she delighted her audiences and her work was pronounced "up to the latest minute."

Mrs. Arabella W. Wilson, Massachusetts superintendent of Work among Soldiers and Sailors, recently spent a day at state headquarters, 541 Massachusetts Ave., Boston, classifying and repacking the material which has been coming in from all over the state for her department. Two boxes were packed with shoulder wraps, napkins, tray cloths, handkerchiefs, old linen, etc., and dispatched to the Red Cross rooms. In addition Mrs. Wilson has already handed in nearly one hundred knitted articles and others are being prepared, while more than one hundred comfort bags are at state headquarters awaiting directions as to the best point to which to send them. In addition to all the money Massachusetts has raised for this special work, it has contributed nearly $100 for War Prohibition, which is being used at state headquarters in petitions, literature, etc.

Mrs. Katharine Lent Stevenson, state president, spent a few days the latter part of May at Martha's Vineyard, which constitutes Dukes county. She visited each of the five unions, save that of Chilmark, and met the Chilmark ladies in the county convention at West Tisbury. Gay Head is the Indian union of which Dukes county and the state are so justly proud and the work there has recently been greatly revived, four new members joining during Mrs. Stevenson's visit. The only unorganized town in the county for years has been Edgartown and the foundations for a union were laid there on Sunday, May 27, to be completed by the county president, Mrs. Evelyn N. Adams, on June 7. Mrs. Adams is one of the most versatile young women in white ribbon ranks. She is a co-partner with her husband in carrying on a dairy farm which a few years ago received a prize of $400 as the best managed farm in Massachusetts. She lectures for the state grange and also for the state board of agriculture. She is county and local president of the W. C. T. U., Sunday School teacher, organist in the church, a bright writer and a delightful speaker, as well as a home maker of exceptional ability.

The unions of Worcester county, north, Massachusetts, at the county convention, June 7, began laying plans for the great camp of 50,000 men which is to be maintained in their midst after September 1. The headquarters of this camp will be Ayer, in Middlesex county, but its area will embrace the towns of Harvard, Still River, Bolton, Lancaster and Clinton, all in Worcester county. Mrs. Harriet E. Sawyer, county W. C. T. U. president, was appointed chairman of a committee to learn, first of all, what the W. C. T. U. will be allowed to do, and then to marshal the forces for the work. Without doubt a similar committee will be appointed in Middlesex county while the state officers and the entire state membership will stand back of this enterprise. A visit from Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, National superintendent of Work among Soldiers and Sailors, is eagerly anticipated, but it is hoped that it may be delayed until after the camp shall have been established.

Prohibition Fans

not only cool the air but tell the wonderful story of prohibition progress.

On one side appears the map showing the dry states; on the reverse side the pertinent slogan—

PROTECT OUR AMERICAN YOUTH
by
PROHIBITING THE LIQUOR
TRAFFIC

Place these fans in your churches, your Chautauqua assemblies, your homes, and send them to the sick soldier boys in camps nearest to you.

Price, per dozen, 35 cents; per hundred, $2.00; per five hundred, $8.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

Evanston, Illinois

WHEN MANDY SAW THE LIGHT

MARY P. SAYERS

The story of a woman who came to see the necessity of "Ballots for Both" as a means of protecting the home.

Mandy Perkins drew a long, deprecating breath as she gazed at the yellowed and faded marriage certificate which, all glorious in its gilded frame, hung on the rose-dotted wall of the northeast bedroom. For fifteen years it had ornamented the same place, regularly dusted, or taken down and cleaned as the semi-yearly periods of house-cleaning rolled unerringly around.

It was the link that bound Mandy to a galling yoke of martyrdom placed upon her when she had left her father's well-appointed and well-provided-for household. The well-kept little "forty" that had been her portion when she married Nate Perkins had lost its productive quality within a year after her wedding day. And it was all on account of Nate's oft-repeated sprees down at Pittsford Center. Mandy's own special domain was kept spick and span, in sharp contrast to the remainder of the farm. Her eggs and chickens were the best, her cream the finest that went to the Center butter factory, and her flowers, scattered over the velvety lawn, were the cynosure of the eyes of all who daily passed the white painted house with its green blinds and red roof. For Mandy would keep the little cottage looking as it did when her father handed her the deed on the day of her betrothal to Nate.

"Keep it free of debt," he had cautioned her soberly. But in spite of her remonstrance Nate, two years previous to the opening of our story, had put a small mortgage upon it to get money with which to pay a saloon bill. Although the place was in Mandy's name, she had but little stamina to resist his persuasions.

"Laws-a-me!" ejaculated Mandy, as she glanced out of the bed-room window at the meadow east of the house where the hazy autumn sunshine was browning the second growth of big red clover-heads that Nate should have cut long before, for seed. "Laws-a-me! if them women down to the Center knew what it was to have a husband that didn't 'tend to business any more'n Nate does, I guess they'd be satisfied with the men they've got 'thout wanting to vote! Laws-a-me!" As she turned away from the window, slowly she reached up as if to take the hated marriage certificate from its hanging, then with another deprecating sigh she dropped her hand. "No, I won't do it! Nate's the man I took for—"

"Whoa! whoa! Careful, there Jake! Drive easy! I reckon he's some hruised!" The sound of a wagon accompanied the words. Mandy rushed to the sitting-room door. "Easy, now, Jake, when you stop!" The pair of dappled bays came to a halt at the side door of the pleasant little sitting-room. Two men were lifting out a covered figure as Mandy opened the door and flung back the outside screen.

"Nate's hurt a little bit, Mandy," ventured Bill Wade tentatively, as he swung himself clear of the wagon wheel in helping Jake Binns to lift her husband from the wagon-box where he had lain at full length. "If you can tell us where to lay him, now—"

"He ain't—" Mandy started.

"I reckon not yet, Mandy," with a seeming realization of what Mandy had been trying to say. "The doctor's coming right along behind. There he is now!" The doctor's runabout came swiftly up the driveway just as the two men went through the sitting-room doorway and into the northeast bed-room where Mandy unconsciously led them. Hastily, she drew an old quilt over the spread, motioning them to deposit her husband's inanimate form. "The bays run away with him, you see," Wade explained, drawing the sheet, which some kind soul had contributed, from the lacerated and bleeding face. One glance and Mandy knew why the bays had gotten the best of Nate. His whole body reeked with the odor of whisky. Utterly unconscious, he lay like a log on the bed which seemed too white and pure for such a personality.

An hour later every one had gone. The doctor had done all that was possible for Nate Perkins and both Bill Wade and Jake Binns—cronies of the injured man—before going, had offered their services in any way, but Mandy had characteristically refused assistance from those who had hitherto been connected with the debauchery of her husband. Not that she wanted to lay Nate's downfall at anyone's door but his own, but their presence was repulsive to her sensitive soul.

Mandy and Nate had two children, a boy and a girl. The girl, who was ten, was at school; the boy, at fourteen, was taking a man's place on the farm. Working far beyond his strength to keep things going on the farm, Gerald Perkins was growing into a stunted, morose man.

Shortly after Mandy was left alone she called Gerald from the field, and in a short time the little girl came from school. The boy received the news of his father's accident with a sullen, don't-care face, for which Mandy had not the heart to chide him.

Nate Perkins died about midnight without arousing from his stupor, and three days later was laid away in the Pittsford Center cemetery. Mandy's loneliness was tinged with a great bitterness of heart mingled with a fleeting blame for herself, that she had not forsaken her meek ways and refused to give her husband so much liberty in financial matters. She had always hated what she called "bossy" women, yet as time went on and each day, in the settlement of Nate's affairs, brought to light some debt or other which he had contracted without her knowledge, because people knew that she would never let bills go unpaid, she grew to dwelling more and more on the subject of the laws of the land as related to women. Usually she would dismiss the matter from her mind with the thought that when Gerald grew to be a man everything would come out right. Mandy's life now centered in her boy.

One day Catherine Cordes, an old schoolmate from Pittsford Center, came to visit Mandy. She was a suffragist, but between the two women there was a strong bond of sympathy, in spite of their many differences of opinion.

"What's Jim Bates going to put in that field, Mandy, where he's plowing?" asked Mrs. Cordes, as they stood in the barn doorway talking of what might be done on the farm to make money and pay off Mandy's indebtedness.

"Why, I don't hardly know," replied Mandy, "whether it's goin' to be wheat or rye. When I hired him so't Gerald could go to school, I told him to go on and do just as he would if 'twas his own. He's boardin' at home till I get things righted up a little and I ain't said much to him 'bout anything. He's comin' here when I get the fall cleanin' done." Mrs. Cordes gasped.

"Mandy Perkins! You don't mean to tell me that you don't take any more interest than that in what's going to be raised on your own farm!" It is significant that, though the two women had had the same educational advantages, Mrs. Cordes had gained in knowledge while Mandy had deteriorated mentally. Mrs. Cordes used good language, Mandy had descended to a slackness in her choice of words and dropped her final letters in a most deplorable manner. At her friend's reproof her face flushed crimson.

"I hate t' see a woman do the bossin'," she exclaimed disgustedly. Before Mrs. Cordes could reply, a sudden, fierce gust of wind caused them both to step backward into the barn. Mrs. Cordes stumbled over a pile of hay which had been left on the floor and ere she could recover her bearing she fell with a severe jolt to the hard boards beneath her. Mandy sprang at once to her assistance, chafing her wrists in deep concern, but not until camphor and water had been brought from the house did she revive sufficiently to talk. Examination proved that her ankle was badly sprained. A pair of crutches that Nate had once used, at last solved the problem of getting her to the house, but when Mandy attempted to help her friend to stand, her foot struck something hard beneath the hay which had caused the accident. Investigation brought forth a small, brown whisky-jug about two-thirds full of pungent liquor.

"That settles Jim Bates!" declared Mandy as she started for the barn door with the intention of pouring the stuff into the ground.

"Don't do that, Mandy!" commanded Mrs. Cordes. Mandy turned.

"Why, I thought you was a 'prohi!'" she sniffed.

"I am!" declared Mrs. Cordes, her features drawn with pain. "But when you lay that thing to Jim Bates, you're wrong!"

"So that's it, is it? What do you know about Jim Bates any more'n I do?" Mandy queried sarcastically.

"He's the soul of honor and integrity! When you get calmed down a little I'll tell you about it!" "But, Mandy," continued Mrs. Cordes, wincing as she balanced herself on the crutches, "can you think of no one but Jim that might have a jug of whisky here? Is there no other solution to the matter?" For a brief moment she held Mandy's eyes with her own. Suddenly a stricken look overspread Mandy's countenance and her breath came quickly.

"Oh, not that! Not that!" she cried. "Why do you try to torture me!" But Mandy understood exactly what her friend was hinting at.

"Mandy," said Mrs. Cordes, her eyes bathed with sympathetic tears, "I've wanted for weeks to warn you. It was weakness of character that hindered me from doing it."

"My boy, my boy!" sobbed the mother.

For an hour or more Mandy worked over Mrs. Cordes, rubbing her with arnica and snugly ensconcing her on the big davenport in the living-room. The doctor came and went, leaving the assurance that with good care Mrs. Cordes might be able to walk in three or four weeks. In her heart Mandy was glad that her friend must needs stay with her, for her spirit was sore and she longed for companionship.

Not until the two women were eating their dinner from the little wheeled table at the side of the davenport where Mrs. Cordes was lying did Mandy speak of the subject close to her heart.

"There's other mothers that have had boys go wrong as well as me! And they vote, too!" she blurted out defiantly.

"Yes," nodded Mrs. Cordes. "Of course! That's true enough! Yet, if those mothers could have had the ballot all their lives, or for years back, some of the deplorable things of life would not have happened. It's safe enough to say that the women would have ousted liquor long ago." "Mandy," continued Mrs. Cordes, after a pause for breath, "these women whom you cite have been trying by their votes to put temptation out of the reach of their boys, and the boys of other mothers. But you—why, Mandy, can't you see that you haven't done your duty by your son, or your daughter, either, for

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

THE FLAG

All day long in the city's canyoned street,
Through a forest of watching folk on either side,
I saw a river of marching men like a tide,
Flowing after the flag;

And the rhythmic beat of the drums
And the bugles' resonant blare
Metered the tramp, tramp, tramp of a myriad feet,
While the red, white and blue was fluttering everywhere
And the heart of the crowd
Kept time to a martial air.

O brave flag, O bright flag,
O flag to lead the free!

The glory of thy silver stars
Engrailed in blue above the bars

Of red for courage, white for truth,
Shall bring the world a second youth,
And draw a countless human host,
To follow after thee.

First of the flags of earth to dare
A heraldry so high;
First of the flags of earth to bear
The blazons of the sky;

Long may the constellation glow,
Foretelling happy fate;
Wider thy starry circle grow—
And every star a state.

—Henry Van Dyke

A LITTLE SOLDIER OF UNCLE SAM

MILDRED THAYER TAMLYN

"Rollin, will you have a pickled peach?" The Edwards family was at dinner and pretty Mrs. Edwards was holding a luscious peach on the end of a gleaming silver fork, just about to drop it onto her little son's plate.

"Have they brandy in 'em?" asked Rollin, somewhat doubtfully.

"Why—yes. What difference does that make? Brandy won't hurt you any—not a little brandy—in a peach. Better have one, son. They're good!"

"No, I don't believe I'd better eat it, mother. I don't like to eat anything that has brandy in it. Is there alcohol in brandy?"

"Why—what a question! Yes, of course there is alcohol in brandy," Mr. Edwards was speaking. "But all the alcohol you could ever get in the few drops of brandy in a pickled peach couldn't hurt you."

Rollin felt strangely alone in his fight against alcohol. Still he was determined.

"No," he said firmly. "I can't eat it if it has alcohol in it. Alcohol hurts your stomach—'tisn't good for you. Besides, it isn't right to touch it—it's wicked."

"Where did you learn all that stuff?" blustered Mr. Edwards. He suddenly began to feel himself brought up before a judge, with numberless little wine suppers and social good times staring him in the face.

"I learned it—two places. I learned about the stomach part in school in our health class, and I learned the other in the L. T. L."

Rollin's father and mother were visibly annoyed.

"Well, that may all be true, Rollin," said Mr. Edwards severely, "but your mother's cooking is all right, and she doesn't put anything in it that will harm little boys."

SLOGAN FOR THE LITTLE FOLKS

Beer and whisky,
They're a curse;
We drink water,
Safety first.

Suddenly the sweet-faced, brown-eyed girl across the table leaned forward and met Rollin's troubled gaze with a steady look of approval. Rollin liked Julia. He wished she would visit them forever. She was always helping him out in everything from arithmetic problems and violin lessons to curing his dog Trixey. Julia must know a great deal, Rollin thought. She understood about him and things with alcohol in them, too. He felt better after that. Nothing further was said upon the subject, but neither Julia nor Rollin was served with peaches.

* * * *

That night after Rollin had gone to bed the others sat downstairs talking. The moon shone on the white snow outside, and in the darkened room a log blazed cheerily in the broad fireplace. It was a time for thinking—and talking,—a warm, cozy, comfortable sort of time. No one had spoken for several moments. Suddenly Mrs. Edwards broke the silence.

"Julia," she began in her high, singing voice, "Julia, you rather took the wind out of our sails this noon at dinner. Now, what harm could it possibly have done for Rollin to eat one of those peaches? The silliest thing I ever heard of!"

Julia's face flushed at the tone of censure. Mrs. Edwards was a very lovely and charming woman, an old friend of her mother's, and the young girl feared she had offended her.

"Well, you won't think it silly in a minute, Auntie Edwards, when you know about it," she said softly, flashing one of her brightest smiles. "You see, Rollin and I had a little temperance talk yesterday. I told him I thought just as he did, and would always stand by him. Dear me!" she laughed, "haven't you noticed how he has marched about all day? Why, he is one of Uncle Sam's soldier boys, and a brave one, too."

"Julia, how exasperating you are! What do you mean?"

"Simply that your son has enlisted. He couldn't go to the front or have a war garden, so he has joined the Home Guard against the foe alcohol. Isn't it fine of him? Oh, he ought to be helped, not hindered—"

"Well, I guess she's right, dear," broke in Mr. Edwards. "Rollin's a little brick!"

"Julia, you're your mother's own daughter," tearfully declared Mrs. Edwards. "I guess after this there'll have to be strictly temperance food on our table."

"You're a mighty good cook, Marjorie. You don't need any brandy flavoring," commended her husband. "And I think I'll have to help vote out wine suppers at the club. I've held back, somehow. But I've got a boy to bring up—"

"And you'll tell Rollin in the morning?" cried Julia with glad, shining eyes.

"Sure thing!" rejoined Mr. Edwards, with more than necessary emphasis, and under stress of emotion he gave the fire log a sudden prodding that sent the sparks flying merrily up the chimney.

WHEN 'MANDY SAW THE LIGHT

(Continued from Page Twelve)

that matter, holding yourself aloof from the rest of us in the good work we're trying to do? Can't you, Mandy?"

"Then why don't you women voters get better laws so men can't run their wives in debt? Why don't you work for that so we women can have some real influence in the world?" Mandy blurted out.

"So you want your rights brought to you on a gold platter, do you, without even lifting your own hand to help, eh?" For a moment Mrs. Cordes closed her eyes as though from exhaustion, then she exclaimed, "Well, if you don't even know what we have done about such things, both before and after we had the franchise, I don't know as I ought to tell you, but I will!" Thereafter followed such an hour of enlightenment as Mandy had never known before.

That night after the chores were done, Mandy and Gerald had a heart to heart talk. At first Gerald was sullen, then stubborn, until, after much pleading, Mandy began to show her authority. Gerald's face showed blank surprise when she dared to empty the jug of whisky. This show of authority on the part of his mother was contrary to precedent. Then Mandy once more pleaded with the lad.

"I'm afraid it's too late, mother," he said, "'cause you see I don't belong!"

"Don't belong! Don't belong to what?" cried Mandy, nonplussed.

"You don't understand, mother." Gerald sat in deep dejection for a few moments, during which time Mandy's heart beat quickly. She was seeing things in their true light. Presently Gerald looked up:

"You see, mother, it's just the way you start—and I—well, I guess I must have had a wrong one. We just can't get round it, mother, the manly fellows I ought to have been going with don't take to me. You see I've always been kept under until I haven't any spirit or manhood left."

"O Gerald, child, it's all my fault, but it isn't too late to mend my ways. You'll help me to do the right thing now by doing right yourself, won't you, Gerald?" There was a sob in Mandy's voice. The boy looked for some time with fixed gaze into the bright firelight.

"I would be a coward, mother, to lay all the blame on you," he said at last. "But, mother, if we had only both of us had more spunk it might have helped. Dad could do anything he wanted to with me and you were afraid of being—well, what you thought wasn't womanly, so you didn't say a word. Mother, right now I want some of that whisky you threw away." Mandy's face grew white. "But, mother," the boy continued, "I believe I can let the stuff alone if you will help me. I haven't been drinking very long and I—was—well—discouraged."

Mandy rose and going to Gerald, put her arms about him, and in a voice which choked with emotion said softly, "God will help us both, my boy. And, Gerald, you have shown yourself truly big and to come up to you I'm going to tell you that I won't be afraid after this to do my duty at any and all times in every way I can. I want to atone for my mistakes. O Gerald, my boy." Already Mandy was beginning to correct her style of speech, a fact, however, which in his distressed state of mind, escaped Gerald's notice.

That night Mandy and Mrs. Cordes talked late, planning, and discussing

(Continued on Page Fourteen)

Your Flag and My Flag

"Your flag and my flag,
And how it flies today
In your land and my land
And half a world away!"

A hand-colored post-card with poem by Wilbur D. Nesbit.

Price, 5 cents each; 50 cents per dozen.

A Motto Card with same poem, also hand-colored, suitable for framing. Size 11x14. Price, 30 cents.

FLAGS FOR DECORATION

Printed Muslin, mounted.

2½ in. x 4 in., 60 cents per gross.
3½ in. x 6 in., 80 cents per gross.
20 in. x 36 in., 15 cents each.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

POSTERS!

Our Government
Rally for Our Country's Defense
The Man Who Drinks
Out for Prohibition
The Nation's Going Dry
Protect the Children
The Liquor Traffic Must Go
A Business Proposition
The Drink Traffic and Revenue

Size, 28x42

Price, 10 cents each; three for 25 cents; per 100, $7.00

* * * * *

Which Will You Protect?
Do You Know These Facts?
Alcohol
Beer
Drink Robs the Working Man
The License Voter Gets What?
Attention, Voters!
Figures Tell
Saloons Increase Taxes
Successful Men
Prohibition in Kansas
Compare These Figures
Not By My Vote
State Prohibition and Local Option
What the Governors Say
Beware!
Railroads and Alcoholic Liquor
The Factory and Alcoholic Liquor
The Zeppelin

SUFFRAGE POSTERS

Woman's Interests
Home Problems
Women Wage-Earners
What Is Woman's Work?
S. O. S.

Size, 19x25

Price, 5 cents each; per 50, $2.00; Per 100, $3.50

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

CHILDREN'S FOOD ARMY

A children's food army, organized and directed by the department of Agriculture, will raise this year, it is estimated, between three and four million dollars' worth of food.

"Here we have a modern children's crusade," said Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Vrooman in Washington recently, in telling of the wonderful results obtained through the efforts of the young boys and girls of the country.

"Last year we had an army of almost 200,000 enrolled in canning and corn clubs. Working on a peace basis, this army produced foods valued at more than $900,000. This year, recruited to war strength, the children's food army numbers about 800,000, and our reports indicate that it will produce a correspondingly greater amount of food."

RICHMOND COUNTY (N. Y.) HOLDS ENTHUSIASTIC CONVENTION

With Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National W. C. T. U. vice-president-at-large, Mrs. Frances W. Graham, National musical director and New York state vice-president, and Mrs. Helen J. Andruss, state corresponding secretary, as guests of honor, the thirty-second annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of Richmond county, New York, held the latter part of May at Prohibition Park, went off with enthusiasm. Mrs. Egbert, president, presided, and thirty superintendents presented excellent reports of the year's work. Mrs. John Morton gave a most interesting address on the Red Cross and Mrs. Boole showed how white ribboners can do their bit in this work. Mrs. Graham delighted her hearers with an address on "The Law and the Lady," and sang delightfully several times. In conducting the memorial service, in which Mrs. Andruss also participated, Mrs. Boole spoke tenderly of Mrs. Morris, former president emeritus of the county, whose Home-going is a source of great grief to her comrades. The new Y. P. B. from St. George was present in the evening, accompanied by "Miss Columbia," "Uncle Sam," and representatives of the various dry states.

BREAD A NECESSITY TO WIN THE WAR

SENATOR H. L. MYERS of Montana

Bread will help us win this war more than whisky. We must have bread to win the war, but do not have to have whisky to win. That is all there is to it.

Cut Your Tire Bills in Two

As your first practical economy of the economies we all must effect until this World War is over, put on DOUBLE TREAD TIRES, built by special process, guaranteed to meet the most exacting tests of everyday mileage, yet costing only a fraction of what average tires cost.

DOUBLE TREADS have been before the public for three years, and have built for us the largest tire business in this field. Do not confuse them with cheap, recased tires, flashily advertised to be "DOUBLE TREADS". Look for DOU TRE trademark. Compare these prices. Send for complete list of tires and accessories. Our business has been built on the good will and satisfaction created by first orders.

Size	Plain	Non-Skid	9 Ply Gray Tubes	Red Tubes
30x3.....	$5.50	$5.75	$2.75	$3.00
30x3½...	6.50	7.25	3.00	3.40
32x3½...	7.50	8.25	3.45	3.55
33x4.....	9.50	10.50	4.50	4.75

Also all sizes up to 38 x 5½. State whether clincher, "Q. D." or straight side.

Address Dept. U. S.

THE DOUBLE TREAD TIRE CO., Inc.
106 West 52d Street, New York City

WHEN MANDY SAW THE LIGHT

(Continued from Page Thirteen)

ways and means of helping Gerald to reform. Mandy's greatest surprise came, however, when Mrs. Cordes told her that Jim Bates had been trying to reform Gerald, and that little Mary, Mandy's ten-year-old girl, had been persuaded away from the companionship of those whom her mother could in no way approve.

The struggle which followed was long and hard for both Mandy and her boy, but success came eventually, and in five years' time Gerald was ready for college, the debts all paid under Mandy's management and there was a neat balance at the bank.

"How blind I have been!" Mandy exclaimed, on the day when she cast her first vote as a right thinking citizen, to Mrs. Cordes, who accompanied her to the polls. "Both my children in danger of losing their very souls and I afraid to assume my rightful authority!"

Cruise for Vacation on the Lakes

The Magnificent Steel Steamship "Minnesota" to BUFFALO (NIAGARA FALLS) and RETURN $40 Including Meals and Berth

via Charlevoix, Harbor Springs and historic Mackinac Island, stopping at Detroit and viewing both ways by daylight the beautiful scenery of the Detroit River and St. Clair Flats, stopping at all points of interest. Nine-hour stop at Buffalo allows plenty of time to see Niagara Falls. One way $25, including berth and meals. During season leaves Chicago Saturdays 1:30 p. m.

The Elegant Steel Steamship "Missouri" to SAULT STE. MARIE and RETURN $27.50 Including Meals and Berth

via Charlevoix, Petoskey, Harbor Spgs & Mackinac Island—running the "Soo" River by daylight, returning via a portion of Georgian Bay and the scenic Grand Traversa Bay, stopping at all points of interest. One Way $14, including meals & berth. During season leaves Chicago Mondays 4:00 p. m.

S. S. "Missouri" also makes a special trip each week to Onekama, Frankfort, Glen Haven and Glen Arbor, leaving Chicago Saturdays at 4:00 p. m.

Our line of steamers offers you the greatest possible opportunity for real rest and genuine pleasure.

The Elegant Steel Steamships
MINNESOTA, MISSOURI, MANITOU, ILLINOIS

offer unrivaled service between Chicago, Charlevoix, Petoskey, Bay View, Harbor Springs, Mackinac Island, Ludington, Manistee, Onekama, Frankfort, GlenHaven, GlenArbor, Leland (via auto or connecting steamer from Glen Haven), and Traverse Bay ports, Sault Ste. Marie, Detroit and Buffalo, connecting with all lines for Lake Superior and Eastern Points. Book of tours and folder mailed on request.

Northern Michigan Transportation Co.
J. C. CONLEY, Gen. Pass. Agt., New Municipal Pier (East End Grand Ave.,) Chicago, Ill.

USE EVERY OPPORTUNITY
to wield your influence
AGAINST THE CIGARET

Anti-Cigaret Seals, gummed Stickers for Letters, Packages, Leaflets; three designs, with following sentiments:

1. Nothing will put a boy in touch with the saloon quicker than a cigaret.
2. The boy who smokes cigarets need not be anxious about his future; he has none.
3. Cigaret smoking is a mark of degeneracy.

Each seal, boxed, 25 cents per hundred.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

HELPS

for those engaged in the

Americanization of Foreign-Speaking People

Americanization of Immigrant Women
Price per 50, 50 cents; per 100, 90 cents.

Citizens in the Making
Price per 50, 40 cents; per 100, 75 cents.

Americanizing the Foreigner
Price per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents.

FOR DISTRIBUTION

a large variety of leaflets has been prepared in the following languages:

Arabic	German	Portuguese
Bohemian	Holland	Roumanian
Chinese	Hebrew	Russian
Croatian	Hungarian	Slovac
Danish	Italian	Spanish
Finnish	Norwegian	Swedish
French	Polish

Price per 100, 30, 25, 20 and 15 cents

POSTCARDS

Of Interest to Wage Earners
What Every Merchant Knows
Prosperity Statistics
Of Interest to Bankers
Of Interest to Taxpayers

German	Norwegian	Spanish
Italian	Polish	Swedish

Price per 50, 60 cents; per 100, $1.00

Send for catalogue

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

AMONG OUR WORKERS

As a result of a membership contest held by the Mansfield (Pa.) W. C. T. U., thirty-two new members were added to the enrollment. The women are now busy making comfort bags for the sailors and soldiers.

The annual convention of the New York Young People's Branch will be held at Ithaca, July 2-6. Everything points to a successful occasion, notwithstanding the fact that so many young men are being called into service. One father said he knew no better equipment for his boy who was going to war than attendance upon our young people's meetings.

Schoharie county (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. held its annual convention and institute in the Methodist church at Middleburg, May 29-30, those in attendance pronouncing it the "best ever." There was much to encourage the workers in the reports of an unusual amount of department work and large gains in membership. Cobleskill and Schoharie unions each won a prize lecture for a gain of fifty in membership and a copy of "Four Decades" for largest membership gain. A prize was awarded for the best original temperance poster submitted by Sunday schools in the county. A Liberty Bond was purchased from funds in the treasury. Mrs. Datus Quackenbush presided and was reelected for the sixth time as county president. Mrs. Helen J. Andruss, corresponding secretary of the New York state W. C. T. U., was the speaker and gave a stirring evening address on "High Lights in the Temperance Reform."

Mrs. Addie B. Parsels, National organizer and lecturer, spent June 9-10 at work in the beautiful Alleghenies. Mrs. Winifred Postlewait, Pennsylvania superintendent of Social Meetings and Red Letter Days, arranged a street meeting in her home town of South Fork, where a cornet band helped to attract the large audience which listened to Mrs. Parsels. At Beaverdale, a mountain town of 5,000 inhabitants, situated near Blue Knob, the highest point in Pennsylvania, Mrs. Parsels had a fine Sabbath service, the men's chorus and orchestra of the United Brethren church furnishing music. At both points people of many nationalities listened to Mrs. Parsels.

Mrs. Eliza E. Peterson, National superintendent of Work among Colored People, has had conferred upon her by the board of trustees of the Roger Williams University of Nashville, Tenn., the degree of Bachelor of Science in Education. The courtesy, extended by the university upon commencement day, was in appreciation of the help Mrs. Peterson has given to the student body..

Mrs. Maude C. Cathcart, National associate Medal Contest superintendent, spent two months in Tampa, Florida, in the home of Mrs. Etta V. B. Mendenhall, state Medal Contest superintendent. While in Florida Mrs. Cathcart held eleven medal contests, ranging from silver to diamond, and drilled more than fifty contestants. Her work has been of immense profit to the Fifteenth district W. C. T. U. Mrs. Cathcart also gave to several large and appreciative audiences interpretative readings of "The Man Who Forgot." As a slight token of love and appreciation, a set of souvenir spoons was presented to her by contestants and friends.

Jennie Smith, National railroad evangelist, 319 E. St. N. E. Two squares east of Union Station, Washington, D. C. Rooms at reasonable prices.

$50 may be earned for your Church besides good pay for your time distributing Religious Literature in your section. Write Nichols Co., Dept. L. 1, Naperville, Ill.

Four Temperance Lectures

Illustrated by Stereopticon Slides

A delightful entertainment easily planned for afternoon or evening by the use of one of these lectures.

John Barleycorn.
Thirty slides. Price.....$15.00

The Fight of Science Against Alcohol and Illustrated Story of "Two." Fifty-one slides. Price..$20.00

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union in Song and Story.
Fifty-three slides. Price.....$20.00

The World on the Water Wagon.
Fifty-three slides. Price.....$20.00

These slides are carefully packed and shipped at our risk, carriage prepaid.

Special rental schedule furnished upon application.

A carefully prepared lecture is sent with each set of slides.

N. B. We have on hand a limited number of duplicate slides which would be a valuable addition to any collection. These may be had at the nominal price of 20 cents each. A list of titles will be gladly submitted.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Anti-Beer Publications

LEAFLETS

Beer From an Economic Standpoint
Truth About Beer
Beer, Fact and Fiction
Beer a Dangerous Drink
What a Beerless Army Did
Beer Drinking and Its Effects Upon Human Progeny
Beer and Wine
Beer an Insidious Poison
Boy or Beer Barrel (cartoon)
The Brewer's Slaves (cartoon)
Is Beer a Liquid Food?
Beer or Flour
Revelation of Science Concerning Beer
The Food Value in Beer
What Two Beers a Day Will Buy
Price, per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred, 25 cents.

Beer Not a Hygienic Drink
Price, per fifty, 10 cents; per hundred, 15 cents.

Beer Drinking Injures Health
Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents.

Beer the So-Called Temperance Drink
Price, per fifty, 50 cents; per hundred, 90 cents.

POSTERS

Beer
Beware (English or German)
Price, 5 cents each; per fifty, $2.00; per hundred, $3.50.

Beer or Flour
Price, 10 cents each; per fifty, $2.00; per hundred, $4.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

"SONGS AND SAYINGS" is a rare book of thrilling reading and of soul-moving songs. It contains "Jim and Me," "A Saloonless Nation 1920," and other very fine songs. You need it, your W. C. T. U. needs it, your prohibition campaign is not complete without a supply of it. Price, 25c, 5 copies for $1. Order today of Rev. L. L. Pickett, Wilmore, Ky.

$2.50 PER DAY SALARY PAID ONE PERSON in each town to distribute FREE circulars, and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring. Non-alcoholic. Big demand, steadily increasing. J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7G, E. Harrison St., Chicago

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year
Club rate for ten or more subscriptions, 25c a year
No other premium allowed.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

UNION SIGNAL "QUIZ" EXAMINATION

VIDA THOMPSON, Circulation Manager

This is the season for examinations. Why not announce at your next meeting that you will have a written (or oral) examination on ten questions taken at random from those in THE UNION SIGNAL "Quiz" for a given month, the one answering all questions correctly to receive some little memento—bookmark, flag-pin, or something of the kind.

Are you planning any out-of-door meetings, or any with "eats?" If so, use some "Quiz" questions on your place cards, and see what a lively time you'll have—no ice to break. (N. B. Give a hint, no more, that preparation on questions for a certain month might be a good idea!)

This might prove a good time to secure new subscriptions for the paper, for, as some of our correspondents say—but just read for yourself, and draw your own conclusions!

"I am president of our local union, and we use the "Quiz" with great profit. At the institute last month I told others how much it helped us. I hope other unions will use it."

"THE UNION SIGNAL is worth while. It gets better all the time. We could not do without it. We are using the "Quiz" in our meetings and it creates interest. I am sure, because of it, many are reading their papers more carefully. It helps us to give intelligent answers to so many questions that are being asked these days."—Mrs. Annie Hawkins, Wheatland, Wyoming.

"Are you using THE UNION SIGNAL "Quiz" found in each issue of that paper? They are fine and add interest and instruction to a meeting."—Lela G. Dyar, state corresponding secretary, in Nebraska Union Worker.

"Do you read THE UNION SIGNAL? If not, subscribe for it, so you will have the latest news of the great reform.

"THE UNION SIGNAL 'Quiz' is a great educator and if studied in each union would make the members well informed on the present situation. Here are just two questions from a recent SIGNAL: 'Name some of the pernicious effects upon young men of cigaret smoking as given by a noted professor of Kansas.' 'In what way has Secretary of the Navy Daniels already safeguarded the Navy from drink?' The answer to these questions are found in the issue of May 10.

"Are you petitioning congress to conserve the food supply by passing prohibition measures forbidding the use of grains and other foodstuffs in the manufacture of intoxicating liquors? If not, do so at once. This is the critical time for this nation. Have you let your representative know that you oppose a higher tax on liquor? Do it now. Reasons and appeals for all of these you will find in THE UNION SIGNAL each week. Take it and find out how good it is."—Mary E. Dobbs, in Our Messenger, Kansas state W. C. T. U. paper.

CALIFORNIA LIQUORITES' ATTITUDE ADMISSION OF LOST CAUSE

DORCAS J. SPENCER

California is simply going steadily along with its everyday work and finds no time to halt. The president, Mrs. Sara Dorr, had a tedious, wearisome time of watching and waiting at the legislature, doing all that could be done to promote wise legislation. There was far more of wear and care in that period than would have been required for a more fruitful campaign. The enemy had concentrated and solidified their forces as never before; it was a desperate effort to hold their ground, when it was so plainly slipping away. For us the great lesson of the session was to send better men to make laws. The people are all right if they feel individually responsible. Good laws were passed for women and children, among them measures dealing with the property rights of women, women on juries, and the establishment of a state home for the scientific treatment of defective children.

The defensive attitude of the liquorites demonstrated a lost cause. The president has gone the rounds of county conventions, and reports without exception great activity on all sides. The Willard Memorial meetings, with their sacred influence at the outset of the year's work, were like a consecration before going into a conflict. The county conventions set the divisions in battle array, and the institutes, whose experienced leaders are now drilling and training the rank and file for the onward march, all give promise of most effective results in the next campaign. Campaigning has become chronic in California. Nothing but victory can stop it.

The department of Soldiers and Sailors holds the right of way now and is bringing forward splendid workers, and developing leadership before unrecognized. Mrs. Willhoit, the state superintendent, is a woman whose gifts and graces equip her for the difficult position. The khaki uniform is in evidence everywhere. The great seaport of San Francisco teems with the activities of national preparation. In the Presidio, the military reservation at San Francisco, there are 2,500 men under twenty-five years old, drilling and training. This tells something of the sacrifice being made by the homes of the country and makes more urgent our demand for prohibition.

Even the intense interest of the war does not make us forgetful of the two dry campaigns of the past, and the campaign that will always be before us until prohibition is won.

The saloon interests are frightened to death. Heretofore they have fought behind the vineyards, but now the wine grape-growers are trying to separate themselves from the saloon, and are preparing a petition to place on the ballot a proposition to save the winery by abolishing the saloon. The manufacturers of sugar have found so much need for grapes that they claim to be able to pay more for them than the wineries can afford to pay. This strikes the public as a new idea, but is a reminder that a white ribboner some thirty years ago made sugar from grapes in her own farm house, predicting then the future commercial value of the idea.

POSTERS POSTERS

JUST FROM THE PRESS

A special patriotic poster in red, white and blue

National Constitutional Prohibition
By your vote
Help Conserve Your
Country's Resources
YOUTH — FOOD — WEALTH

Size 28x42
Price, 10 cents each; 3 for 25 cents.

* * * *

Illustrated Posters

THE BIG CITY PROBLEM

In Every Wet Community the Liquor Traffic is Responsible for
50 per cent of all arrests
50 per cent of the poverty
40 per cent of the insanity
85 per cent of the crime
The Non-Drinker has to Help Pay the Cost of All This

* * * * *

A NATIONAL DUTY

STRONG DRINK
THREATENS
THE CRADLE

CONSERVE
THE CHILDHOOD
OF THE NATION

* * * * *

A TAKING ARTICLE

Brewers Say:
"BEER TAKES
THE PLACE
OF BREAD."

It Often Takes the Place of Milk and Meat Also.

Millions of Dollars
Are Each Year Taken
From the Pockets of the
Workingman and
Put Into the Breweries.

BEER IS A VERY TAKING ARTICLE

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

¶We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.
¶Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
118-120 Fifth Ave., New York

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

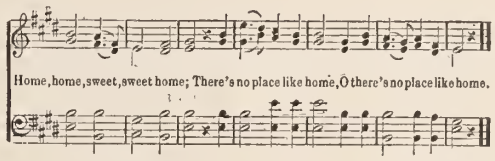
Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., JULY 5, 1917 | No. 27

Home, Sweet Home



When called to the colors, where'er we may roam,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home;
A charm from the skies seems to hallow us there,
Which seek through the world is ne'er met with elsewhere.

Refrain:

Home, home, sweet, sweet home;
There's no place like home; O there's no place like home.

In battle's dread danger, when tumult is wild,
I feel that my mother remembers her child.
Like music from heaven, I hear her fond prayer,
And know I am sheltered in God's loving care.

Refrain:

Home, home, sweet, sweet home;
There's no place like home; O there's no place like home.

Since God is our refuge, my heart knows no fear,
Since God is our Father, my loved ones are near.
On sea or in trenches, where'er we may roam,
We live with our loved ones, since God is our Home.

Refrain:

Home, home, sweet, sweet home;
We live with our loved ones, since God is our Home.

ANNA A. GORDON.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

GREAT EXCITEMENT WHEN FOOD BILL CARRYING PROHIBITION AMENDMENT PASSES HOUSE

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

Saturday, June 23, was a great day in the House of Representatives. First came the reception of the members of the Russian commission, who arrived by appointment promptly at noon. They were escorted by a special committee and announced by the Sergeant-at-Arms. The members and crowded galleries rose as Bakhamatiff, chief of the commission, appeared, followed by twenty others. They were greeted with great enthusiasm. Speaker Clark, in presenting the chief, made a few preliminary remarks. He said, "When our fathers proclaimed this republic at Philadelphia July 4, 1776, there was only one other republic in the world—Switzerland. Now, thanks be to God, there are twenty-seven republics. In a large sense, we made them, every one, not by conquering armies, not by the mailed hand, but by the wholesomeness of our example; by teaching all creation the great and glorious fact that men can govern themselves. Of these twenty-seven republics, Russia is the newest and biggest, possessing as she does, 180,000,000 of peoples, and one-sixth of the land of the globe. The Russian revolution is the most momentous political movement since the French revolution. I present to you the first Russian ambassador to the United States of America from the republic of Russia." When the ambassador arose, he was greeted with tumultuous applause, and when he began to speak, using the choicest English, he was forced to keep silence for at least two minutes, so insistent were the cheering and clapping. The address, which was listened to with strict attention, was most inspiring. On the Tuesday following, the commission was received in the Senate with the same enthusiasm. The Belgians are now in Washington, and are being received with demonstrations of favor and brotherly kindness.

History of Passage of Food Bill Carrying Prohibition Amendment

On Saturday, after the Russian commission had left the Capitol, the business of the day—the final consideration of the Lever food bill—was at once taken up. The telegraph wires have carried to the ends of the earth the favorable action of the House that memorable day. But just how that battle was fought (for it was a battle) is a matter of history. As soon as Mr. Lever had had read by the clerk of the house, Section 13, which is the one relating to use of foods or grains for the manufacture of alcoholic liquors during the war, Mr. Webb of North Carolina, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, introduced an amendment authorizing the President of the United States if in his opinion it is necessary, to require any persons having control of quantities of alcohol or distilled spirits, to turn over to the government such proportions of alcohol or spirits as he may deem necessary, for redistillation in the manufacture of munitions and other military r hospital supplies. Upon failure to accede to this proposition, the President may commandeer such spirits and pay for the same a just compensation. Mr. Lever at once made a point of order against the amendment, as not being germane to the section, and spoke upon it at length. Judge Saunders of Virginia replied in a forceful argument in support of the amendment. There was a buzz of confusion, several calling the attention of the chairman, others plying Judge Saunders with questions. Representative Towner of Iowa gained the floor, and spoke most convincingly in favor of the amendment. Cries of "Rule! Rule!" were heard coming from all parts of the Chamber. The House, being in committee of the whole, Representative Hamlin of Missouri, was occupying the chair, and in quite a learned argument, sustained the point of order. Whereupon Mr. Howard of Georgia, introduced an amendment to eliminate Section 13 and substitute one offered by him which was along the same lines as the one already before the House. Mr. Lever again made a point of order, and after a number of speeches had been made, some favoring it, others opposing it, the chairman again ruled against the amendment as not being germane. Mr. Thompson of Oklahoma then introduced an amendment, "That it shall be unlawful to use any necessaries in the manufacture of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes during the war." Mr. Lever again made a point of order. Then followed more speeches and great confusion, and the chairman made the same ruling, that the amendment was not germane to the section. Mr. Thompson appealed from the decision of the chair, and a rising vote was taken, 152 sustaining the action of the chair, and 51 opposing it. Confusion reigned, when Mr. Cooper of Ohio offered an amendment which went the same way as the others.

Finally Mr. Barkley of Kentucky moved that the first part of Section 13 be stricken out, and that the following be substituted: "No person shall use any foods, food materials or feeds in the production of alcohol or of alcoholic beverages."

Mr. Lever made the usual point of order, but the Chair ruled that it was not well taken, and after much discussion, and amid much excitement, a vote was taken which resulted in 132 sustaining the ruling and 114 opposing it.

Several other amendments were offered in quick succession, and at last Mr. Webb introduced his first amendment as "Section 13 A," and after more discussion it was overwhelmingly agreed to—this after six hours of constant deliberation. Another hour was given to the remaining sections and when the entire bill had been thus gone over, the committee rose. The House at once reconvened, the Speaker took the chair, and the roll was called on the entire bill, 365 voting in favor of the measure and 5 against it. The bill is now in the hands of the Senate and there seems to be great consternation on the part of a number of Senators as to what they shall do, but Senator Chamberlain of Oregon, although not an especially strong advocate of "bone dry" prohibition, declared one day this week, "Prohibition for the entire nation is bound to come."

It is to be hoped the Senate will take as speedy action as possible. Every day counts now, as harvests of grain will soon be gathered and prices must be adjusted to protect the nation against food speculators.

July 1, under a construction of the so-called Reed amendment made by the Post Office department, grain alcohol advertisements and solicitations for orders for alcohol will be barred from the mails when addressed to dry territory. The department holds that grain alcohol is intoxicating liquor under the act.

Army Law Prohibition Provisions Equally Applicable to Navy and Marine Corps

An opinion by Attorney General Gregory holds that the provisions of the new Army law are equally applicable to the Navy and Marine Corps, on land or sea, and commanding officers have been so notified by Secretary of the Navy Daniels. The law forbids the sale or possession of liquor at military posts for beverage purposes, and makes it unlawful to sell intoxicants to any officer, soldier or sailor in uniform. The Attorney General's decision means that the government will enforce the law as applicable to every branch of the Federal military and naval service and to national guardsmen and others in the Federal service.

Secretary Daniels has recently helped in another direction, sending the following letter to the Governor of Maryland:

"My Dear Governor:

"I learn that the bill to close up the saloons in Prince Georges county is up for consideration, and I have been requested to state my views. The proximity of Prince Georges county to Washington, the seat of government, near the Washington Navy Yard, the gun factory, and the marine barracks would seem to make it not inappropriate for me to express the earnest hope that the bill will become a law, thus giving protection to the men in the Navy, who will be freed from the temptation of open saloons when Washington becomes dry next November. The nearness of Prince Georges county to Washington would make the open saloon there a temptation to young men in the national service to which I feel they should not be subjected.

"Cordially yours,

"JOSEPHUS DANIELS."

Maryland Legislature Passes Bill Creating Prohibition Zone Around Dry District of Columbia

The bill to close the saloons of the county has passed the legislature and will without doubt be signed by the governor. This action of the Maryland legislature puts a fifty-mile prohibition zone around the District of Columbia when it goes dry November 1 next. It has been stated that thousands of dollars have been invested in buying up property, by Washington saloonkeepers in this county, in anticipation of the day when they must close up shop in the District of Columbia. But by this act, they will have to "move on."

Spare the Farmers' Wives!

Among the various communications received from all parts of the country by the Council of National Defense, are letters from farmers' wives to the woman's committee, begging that summer motorists be warned off, so that more time on the farms may be given to war work. With the extensive food conservation measures for drying, canning, etc., now being planned by the government, we must ask the city women who motor into the country not to trespass on the time of the busy farmers' wives.

June 29, 1917.

Important Statement of National Legislative Conference

ANNA A. GORDON, President National W. C. T. U.

Special Telegram

Washington, D. C., July 2.—The National Legislative Conference, representing twenty-two of the national allied temperance organizations, met in Washington July 2, 1917. It was attended by representatives of twelve organizations and unanimously adopted the following statement:

"We heartily commend the Sixty-fifth Congress for the enactment of provisions prohibiting the sale of liquor to enlisted men and officers of the Army and Navy in uniform, prohibiting the possession of liquor for beverage purposes in training camps, authorizing the establishment of dry and anti-vice zones around the training camps and an appropriation of $500,000 for training camp equipment and activities.

"We appeal to the administration to provide the same safeguards for our soldiers and sailors in foreign lands as have been provided at home. We urge Congress to conserve all our national resources needed to win the war by prohibiting the conversion of any foodstuffs into intoxicating liquors, by authorizing and directing the President to commandeer all stocks of distilled liquors for munitions and governmental purposes, by preventing the importation of intoxicating liquors and the exportation of foodstuffs for the manufacture of intoxicating liquors abroad, and we oppose any except prohibitive taxes on the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. In view of the President's expressed fear of a filibuster on the Food Control bill and of consequent serious delay in its passage, we desire to say that we have done nothing and will do nothing to delay the passage of this bill, but we will press for adequate food conservation and for complete war prohibition, and will rely upon our trusted leaders in Congress to decide whether they can be best secured by a separate bill or by an amendment to some other measure. We would point out that hitherto there has been absolutely no delay on account of the prohibition features of the Food bill. In the House of Representatives the entire debate on prohibition lasted but seven hours and the bill reached the Senate at precisely the same moment it would have reached it had there been no such debate, that is, at the opening of the Senate on the following legislative day.

"We reaffirm our devotion to National Constitutional Prohibition as the ultimate of all prohibition legislation and we hereby call upon the Congress promptly to pass the pending resolution submitting the constitutional amendment to the several states for their action."

The foregoing statement will be sent to the President, the Cabinet, all members of Congress, and will be given to the press.

The historic gavel used by the chairman was loaned by the daughter of Sheriff Pearson, the first prohibition sheriff of Cumberland county, Maine.

Members of the conference present were: Anna A. Gordon, vice-chairman; Leigh Colvin, secretary; Dr. A. J. Barton, Edwin C. Dinwiddie, Irving Fisher, Virgil Hinshaw, W. G. Calderwood, Wayne Wheeler, Andrew Wilson, Deets Pickett, Dr. James Cannon Jr., Dr. Charles Scanlon, Mr. Davis, Boston; Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis, Mrs. Emma S. Shelton, Mrs. Lenna Lowe Yost, Dr. Wilbur Crafts, and Ernest Gordon. Mr. Pringle and Mr. Bisbee of Maine sat with the conference.

Latest News Concerning Prohibition Provisions of Food Control Bill

On June 26 the administration Food Control bill, passed by the House of Representatives, was re-written by a Senate Agricultural sub-committee, as follows:

"That from and after thirty days from the date of the approval of this act it shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to use in the manufacture of any intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes any perishable or nonperishable feeds, foods or food materials.

"Whenever the President shall find it necessary to conserve the perishable products named he is empowered to permit the use of such products in the manufacture of vinous liquors. * * *

"Whenever in the judgment of the President the public interests would be subserved thereby he is empowered to permit the limited use of the materials mentioned in the manufacture of malt or fermented liquors, and to prescribe the alcoholic content thereof."

The Senate Agricultural Committee very promptly rejected the measure submitted by the sub-committee and recommended as a substitute for the House prohibition provision an amendment prohibiting the manufacture of beer as well as distilled liquors, giving the President discretion to permit the use of grapes in the manufacture of wine.

In reply to a request of Senator Martin, the Democratic floor leader, to the President that he give the temperance leaders an expression of opinion with regard to the wisest and most patriotic policy to be pursued toward the food administration legislation now pending, Mr. Wilson wrote to Rev. James Cannon, Jr., of the Anti-Saloon League the following letter:

"My Dear Mr. Cannon: I am very glad to respond to the request of Senator Martin, the Democratic floor leader in the Senate, that I give to your legislative committee an expression of my opinion with regard to the wisest and most patriotic policy to be pursued towards the food administration legislation now pending in the Congress.

"I regard the immediate passage of the bill as of vital consequence to the safety and defense of the nation. Time is of the essence; and yet it has become evident that heated and protracted debate will delay the passage of the bill indefinitely if the provisions affecting the manufacture of beer and wines are retained and insisted upon.

"In these circumstances I have not hesitated to say to members of the Senate who have been kind enough to consult me that it would undoubtedly be in the public interest in this very critical matter if the friends of those provisions should consent to their elimination from the present measure.

"Feeling that your committee is actuated by the same patriotic motives which inspire me, I am confident that these considerations will seem to you, as they seem to me, imperative."

"With much respect,

"Sincerely yours,

"WOODROW WILSON."

REPLY TO PRESIDENT'S LETTER

"To the President,
"The White House,
"Washington, D. C.:

"We have earnestly considered the statement in your letter of yesterday to the Legislative Committee of the Anti-Saloon League of America, that in the face of the present food crisis you are greatly concerned lest the early passage of the Food Administration legislation now pending in Congress be jeopardized by a heated and protracted debate upon certain sections of the bill relating to the manufacture of foodstuffs into intoxicating liquors.

"We are aware of the threats made by the friends of beer and wine in the Senate of an indefinite and protracted filibuster against those provisions of the bill. We beg to assure you that as patriotic Americans, determined to uphold you as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy in the present war, we will not for our constituency offer any obstruction to the prompt passage of the Food Control bill.

"Of course, we cannot presume to indicate to members of Congress what action they should take in view of this request from the President of the United States. They will doubtless act in accordance with their convictions of duty.

"We are glad to note that your request applies only to the pending Food Administration legislation. It will be our purpose to urge the passage of legislation prohibiting the waste of foodstuffs in the manufacture of beer and wines, at the earliest possible date, either in the form of a separate bill or in connection with other war legislation.

"We assure you of our purpose as patriotic American citizens to co-operate in every possible way in the winning of the great war in which our nation is engaged.

"Sincerely and respectfully yours,

"JAMES CANNON, JR.,
"A. J. BARTON,
"WAYNE B. WHEELER,
"Legislative Committee Anti-Saloon League of America.
"P. A. BAKER,
"General Superintendent.
"EDWIN C. DINWIDDIE,
"Legislative Superintendent."

FEDERAL BONE DRY AND ANTI-LIQUOR ADVERTISING LAWS IN EFFECT JULY 1

The federal "bone dry" law and the anti-liquor advertising law went into effect July 1. The former makes it illegal to order or purchase liquor for beverage purposes in a state where the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors are prohibited, or to cause intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes to be transported in interstate commerce into such states. Any person or corporation who causes liquor to be transported through common carriers, or aids in the offense, will be liable to a penalty of $1,000 or six months' imprisonment, or both. All of the twenty prohibition states are affected by this provision.

Anti-Liquor Advertising Law

The federal anti-liquor advertising law provides that no letter, postal card, pamphlet, or publication of any kind, containing any advertisement of spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors of any kind, or containing a solicitation of an order or orders for said liquors, or any of them, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States, or be delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier, when addressed or directed to any person, firm, corporation, or association, or other addressee, at any place or point in any state or territory of the United States, at which it is, by law in force in the state or territory on July 1, 1917, unlawful to advertise or solicit orders for such liquors, or any of them respectively."

SOUTH DAKOTA BECOMES PROHIBITION STATE JULY 1

South Dakota's "bone dry" law went into effect July 1. It is very drastic and every confidence is felt that the governor and other law-enforcement officials will enforce it strictly. It provides that "It shall be the duty of the governor of the state to see that the provisions of this act and all laws that may be enacted relating to the traffic in intoxicating liquors shall be faithfully and impartially enforced." Already, it is reported, a state sheriff and deputies have been appointed to supervise the work of carrying out the provisions of the law.

BIG CITY MAYOR WHO DEMONSTRATED THAT PROHIBITION PROHIBITS

ZOE BECKLEY

When, a few years ago, the state passed a prohibition law, the city of Savannah sat back and laughed till the tears ran down its cheeks. "Prohibition!" it gasped when it got its breath; "Well, now, I reckon not! No state legislature is going to interfere in Savannah's personal liberty. No, sir-ree! Yow! Wow! Whee! Pass the julep."

You see, Savannah had for a long time regarded itself pretty much as the hub of the so-to-say universe. Savannah was Georgia. There wouldn't have been any Georgia if Oglethorpe hadn't come up the Savannah river and debarked at a spot whereon the Daughters of the Confederacy (or was it the D. A. R.?) have placed a very beautiful marble bench.

After nearly 200 years of supremacy and liberty of action, Savannah wasn't going to have the state put anything over on it like prohibition.

Something more than a year ago the people elected Wallace Joshua Pierpont, business man and financier, to be mayor of Savannah, and among Mr. Pierpont's aims was to make prohibition prohibit. This kicked up trouble.

Mayor Relies on Figures

Persons went gunning for the mayor. Others were more subtle in their methods. Altogether the new civic head had a rather bad time of it. But somehow the loopholes in the law got stopped up, and before Savannah realized what had happened there was no more near-beer, no more juleps, no more fizzes, highballs or cocktails. The place was a desert, and dealers in intoxicants moved away to escape starvation.

Merchants who had been carrying both dry and wet goods went weeping to Mayor Pierpont, prophesying ruin, pleading, cajoling, threatening, and later doing much to block the enforcement of the Saharan law. The mayor merely compressed his lips behlnd his ample gray mustache and hewed to the line.

"Now let me tell you a few results of this dry law," said his honor when I called upon him at the handsome, stained-glass-domed city hall. He is a big, quiet man, Mayor Pierpont, who looks as if he could stand a lot of hammering. "First, take the imprisonment figures: The records of the city show that for the entire year of 1916, including the four wet months, there was a total of 8,719 arrests, against 11,480 for 1915.

"There were 256 fewer calls for police ambulances. The police matron had under charge only 87 prisoners, as against 167 the year before, nearly 50 per cent reduction. There was a decrease of more than 20 per cent in value of property stolen and 6,625 less articles pledged with pawnbrokers. Does that tell a story?

Incentive to Theft Gone

"You simply cannot estimate the saving this has been to the people. A negro workman, for instance, steals a tool from his employer and pawns it for a trifle to buy a drink. With the chance for the drink removed, there is no incentive to steal.

Business Gets Boost

"Of course," continued the mayor, "the law has been bitterly assailed as an 'invasion of personal liberty.' But I hold it is not wrong to prohibit a man from brutalizing himself. Or to protect women, children and the home from disgrace and degradation. Or to take a step that decreases crime of every classification more than 50 per cent.

"The law is said to be tyrannical, but it has reduced the scourge of lunacy 54 per cent. If this is tyranny, then the whole theory of civilization is wrong."

Not satisfied with police statistics, Mayor Pierpont has done some poking around on his own account among certain shopkeepers who nearly had fits when the dry law went into effect. One man who sold liquor in connection with general merchandise is a good illustration.

This firm formerly sold to colored people from $7,000 to $8,000 worth of wet goods a month. After eliminating the booze department the storekeepers still wore a fine large smile, for which Mayor Pierpont, notebook in hand, inquired the reason.

"I'm ashamed to tell you," grinned the shopman, "how much profit I make now! My sales have increased $12,000 a month." And the merchant cast down his eyes demurely. He "wouldn't have believed it, Mr. Mayor." And he was "sorry he opposed the law so bitterly."

He went on to tell how colored workingmen used to come into the store Saturday nights with a palmful of silver. This they separated into two heaps—the big heap for booze and the ratty little pile of quarters, dimes and nickels for household supplies that had to be bought in order to keep the missus from making too big a fuss.

"Now they come in," said the shopkeeper, "with a ten-spot and buy everything the family needs!"

Real estate men told how they were able to collect rents. Bank presidents recited the increased deposits of saving accounts. Hotel men chanted hosannahs at improved conditions.

A certain shoe dealer told the mayor it was the first time in five years he had been "cold sober" and able to jack up and efficiencyize his business.

The only persons who are still weeping are the pawnbrokers, and a judge or two who had made a reputation for improving the state roads by sentencing malefactors to the chain gang.

"There used to be enough free convict labor to keep the roads up. Now there are so few men in the jails that we have to get appropriations for the upkeep of highways!

"All this sounds good, doesn't it?" concluded Mayor Pierpont. "But the people must learn their own power to shape legislation. They must vote and they must prepare themselves to cast a ballot, and a wise ballot, for eternal vigilance is the only way we can keep the power we now hold. Political victories are won by ballots, and that means that every good man in Georgia who believes in law and order and prohibition shall at all times be registered and prepared to vote."

SOUTH AFRICA WORKING FOR PROHIBITION

ANNA A. GORDON

The national temperance forces of South Africa have recently held at Cape Town, Cape Province, a most significant temperance convention. The South African Temperance Alliance and the South African People's Union have united in one organization, to be known as the "South African Convention and the South African Council." The Council is the administrative body of the South African Convention. It consists of eleven members elected by the convention, and of a representative from each of the temperance organizations and religious denominations of South Africa. In its editorial comment on the convention, The Tribune of Cape Town refers to the "momentous declaration" by Mr. J. W. Jagger for a policy of total prohibition for black and white throughout the land as the "sanest and most courageous utterance upon the liquor question ever made by a responsible political leader in South Africa." "It came upon us," continues The Tribune, "like a peal of thunder from the high heavens. In addition there was the really wonderful and unlooked for absolute unanimity of the convention on such vexed questions as nationalization and the extension of the Durban Kaffir beer system, points which had shown signs of seducing, if it were possible, even the elect. Was it all chance? There is a further consideration. The convention palpably cemented that drawing together of the churches and temperance societies in opposition to the liquor traffic and the alcohol habit, which is the most encouraging feature of the day. Clergymen and laymen of all denominations and creeds were met in conference against the ancient and deadly enemy of God and man. And it may be that with them were some who do not share the full plenitude of their faith and belong to no recognized fold, but who are nevertheless as convinced as any of—

> " 'That God, which ever lives and loves,
> One God, one law, one element,
> And one far-off divine event,
> To which the whole creation moves.'

"A cause which can thus draw together churches and individuals, differing on many points, and unite them in the service of the people, must surely be of God himself.

" 'If God be for us, who can be against us?' "

Senator T. L. Schreiner discussed the prohibition of the sale of liquor to natives, declaring that the best interests, not only of the natives and colored people, but of the Europeans in South Africa, demand the protection of the former from the curse of intoxicating liquor. He stated that the great mining interests demand protection of their industries; the sheep and cattle farmers consider it would insure additional safety to their flocks and herds; judges and magistrates say it is needed in order to lessen crime. Wise native chiefs, like Khama, have secured it for their people. The natives themselves pray for this protection. Count Wilmot, a beloved and veteran temperance worker, in an able address, proved that the nationalization of the liquor traffic had been "weighed and found wanting." Mrs. Mackenzie, president of the South Africa W. C. T. U., offered a resolution, urging both houses of Parliament to pass through all its stages and without material amendment the People's Direct Vote, which reached second reading in the last session of the Senate. The resolution was carried unanimously. Miss Emilie J. Solomon, president of the W. C. T. U. of Cape Province, supported the important resolution through which the temperance forces of South Africa were merged into the South African Convention and the South African Council.

Other official members of the W. C. T. U. of South Africa participated in this important meeting. A grandson of Chief Khama was an interested delegate. Senator Schreiner was elected president and Miss Solomon, vice president of the South African Council. Mrs. Hartnoll, another of our leading white ribboners in South Africa, was elected one of the eleven members of the Council. The Archbishop of Cape Town addressed the great gathering. "It is an enormous encouragement," said the archbishop, "when a man like Mr. Jagger considers that the real remedy for the liquor evil is total prohibition." The archbishop expressed his belief that such a law would before long be enacted for South Africa.

THE REVENUE QUESTION WILL HAVE NO TERRORS FOR SOBER AMERICA

MARGARET B. PLATT

"During a twenty-month period of the present war two and one-half million tons of food-products, as well as one and one-half million tons of coal, were used by oversea brewers and distillers," says the July Bulletin of the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society.

"Much of the trouble met by the British Cabinet was previously brewed as part of the Master Brewers' master brew of England. In all, 817,000 acres of land were reserved for the use of drink-producers, manufacturers of men-slackers. Lloyd-George's declaration that 'England has suffered more from alcohol than from all the German submarines,' meant for that date that there were enough men in the mills and foundries preferring their grog to their job to hold up the munitions and equipment that his nation, and any other facing war, must have." More than this, "With money and spare time British women have been increasingly patronizing the publics to the degradation of home-life and the weakening of this second line of defense."

Our own Department of Agriculture announces that $145,000,000 in food products are used by drink makers annually. Beer-brewing in 1916 destroyed 67,000,000 bushels of corn, rye and rice. Professor Carver of Harvard, states that 7,000,000,000 pounds of edible materials are consumed every twelve months in intoxicants —enough to feed an army of a million men for seven years—and yet our government hesitates to proclaim national prohibition, fearing the loss of revenue!

Bishop William Lawrence, in his diocesan address at the annual Episcopal convention, said: "The revenue gained by the government, state and city, from the liquor interests bears no comparison to the enormous expenditure for the effects of these interests." Quoting from the report of a committee of Economists and Food Experts, professors of Harvard University and Medical School and of Yale University, the Bishop gave the following information in his report:

"We have reviewed the statistics submitted in regard to the quantity of food stuffs used in the manufacture of malt and distilled liquors in the United States. It is probable that as much as one-sixth of the total may be necessary to the production of denatured alcohol. At a low estimate of its caloric or fuel value, the remaining five-sixths, would supply the energy requirements of 7,000,000 men a year."

Is not the loss of revenue which accrues by continuing the manufacture of alcoholic beverages far greater than any loss that could accrue by abolishing that manufacture? When we consider the waste and moral degeneracy of manhood, the waste created through the necessity of supporting asylums, jails, almshouses, etc., the waste caused by the degradation of women, the millions of defective children and all the evil effects following the use of alcoholic liquors, can we, dare we, say that the revenue derived by government from liquors can in any measure compensate the nation, or in any way equal the great loss caused by drink? In these crucial days, when millions of America's best men and women are hastening to give and do and sacrifice and die for our country, shall it be said that our government refused to heed the appeal made by these same loyal patriots, to prohibit the liquor traffic, and for the sake of a few paltry millions still nurtures that deadly foe?

The government need not fear! Sober America will furnish the needed revenue! It is the loyal devotion, the heroic self-sacrifice of her millions of sober men and women that America needs today to carry her triumphantly through the months, and years, perhaps, of fearful trial—not a revenue paid into her treasury by an internal foe, as a price for the privilege of debauching and degrading her people wherever possible.

Is it not time we cease to compromise with evil for a price? Is it not time we learn wisdom by the experience of other nations? Is it not time to remember that "The nation and Kingdom that will not serve God shall perish"? The nation that seeks to know and do the will of God will not need to seek a revenue from Satan's coffers. Is this great nation willing to stand before the world as a dependent upon the liquor traffic?

Drummed Out! —San Francisco Examiner

Personnel of the Navy Favors Dry Regime

A high tribute to the sobriety of the United States Navy was paid by Captain F. W. Bartlett of the Navy bureau of steam engineering, to an applauding company of 200 sailors gathered for a dinner tendered them by the men of a Philadelphia church.

"The American Navy will triumph over that of Germany," said the speaker, "because of the high standard of morality of the blue-jackets and marines of this country, the result principally of the absence of drunkenness among the men. Our blue-jackets and marines never return to their ships drunk after a period of shore liberty. In the days of the old Navy it was considered the proper thing for 'all hands' to come back to the ship 'gloriously drunk.' The men who did not do so were called 'mollycoddles,' or names equivalent. But the Navy has changed, and the men of the Navy have changed, and it is time that the American public begins to realize it.

"We have in the Navy today men from the best families in their communities. I remember when ninety per cent of the men in the Navy were foreigners with a few Americans from the riff-raff along the coasts. Today ninety-six per cent of the men in the Navy are American born, and most of them are from inland states, such as Kansas, the good prohibition state, which sets an example for the rest of the nation.

"The reason we do not have rum in the Navy any more is because you men in the Navy will not stand for it, not because you cannot get it. You represent a higher type of American than we have ever had in the Navy, and principally because you despise drink. You do not admire a shipmate on account of his capacity for drink. You scorn him because you know he brings disgrace upon you and upon the service. This is one of the finest things in the service. Because of these high ideals you are going to win this war."

National General Secretary
MARY FRANCES WILLARD ANDERSON
79 Trowbridge St., Cambridge, Mass.

*"Attempt Great Things for God.
Expect Great Things from God."*

National College Secretary
CHRISTINE I. TINLING
605 Westover Ave., Norfolk, Va.

"PUT OUT THE SIGNAL"—THE CHILDREN FOLLOW OUR WAY!

MARY FRANCES WILLARD ANDERSON

"An angel paused in his upward flight
With a seed of love, and truth and light,
And cried, 'Oh, where shall this seed be sown
That it yield most fruit when fully grown?'
The Saviour heard; and he said, as he smiled,
'Place it for me in the heart of a child.'"

"Both the free man and the drunkard of the next generation will come from the ranks of the children."—SMITH.

The opportunity to influence the children is ours. Canon Farrar once said, "Give us the children of England and in twenty years England shall be a nation of total abstainers." America should be strong enough to demand and enforce protection for her children, but as yet we have not been granted national prohibition and the children must be taught.

A year ago this month there were suggested to our Young People's Branch members some practical ways in which we might help further the work of the L. T. L., and I am wondering how many Branches have really taken a lively interest in the wee tots. If you have not an L. T. L. in your community, this is the time to organize. Arrange a walk, story-hour, piazza meeting, or picnic. Interest the boys and girls in the work of our Loyal Temperance Legion and invite them to join.

A great responsibility rests with us in setting the right example and in placing danger signals, where dangers now exist.

Do you remember Whittier's story of Conductor Bradley, who lost his life on the Connecticut railroad in 1873? As he lay crushed and mangled, his lips moved and those watching over him bent down and heard him whisper, "Put out the signal for the other train."

"Oh, grand, supreme endeavor! Not in vain
That last brave act of failing tongue and brain!
Freighted with life, the downward rushing train."

Do YOU SEE! We of this generation must enlist, instruct and influence those of the next generation who are coming after. The liquor traffic is waiting to destroy. Let us put out the signal! To do less than this is to fail in our duty.

Come, Young People's Branch members, let us win the children!

CAN YOU FIND THEM?

(Below are some hidden prohibition states, territories and provinces of Canada. Dr. N. Louise Rand, an energetic Y. P. B. worker in Massachusetts, prepared them for her young people. It is a helpful and interesting game for the social hour. Try to complete the list!)

1. I f(ind I ana)lyzed the wrong sentence.
2. When I went to Piedmont a naughty girl stole my purse.
3. There are many attractive spots on earth, but a home is dearest of them all.
4. I saw a drama in each city I visited.
5. What a pity it is that more go nightly to the movies than to the church.
6. In Borneo, either a savage or giant is likely to pounce on you at any minute.
7. Mary hid a hod of coal under the table.
8. He was indeed a poor artist, for that is not the color a door should be.
9. The Smiths send their washing to Nora McCarthy's laundry.
10. That is a splendid yacht, and to man it Obadiah has a crew of five able-bodied men.
11. When I heard the socialist begin to speak I shouted, "Please don't; a riot will surely be the result."
12. How glum and dismal Bert acted all the evening.
13. I saw Royal ask a Scotchman to dance the "Highland Fling."

Do not forget your Y. P. B. "Poster Hike."

HALT! THINK! ACT! Y. P. B. GIRLS

(The following is taken from the South African White Ribbon. It has a message for our Y. P. B. girls.)

Halt just for a few moments, girls, and look back over the past two years. How have they been lived. Think well and be just; just to yourselves and just to others.

Have your ideals been high, and have you tried to live up to them? Have you done what you should, given what you could? Have you been selfish or generous, thoughtful for others or only for yourselves? Willing to do little things you did not care about, or left them to others that you might do the things which brought you before the eyes of the public? Have you spoken to the stranger at your meetings, or allowed her to sit alone? Have you ever thought of making things a little easier for your president, or is it nothing to you who does the work so long as you are not expected to do any?

Will you think quietly for a while over these things and decide which you have done, and what you will do in the future? Many will say: "Oh, but the past two years have been so full of war work, there has been no time for anything else." Again, stop and think. Have you really done so much war work that no time has been left for these other things?

We are living in an extraordinary age, and it is going to make extraordinary women of you girls, if you will allow it. But there are many traits which must be cast aside if we would be what the men who are coming back to us expect. Do not let them be disappointed in you, girls. These boys who went away lads, are coming back serious-minded, thoughtful men. Why, girls, your influence will be greater than ever. See to it that it shall be better and purer. Do not wait till the boys come back, but begin now to put aside all selfishness, haughtiness, extravagance, unkindness, and any of those little ways which do not, and never will, help to uplift, and put on the whole armor of righteousness. Then, and then only, will our "Y" girls have the influence they should; and other girls and men, too, will consider it a privilege to belong to a society with such a fine army of young King's daughters.

EMERGENCY CHILD LABOR FOR FOOD. NOT ALCOHOL

The waste of child labor in raising grain for alcohol is one of the reasons for wartime prohibition urged by the executive committee of the National Consumers' League in resolutions recently adopted. Child labor is now being recruited in great numbers—50,000 in New York state alone—for agricultural work, the league points out, and this grain for the raising of which boys are giving up several months of the school year, the league insists, should not be wasted in making alcoholic beverages.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

LIQUOR PROPAGANDA CANNOT LIVE IN COLLEGIATE ATMOSPHERE

"Liquor propaganda simply cannot live in the collegiate atmosphere," declared Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, in a commencement address delivered to the senior class of Boston University.

In his address on "The Christian College and the Moral Battle," Bishop Hughes predicted the certain defeat of the saloon forces. He said, in part:

"This address would be blamably incomplete if it did not include a reference to the premier reform of our day. The brewers and saloonkeepers are in distress! They have been suddenly smitten with a mighty passion for law-abiding citizenship. The mad dog is asking to be regulated! But when we see black crows living in close fellowship with scarecrows, we are foolish enough to refuse confidence to the scarecrows and to assume that they are not performing their proper function.

"The graduates of the Christian college have been standing in the very van of the marching hosts of temperance. Neal Dow came out from the Quaker Academy at New Bedford, Mass., to become a gallant leader in the war for the Union, and then, when that was over, to become the most white-plumed knight of Maine. The knight of the white plume was followed by the lady of the white ribbon. One day a girl graduate walked down from the platform of Northwestern University with a diploma in her hand. She became the leader of a refined and persuasive agitation against strong drink. She was not lonely in her campaign, for thousands of earnest women joined her until the Woman's Christian Temperance Union became an organization of rare power,—an organization that has had much to do in preparing sentiment for the recent decisive advances against the American Moloch. No wonder is it that when our Republic built the Hall of Fame, high on its walls of honor was quickly placed the name of the queen of the white-ribboned hosts, a graduate of one of our Christian colleges, Frances E. Willard.

* * *

"Nor does the study of this particular reform, as reenforced by the Christian college, end here. There is a negative testimony. Not long since the venders of ardent spirits began a movement for the study of their special pleadings and their vicious half-truths in the colleges of America. But the college man has a conscience that is sometimes more social than personal. He may be a roysterer himself; yet he is not often equal to the insincerity that flouts science and economics and pleads for an undoubted social curse and scourge. The liquor propaganda simply cannot live in the collegiate atmosphere. It breaks to pieces against that fine idealism that haunts college halls and is higher than college towers. The state college could not brook the teaching, while the church college casts it out as a foul intruder. All this is a negative witness to the relation of the colleges to a great moral reform.

"What hope is there for the long perpetuation of a traffic that so outrages collegiate idealism as to be deemed anathema? All these facts may well give the cohorts of iniquity concern. Their palaces are being closed daily. They cannot well abide the force of a movement that has been too steady for wild fanaticism, too earnest for mincing diplomacy, too true for scientific evasion, too accurate for economic denial, too broad for partisan juggling, too deep for surface hindrances, too high for earthly arguments, too righteous for any cheap and petty compromises."

GLEANINGS FROM STUDENT COLLEGE PUBLICATIONS OF MINNESOTA

BESSIE LATHE SCOVELL

Since our nation has entered the great world conflict our college publications have shown a decided spirit of patriotism and there has come to the surface the submerged mentality and spirituality which sometimes one might be led to think would not again appear.

Four hundred senior engineers of the Minnesota State University have adopted the following resolution: "Resolved, That we respond to the call of the country in ready and willing service. We undertake to maintain our part of the war free from hatred, brutality or graft; true to the American purpose and ideals. Aware of the temptations incident to camp life and the moral and social wreckage involved, we covenant together, as college men, to live the clean life and to seek to establish the American uniform as a symbol and guarantee of real manhood." The men of the college of dentistry and medicine also adopted the same resolution.

In an editorial, "The Things Men Die For," in The Minnesota Daily, a publication of the students of the state university, this standard, which would do credit to mature years, was set forth: "The spirit of the men who are training at Fort Snelling offers a good commentary on the motives of the men who are giving themselves for service in this war. They are a splendid bunch of men, bound together by ideals of service which make life at camp a spiritual revelation. There are none who take their work lightly; they are going into it with a realization that if they are sent over to the trenches few of them will ever return. . . . The men are not thinking so much of the place of their own country in this conflict, but of the possible and inevitable effects upon humanity. They feel that there is something essentially wrong with a system that has always called for the sacrifice of the best since the beginning of time; they have the faith that this must be the last great blunder of the world, out of which shall emerge a social order in which the things most worth living for need not be purchased with life itself. 'I do not know why I am called into this,' said one young man. 'I cannot understand why it is necessary to destroy the best of American manhood in this conflict, but, whatever the explanation of this is, I cannot hold myself back from it. It is my job now, and I'll see it through. Patriotism has no meaning for me, but if this war will bring lasting peace to the whole world, I'm willing to be killed for it.' This is the thing men are willing to die for,—not for the fame and glory of the American flag, but for an enduring peace which shall insure the divine gifts of life and happiness against the selfishness of men to all the nations of the earth."

The May issue of The Minnesota Daily gives three reasons for prohibition in wartime: Food, efficiency and health.

The Mac Weekly, the student publication of Macalester College, St. Paul, reports Norman Nygaard, of that college, as winning first place in the state prohibition oratorical contest, and "completely shattering the liquor interests' plea of personal liberty." Another issue contains "The Fable of the Pill Consumer" (cigaret), and concludes with the epitaph, "Gone Up in Smoke."

A recent issue of College Breezes, the student magazine of Gustavus Adolphus College, St. Peter, contains an excellent article, "Is It Worth While?" by Professor Arthur Wald, of the German department, in which he takes up the case of tobacco and the cigaret. He has compiled a strong case against the "little deadly." He quotes Thomas A. Edison and Henry Ford as employing no person who smokes cigarets. Concerning college men and tobacco, he says: "It requires no unusual power of observation to see that this evil is attacking the very root of all that is best and noblest in our educational ideals. If there is any place on God's green earth where the filthy thing should be forever taboo, it is the American college. No scientific demonstration is needed to show the effects of the habit on college men. The lessened power of concentration and initiative, the decreased vitality, the general lowering of efficiency are only too evident, and because a student's work is mental and indoors the effects are naturally more marked than in the case of a manual worker or one who spends much time out of doors. Addiction to the cigaret habit is furthermore so generally accompanied by certain unmistakable traits of character—a blunting of the moral sense, an increasing lack of ambition, a more or less marked indifference to the comfort of others, that one can hardly escape the conclusion of cause and effect. The cigaret smoker puts himself in the position of a sprinter who ties a weight to his foot before the race. The college man is engaged in a competition that is ever growing keener. The unfit are cast aside as the merciless process of elimination goes on. To win in American business competition or in any of the professions, one must be physically, mentally and morally fit. The cigaretist, by his own choice, puts himself in the long line of self-made degenerates to whom the door of opportunity, once open, is forever barred." Professor Wald gives many quotations from eminent authorities, among them the following from Hudson Maxim, the inventor, "If all boys could be made to know, that with every breath of cigaret smoke they inhale imbecility and exhale manhood; that the cigaret is a maker of invalids, criminals and fools —not men—it ought to deter some."

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, July 5, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

Miss Anna A. Gordon, National President, left Evanston, Friday evening, June 29, having been summoned to Washington on matters relating to pending legislation.

NEXT ISSUE WILL BE JULY 19

Our subscribers will recall that the announcement was made last January that only fifty numbers of THE UNION SIGNAL would be issued this year instead of the usual number, fifty-two. The expense of publishing the paper has increased enormously during the past few months and virtually all religious and reform papers have raised their subscription price. THE UNION SIGNAL will endeavor as long as possible to continue at the $1.00 a year rate for the weekly edition, 35 cents a year for the monthly Campaign Edition, but the management deems it necessary to cut down the expenses somewhat by eliminating two numbers during the vacation season, one in July and one in August. Therefore, the next issue of the paper will be a combination number dated July 12-19, and will be issued at the time the July 19 number would ordinarily appear.

VICTROLA RECORDS AND LITERATURE NEEDED

We are informed by the young men in charge of the recreation activities at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station that they can use to advantage in the Y. M. C. A. hut, where the boys congregate in their leisure hours, any comparatively new current literature and good victrola records. They do not care for magazines or weeklies over two weeks old. Good use can also be made of wholesome, high-grade works of fiction, recent books of travel, adventure or biography. Everything sent should be very carefully packed. Send to Mr. J. N. Dana, Great Lakes, Illinois, care of Y. M. C. A. Camp Paul Jones.

WHY EXEMPT BEER?

As we go to press it seems probable that the Food Control bill will pass the Senate with only prohibition of the use of grains for distilled liquors included, action concerning beer and wine to be left to the discretion of the President. It is certainly a matter for regret that prohibition of food products in the manufacture of beer should be deferred even a short time inasmuch as the amount wasted in the manufacture of beer is actually much greater than that wasted in the making of distilled liquors, for a large quantity of the latter is used for denaturization purposes. Is it not manifestly unfair to ask the women of this nation to skimp and save every crumb while the government permits the waste of 3,556,103,596 pounds of food material in the brewing of beer?

HARVARD AND YALE NO USE FOR JOHN BARLEYCORN

John Barleycorn was accorded special recognition by Harvard and Yale at the commencement season this year, but it was not of a character to increase the profits of the distillers and brewers. A vote of the alumni of Yale taken by letter upon the proposition, "Should Class Reunion Funds Be Expended For Liquor," showed 8,213 against it to 220 in favor of it, and a vote on whether liquor should be served at reunion headquarters, called forth a vote of 7,796 against to 593 for. Evidently that once popular college glee, "Here's to Good Old Yale, Drink It Down," must be relegated to the scrap heap. The famous eastern college will hereafter be known as "bone dry Yale."

Not to be outdistanced by its rival, Harvard this year inaugurated a "bone dry" schedule for its reunion festivities. Even the class of '67, fifty years out of college, did not serve champagne, the custom of fifty year classes from time immemorial. Hereafter Harvard "will drive dull care away" by other and saner methods than indulgence in alcoholic beverages, and thereby promote its efficiency as an educational institution of high standing.

IS UNCLE SAM A FRIEND OF ALCOHOL?

Among the United States Army Regulations is found the following: "The sale of, or dealing in beer, wine or any intoxicating liquors by any person in any post exchange or canteen or army transport, or upon any premises used for military purposes by the United States is prohibited. Commanding officers will carry the provisions of this paragraph into full force and effect and will be held strictly responsible that no exceptions or evasions are permitted within their respective jurisdictions."

In 1914, the Secretary of the Navy issued the following order: "The use or introduction for drinking purposes of alcoholic liquors on board of any naval vessel or within any yard or station is strictly prohibited, and commanding officers will be held directly responsible for the enforcement of this order."

In February, 1899, the Hon. John D. Long, then secretary of the Navy, since deceased, prohibited liquors to all enlisted seamen. General Leonard Wood wrote, "The general effect of alcohol is unfavorable. Soldiers are much better off without it."

The Boston Globe announced in the fall of 1916:

"Boys 'hanging around saloons' are not wanted by Uncle Sam on land or sea. Alcohol does not make a good soldier. He must be fit to fight. Clear brain, steady nerves, acute eye and safe judgment are absolutely essential. But they are not in intoxicants."

If Uncle Sam does not want his soldiers and sailors to have alcoholic liquors, why should he countenance its manufacture and sale to the rest of his people, many of whom may yet be called upon to serve in the Army or Navy, and all of whom are already called upon to do their best to help the government by every means in their power? If alcohol is not good for the soldier and sailor is it good for the private citizen?

If the Secretary of the Navy could lawfully prohibit the use or introduction of alcoholic liquors for drinking purposes on board of any naval vessel or within any yard or station, and if the Army regulations could lawfully forbid the sale or dealing in any intoxicating liquors in any post exchange or canteen or upon any premises used for military purposes, could not Uncle Sam himself forbid the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors anywhere within his domains?

If Uncle Sam deems it necessary to protect his soldiers and sailors from alcoholic liquors, is it not equally necessary to protect the people who stand back of the soldiers and sailors and must provide the food and clothing, the money and munitions and all the wherewithal for the maintenance of a great army and navy and nation? Then, too, these people will be called upon to furnish more boys pretty soon to add to the number already called to the colors. In order that these should all be at their best, should they not be fully protected from alcoholic liquors before they are called to serve their country in uniform, as well as after that?

If alcohol is not good for the soldier and sailor, for whom is it good?

If alcohol spoils boys for the Army and Navy, will it not spoil them for any other useful occupation? Doesn't Uncle Sam need all his boys at their best, no matter in what line they are to serve their country? Is Uncle Sam more a friend to alcohol than to all his boys?

THAT INCREASED CONSUMPTION

Do not take the report of the Internal Revenue department as an accurate thermometer of prohibition progress. Remember that the statements given therein are based on the amount of liquor withdrawn from bond, not on that actually consumed. The fact that there have been heavy tax payments made in the past six months by the distillers, as given in the Internal Revenue report, is interpreted by many as indicating a heavy consumption of alcoholic liquors. As a matter of fact, this is due to the large withdrawal of liquors from bond by the dealers in anticipation of federal prohibition or at least increased liquor taxation because of the war. "The new Federal tax . . . and other legislation have unquestionably been responsible for these heavy tax payments," explains Mida's Criterion. "The heavy withdrawals that have been noted during the past month are undoubtedly due in a large measure to these very conditions" (action by Congress on national prohibition), remark Mida's editors in another place. It should also be taken into account, in interpreting these figures, that a large per cent of the distilled liquors reported by the Internal Revenue department is used for denaturization purposes.

W. C. T. U. AMBULANCE JOTTINGS

"The white ribbon ambulance proposition is taking like wildfire," writes Rozette Hendrix, president of the Minnesota W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Althea G. Quimby, president of the Maine W. C. T. U., writes, "I think Maine has already subscribed her proportion for the Ambulance Fund. Raising this money is the quickest and easiest work I ever attempted. The needs of the 'boys at the front' and the appeal from Miss Gordon make a wonderful combination to open the wallets of the people."

The first contribution received for the ambulance fund by the W. C. T. U. of Northern California was one dollar from a woman in a town where there is no union.

Comfort Bags Welcomed by Soldiers of the Orient

At this time, when white ribboners all over the United States are busy making comfort bags for lads of the Army and Navy, it is interesting to recall this pertinent bit of Japanese W. C. T. U. history:

A dozen or more years ago, when Japan and Russia were at war, Japanese white ribboners, under the leadership of the courageous president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the Sunrise Kingdom, Madame Yajima, undertook the making of comfort bags for the soldiers. So well were the gifts received by the men that the government asked for 60,000 of these useful receptacles, 30,000 for the Army and as many for the Navy. While the idea of the comfort bags originated with the W. C. T. U., it was soon taken up by other bodies of Japanese women, rich and poor, high and low, old and young, eagerly undertaking the work. Among the bags that went from Tokyo were some made by the Japanese princesses, Fumi and Kanē.

Upon one occasion twelve cart loads of the "little comfort bringers" had just reached a division of the Army and were awaiting distribution when a band of Chinese bandits undertook to steal them, only to be defeated. In the exciting encounter some of the bags were punctured by bullets. One of these was received by a man who had an aversion to anything which savored of Christianity. Scornfully throwing away the literature found, among other things, in the bag, he carefully kept as a charm a small towel which had been pierced by a lead missile in the scrimmage, seeming to regard it as priceless.

Everywhere the soldiers and sailors gladly received the W. C. T. U. comfort bags, prizing them both because of their usefulness and as an expression of the loving sympathy of the mothers of Japan. The men in the ranks and the officers alike expressed appreciation of the gifts. One commander, Colonel Shiga, is reported to have remarked, "The keen interest and sincere sympathy shown in these carefully gotten up gifts give me more courage and strength than the coming of thousands of soldiers to help."

The United Committee for Temperance Work in the Army and Navy

At the suggestion of the Federal Council of Churches, the United Committee for Temperance Work in the Army and Navy was formed for the purpose of outlining a temperance educational program for the Army and Navy. This committee held a preliminary meeting May 31, at which Miss Anna A. Gordon represented the National W. C. T. U. After a day's discussion of possible activities, a sub-committee was appointed to prepare a program to submit to the larger committee at a later date. The members of this sub-committee were: Mr. Daniel A. Poling, chairman; Dr. Charles Stelzle of the Federal Council of Churches, Miss Anna A. Gordon of the National W. C. T. U., Mr. D. Leigh Colvin of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, Miss Cora Stoddard of the Scientific Temperance Federation, and Dr. E. C. Dinwiddie of the Anti-Saloon League.

On June 12, the entire sub-committee met and reported the result of a survey made of the supplies of the respective organizations in the way of leaflets, posters, stereopticon slides, etc. Dr. Fisher of the Y. M. C. A. sat with the committee in an advisory capacity. It was agreed to present to the full committee the following program:

1. That a United Committee on War Temperance Activities in Army and Navy be organized.
2. That, in pursuance of a vote at the meeting of May 31, those to whom this call is sent constitute the organizing group.
3. That this United Committee consider the carrying out of a co-ordinated program within the Army and Navy training and mobilization camps in conjunction with the War Work Committee, Y. M. C. A.'s and the Army and Navy chaplains to whom the government has delegated all moral and religious activities, with various commissions of the War Department, and, with other interested leaders, recommends that the services of the United Committee be rendered through the secretaries of the Y. M. C. A. and the chaplains who will direct the temperance educational campaign among the men for whom they have become responsible. By this arrangement the Y. M. C. A. will give the use of its buildings for lectures, and will furnish such other assistance as may be required in the displays, distribution of literature, arrangements for public lectures, etc.
4. The Survey Committee recommends to the United Committee the preparation of special literature, posters, and slides, so far as new material may be required for these purposes, and the purchase of at least one stereomotorgraph for each encampment.
5. The Survey Committee recommends an immediate budget for this campaign of $100,000.
6. The Survey Committee recommends that this budget be raised by direct appropriations or contributions of material by the constituent organizations in the name of the "United Committee for War Temperance Activities in the Army and Navy," and in such other ways as the United Committee itself may direct.

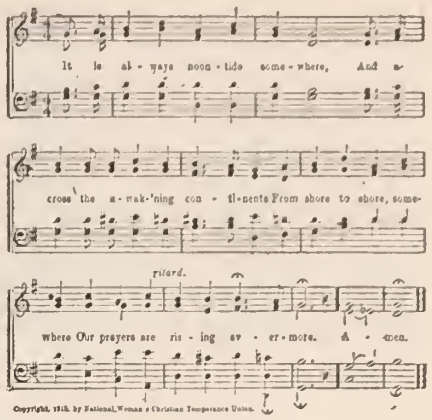
On June 23, the United Committee met in New York City, accepted the foregoing report and elected permanent officers as follows: Daniel A. Poling, chairman; Miss Anna A. Gordon; vice-chairman; Miss Cora Stoddard, secretary. The election of a treasurer was left to the committee on finance. The executive committee was authorized to employ an executive secretary, and the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association assumed the salary of this secretary. A ways and means committee was also appointed, consisting of Dr. Charles Stelzle, Dr. Charles Scanlon, Mr. Shaw, Mr. Ernest Cherrington and Father O'Callaghan. The office of the committee will be in New York City, in the rooms of the Federal Council of Churches.

Charity Experts Eager for Wartime Prohibition

Wartime prohibition was a subject which occupied a prominent place in the proceedings of the National Conference of Charities and Correction in its recent session in Pittsburgh, although it is foreign to established precedent to give consideration to any topic outside the prescribed limits of the organization. Mrs. Elizabeth Tilton, of Boston, was the one instrumental in securing this action, and for the first time there seemed to be unanimous approval of prohibition, not only for the duration of the war, but as a settled governmental policy. Speakers from many dry states testified to the good social results of prohibitory laws, and before the week was over, as has previously been noted in THE SIGNAL, Prof. Irving Fisher of Yale University was able to secure the passage of a resolution urging Congress to prohibit the manufacture, importation and sale of alcoholic liquors during the war and for one year thereafter. In view of the fact that the feeding of the Allies must be accomplished largely by the United States, Mrs. Tilton pointed out that the use of any part of the grain crop of the United States in the manufacture of liquors must not be permitted. Florence Kelley of the Consumers' League made the point that the grain raised by school boys in any state, dry or wet, may go into whisky or beer, which is true also of the sugar beets raised in the dry West. An emergency great enough to occasion the cutting down of the school year by one-half, as has been done in New York state, she declared, is great enough to demand a discontinuance of the manufacture of intoxicating beverages from the world's food supply.

The number of Chicago saloons is 383 less than it was prior to May 1, the date on which licenses were renewed for the new fiscal year. The decrease is credited to threatening dry legislation.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



AT THE NOONTIDE HOUR

At the sacred noontide hour let the white ribboners of the land unite in prayer daily for our country and all other countries, that all may come to see the true Christian and humanitarian point of view in this world crisis; for the protection of "our boys" from the physical and moral deterioration from drink and vice that follow in the wake of war; for our President and his advisers that divine wisdom may rule every decision, that lasting peace may speedily come and the will of the Father of all peoples be done throughout the earth.

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do You Know the Answers to These Questions? They May Be Found in THE UNION SIGNAL of June 28

Ten questions, the answers to which will be found in the preceding number of THE UNION SIGNAL, will appear each week. The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. How are the patriotic women of the United States responding to the food-saving appeal of Mr. H. C. Hoover, food administrator?
2. What action by a leading American university is an indirect endorsement of national prohibition as a war measure?
3. Explain the provisions contained in the anti-liquor amendments to the Lever food control bill, passed by the House of Representatives.
4. What method of celebrating the birthday of our National W. C. T. U. president and World's secretary of the Loyal Temperance Legion will be most acceptable to her?
5. Give five reasons why the Loyal Temperance Legion is an ideal organization for children and name the departments of work which are especially adapted to the needs of the boys and girls.
6. There are four principal arguments for national wartime prohibition. Give the words of a noted man in support of each.
7. Tell the story of improved conditions in Burma, as related by the World's W. C. T. U. representative to that country.
8. Explain the misrepresentations contained in the petition presented to President Wilson claiming more than two million labor men as supporters of the brewing industry.
9. What work is being done for the enlisted men in Washington, D. C., as told by Miss Gordon upon her return from a visit to that city?
10. What practical use should be made by local superintendents of Medical Temperance of the anti-alcohol resolutions adopted by the house of delegates of the American Medical Association?

Ashtabula, Ohio, on June 20, voted dry by a majority of 301, thus closing forty-two saloons.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:
PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

July 21—Loyal Temperance Legion Day—Birthday of Anna A. Gordon.
July 31—White Ribbon Missionary Day—Birthday of Mary Allen West.
August 3—Fresh Air Mission Day—Birthday of Lady Henry Somerset.

PEACE AND INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION

MRS. MARY B. BRYAN, National Superintendent

The National W. C. T. U. department of Peace and Arbitration was adopted at the National convention held in Nashville, Tenn., 1887. Since then it has been organized in thirty-three states. Its motto is: "Peace on Earth, Good Will to Men."

The aim of the department is to promote peace in the heart, the home and the nation, as well as in the world. It claims that to take human life is overstepping the bounds of human authority. It is, therefore, opposed not only to carnal warfare, but to lynching, prize fighting, capital punishment, the indiscriminate use of firearms, military drills in schools, dangerous amusements on our national holidays, and to every form of man's "inhumanity to man."

Under ordinary circumstances methods of work are given, but with our beloved land in war, the women of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union stand ready to give loyal aid, if aid be necessary. Feeling that lectures and sermons on peace, the distribution of peace literature, the organization of peace bands among children, etc., would, in such a crisis, be ill-timed, and be possibly misconstrued, the department of Peace and International Arbitration deplores the present conditions, and begs the host of Christian W. C. T. U. women to pray for a speedy end of war and for a time when we may actively continue our work without apparent disloyalty.

The special service teachers may render at this time is aptly set forth by Mrs. Fannie Fern Andrews, secretary of the American School Peace League. She says: "Anger, hate of other nations, should be kept from the school room. The schools should maintain a civic and moral stability among the youth of the land. This is the opportunity to inspire anew a love for American institutions and American ideals. Civic service, appropriate to youth imbued with devotion to the nation's need, would constitute a material support of the country in this time of national crisis. The school children of the United States could, for example, through home and school gardens, make a substantial offering to the problem of food production during the war. This and other forms of youthful service, consciously entered upon for the nation's good, would develop a sane and logical patriotism among our young people—a mighty bulwark for the welfare of any nation.

"We shall not be true to our young citizens, however, if we withhold from them the hope of a new world order. If we are sincere in our plans for peace, we shall impart to those who will determine the life of the future the knowledge of those processes which we, according to our judgment, deem wise and practical. Nay, more, we shall inspire the youth of today with a vision of a different world. Truly, the next great forward step of humanity must begin in the schools."

Lincoln, Nebraska.

AMONG OUR WORKERS

Mrs. Maude B. Perkins, National Y. P. B. field secretary, during a week's work in Middlesex county, Connecticut, addressed five church meetings and organized a Loyal Temperance Legion. She gave invaluable assistance throughout the county convention and at an evening meeting delivered a most inspiring address. "We all hope she will soon return to this county for we feel that we need just such work as she can do," writes the county president.

The Aiken (S. C.) W. C. T. U. celebrated Flower Mission day in a manner strictly in accord with the example set by Jennie Casseday. Donations of flowers, fruit and other edibles were taken to the hospital, the old folks' home, and to the invalids and the sick of the community. Automobiles, appropriately decorated, distributed these gifts and created much interest in the work of the W. C. T. U.

The fifth annual inter-county institute of Northwestern Pennsylvania, comprising Forest, Venango, Crawford, Erie and Warren counties, was held in Warren, June 7-8, with Mrs. Ella M. George, state W. C. T. U. president, as institute leader. Papers on departmental subjects were read and discussed with much profit. Remonstrance work came in for its share of consideration, the decision being that it is always the duty of the W. C. T. U. to remonstrate against the liquor business regardless of the attitude of the judge on the bench. "The Possibilities and Dangers of the Moving Picture Show," was the topic ably presented by Mrs. C. A. Reed of Clarendon. Out of sixty-four films examined by her, thirty per cent showed illicit love, twenty-five per cent clever stealing, suicides, murders, etc. She advocated the placing of women on the board of censors. An original poster demonstration was given in the evening, the prize of $2.50 for the best poster going to the hostess county of Warren.

PROHIBITION CAMPAIGN IN PORTO RICO WELL UNDER WAY

The citizens of Porto Rico vote on prohibition July 16. The temperance forces are using every known method for securing prohibition, and prohibition sentiment is increasing from one end of the island to the other. "We are now in a hot campaign which will last until July 16," writes Manuel Andujar, superintendent of the Porto Rico Mission Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church. "The liquor men are spending money by the barrel. They do not come out openly but have hundreds of paid agents all over the island and they are getting, through money or deception, the necessary signatures to secure the referendum. We will begin a weekly paper at once to help us in the propaganda. Remember Porto Rico in your prayers."

SUCCESSFUL WORK AMONG MEXICANS IN TEXAS

A work that is peculiar to Texas is meeting a need for temperance instruction among the Mexicans. During the past year more has been done along this line than in all the other years of the existence of the Texas Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Miss Mina Everett, for a number of years a missionary in Mexico, has given efficient service in organizing unions in Corpus Christi, Robstown, Austin, Alice, San Antonio, Laredo and El Paso. Miss Everett is an adept in managing the Mexicans, and when the work closes with a medal contest enthusiasm is at top notch.

Rev. and Mrs. A. B. Baez, refugees from the City of Mexico, who located in Alice, and later in Corpus Christi, have rendered great service to their countrymen. Mrs. Baez has a well organized L. T. L. and has given several interesting concerts. She is soon to make a tour of the south Fifteenth district. The relations between the American and Mexican unions are always harmonious and mutually pleasant social affairs are given. The Corpus Christi union, with headquarters in the Ben Grande building, once a famous resort, with bar, gambling den and other accessories, holds weekly meetings for the Mexicans. This social center is a wonderful help in reaching the people.

PROHIBITION AT WORK IN ONE NEBRASKA CITY

"Our women folk can now pass along our streets at night, especially Saturday night, without having their ears constantly offended by ribald and obscene language, the night alley loafer is no more, and while there have been isolated cases of drunkenness, they are beautifully scarce and far between," writes a correspondent from Hastings, Neb., concerning conditions since the going into effect of the state-wide prohibition law May 1.

"I had the pleasure of assisting in the destruction of forty-four cases of beer and whisky, destroyed by order of our county court. There is no longer any argument, the proof is evident. Prohibition does prohibit, praise the Lord."

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. AT CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y.

There will be held at Chautauqua, July 2-7, a speakers' training camp and conference for educational and patriotic service, the object of which will be to co-ordinate the work of patriotic education and define the methods to be adopted by the speakers who will engage in a nation-wide campaign to bring to the American people, as individuals and as a nation, a realization of the meaning of the war and the means necessary for its conduct, together with a general understanding of the economic, industrial and international problems of this country during and after the war. Consideration will be given also to governmental and individual efficiency. In connection with the conference there will be held, on July 6, a meeting of women's national organizations, at which Mrs. Philip North Moore, president of the National Council of Women, will preside. The National W. C. T. U. will be represented by Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National vice-president-at-large.

White ribbon activities at Chautauqua, New York, will be directed, this summer, by Mrs. Carolyn P. Lindsay, National superintendent of Fairs and Open Air Meetings, and Mrs. Maude B. Perkins, National Y. P. B. field secretary. Mrs. Lindsay has already installed a fine W. C. T. U. exhibit at National W. C. T. U. headquarters in Kellogg Hall, and she will be the first W. C. T. U. speaker before the Woman's Club. She will be followed by Mrs. Annie K. Weisel, president of Alabama W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Culla J. Vayhinger, president of Indiana W. C. T. U. The dates assigned to the National W. C. T. U. by Mrs. Percy V. Pennybacker, president of the Chautauqua Woman's Club, are July 11-13. Following the initiative of the Chautauqua administration, the meetings to be held at the Hall of Philosophy under National W. C. T. U. auspices will be constructively patriotic in character.

Miss M. Gwyneth Fulcher of Evanston will be associated first with Mrs. Lindsay, who will be headquarters hostess through the month of July, and later with Mrs. Perkins, as demonstrator of the exhibit.

The general Chautauqua program presents topics of timely interest, one week each, as, for example, "Community Affairs," "Justice and the Courts," "The Defense of the United States," "Temperance" "Music," "Internationalism and Christianity."

IOWA BUCKLES ON ITS ARMOR

LORA S. LA MANCE, National Organizer

Six weeks ago the liquor men of Iowa were laughing in their sleeves. Iowa was sound asleep. In theory, everybody was supposed to remember that the state votes on October 15 on a constitutional amendment to prohibit all traffic in liquor.

Iowa has been so good since the statutory prohibition law went into effect January 1, 1916, that it has almost forgotten the naughty days of old. The state has been figuring that it has more clergymen of its own than Mexico, Central America, the Isthmus of Panama and all of South America combined. Iowa has been so proud of its large Liberty Bond subscription and its Red Cross work and of "doing its bit" in putting out more crops and more gardens than at any previous time in its history, it has hardly sensed that good, moral, law-abiding as the state is, it has a great battle on with underhanded foes who will spare no effort or money to defeat the prohibition measure.

The liquor element has been very sly and cautious. Its first open move has been to raise a commotion entirely out of proportion to its importance about the attempt of the attorney general to enforce the old standing laws on Sabbath observance. The liquor men have succeeded in getting many of the city newspapers to develop actual hysteria over the "blue laws," and to carefully insinuate that this is a plan of the drys, a part of the scheme to deprive men of their liberty. In this move the wets showed poor generalship, for one cannot have hysteria four months at a stretch. Already the smoke is dying down and the liquor men have gained nothing. The frantic outburst awakened many citizens who had not realized before that there is to be a real battle on.

Foremost in the prohibition fray is Mrs. Ida B. Wise Smith, state W. C. T. U. president. She is speaking here, there and everywhere with marked success. There have been many obstacles in the way of uniting the six temperance organizations into a campaign amendment association. Without her tact, persuasiveness and good common sense it could scarcely have been done. This feat has been accomplished, however, and Mr. Pilsington of the Business Men's League has been elected president and Mrs. Smith, vice-president of the organization.

The writer spent three weeks in the northwestern part of the state and spoke before everything from a Red Cross society to a cemetery association! People are waking up. Almost every town now has a local campaign organization. It is most encouraging to see how citizens of foreign blood are joining the temperance forces. Several German-speaking pastors and one Welsh minister are getting ready to go out among their people. One of these men has a world of influence among the German Lutherans and it is most fortunate that he is to stump the state for the drys! It looks encouraging for Iowa!

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. NOTES

The annual council meeting of the B. W. T. A., held in London, was attended by 730 delegates despite the great overshadowing of war and the increased expense of travel and entertainment. The following resolution, proposed by Rosalind, Countess of Carlisle, the president of the British Women's Temperance Association and Agnes E. Slack, honored corresponding secretray, was adopted:

"That this Council heartily congratulates the National W. C. T. U. of the United States on the wonderful advance of temperance legislation in the United States, as shown by twenty-six states having adopted prohibition laws."

Following a speech by Dr. Alexander Irvine, Lady Carlisle spoke for ten minutes on the marvellous success of the work in the United States and expressed great delight that the United States is an ally of Great Britain in this righteous war.

Resolutions declaring the brotherhood of man a practical basis for all statecraft, were adopted with deep feeling.

In these times of international stress and sorrow we welcome the tidings of a highly successful temperance campaign in New South Wales, Australia. Mrs. Helen Barton of Scotland, who will be recalled as a delegate to the World's W. C. T. U. convention in Brooklyn, has just completed a tour in New South Wales. She has added 1,004 names to the membership roll and organized unions in thirty towns. In honor of Mrs. Barton's notable achievements a farewell garden party was tendered her at Wentworth House, Blaclause. Many distinguished guests were present, including the mayor and the mayoress of Burwood. Mrs. Barton was the recipient of handsome and useful gifts.

The eleventh anniversary of the King's Y. W. C. T. U. of Bermuda recently has been celebrated. The "Y" was organized on King Edward VII's birthday, November 9, 1905. The president, Miss Mary F. Astwood, writes: "We have a membership of sixty-five with an average attendance of twenty-five. All our meetings are held in the evening. We are planning to secure pledges from the Sunday school scholars and to have children's rallies. Each year we get out a printed program which is distributed by the members. We have young men in the 'Y' who are eligible for any office except that of president."

In Italy the W. C. T. U. is publishing a book for the teachers in the schools. Madame Marie Camperio of Milan writes: "Our work now is going on slowly on account of the war but it seems that in every country the governments are taking an active part, making several laws against intoxicating drinks and that is the most important thing for the promotion of our ideas."

Mrs. Rachel Don, President of the W. C. T. U. of New Zealand, writing to the National W. C. T. U. president, says: "Drink is everywhere the nation's enemy. Though it is being restricted all over Britain it runs riot here except for the anti-shouting. The Alliance has decided to prepare still another petition for six o'clock closing and at our coming W. C. T. U. convention we shall decide whether or not to co-operate. The last two years the W. C. T. U. has been responsible for the petition. Our latest agitation is for the appointment of policewomen. We regret the need for this action but as it exists, we believe the government should face it and appoint members of our own sex to safeguard the young and, if possible, prevent crime, not punish it. The twenty-fifth re-enforcement of New Zealand young men is now in camp, for conscription has become the law."

Literature for Comfort Bags

Testament, special khaki cloth cover. Price, 18 cents.

Testament. Price, 10 cents.

"Home Hymns," a collection of hymns set to familiar tunes. Price, 3 cents each; per fifty, 60 cents; per hundred, $1.00.

Coupon Pledge Card, printed in blue with flag in colors. Price, per hundred, 35 cents.

"A Friendly Word to Young Men," by Richmond Pearson Hobson of Merrimac fame. Printed in blue, with flag in colors. Price, 2 cents each; per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents.

"Letter from Mother." Facsimile letter with W. C. T. U. monogram in blue, flag in colors. Price, 3 cents each; per fifty, 25 cents; per hundred, 40 cents.

Envelope for letter, with W. C. T. U. monogram. Price, per fifty, 25 cents; per hundred, 40 cents.

"Letter from Mother," with envelope. Price, 5 cents; per hundred, 75 cents.

Directions for Comfort Bags. Price, 2 cents each; per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred, 25 cents.

(When ordering, please state whether directions are wanted for comfort bags for soldiers or sailors.)

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

Evanston, Illinois

THE CASE OF WILBUR BONIFACE

NANCY LEE

Once more the Bonifaces were nicely settled in a new home, and Leroy and Irene were well established in school. Wilbur Boniface, the husband and father, was slowly making good in his new field of business. The best people in Irvington had called, for, despite their precarious circumstances, the Bonifaces had always kept up appearances, and their native culture gained for them entrance into the best society. On the whole, the family felt that they had made a fortunate move. If Wilbur's business had permitted him to be more often at home, they would have been quite content.

But Charlotte Boniface looked forward to the winter with grave forebodings. How would her husband endure the hardships to which he would be exposed He was not physically strong, and as traveling agent for a mercantile house, the demands were rigorous. During the fall season, when the foliage took on all its varied and magnificent hues, she sometimes went with him on his long drives. Wilbur insisted that she brought him either luck or inspiration, for when she accompanied him he always did enough more business to meet the additional expense.

But soon winter came in all its bitter fury, and when Wilbur was late, or did not reach home at night, Charlotte and the children were wild with anxiety. Now and again, when they were about to give up in despair, he would come loaded with good things, for his chief delight was in making his family comfortable and happy.

But at last there came a time when for several days he did not come home. The old clutch of terror at their hearts told them the cause of his absence, and sadly they awaited his return. He came in just the pitiable state they had expected. After sleeping off the effects of his dissipation, he said to his wife, as he stood looking out upon the shining, snowy landscape:

"Mother, this is a beautiful morning, but I can see no bright spot in all the world. It is so dark to me that it is a positive affliction to live. There is not a ray of hope, and I am so weak, of myself, that I dare not go out to attend to my business. What shall I do?"

Tears were streaming down his face as he spoke.

"Look to God, dear," sobbed Charlotte.

"I will, and you must help me. I have been thinking that tonight will be prayer-meeting night, and that I will go and ask the people to pray for me."

In this Charlotte encouraged him, and as the hours passed he bowed beneath their burden of remorse and shame. As evening bells rang out, "Come! Come!" Wilbur and his wife went to the little church, and there he confessed his weakness, finding strength and comfort in the prayers and sympathy of the people. Upon their return home the husband and wife called the children to them, and all knelt in silent prayer.

* * * * *

Several months later, when the little family in their new-born faith were beginning to feel almost happily secure, a fine looking elderly gentleman called, inquiring for Mr. Boniface, who was then absent. The stranger introduced himself to Charlotte as Mr. Farnsworth, and said that, having learned of Mr. Boniface's former experience in hotel-keeping, he, as one of the stockholders in a large hotel, had been appointed to secure a manager for the house. He had observed Mr. Boniface, and believed he was the man they wanted.

"But, sir, there is a saloon in connection with the hotel, is there not?" asked Charlotte, with trepidation.

"There is, madam," replied the man, "but it is in order to remove the bar that we are making the change. We are so disgusted with the death-dealing business our present tenant carries on that we have decided, at whatever cost in money, to do away with it. I do not know how long we may be able to keep the hotel running as a temperance house. If it does not pay expenses, we shall have to close it. When your husband returns, tell him to come to see me and inspect the house."

Oh, the joy in the house of Boniface! Surely, they said, God deals with man and appoints his ways. That evening Charlotte and the children walked past the handsome hotel. Could it be possible that it really would be their home?

It was late that night before they could forget their alluring prospects and go to sleep. So accustomed were they to anxiety, that even their elation proved to be a mixture of hope and doubt and fear. The next evening Wilbur returned weary and discouraged. Who should tell the glad news? Charlotte, with a loving embrace, begged him to "look up," for there were prospects of a time when they could be together and when the hardships they were now enduring would be past. Then she told him all that had happened, the children, with their faces aglow, watching every expression that passed over the countenances of their parents.

The next morning Wilbur, attired in his best, called at the office of Mr. Farnsworth, who repeated what he had said to Charlotte. Then the house was examined, the suite of rooms the family were to occupy was settled upon, and the salary of the manager was fixed.

Wilbur hastened home with the glad news. All laughed and cried together over their unexpected good fortune. Now father would be with them always, and they could watch over him.

At last the day came when they were to move into the elegant apartment set aside for them; and, to their gratification, the bar closed on the same day.

They readily adjusted themselves to the new life, Irene and Leroy progressed in their school work, and no sorrow crossed the path of the little family for one happy year.

The Farnsworths occupied a suite of rooms in the hotel, and the most friendly relations grew between the two families.

But once more, just as the sun of happiness had reached its zenith, the destroyer entered this home. After weeks of silent suffering with the double burden of hotel-keeping and a drinking husband, Charlotte, living in the hourly fear of Wilbur's discharge, became desperate. One morning, as she was preparing to go out, Mr. Farnsworth called. Bitterly she told him of her intentions.

"It has come to this," she said: "I am going to every saloonkeeper in the town and ask him not to give my husband liquor. It is the only hope left me now."

"Who should bear the responsibility for such suffering as this?" pondered Mr. Farnsworth as he listened to Charlotte's tragic tale of hope and despair. Not altogether the helpless victim, lying insensible; not the poor wife and children. No! —but the voter who says, "This thing may and can exist;" the individuals who compose the government, who make it possible for the criminal to sell, for gold, that which robs his fellowman of his manhood and brings ruin upon everything that he holds dear on earth.

"Go, Mrs. Boniface, and God speed you," said Mr. Farnsworth.

With ghastly face Charlotte went down the stairs and out into the street. She passed saloon door after saloon door, glancing in timorously at the motley crowds behind the latticed screens. How could she enter those vile places on such an errand—to ask those men not to give her husband the vile stuff that had robbed him of his manhood—to acknowledge that he who had sworn to protect her (and who would, when he was himself, risk his life for her) was no longer master of himself? But, oh, she must cast such thoughts aside and bravely do that which seemed to her the only means of saving her husband. But the persons outside who might see her enter—and the gaping, morbid crowd inside! In anguish of spirit she cried that she might be spared the dreadful ordeal. As she thought of her stricken husband, she overcame her shrinking.

"I will begin at the next one, and will not stop so long as there is a saloon door that will open to my trembling hands!" she determined.

At the next saloon door she paused a moment, then stepped inside. She walked toward the bar, behind which a man in a white apron passed bottles out to a crowd that pressed upon the railing, and stood for a moment hesitant. Every eye was turned upon her in amazement. As she made her way forward, the men stepped aside and made room for her in front of the bartender. Those who were about to fill their glasses waited, while others quietly placed their bottles upon the counter. Not a man drank in her presence. A hush was over the place. All stood silently watching.

Charlotte approached the person whom she took to be the proprietor, and asked quietly, "Are you the owner of this place?"

"I am," was the prompt reply.

"I am Mrs. Wilbur Boniface, and I forbid you to sell to my husband any more liquor of any kind. If you do I shall have you punished according to the law, for he is of the class that—that the government says you must not sell to." With burning face she turned and walked out.

As she went down the street, her mind was busy with the dread problem. "Why," she thought, "our government virtually says to the saloonkeeper, 'You may sell to men as long as they have any manhood left, but when you have taken everything that is good in them, then you must not sell to them. The man bereft of moral control is liable to commit murder, arson, or suicide, and bring expense upon the government!'"

Charlotte entered not only the next saloon but every saloon in the town, as she had determined, delivering her warning.

When she told her grief-stricken family what she had done, Wilbur sat as if stunned. Finally he said, "Poor mother! I am sorry. I cannot blame you, but I fear it will do no good."

For a time the spell of drink was broken, but in a few months Charlotte was held to a severe test. Wilbur had found no trouble in getting the liquor he craved. Should she do what she had threatened? In giving the saloonkeepers notice she had met the conditions of the law, and now, if she could find witnesses to the selling, she would prosecute the guilty ones.

Working in her laundry was a woman who deserved better things, but who, like herself, was suffering for the sins of her husband. This woman told Charlotte that when she was looking for her own husband, she had seen him and Mr. Boniface drinking together.

On the strength of this testimony, Charlotte swore out a warrant for the arrest of two of the most popular saloonkeepers. She knew she was staking everything in this action, for, sooner or later, it would mean the loss of social position and of the hotel. The money they had saved had gone for payments on the home they were buying, and if they lost the hotel they would be quite helpless; but she took the risk, hoping that the punishment of the two saloonkeepers might intimidate the others.

The summonses were served on these two men before Wilbur had recovered, and the trials were set for the next session of the district court. The newspapers mentioned the case and vindicated

(Continued on Page Fourteen)

MR. MAN

ELIZA TAYLOR COOKE

"I don't like my father so well when mother is gone." The child's voice quivered with emotion.

"What is the trouble, Dorothy?" Aunty had noticed the tear-stained face, but wisely said nothing, knowing that before long the confession would be made.

"Well," sobbed Dorothy, "father whipped Bobby. Course it hurts me most as much as it does him 'cause I'm his twin. Father is so cross when mother is away. Anyhow," this after a moment's reflection, "your mother is your real mother; but your father is only your father by marriage. That's why I love my mother the best."

Aunty gasped at this statement. Where did Dorothy get such queer ideas! She certainly was different from most children.

"Are you going to take Bobby and me to your house until mother comes back?" Dorothy inquired.

"Yes, dear, we start tomorrow, and, Dorothy," she called, as the child ran to tell her brother, "you must not have an angry feeling toward your father. He has a great deal to worry over and it makes him impatient at times. You know he loves you both dearly."

"Yes, I s'pose he does; but—I wish he would never whip Bobby any more. I wish my grandpa would get well soon, so mother could come back. I'm glad we are going away from this house. I just despise these rooms when mother is not around. What's the matter with me anyway, aunty? There is a big lump in my throat ever since mother went away and I can't swallow it." The child looked with big, serious eyes into her kind relative's face waiting for the answer.

"I think, dear, you are a wee bit homesick for mother; but you will be all right when you see the darling yellow chicks and big Bruno, and Tabby, the cat, with her family of fine furry kittens at my house."

"Is there a big yard to play in, and a swing and horses and cows?" Dorothy knew there were all these things on the farm, her aunt had named them every evening to her and Bobby; but she loved to hear the list repeated over and over; it was always new and delightful. She forgot her loneliness in the recital.

Morning came. The children were astir bright and early, eager for the journey. Aunty told them to eat a good breakfast as they would be hungry before lunch time; but the children could not swallow a mouthful of food. The thought of going on the train and that they were really to see all those wonderful things aunty had been telling them about made the very thought of a meal seem trivial.

On the train, Dorothy was content to sit and look out of the window in wide-eyed wonder. But Bobby, like most boys, wanted to see out of both sides at one and the same time, causing his twin sister much distress. She called him to her and in a low voice cautioned him to behave like a little gentleman, as mother would like to have him. He kept quiet for a time, but not for long could he be repressed, and Dorothy sighed as she looked at her aunt, then shaking her head, said:

"It's no use, Aunty; boys will be boys," and resigned herself to the inevitable.

Both the children were happy to have plenty of space to run about in after living in an apartment. Everything was a wonder and delight, and Dorothy was now contented. Climbing upon her aunt's lap, she told her that she guessed she was well again, as the lump in her throat was all gone.

Dorothy had been investigating the neighborhood for the past two or three days. She had noticed an elderly man sitting on a seat built around a venerable old tree in the grounds adjoining her aunt's place. She had said nothing of her find; but her little brain was busy. She thought of making the lonely man a visit. So one day, peeking through the hedge, she saw him in his accustomed place and on the instant made up her mind to call on him. Dorothy did not know the sort of man he was, and, if her aunt had known of the proposed visit, she would have told her not to go near him, as he never let a child come into the grounds.

When Dorothy came smiling up to the scowling old man with outstretched hand he was too much surprised to say anything.

"Won't you shake hands with me?" she said in her sweet, childish treble. "I came to see you 'cause I thought you might have a lump in your throat like I used to have 'fore I came here. Aunty said I was homesick, 'cause my mother is away. Is your mother away, and are you left alone all the time?" she asked in a pitying tone.

The old man looked searchingly and suspiciously at the child before replying.

"Who sent you here?" he inquired in a harsh tone of voice.

"Nobody sent me; I just comed myself. I was sorry for you 'cause you was alone every day. I peeked through the hedge and I thought up in my head," pointing to the golden brown locks: "Now that old man is just like my grandpa, and he loves to have me come to see him, and he is sick now; maybe he is going to die—I heard my aunty say so—then I won't have my grandpa, so I thought I would have to have one. You might do, you see, that's why I came. My mother tells me not to say 'comed.' Sometimes I do say it when I forget. I didn't say it that time, did I?" she asked delightedly.

She was utterly unconscious of self, and for all she was such a little girl, she had an independent, fearless manner and a pretty little air of dignity about her that commanded respect and secretly pleased the old man. Ordinarily he would have sent her home, but she was so different from most children that, instead, he kept her talking, much to the astonishment of the gardener.

"I think I must be going now. Mother always told me never to stay and make a nuisance of myself. Have I been here too long?" Dorothy asked anxiously.

"Not this time, at least," growled the old man.

"What's your name?" he asked. The child told him that her name was Dorothy Fairchild and that she would be eight years old in August.

"But you did not tell me your name!"

"You said I put you in mind of your grandpa; why not call me that?"

"I couldn't call you that; my grandpa is not dead yet; but," brightening, "I could call you uncle. How would you like that?"

"Very well, you may call me that, and you can come tomorrow for awhile, if you want to."

"I will if my aunt will let me. She doesn't know where I am, so I'd better run home."

The child ran lightly away, the old man looking after her with many emotions astir in him. She brought back visions of happier days, memories of a beloved sister long since passed away. He sighed heavily as he rose and walked into the house.

Dorothy did not go to see the old gentleman for several days, but daily she tenderly watched him through the peep-holes in the thick hedge. She saw with delight that he missed her, for he looked anxiously now and again toward the big front gate, then along the hedge, as though he expected her to walk in upon him that way.

While she watched she noticed that he repeatedly drank out of a black bottle, drawn from his coat pocket. He must be ill; possibly it was medicine. It made her sorry to think of the lonely man as sick, so she ran to ask her aunt for permission to visit him.

"Did you think I never was coming?" she asked. "You see, we had company and my aunt did not like to have me visit you, anyway, 'cause she said you were hateful to children and did not want them around; but I told her you wanted me 'cause you invited me, so she let me come for a little while. My, what smells so horrid?" and she sniffed the air in disgust. "I guess it's that bottle. Is that your medicine?" and she started to spell out the label. "Oh, it's whisky. Why, that's poison; I heard my mother say so." "Once," and the child lowered her voice, "I saw a man on the street and he was going this way"—she gave an excellent imitation of a drunken man—"and my mother said that he had taken whisky and that it had stolen his brains away." Her eyes opened with horror. "You better let me throw this away 'fore it steals your brains. Then, you won't have any, and you will be poisoned."

She seized the bottle, and, before the old man could prevent her, she had poured its contents on the ground.

"How dare you do such a thing, you bad girl! I might have known better than to let you in. Clear out and don't come here again," he said in a loud, angry voice.

The child, terrified, turned and ran as fast as she could toward the gate, saying as she ran, "You're not my uncle any more."

(Continued on Page Sixteen)

THE NEW-STYLE PATRIOT

Listen, my children, and you shall hear
Of a patriot's work in this present year.
He didn't ride through the roads at night
To rouse the neighbors to arm and fight,
But he went to work with a spade and hoe
And he made ten bushels of 'taters grow.

He mopped the sweat from his beady brow
As he trudged behind his hand-power plow;
His hands grew tough and his feet got sore
As he turned the stubborn furrows o'er.
And his neighbors laughed and they called him slow,
But he made ten bushels of 'taters grow.

Oh, cheer the boy with the sword and gun,
Who has fought and bled, when the war is done,
And cheer the generals and majors, too,
And the sailors bold on the ocean blue;
But cheer this man and his spade and hoe,
For he made ten bushels of 'taters grow.

—Edgar Guest in Detroit Free Press

POSTERS!

Our Government
Rally for Our Country's Defense
The Man Who Drinks
Out for Prohibition
The Nation's Going Dry
Protect the Children
The Liquor Traffic Must Go
A Business Proposition
The Drink Traffic and Revenue

Size, 28x42

Price, 10 cents each; three for 25 cents; per 100, $7.00

* * * * *

Which Will You Protect?
Do You Know These Facts?
Alcohol
Beer
Drink Robs the Working Man
The License Voter Gets What?
Attention, Voters!
Figures Tell
Saloons Increase Taxes
Successful Men
Prohibition in Kansas
Compare These Figures
Not By My Vote
State Prohibition and Local Option
What the Governors Say
Beware!
Railroads and Alcoholic Liquor
The Factory and Alcoholic Liquor
The Zeppelin

SUFFRAGE POSTERS

Woman's Interests
Home Problems
Women Wage-Earners
What Is Woman's Work?
S. O. S.

Size, 19x25

Price, 5 cents each; per 50, $2.00; Per 100, $3.50

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

FANS AND LEAFLETS
for distribution in Chautauquas and other summer assemblies at
SPECIAL PRICES
Leaflets carefully selected.

PACKAGE NO. 1
Containing
50 Prohibition Fans
300 Leaflets
Price, $1.45.

PACKAGE NO. 2
Containing
100 Prohibition Fans
500 Leaflets
Price, $2.45.

PACKAGE NO. 3
Containing
150 Prohibition Fans
800 Leaflets
Price, $3.90.

PACKAGE NO. 4
Containing
200 Prohibition Fans
1,000 Leaflets
Price, $5.00.

Please order early.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

NOTED SPEAKERS AT PROHIBITION MASS MEETING IN LONDON

The agitation for wartime prohibition in Great Britain is intense, and many rallies with this end in view are being held from time to time. One of the most recent took place in Albert Hall, London, with more than 10,000 people in attendance. The speakers included the Bishop of London, Mr. Harry Lauder, the famous comedian; Capt. A. E. Owen-Jones, C. F.; Dr. Stuart Holden, M. A., and Dr. C. W. Saleeby. The Rt. Hon. Donald Maclean, M. P., the presiding officer, made this statement of the damage wrought by alcohol in Great Britain:

"There has been spent in connection with the drink traffic since the war began £510,000,000. Of course it is obvious that the indirect results of drink expenditure are at least as great as the direct amounts spent, therefore the amount really expended is millions of pounds beyond £1,000,000,000. And what about the destruction of foodstuffs? Since the war began there has been destroyed enough sugar to carry us on from May 1 to January next, and enough cereals to give this nation a food supply on rations from the first of this month to the middle of next March. Therefore we have spent in cash on drink enough to finance the whole war for six months, and in foodstuffs we have destroyed enough to carry us safely, triumphantly, through all the real months of crisis that lie before us still."

THE CASE OF WILBUR BONIFACE

(Continued from Page Twelve)

the action taken by Mrs. Boniface in trying, as a last resort, to save her husband and her home; the family suffered untold humiliation. As the time of the trial approached Charlotte spent night after night without sleep. The keen lawyers for the defense succeeded in having the trial postponed. This was done time after time, until at last they bought off Charlotte's witnesses, sending them to another state, and before the case came into court an act of the legislature, through pressure of the liquor element, had so modified the law that for her the case was comparatively hopeless.

Charlotte, under the reaction of her heroic efforts to save her husband, began to fail. There seemed nothing left for her to do, and she was slowly sinking into the apathy of despair. She could no longer hope; she could no longer pray—she could only wait upon the Lord.

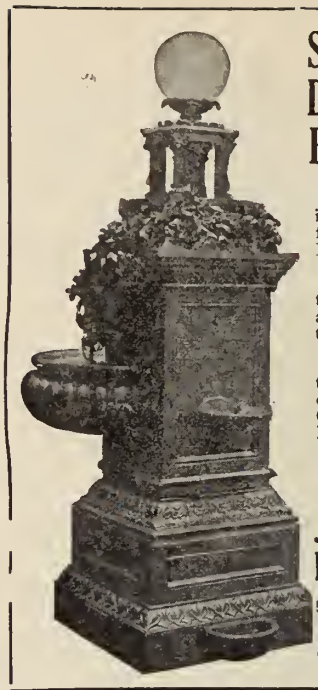
The double shock of his wife's condition and his discharge from the hotel management, revived in Wilbur Boniface much of the old clearness of brain and pride of manhood. How had it happened? What had he been doing to allow things to come to this disastrous end? Stung into normal shame by public censure and his wife's broken spirit, he finally was driven to undertake his own case. This he did with incisive directness. But what could he do? He was not only under the habit of drink, but also under the habit of failure. True, he felt that now, with Charlotte's stony face before him, he might wrestle with the dread thirst even unto victory, but could he withstand the temptations of the good-fellowship that met him constantly at every turn, in his office, on the street—wherever he met men? He could not, he concluded. Always he had failed just there, even when under the conscious shadow of his wife's growing sadness. There was but one thing to do—move into a state where drink has no part in commercial and social intercourse.

Raising his right hand, with reverent attitude, he spoke aloud his oath: "God helping me, I can and I will do it!"

* * * * *

Almost a year later a long train pulled into the central station of a capital city. The coaches were laden with passengers eagerly expectant of meeting loved ones. Among the number waiting at the gate was Wilbur Boniface, and great was his joy when he again embraced his wife and children. A taxi took them to the modest suburban home he had made ready for their coming. Here a cheerful fire burned in the grate, and there were bright flowers on the table.

As the little family settled into its warmth and comfort, they knew that they had at last found a home secure from the invasion of drink. Environed by prohibition, Wilbur Boniface had won back his manhood.



Sanitary Drinking Fountains

Also Drinking Fountains for Man and Beast.

Special prices to W. C. T. U. and all Charitable Societies.

This Fountain was erected by the W. C. T. U. of Luray, Va.

Write for Catalogue

J. W. Fiske Iron Works
56 & 58 Park Place
NEW YORK

WHICH ONE WILL GET THE JOB?

USE EVERY OPPORTUNITY
to wield your influence
AGAINST THE CIGARET

Anti-Cigaret Seals, gummed Stickers for Letters, Packages, Leaflets; three designs, with following sentiments:

1. Nothing will put a boy in touch with the saloon quicker than a cigaret.
2. The boy who smokes cigarets need not be anxious about his future; he has none.
3. Cigaret smoking is a mark of degeneracy.

Each seal, boxed, 25 cents per hundred.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

¶We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.
¶Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
118-120 Fifth Ave., New York
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works
Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

Four Temperance Lectures

Illustrated by Stereopticon Slides

A delightful entertainment easily planned for afternoon or evening by the use of one of these lectures.

John Barleycorn.
Thirty slides. Price.....$15.00

The Fight of Science Against Alcohol and Illustrated Story of "Two." Fifty-one slides. Price..$20.00

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union in Song and Story.
Fifty-three slides. Price.....$20.00

The World on the Water Wagon.
Fifty-three slides. Price.....$20.00

These slides are carefully packed and shipped at our risk, carriage prepaid.

Special rental schedule furnished upon application.

A carefully prepared lecture is sent with each set of slides.

N. B. We have on hand a limited number of duplicate slides which would be a valuable addition to any collection. These may be had at the nominal price of 20 cents each. A list of titles will be gladly submitted.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

ABOLITION OF INTOXICANTS AMONG ARABS

In an article in the Kublet, a newspaper reflecting the sentiments of the newly organized Arabian government whose headquarters are in Mecca, Arabia, appears the following:

"Inasmuch as his Royal Highness our King—God protect him—is making every effort for the welfare of his subjects and country, to protect them from everything that will injure them physically and mentally, he has issued a proclamation absolutely forbidding any intoxicating liquors to enter the land, because it is against the higher order of things and a menace to their character. Its evil effects injure the nation and the individual, causing insanity, paralysis, Bright's disease, weakening the heart, lungs and stomach. We are glad to tell our readers that our righteous King—God protect him—has bought from the rum merchants in Jeddy all of their stock and poured it into the streets. He has also notified the representatives of the various European governments to notify the merchants of their respective countries that from that date the Arabian government will not permit any intoxicants to enter into its borders."

It will be of interest to know that Ash-Shaat, an Arabic paper of New York City, edited by Joseph M. Khonry, has been printing some very excellent temperance articles explaining to the Arabic speaking people in this country the principle and value of total abstinence in these critical days. These articles have aroused much interest among the Syrians.

Your Flag and My Flag

"Your flag and my flag,
And how it flies today
In your land and my land
And half a world away!"

A hand-colored post-card with poem by Wilbur D. Nesbit.
Price, 5 cents each; 50 cents per dozen.

A Motto Card with same poem, also hand-colored, suitable for framing. Size 11x14. Price, 30 cents.

FLAGS FOR DECORATION

Printed Muslin, mounted.

2½ in. x 4 in., 60 cents per gross.
3½ in. x 6 in., 80 cents per gross.
20 in. x 36 in., 15 cents each.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

RUSSIA'S "DRYNESS"

An article headed, "Russia Is Not Dry," which appears in the "Anti-Prohibition Manual," answers itself as the following extracts will show: "Of vodka there is certainly precious little anywhere in the town, except in the cellars of the privileged classes—the nobility and high government officials. In the villages there is none." "In the northern Russian towns liquor is either troublesome or costly to obtain, or both." "Few of the villages of Russia are without their illicit brewers or distillers—but their output appeals to only a few of the village's hopeless old drunkards." This seems to show that Russia is rather dry, notwithstanding the startling headline. And dry Russia, with little bloodshed, brings about a wonderful revolution, one of the greatest events of the great world war.

Cut Your Tire Bills in Two

As your first practical economy of the economies we all must effect until this World War is over, put on DOUBLE TREAD TIRES, built by special process, guaranteed to meet the most exacting tests of everyday mileage, yet costing only a fraction of what average tires cost.

DOUBLE TREADS have been before the public for three years, and have built for us the largest tire business in this field. Do not confuse them with cheap, recased tires, flashily advertised to be "DOUBLE TREADS". Look for DOU TRE trademark. Compare these prices. Send for complete list of tires and accessories. Our business has been built on the good will and satisfaction created by first orders.

Size	Plain	Non-Skid	9 Ply Gray Tubes	Red Tubes
30x3.....	$5.50	$5.75	$2.75	$3.00
30x3½...	6.50	7.25	3.00	3.40
32x3½...	7.50	8.25	3.45	3.55
33x4.....	9.50	10.50	4.50	4.75

Also all sizes up to 38 x 5½. State whether clincher, "Q. D." or straight side.

Address Dept. U. S.
THE DOUBLE TREAD TIRE CO., Inc.
106 West 52d Street, New York City

Cruise for Vacation on the Lakes

7 day Trip

5 day Trip

The Magnificent Steel Steamship "Minnesota" to BUFFALO (NIAGARA FALLS) and RETURN $40 Including Meals and Berth

via Charlevoix, Harbor Springs and historic Mackinac Island, stopping at Detroit and viewing both ways by daylight the beautiful scenery of the Detroit River and St. Clair Flats, stopping at all points of interest. Nine-hour stop at Buffalo allows plenty of time to see Niagara Falls. One way $25, including berth and meals. During season leaves Chicago Saturdays 1:30 p. m.

The Elegant Steel Steamship "Missouri" to SAULT STE. MARIE and RETURN $27.50 Including Meals and Berth

via Charlevoix, Petoskey, Harbor Spgs & Mackinac Island—running the "Soo" River by daylight, returning via a portion of Georgian Bay and the scenic Grand Traverse Bay, stopping at all points of interest. One Way $14, including meals & berth. During season leaves Chicago Mondays 4:00 p. m. S. S. "Missouri" also makes a special trip each week to Onekama, Frankfort, Glen Haven and Glen Arbor, leaving Chicago Saturdays at 4:00 p. m.

Our line of steamers offers you the greatest possible opportunity for real rest and genuine pleasure.

The Elegant Steel Steamships
MINNESOTA, MISSOURI, MANITOU, ILLINOIS

offer unrivaled service between Chicago, Charlevoix, Petoskey, Bay View, Harbor Springs, Mackinac Island, Ludington, Manistee, Onekama, Frankfort, GlenHaven, GlenArbor, Leland (via auto or connecting steamer from Glen Haven), and Traverse Bay ports, Sault Ste. Marie, Detroit and Buffalo, connecting with all lines for Lake Superior and Eastern Points. Book of tours and folder mailed on request.

Northern Michigan Transportation Co.
J. C. CONLEY, Gen. Pass. Agt., New Municipal Pier (East End Grand Ave.,) Chicago, Ill.

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year
Club rate for ten or more subscriptions, 25c a year
No other premium allowed.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

DO YOU KNOW?

Do you know that you have a state superintendent of official papers?

Do you know that you can send in your subscriptions to her, or directly to National W. C. T. U. Headquarters?

Do you know that in sending in your subscriptions to National Headquarters, you will be helping the state work if each time you ask that they be placed to the credit of your state superintendent?

Do you know that you must give your state superintendent's name in order to get that credit?

Do you know that you would be better informed, more efficient and more consecrated, if you would subscribe for and read THE UNION SIGNAL?

Do you know that on the sixteenth page of THE UNION SIGNAL of May 3 appeared a charming little playlet that might be given at your next public meeting and that is almost certain to bring you new enthusiasm and new subscribers for THE UNION SIGNAL?

Do you know that if you really want THE UNION SIGNAL as much as you want a big dinner the day the preacher comes, you can "scare up," somehow, the $1.00 for the weekly, or the 35 cents for the Campaign Edition, if you try hard enough?

Do you know that you, your family, and your work need THE UNION SIGNAL?

If you don't know these things, it is time you were learning your lesson. THE UNION SIGNAL, as a welcome visitor in your home, would prove a great blessing.

Subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL. Do it now!

With love and congratulations to every subscriber, and love and sympathy for each non-subscriber.

GRACE WILLIAMS ROBINS, in Tennessee State W. C. T. U. Paper.

"SONGS AND SAYINGS" is a rare book of thrilling reading and of soul-moving songs. It contains "Jim and Me," "A Saloonless Nation 1920," and other very fine songs. You need it, your W. C. T. U. needs it, your prohibition campaign is not complete without a supply of it. Price, 25c, 5 copies for $1. Order today of Rev. L. L. Pickett, Wilmore, Ky.

Jennie Smith, National railroad evangelist, 319 E. St. N. E. Two squares east of Union Station, Washington, D. C. Rooms at reasonable prices.

$50 may be earned for your Church besides good pay for your time distributing Religious Literature in your section. Write Nichols Co., Dept. L. 1, Naperville, Ill.

ARMY OFFICERS AND ALCOHOL

Grenfell, Kitchener and Roberts of Great Britain, Von Haeseler of Germany and Wahlberg of Finland have testified that, from their keen observation of soldiers engaged in warfare, abstainers from alcohol can stand up under hard work better than nonabstainers, even though they drink in so-called moderation.—Chicago Tribune.

UNIFORMS NOT IN FAVOR AT CHICAGO BARS

The Chicago bartender waved back the coin the gentleman in the bright and shining uniform placed on the bar. "Agin' the law to serve you," the delegate to the convention of the Modern Woodmen of the World was told. "They'll pinch me if I let a soldier get a drink."

"But I'm not a soldier; I'm a Woodman," the visitor explained.

The man behind the bar was obdurate. "Th' law don't make no difference," was the answer, "no matter whether you're cavalryman, infantryman or woodsman. Git, or I'll call a cop."

The Woodman "got," says the story in the Chicago Examiner, and on the sidewalk encountered half a dozen of his kind, all of whom had failed to convince the Chicago bartenders that a uniform doesn't always make a soldier.

MR. MAN

(Continued from Page Thirteen)

His mind worked quickly. He remembered how lonely he had been before she came; now he had frightened her away. If he let her go this time she would never come back again, and, strangest of all, he could not bear to think of such a possibility.

"Dorothy," he called in such a gentle tone he scarcely recognized it as his own, "Dorothy, come back. I did not mean to speak so sharply. Come back, and we will go and pick some fruit."

The child turned, and, seeing his outstretched hands, waited at the gate, but made no attempt to return.

"Come, Dorothy; come back to the cross old man who has no little girl to tell him how to behave."

Dorothy came slowly toward him, tears just ready to run over standing in the brown eyes.

"I'll try hard to forget how cross you were, but I can't call you uncle while I remember. When I forget, maybe I will!"

The child kept her word. She came to see the old gentleman every few days and always called him Mr. Man. He was careful to keep the bottle out of her sight. But one day, having taken a little more than was good for him, he fell asleep and was awakened by the sound of Dorothy's voice. He wondered what she was doing. Carefully opening his eyes, he saw her kneeling, and, much to his amazement, he heard her praying, and for him.

"Our Father which art in heaven," the childish voice went on, "please, please don't let Mr. Man drink any more of that poison out of that black bottle on the table"—this to identify it. "I don't want, dear God, to have his brains stolen, 'cause I'm getting to like him most 'nuff to call him uncle again. Please, dear God, tell him to pour the nasty poison on the ground and make him promise never, never to drink any more of it. Amen."

Dorothy rose from her knees and saw Mr. Man looking intently at her. She was not a bit confused, but calm and peaceful, like one believing her prayer would be granted.

The old man was stirred to the profoundest depths. Through the prayer of a little child he had been brought to a full realization of the life he had been living and the horror of it all, and now the awakening had come.

"Dorothy, child," he called, "your prayer is answered. From this day forth, I promise to drink nothing stronger than water. Take the bottle, pour its contents on the ground, then call me uncle again, and you will make an old man happier than he has been for many a day."

Dorothy seized the bottle in both small hands, poured the liquor slowly on the ground, watching it soak into the earth. Then with glowing face she ran to Mr. Man, and putting her arms around his neck, called him by the name he loved.

POSTERS POSTERS

JUST FROM THE PRESS

A special patriotic poster in red, white and blue

National Constitutional Prohibition
By your vote
Help Conserve Your Country's Resources
YOUTH — FOOD — WEALTH

Size 28x42

Price, 10 cents each; 3 for 25 cents.

* * * *

ILLUSTRATED POSTERS

Size 19x25

THE BIG CITY PROBLEM

In Every Wet Community the Liquor Traffic is Responsible for
50 per cent of all arrests
50 per cent of the poverty
40 per cent of the insanity
85 per cent of the crime
The Non-Drinker has to Help Pay the Cost of All This

* * * * *

A NATIONAL DUTY

STRONG DRINK
THREATENS
THE CRADLE

CONSERVE
THE CHILDHOOD
OF THE NATION

* * * * *

A TAKING ARTICLE

Brewers Say:
"BEER TAKES
THE PLACE
OF BREAD."

It Often Takes the Place of Milk and Meat Also.

Millions of Dollars
Are Each Year Taken
From the Pockets of the
Workingman and
Put Into the Breweries.

BEER IS A VERY TAKING ARTICLE

Price, 5 cents each; per hundred, $3.50

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

A GIFT

that will be prized by any white ribboner is the

DAINTY BOW PIN

Made of gold and set with thirty pearls.

(Size ¾ inch.)

Price, postpaid, $3.50.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., July 12-19, 1917 | No. 28

Pray! Push! Persevere!

For War Time Prohibition

Continue to send telegrams to President Wilson, your Senators and your Representatives, urging Prohibition of all Alcoholic Beverages.

Prohibition Wins in Porto Rico

Cablegram from W. C. T. U. Representative at Porto Rico reports Prohibition Victory, 37,000 Majority.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

DRY AND ANTI-VICE ZONE FIVE MILES WIDE TO BE THROWN AROUND MOBILIZATION AND TRAINING CAMPS—SENATE STILL STRUGGLING WITH FOOD CONTROL BILL—VOTE TO BE TAKEN JULY 21

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

We have won a signal victory. A dry zone five miles wide, unless there is a city or town within that limit, is to be thrown around all camps for the mobilization or training of troops by new regulations made public yesterday at the War Department. Prohibition under a penalty of $10,000 fine is also imposed against the maintenance of any immoral houses within the limit of five miles of any camp.

Since the last letter to THE UNION SIGNAL we have been having strenuous days that will tell for all time. It will be remembered that the Lever Food Control bill, containing a strong amendment for complete war prohibition, and authorizing the President of the United States to commandeer all distilled liquors for redistillation for the manufacture of munitions of war and other governmental needs, and paying a just compensation for the same, passed the House of Representatives Saturday, June 23, by a vote of 365 to 5. Prior to this, a bill of similar nature had been before the Senate committee on Agriculture and Forestry, Senator Gore of Oklahoma, chairman. Numerous representatives of the brewers and distillers of the country have appeared before the committee in opposition to war prohibition. Probably never before has there been a larger representation of liquor men in Washington than during the past two or three weeks. Naturally the wine and beer men have made desperate efforts to have the articles relating to these liquors stricken from the measure.

Legislative Conference Holds Meeting

We at Washington headquarters realized that a crisis in temperance reform had been reached and that an immediate conference of temperance workers was necessary. Miss Anna Gordon was summoned and she left Evanston at once. Upon her arrival in Washington, telegrams were dispatched to members of the National Legislative Conference (which comprises representatives of twenty-two national allied organizations) requesting them to attend a meeting to be held in National W. C. T. U. headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, Washington, D. C., Monday evening, July 2, at seven o'clock. Fifteen organizations responded. Rev. Howard Russell, chairman, being in California, Miss Gordon, as vice-chairman, presided with great acceptability. The peculiar situation was carefully outlined, and calm, thoughtful consideration given every phase of the matter. After hours of deliberation a committee of seven was appointed and submitted a declaration stating our position, which was unanimously adopted. This declaration was printed in full in the last issue of THE UNION SIGNAL and copies of it were sent to the President, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy and to each Senator and Representative.

It is estimated that four weeks ago, there were approximately 300,000,000 gallons of whisky in bond in the United States. Since the agitation for legislation to prohibit the distilling of liquor during the period of the war, and authorizing the President to commandeer all distilled liquors for redistillation for the manufacture of munitions of war, or for hospital purposes, dealers have been withdrawing vast quantities of these liquors. At the custom house in Baltimore the government tax on 1,500 barrels of spirits was paid in one morning by dealers in that one city, and when the office closed in the afternoon, $100,000 had been paid in. A dealer was asked, by 'phone, by one of his customers, the price of a case of whisky of his customary brand, and gasped when the sum, $20, was named; two weeks ago the same whisky could have been bought for $8.

History of Food Bill in Senate

Friday, July 6, the entire day in the Senate was devoted to the section of the food bill pertaining to the elimination of liquor during the war. Amendments were introduced and rejected again and again. Eloquent speeches for or against the amendments followed thick and fast under the ten minute rule.

Senator Sherman of Illinois Declares for "Bone Dry" Prohibition

Senator Sherman of Illinois, in an impassioned speech placed the responsibility for the race riots in East St. Louis upon the "infernal, lawless, damnable saloons that have infested and blighted that community for years."

The discussion of the East St. Louis riots was precipitated by Senator Thomas of Colorado. He attacked the proposal to prohibit the manufacture of beer and wine on the ground that it would lead to discontent and perhaps lawlessness on the part of a large proportion of the population of the country. He said that there is too much discontent in the land today already and mentioned the race riots in the Illinois city.

Senator Sherman took the floor immediately and challenged the soundness of Senator Thomas' argument.

"I have no words of apology for the slaughter that has happened there of American citizens, who, under the full panoply of the laws of the country, have been brutally outraged, taken into alleys, shot with revolvers, beaten to death with bludgeons, burned in their own homes, and, fleeing to an opera house for safety, have had it burned over their heads, with the result that many corpses have been taken from the ruins," Senator Sherman said.

"I have no apology for that for my own state, or any other state. It is something that ought never to occur, and would never have happened except for the inherent defect that is lurking in our system, the increasing contempt for law and order that is springing up all over the country and resulting in a grand procession of criminals.

"The principal source of the vile, fetid, corrosive element that blazed the way in disorder and wrote the story of blood across the sky over East St. Louis is the infernal lawless, damnable saloons that have infested that town and blighted the community for years, and I want to know whether the senator from Colorado will be a party to the continuance of those lawless conditions and more lawless men.

"It is the saloonkeepers of East St. Louis and their kind who lead the van of every lawless movement and breed and spew their infamous vermin upon every community where they are suffered to exist.. I am a 'bone dry' senator from now on."

The following day, Saturday, July 7, the discussion was continued. Senator Smoot of Utah offered an amendment which finally carried, and is as follows:

"That the President of the United States be and hereby is directed to take over for and on behalf of the government all distilled liquors that are held in bond at the time this Act goes into effect and he is hereby authorized to pay the owners of such liquors the actual cost of the same, plus a profit not exceeding ten per cent."

It will be noted that beer and wine are not mentioned in this amendment, but the friends of temperance in the Senate, are standing for complete war prohibition.

Senate Still Struggling With Bill

The Senate is still struggling with the other provisions of the bill. The Democratic steering committee met yesterday to devise some plan to bring about action on the bill. By unanimous consent the bill with all amendments will be voted on Saturday, July 21, not later than 3:30 in the afternoon. This gives over a week to wait upon members of the Senate. Prof. Scanlon, Dr. Waters, and Mr. Park, from Pittsburgh, Pa., all representing the Presbyterian Board, beside others, are interviewing members in support of war prohibition. A majority of those interviewed are decidedly in favor of complete war prohibition of all alcoholic beverages. We believe our temperance friends everywhere would be glad to help push this measure to assured victory.

Send in Your Telegrams

Telegrams to Senators and Representatives the very hour this reaches you, urging them to vote for the prohibition of the manufacture of wine and beer and of distilled spirits during the war, may save the day.

Mr. Herbert C. Hoover, food administrator, is evidently having his own troubles with women in his attempts to gain their interest in home economics. The truth of the matter is, the average woman has been trained to economy by the force of circumstances, meager salaries, large and growing families, the high cost of her daily living, having to make one dollar do the work of two. Mr. Hoover's morning mail would be very interesting reading just now. Why, they ask, if it is necessary for us to have "meatless" and "wheatless" days, should not men have "drinkless" and "smokeless" days? Mr. Hoover has become convinced that the average American housewife hasn't much to learn along the lines of domestic economy. Show her the need of economy, and she will find the method. It has been left to one of Washington's educators to evolve a slogan for the food conservation campaign. It is brief but to the point and is addressed to the housewives of the nation: Don't stuff your husband, but husband your stuff.

Miss Rankin has taken up the matter of women working overtime in government departments. The bureau of printing and engraving owing to unusual stress kept its employes, both men and women, at work over twelve hours. This fact was brought to her attention and by her efforts, Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo was prevailed upon to call a halt, by issuing an order for an eight hour work day only. There has been some dissatisfaction expressed, especially among the men, as it deprives them of getting extra pay for extra service. Miss Rankin has announced that she will ask the House Labor committee for a general investigation of the hours of labor for all women in government employ, throughout the United States. She will recommend that the inquiry start in Washington and probably will suggest the appointment of a sub-labor committee to look into conditions in the bureau of engraving, the government hospital for the insane, the government printing office and the post office department.

National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, July 13, 1917

ATTORNEY GENERAL GREGORY CONSTRUES REED "BONE-DRY" AMENDMENT IN LETTER TO UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS

The following official communication relating to the construction to be placed upon the Reed "Bone-Dry" Amendment, has been issued by Attorney General Gregory:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE
WASHINGTON, D. C.

July 11, 1917.

CIRCULAR No. 704

In re Reed Amendment

To United States Attorneys:

On account of the large number of inquiries by United States Attorneys relating to the construction to be placed on the Reed Amendment (39 Stat. 1058, 1069) and to prospective prosecutions thereunder, you are herein advised of this Department's interpretation of certain provisions of the law.

The Reed Amendment makes it a Federal offense to "cause intoxicating liquors to be transported in interstate commerce, except for scientific, sacramental, medicinal, and mechanical purposes, into any state or territory the laws of which state or territory prohibit the manufacture or sale therein of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes," although the state law may not prohibit such importation or may specifically permit the importation of intoxicating liquors in designated quantities. (See 54 Cong. Rec., Part 4, pp. 3330-3336 and 3793-3806.)

Every form of transportation is forbidden, whether by common carrier, by private conveyance, in baggage, or on the person. In connection with the prohibition against the carriage of liquor on the person, your attention is called to the case of United States v. Chavez (228 U. S. 525, 532,533). The carrier or shipper may be prosecuted in any district from, through, or into which the liquor is transported. (Armour Packing Company v. United States, 209 U. S. 56; United States v. Freeman, 239 U. S. 117.)

You are directed to report to this Department instances of interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors into dry locality in a local-option state, if the state law prohibits in such dry locality their manufacture or sale for beverage purposes. A test case will be selected from those reported for the purpose of determining the applicability of the law to such transportation.

Please govern yourselves accordingly. Should you be in serious doubt concerning your duty in any specific case, write to the Department for instructions.

Respectfully,
T. W. GREGORY,
Attorney General.

BIG WHISKY FIRM TO GO OUT OF BUSINESS

Chapin & Gore, one of the largest whisky manufacturing concerns in the United States, and for sixty years in business in Chicago, has announced through Charles H. Hermann, president, that the firm will go out of business, as a result of anti-whisky legislation. Chapin & Gore are reported to have done an annual business in excess of $2,000,000, and according to the Chicago papers, less than six years ago received an offer of $1,000,000 for their "name and good will."

BELGIAN COMMISSION TO CONSIDER LIMITATION OF LIQUOR TRAFFIC

The Belgian government is reported to have appointed a commission to consider the drafting of a bill for the suppression of the manufacture of alcoholic liquors and for the limitation of public houses. All the political parties of the country favor such a measure, it is said.

CHIHUAHUA, MEXICO, BARS ALL INTOXICANTS

Prohibition is gaining ground in Mexico. On July 8, it is reported, entire prohibition of the manufacture and sale of all intoxicating liquors became effective throughout the state of Chihuahua. The decree is said to have been given as a direct order from President Carranza, and is considered a war measure in furtherance of the efforts to stamp out banditry and revolution in this, the largest of the border states. Severe penalties are imposed for violation of the decree.

SONORA, MEXICO, BONE DRY

Whatever may be the faults or failings of our neighbors on the southern border, some of them understand the benefits of prohibition and know how to make prohibition prohibit as is indicated by the following dispatch:

"General Plutarco Elias Calles has made the state of Sonora so strongly prohibition that it is now impossible to buy a drink in this mining camp, Cananea, which has long been the scene of many drunken riots and brawls. General Elias Calles is known as the father of prohibition in the state and has used his military officers to enforce the law against selling liquor in every community and mining camp in the entire state."

HONOR ROLL

—of—

PROHIBITION STATES AND TERRITORY AND DATE OF GOING INTO EFFECT

Maine			1851
Kansas			1880
North Dakota			1889
Oklahoma			1907
Georgia			1908
North Carolina			1909
Mississippi			1909
Tennessee			1909
West Virginia			1914
Alabama			1915
Arizona			1915
Virginia			1916
Colorado			1916
Oregon			1916
Washington			1916
Arkansas			1916
Iowa			1916
Idaho			1916
South Carolina			1916
Nebraska	*May	1,	1917
South Dakota	*July	1,	1917
Utah	†Aug.	1,	1917
Dist. of Columbia	†Nov.	1,	1917
Alaska	†Jan.	1,	1918
Indiana	†April	2,	1918
Michigan	*April	30,	1918
Montana	*Dec.	31,	1918
New Hampshire	†May	1,	1918

*Enacted 1916. †Enacted 1917.

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1917

Iowa†† Ohio New Mexico

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1918

Utah†† Missouri Florida
Minnesota Wyoming Nevada

††Now have statutory prohibition. Will vote on constitutional amendment.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION MAY MAKE MASSACHUSETTS DRY

The constitutional convention committee on the liquor traffic on July 12 voted, 9 to 6, to recommend the adoption of a "bone dry" amendment providing for state-wide prohibition on and after May 1, 1918.

NOT ONE DRUNKEN SOLDIER AT FORT RILEY CAMP

"There are 7,000 men in training at the Fort Riley camp in Kansas," says Capper's Weekly. "There will soon be 48,000. So far there has not been one case of drunkenness since the camp was opened more than a month ago. No other army camp in the United States has such a record because it isn't possible to do this without a 'bone-dry' law. Fort Riley is well within the borders of Kansas and booze sellers cannot get at the men.

"By order of the War Department selling liquor to a soldier is punishable by a fine of $1,000 or a year in prison. Yet severe as this penalty is it does not prevent saloonists from selling liquor to soldiers in other parts of the country.

"We close the saloons every election day. Is a war, or a military camp in which there are thousands of young soldiers, a smaller public matter than an election?"

PRINTERS BRAND WETS AS AGENTS OF THE ENEMY

The Old Time Printers' Association at its weekly meeting in Chicago recently passed resolutions urging the government to "remove the blighting curse of the liquor traffic from American life," and protesting against recent accusations that organized labor is seeking to perpetuate the saloon.

MINNESOTA DAIRYMEN OPPOSE USE OF GRAIN FOR LIQUOR

The Minnesota Dairymen's Association, meeting recently at Brainerd, went on record as opposed to the use of grain in the manufacture of liquors. The resolutions adopted state that the hay yield in northern Minnesota will be smaller than usual and corn prospects are poor, thus making it imperative that grains be conserved for food.

VICE-PRESIDENT OF ALASKA W. C. T. U. VISITS NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS

The first woman to be elected superintendent of the schools of an Alaskan city is a white ribboner who also holds the office of vice-president-at-large of the territorial W. C. T. U. Her name is not unfamiliar to our readers, for Miss Margaret Keenan, the head of the public school system of Fairbanks, has been frequently mentioned in THE UNION SIGNAL. She was a recent visitor at National Headquarters, and in an interview graciously granted the managing editor she spoke enthusiastically concerning the advance of the prohibition movement in the territory.

Miss Keenan called special attention to the great obstacle the workers for prohibition had to meet in the fact that the public schools of Alaska were supported by revenue from the liquor traffic. All through the campaign the anti-prohibitionists argued that the public schools would be without financial backing if the saloons were outlawed. When, therefore, the people by a magnificent vote gave expression to their desire to abolish the drink traffic, it was incumbent upon the prohibition forces "to see the school revenue situation through." It was a disappointment that the enabling act passed by Congress contained no provision for revenue for the schools. "Of course," remarked Miss Keenan in reviewing the history of the legislation, "the next thing for us to do was to get from Congress a measure turning over to the territorial legislature the authority to maintain the schools. This we succeeded in doing just before Congress adjourned. We found little difficulty in passing through our own legislative body a measure providing for the maintenance, control and general organization of the school system of Alaska."

"Will there be adequate support for the schools now?" asked the questioner. "Yes indeed!" exclaimed Miss Keenan. "The schools will be far more generously supplied with funds than ever before. All the schools outside of incorporated towns are to be provided for entirely from the territorial treasury. The schools in the incorporated towns will receive seventy-five per cent of the necessary funds from the territory and twenty-five per cent from direct taxation in these towns. For the first time in the history of Alaska the education of the boys and girls of the territory will be carried on with clean, untainted money."

Most significant was the reply of Miss Keenan to the query, "What do you consider the strongest influence, aside from woman suffrage, that led Alaska to vote out the saloons?" "Alaska is a country of young men," said Miss Keenan thoughtfully. "Practically all of them came from the states and were educated in schools where scientific temperance truths were taught, and that as a matter of course influenced their vote on this important question."

Above everything else this energetic citizen of the great Northwest is interested in the young patriots who attend the schools of which she has charge. "Do I find the pupils interested in prohibition," repeated Miss Keenan after her interviewer. "Indeed, I do. If you ask them to name some of the great questions of the day, they will promptly tell you the most important is the European War, and the next most vitally interesting question is the prohibition of the liquor traffic. You can usually trust the little people to be on the right side of these great moral problems."

Miss Keenan suggested with pardonable pride that Alaska is in advance of some of the states on the tobacco question, the last legislature having passed an anti-tobacco law prohibiting the sale to or use of tobacco or cigarets in any form by anyone under eighteen years of age. Miss Keenan deserves credit as an educator for securing the introduction and passage of this commendable piece of legislation.

Miss Keenan Starting on Vacation

The thrift movement is being promoted through the schools. The need for it among the younger generation can be understood when one learns that there is in circulation no coin of smaller denomination than twenty-five cents, and this piece to the children of Alaska seems of no more value than does a penny to the boys and girls in the states. In Alaska the children have grown up in an atmosphere of extravagance and it is not uncommon to discover the gambling instinct developed in them to an alarming extent. Miss Keenan told of finding two children of the respective ages of seven and eight matching coins on the street corner, and investigation showed the coins to be silver dollars. The thrift movement is proving popular among the pupils of the schools and equally so among the fathers and mothers.

When asked what was the next reform upon which the W. C. T. U. intended to concentrate, Miss Keenan replied that white ribboners were planning to stress especially the enforcement of the prohibitory law, and the creating of sentiment against the social evil. As vice-president of the W. C. T. U. she is planning to launch an educational campaign, and distribute throughout the cities of the territory literature dealing with the social evil. W. C. T. U. leaders feel keenly the need of a general awakening on this subject and are determined that if they can prevent it no young man shall be left to enter an immoral life through ignorance of the dangers to himself and the children he may be responsible for bringing into the world. The agents of commercialized vice find a rich field in the mining camps and towns of the great Northwest, for while there is a federal [illegible] against segregated vice, there is a woeful lack of the public sentiment necessary to insure its enforcement.

Miss Keenan as an educator is endeavoring indirectly through the manual training and domestic science departments of her school in Fairbanks to strike at the foundations of immoral living. She is training the girls in the profession of home-making and exalting the dignity of home-keeping, and is instructing the boys in the art and craft of building and fitting up their homes. She hopes in this way to meet the needs of the homesick, homeless men of this country who from sheer lonelness often fall prey to the vice harpies.

This friend of the little citizens of Alaska is possessed of the lofty ambition to instill in the minds of all the boys and girls who come under her influence the noble sentiments and high moral standards for which the W. C. T. U. stands, knowing that in their hands rests the future of this far-north commonwealth.

PROSPECTS BRIGHT FOR PROHIBITION VICTORY IN OHIO

Many new recruits are rallying to the prohibition standard in Ohio, and the prospects for success at the November election are more promising than in any former campaign. "It must be admitted by even those who look upon such campaigns with only slight interest, that the drys have a very apparent advantage this year," says the Greenfield Republican. "Forces which were not active and did not throw any influence into former campaigns for the dry amendment are now coming to the fore."

Sometime ago the dry Democrats of the state met in Columbus and formed an organization for the purpose of aiding in the campaign for prohibition, and the latter part of June the dry Republicans met in the same city and likewise organized for the support of the prohibition fight. At one of the meetings of the dry Republicans Chairman Reid predicted that this action by the Democrats and Republicans had so changed conditions that never again would a man opposed to prohibition be elected to an important office in Ohio.

Various Ohio organizations are also declaring in favor of a dry state. The State Teachers' Association meeting at Cedar Point unanimously adopted the following strong resolutions for national prohibition:

"To the end that our food supply may be increased and conserved to feed the world and that the brave boys who are offering their all to help to make the 'world safe for democracy,' may be protected from dangers greater than those of the battlefield, we earnestly favor the elimination of the liquor traffic from our nation and urge that those who are in authority with power to act, shall promptly exercise that power to eliminate this evil which is the world's greatest menace both in war and in peace."

The Ohio State Sunday School Association in convention at Marion, June 29, recommended the designation of "Sunday, September 16, as Ohio Dry Day, and that a special program, prepared by the state office, be rendered and an offering be received for the Ohio Dry Federation."

A SOBER NATION TO UPHOLD OUR SOBER ARMY AND NAVY

UNITED STATES SENATOR WESLEY L. JONES OF WASHINGTON

Advocates of prohibition believe there is no influence in this country that is more weakening to the strength and efficiency of our people and of our armies than the liquor traffic. They believe this because it has been shown that one of the greatest enemies that England, France and Italy have been fighting is the liquor traffic, which has weakened their forces more than the guns and batteries of Germany.

We are not fighting on behalf of temperance but on behalf of conservation, on behalf of making more efficient our Army and our industries. We have said to our boys in uniform you cannot have beer, you cannot have liquor.

We believe that what is good for the boys at the front is good for the boys at home, for whose liberty and whose government these men are fighting, and if we are going to insist that this denial shall be forced upon them we believe that we should also say to our people back home, you cannot have these things that destroy your efficiency, that make you less able to uphold and strengthen the arms of the boys at the front.

PRACTICAL FOOD CONSERVATION

ELLA A. BOOLE, Vice-President-at-Large National W. C. T. U.

Buy with thought, cook with care,
Serve enough, with none to spare.
Eat what will spoil, save what will not,
Grow what you can, waste not a jot.

These are Mr. Herbert C. Hoover's Seven Service Rules for housewives told in rhyme, and no organized body of women will co-operate with him more fully in the conservation of food than will the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Some of us have been housekeepers for many years and have managed our homes economically, but with the thought of saving two cents a meal per person we will find we can save in many other ways. One wheatless meal each day may be harder to plan than one meatless meal but corn bread, rye bread, rice balls and oat cakes are wholesome and appetizing. The elimination of waste and the use of all left-overs very soon become a habit. Thoughtless waste also becomes a habit. It is said that in one apartment house in New York City in a single day eighteen loaves of bread were found in the garbage cans. Some of them had not even been unwrapped.

"Can you avoid waste? May be your garbage can."

Not one scrap of bread should be wasted and each union might well hold a housewives' conference to which the members and visitors could contribute some pet economy. Mr. Hoover is not such an alarmist as to say that our country is in danger of starvation but all America can spare, will help feed those who are in danger of starvation on the other side.

If you eat to live, when the war's complete
There'll be many more who will live to eat.

The shortage of food will be greatest along the line of flour, fats and meats. Health must be conserved. Meals should be well balanced. Growing children should have the right kinds of food. All this requires careful thought and the women of the country will recognize that in careful planning to avoid waste they are doing a patriotic service.

The women, however, cannot solve the problem alone. Why not beerless days, wineless days, and smokeless days for those who think they cannot get along without beer and wine all the time? Why not the same protection for the men at home as for the men who wear the uniform. Some of us have been total abstainers for so long that doing without alcoholic liquors means no sacrifice, but the fact that last year in the United States as much money was spent for alcoholic liquors as the full amount asked in the first Liberty Loan, affords a strong argument not only for prohibition for the time of the war, but for total abstinence while we are waiting for prohibition. Here is another slogan that we may well emphasize along with doing our bit in food conservation:

The law for the soldier and the law for me
Are not the same, but they ought to be,
To him it says—"No whisky or beer,"
Who'll say the same while war is here?

Every member of the white ribbon army has already taken her stand. Every church member and every patriot should be constrained to answer "I, I, I."

IS UNCLE SAM AFRAID OF THE TYRANT AT HOME?

MARGARET B. PLATT

No more patriotic and loyal army will gather upon any battlefield than the army that is mustered into action daily in the kitchens of the United States. Mr. Hoover, our national food administrator, in the effort to cut down the cost of living and conserve a sufficiency of foodstuffs for our own civil and military needs and at the same time minister to the necessities of other nations, is calling upon the women of the United States to eliminate all waste and to economize in every possible manner even to saving every crumb of bread and every portion of butter left on the plates. We are told that: "In many households the butter left on the plates would equal one pat or one-fourth of an ounce daily, which, if it were carefully saved in each of our 20,000,000 households, would equal 312,500 pounds a day, or 114,062,500 pounds a year, and to make this quantity of butter would require 265,261,560 gallons of milk, or the product of over half a million cows."

This is a startling statement and should cause every cook and housekeeper to look carefully after the butter pats and see that no particle of the precious golden product goes to the dishwater or garbage pail, and also to guard with utmost care all foodstuffs, preventing the little leaks, the tiny wastage here and there, realizing what a stupendous aggregate may be caused by the loss in every household each day of one very small portion.

There is no doubt that America needs a lesson in thrift, economy and conservation. We have been a wasteful and extravagant people. If the most cruel and frightful war the world has ever known teaches us our greatly needed lesson of conservation it will give some small recompense for the horrors and losses it inflicts, but we are paying a fearful price for our lesson.

However, while we are called upon by those high in authority to inaugurate "breadless days" and "meatless days," to carefully save even the fourth of an ounce of butter, to observe the "gospel of the clean plate," serving and taking no more upon our plates than is actually necessary for our needs, to use corn bread instead of wheat, and taboo butter for all cooking purposes, to use less lard, and "save our bacon" and by arduous thought and labor, for it involves that, reduce the cost of our meals by two cents per person each meal, while we as women are urged to do all this and much more, some of us would like to inquire what valid objection there can be to cutting out entirely the use of all foodstuffs for the manufacture of alcoholic beverages. We have read all that we can find upon the subject but we have found no real reason.

To urge the continuation of the manufacture of wine and beer for the sake of revenue is puerile. Uncle Sam forbids the sale of these poisons to his soldiers and sailors but is willing to derive a revenue from the sale of the same poison to his civilian people. What a spectacle! If a hundred million people are incapable of furnishing a revenue sufficient for all purposes under conditions conducive to sobriety and true patriotism, will it help matters if any considerable proportion of them are drunken? Will not a sober, patriotic, liberty-loving people respond to every just demand with greater zeal and enthusiasm than a drunken and sodden populace?

Women are responding with splendid eagerness and unsurpassed loyalty to every request to save, to labor, to give, to sacrifice; they are willing to do and to suffer, and thousands are already giving of their very heart's blood when they send their sons out upon the world's battlefields, that by their sacrifice, if need be, they may make the whole world safe for democracy. And these women are asking what reason can be given why under all the present circumstances the waste of foodstuffs should still go on for the making of alcoholic beverages. Uncle Sam dares the mailed fist of tyrants and the red hand of slaughter on foreign fields—is he afraid of the tyrant at home?

The womanhood of the nation makes her appeal in this crucial hour for the destruction of that thing that has ever been her deadliest enemy—the liquor traffic. It is for the President and the Congress of the United States at this time to say which appeal shall be heeded. Shall it be the plea of the woman and the home or the demand of the brewer and his drink cohorts that will be granted? History is waiting to record the verdict. Will it be the shame or the pride of future generations?

MARBLE STATUE OF MADAM YAJIMA, PRESIDENT JAPAN W. C. T. U., UNVEILED AT TWENTY-FIFTH ANNUAL CONVENTION

Special Correspondence

The twenty-fifth annual convention of the national W. C. T. U. of Japan was held in Tokio with the greatest possible enthusiasm prevailing. Through the kindness of the Friends girls' school a meeting place was provided and entertainment furnished the ninety-eight delegates present, who had come from all over the country—from Kagoshima in the south to Hirosaki in the north. The program was most excellent, having been carefully planned, Miss Moriya and others giving this "labor of love" gladly.

On the second day of the convention a very solemn and impressive service, dedicating the beautiful new national headquarters building, was held. A special song was composed for the occasion by one of the "Y" girls and sung by the "Y" delegates. In the afternoon of the same day the unveiling of the marble statue of our beloved president, Madam Yajima, took place. The sculptor, Prof. Kitamura, and his wife, were present and the ceremony was conducted by Mrs. Minagawa, president of one of the local unions of the city, who had long been interested in the plan. Mr. Kitamura attended a meeting one evening at which Madam Yajima spoke and was at once impressed with her wonderful personality and inspired with a desire to immortalize her in marble. Labor and material amounting to one thousand yen were freely donated to the national W. C. T. U. by Mrs. Kitanina. A rosy-cheeked little sumi-ko, the granddaughter of Madam Yajima, unveiled the statue. Our dear president was beaming with happiness and many congratulatory words were showered upon her.

Madam Yajima's Room at Japanese National W. C. T. U. Headquarters

A memorial service was conducted for those who had gone to the heavenly Home during the year. Colonel Yamamuro gave an inspiring address, Mrs. Yamamuro being one who had been translated.

One evening during the convention a great feast, or dinner party, was given, at which were present the vice-president of Home Affairs, the governor of Tokio and many prominent people representing religious and educational bodies of the city. It was in celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the convention and the thirtieth anniversary of the organization of the national W. C. T. U. of Japan. It took place in one of the famous hotels in Tokio. After formal speechmaking by invited guests and a response by the president, many short speeches were made by both men and women. We heard audible whispers from waiters and other attendants expressing surprise beyond measure at the fine speeches made by the ladies. The proprietor of the hotel provided an orchestra for the occasion. Announcement was made that Prof. Kitamura, Mrs. Kozaki and Miss Watanabe were made honorary members of the society.

Okubo Jiai-Kwan, the rescue home for girls, was visited and the general subject of purity was discussed at a meeting held there. Ochuni Kubushiro, recording secretary of the Japan W. C. T. U., submitted an interesting report of the progress of the five sen bag movement, also enumerating the purity addresses made and purity meetings held in Tokio and elsewhere. Miss Penrod gave a most inspiring and encouraging report on the Home.

Important resolutions were passed providing that an anti-vice educational campaign be conducted on a wider scale; that an effort be made to abolish houses of vice around Ise Temple, and that new unions be established in thirty cities in districts where none now exist.

The "Y" delegates met by themselves one evening to discuss questions pertaining to "Y" work. Mrs. Clara Parish Wright and Mrs. Kara Smart Root, W. C. T. U. missionaries, would be delighted to note the improvement and progress made by the girls in every way. We have only ten "Y's" but they are all very active societies full of earnest desire to do something for the Master. Japan needs this kind of young women to bring about necessary changes in many phases of society. One of the "Y's" raised about 111 yen last year for the work, an unheard of thing heretofore.

The convention was a remarkable success. The officers of the national union were re-elected: President, Madam Yajima; vice-president, Mrs. H. Ibuka; corresponding secretary, Mrs. K. Fujii; recording secretary, Mrs. N. U. Kubushiro; treasurer, Mrs. C. Kozaki.

PURITY CAMPAIGN IN JAPAN

FLORA E. STROUT, World's W. C. T. U. Representative

One of the saddest sights seen by a social worker in foreign ports is the large number of Japanese women who are exploited for immoral purposes. These women can be found by the hundreds, and even thousands, all over the world, and many people who have never visited Japan judge the entire womanhood of the country by the poor creatures who are sold and exported to meet the demands of licentious men of every race and clime. In the purity campaign in Burma we came across many of these women, and it was a difficult problem to know just what to do with and for them. It was in their interest I decided to stop off at Japan on my return voyage to America, to make an appeal for the passage of stricter measures for their protection.

You can imagine with what delight I visited my first mission field. My welcome was very hearty and it was indeed a joy to see old friends and to greet dear Mrs. Yajima who, although over eighty years of age, is still active and a power for good. Several receptions were held, the Japanese W. C. T. U. and the Foreign Auxiliary uniting to make me feel that I was not forgotten. The social affairs following gave me a chance to meet all my friends of seven years ago.

The Japanese W. C. T. U. is in a very flourishing condition and the personnel of the executive committee seemed to me unusually strong and fine. The new W. C. T. U. headquarters are beautiful and here the meetings of both the Japanese W. C. T. U. and the Foreign Auxiliary are held. The W. C. T. U., with other Christian bodies, has been carrying on for months a vigorous purity campaign, and much of the growing public sentiment against the licensing of the social evil is due to the efforts of these brave women. Miss Hyashi, president of the Osaka W. C. T. U., has been especially active and was then arranging for a big mass meeting in her city which I was invited to address. I sailed, however, before the date selected for the rally. By an appeal for five sen contributions quite a large sum of money has been raised which is being used for purity literature and meetings. The women were delighted to have me take up the cudgels against the social evil and I immediately entered upon a campaign in the interest of Japanese women abroad. There were many interviews with members of the House of Peers, including Prince Tokugawa, the president, and other men and women of importance. Meetings were held at which I spoke, one of the most important being with the Ladies' Patriotic League that numbers among its members some of the most influential women of Tokio. Not only the members but representatives of the House of Peers and other notables attended in large numbers. The last meeting was held the night before I planned to sail, and although a small admission fee was charged, there were present, in addition to the women, nearly a thousand men. The papers had contained much criticism of my campaign, pro and con, but the ovation given at this last meeting showed that a portion of popular sentiment, at least, was on the right side.

One of the meetings was held with the English Embassy people, and Lady Lilly,

(Continued on Page Nine)

MIDSUMMER PLANS FOR PATRIOTS

MRS. CAROLYN P. LINDSAY

Under ordinary circumstances summer means vacation and rest time for many people but 1917 is an unusual year. The shadow of the war cloud over our beloved land subdues much of the usual gayety and makes idle luxury seem out of place Patriotic duty largely supersedes recreation without an object and pleasure without a motive. Avoiding emotional hysteria, may we faithfully serve our country in our rest days and "find joy in the service."

A porch party may be more than a time-consumer and talk-fest if a little planning has been done beforehand. Maybe a layette is needed for the expected "little immigrant from heaven," whose mother-to-be, because her husband is serving his country and she is supporting the family, cannot stop work long enough to provide one. In other families, where "daddy" is "somewhere on the firing line," good-cheer, food and clothes will be needed. Show your patriotism by inviting these sad ones to your home and yard while you do some practical sewing for a possible future president.

Summer Work for Americanization

How about those little dark-eyed foreign mothers who have a desire to learn English in order to keep up with progressive husbands and precocious children? With books, pencils (the prohibition kind), writing pads, and an individual teacher for each scholar, school on the porch will be a delight. Serve a plain economical American luncheon and after it have the President's message to Congress read, followed by the salute to the Stars and Stripes. A little silk flag souvenir will help make these foreign women better American mothers.

Are there vineyards near you? Nobody ever yet had too much grape juice and the home-made product is most desirable. Make it and sell it for the soldiers' and sailors' relief fund by means of which families you know of are to be cared for. Take some to the military hospital for the convalescents to enjoy. Send some to the front, give some to the poor little church for sacramental use, and if you have any left you might wrap one beautiful bottle in the national colors all ready to christen a battleship perhaps! Ten pair of stained hands squeezing grapes make lots more fun than do one or two. Prepare some pretty flag decorated labels reading, "Made by the Happytown W. C. T. U. of Pleasantville." While you are "at it" make a little jelly to give a touch of color to the invalid's tray.

Try a "Community Sing"

Then there is the "community sing." What better way to keep up courage, maintain order, and cultivate patriotism to a high degree than to learn the native airs. Some one has said, "Let me write the songs of a nation and I care not who makes its laws." It's good to sing!

Cosmopolitan America sings "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," the Russians go to battle chanting their stately anthem, "Give to us Peace in our Time, O Lord." How many of us know all the words of the "Star-Spangled Banner" or of "Hail Columbia"? Then there are Katharine Lee Bates' "America the Beautiful," the last line of which is "And crown thy good with brotherhood from sea to shining sea," the grand national anthem, "God of Our Fathers Whose Almighty Hand," the immortal "Battle Hymn of the Republic," and scores of other songs. They all mean America and America is destined to be the greatest, grandest country on earth after we get national prohibition. For your musical evening nothing could be sweeter than the "Cradle Song 1915," words by Alice Mattullath, music by Fritz Kreisler.

War is a thing which calls up within us that which is most profound, and the solace of serious music supplants the lilt and swing of the popular song. The more sober kind of music makes the most lasting appeal to us in time of strife and crisis. Boys in the training camps have asked the Y. M. C. A. leaders to have sung "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

The "community chorus" is well defined by Arthur Farwell, president of the New York community chorus, as the "regular periodic meeting of the representative people of the community, all being freely invited, without regard to voice trials or any previous musical training whatsoever for four part singing, to the end of employing song for the unification of the country and through song to affirm our faith in God and the Nation."

Kate Douglas Wiggin recently said, at the end of a community music conference, "I have never in my life felt happier or more friendly, I have never felt so young or so useful or so neighborly." Surely these are the right ideas to foster.

Grain Savers' Luncheon

A grain savers' luncheon is very novel indeed. The food is prepared from the grains. The menu can be selected from the following: Corn soup or barley soup, steamed barley with cream and sugar served in bowls, rye bread and nut margarine sandwiches, bran muffins, fried cornmeal mush with cheese and tomato sauce (called polenta) water cress and pimento salad with oil and vinegar dressing, blanc mange (corn starch) in moulds with fruit sauce, oatmeal water with lemon, postum. The decorations are field grains and field flowers—nothing more beautiful in combination. Wheat spears, poppies, daisies and bluebells give the patriotic coloring. Oats and timothy with buttercups are also exquisite. Your patriotism can be practically shown in the wide-spread distribution of the leaflet of the Grain Savers' League of the United States, published recently in THE UNION SIGNAL, which may be reprinted in large quantities. A souvenir post card is the place card. It reads.

"Stop and Think!
"If you're asked by a friend to take a drink,
For the sake of Old Glory, stop and think,
The money that's spent for wine that flows,
Would keep an army in food and in clothes."

Do your "bit" for God and home and native land. Do it earnestly, happily, now, "when the day grows brighter in the glowing sun;" in summer time, or vacation time, do it now.

414 Western Ave., Albany, N. Y.

DRASTIC PROHIBITION LAWS FOUR THOUSAND YEARS AGO

A writer in a recent issue of the Journal and Messenger calls attention to certain sections of the most ancient laws of which we have any record, the code of Hammurabi which antedates the laws of Solon. This inscription goes back four thousand years and was found on a stone pillar discovered in the twentieth century. It relates to the traffic in intoxicating liquors, concerning which it appears there was need for stringent regulations even in those very early days of human history.

Section 108 provides: "If a woman who keeps a wine shop does not receive grain as the price of drink, but takes money of greater value or makes the measure of drink smaller than the measure of grain that mistress of a wine shop they shall put on trial and into the water shall throw her."

Section 109 says: "If the mistress of a wine shop collects criminals in her house and does not seize these criminals and conduct them to the palace, that mistress of a wine shop shall be put to death."

"If the wife of a god (a consecrated temple woman) who is not living in the house appointed opens a wine shop or enters a wine shop for a drink, they shall burn that woman," is the wording of Section 110.

It is evident that the liquor traffic has everywhere, from the very earliest records, been true to its inherent vicious and lawless nature. The degradation of women by permitting them to act as barmaids has not been tolerated in recent days but their presence in saloons is not forbidden in some countries, notably in England. Even so far back as this record goes the saloon was evidently such a favorite resort for criminals that sentence of death was pronounced against the keeper of a wine shop who did not report them and conduct them to the place of justice. Imagine a saloonkeeper of the present age reporting to the police the presence of criminals in his resort!

Reducing the size of the drink allowed for a certain price, or taking money of more value than the grain prescribed, was the early method of robbing the customer, less brutal, but doubtless as effective as the later system of "rolling," "knock out drops," etc.

Understanding as we do in this generation the demoralizing nature of the saloon, we can easily comprehend the animus of that section which prescribed the death penalty for a good woman who entered a saloon. Evidently she was considered of no more value to society—better dead than alive.

Three times was the death penalty pronounced for those who had the hardihood to transgress the stringent regulations written for the ancient wine shop. Had later generations dealt with the liquor traffic with the same iron hand the world would today be immeasurably better and happier. Who that knows the history of alcoholic liquor can doubt that it has been the supreme curse of the ages in every generation and every land, true to its insidious, degrading, deadly nature, every drop a serpent's sting? Why may not the world be rid of it?

I have long since come to the conclusion that as a mental worker I cannot afford even a small drink of wine or beer. I have only a little intellect, and I have to keep that in working order.—Prof. Walter Rauschenbusch.

Civilization is brute force plus a high development of brain power. Alcohol destroys the development of brain power and leaves brute force. —Dr. Haven Emerson, Health Commissioner New York City.

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, The Union Signal, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
The Date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
Remittances should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
Change of Address. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
Campaign Edition (Monthly) 35c a Year

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, July 12-19, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

MISS GORDON AND MRS. BOOLE IN EVANSTON

Miss Anna A. Gordon, National W. C. T. U. president, on Wednesday, July 11, returned to Evanston from Washington, where she has been in attendance upon a meeting of the National Legislative Conference of which she is the vice-chairman. Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National vice-president-at-large, was her guest at Rest Cottage the latter part of the week, returning to the East on Monday. The General Officers spent Friday and Saturday in the consideration of topics of pressing importance.

AMBULANCE FUND GROWS

The response to the appeal for the Ambulance Fund has been very gratifying. The National W. C. T. U. treasurer to date has received more than $1,200. Feeling confident that the balance needed for the purchase, equipment and transportation to France of a motor ambulance will be in hand within a few days, the order for it has been placed. Do not fail to "do your bit" for the brave men on the European battlefields.

FOR COMFORT BAGS

Because of the difficulty in purchasing the following articles used in filling comfort bags, they can hereafter be procured from National W. C. T. U. Headquarters at the prices named below, subject to change without notice.

Metal mirrors, 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.75.

Scissors, 15 cents a pair; per dozen, $1.50.

Two-inch gauze sealed bandage, 10 cents net.

One-inch adhesive tape, 10 cents; per dozen, $1.00.

"AGGRESSIVE PERSEVERANCE" THE SLOGAN FOR PROHIBITION PATRIOTS

Aggressive perseverance is a virtue that all advocates of prohibition must diligently cultivate these days. The failure of the United States Senate and the administration to respond to the appeals of the people for complete and comprehensive prohibition of all alcoholic liquors should be to us a challenge to become more active in arousing our respective communities to send communications by letter and by telegram to President Wilson, to our Senators and to our Representative. In each of these four messages, one to the president, one to each of your U. S. Senators, and one to the Congressman from your district, ask definitely, briefly and emphatically for their influence and vote in securing national war prohibition.

Our National W. C. T. U. president, just returned from Washington says, "It is heart-warming to read day after day in the Congressional Record accounts of petitions presented by Senators and Representatives from W. C. T. U. women. White ribboners are responding grandly to the opportunity of the hour and we know they will continue to press the battle to the gates. Let us be daily and hourly in prayer for the successful outcome of the effort to secure full war prohibition. If ever we needed to 'pray devoutly and hammer away stoutly' it is now."

BEER AND VICE

In the present effort at Washington to eliminate from prohibition legislation all mention of beer, the brewery interests have rung the changes on the "harmlessness of beer." Volumes might be written in refutation of this claim but we are reminded of the following statement made in a memorial signed by sixteen of the most famous physicians and surgeons of the United States sent to Congress in 1912 when efforts were being made to restore the Army beer saloon:

"A study of army statistics shows that venereal diseases increased 600 per cent during the beer-selling period. * * * *

"It is not only in the state of drunkenness that men step into danger of incurring venereal diseases, but in the state of exhilaration and weakened self-control, which follows the use of comparatively small amounts of alcoholic liquors. Modern scientific investigation has shown clearly that one of the earliest effects of the use of alcoholic liquors is impaired self-control."

CONVERTED BY A RIOT

If it takes a riot in which many human beings were killed to cause one United States Senator to openly declare himself for prohibition, how many catastrophes of similar kind will it take to convert the remainder of the upper house of Congress? Has not every member of that august body that is so very deliberately and leisurely dallying over the important question of war prohibition had the opportunity to discover from personal experience or the best evidence that the liquor traffic always and everywhere breeds lawlessness, crime and murder. Is there a state in the Union that has not suffered the tragic counterpart of the recent riot in East St. Louis which Senator Sherman says converted him to "bone-dry" prohibition?

A Chicago daily has well said that the friends of prohibition for years have been enlightening the public as to the harvest society is reaping, and will continue to reap, because of its toleration of the legalized liquor traffic. But many people refuse to be convinced by anything less than the truth "dramatized by arson and murder." The threatened beer riots that are scheduled by the brewery interests to take place if Congress should have the courage to enact national prohibition of that particular liquid poison, could certainly be no worse than the Illinois riots directly traced to the anarchistic saloonkeepers and their henchmen. How much longer must this nation be taught the tragic lesson that no city, state or nation can reverse the order of nature; if it sows the seeds of dissension, criminality and vice it cannot expect to reap virtue, order, decency and sobriety. Let us by national prohibition correct what Senator Sherman terms "the inherent defect that is lurking in our system, the increasing contempt for law and order, that is springing up all over the country and resulting in a grand procession of criminals."

"COFFIN NAILS" FOR CHINA!

That the United States is not wholly given over to the production of foodstuffs or other really useful articles may be presumed from the statement made in a prominent west coast journal that 600,000,000 cigarets "made in America," three solid train loads of thirty cars each, the biggest consignment of its kind in the history of the world's commerce, is in process of shipment to the far East. Twelve steamships will carry the consignment to China and Japan. One steamship recently cleared from a western port carrying 50,000,000 cigarets consigned to Singapore. China has broken away from the tyranny of opium. What shall it profit her if she becomes enslaved by the cigaret?

NINETY PER CENT OF KANSAS VOLUNTEERS ACCEPTED FOR WAR SERVICE

Wartime conditions have brought to light a new and unanswerable argument in favor of prohibition. It has been a source of no small concern that no larger a per cent of the young men of the country were able to meet the physical requirements of the Army and Navy. A Y. M. C. A. secretary has made a cheering discovery. He has ascertained that while but 25 per cent of the young men from a certain license state were accepted for Army and Navy service, 90 per cent of those who enlisted from Kansas, the veteran temperance state, were up to grade.

AN EXPLANATION FROM THE PUBLISHING HOUSE

We regret that it is impossible to secure the Testament with Psalms at the price of twelve cents. This edition has been exhausted and all available paper is used in printing the Testaments which are furnished at twelve cents each.

The Testament and Psalms can be secured at a higher price, if desired: twenty-five cents and upwards.

All orders for Testament and Psalms (12 cent edition) will be filled with Testaments, thereby avoiding delay in notifying customers of this change before filling the order.

Prohibition Pays Des Moines Big Dividends

"Prohibition paid Des Moines and Iowa big dividends, for it was prohibition that landed the training camp for Iowa," is the statement of C. L. Herring, president of the Greater Des Moines committee, which was largely responsible for the selection of Des Moines as the training camp of the thirteenth division of the national army.

"We were second in the list in the recommendation of the regular army officers who inspected the various sites," continued Mr. Herring. "Minneapolis had the better of us in facilities for training and handling of men. But Minneapolis is wet and the experience of the directors of our war so far has proved that men cannot drink and become soldiers at the same time. Minneapolis has saloons. Minneapolis has cabarets. Minneapolis offers many indulgences that Des Moines does not. It was these things that induced Secretary Baker to give us the camp. Liquor will not be tolerated about the camps. Prohibition Iowa has power enough to keep it away from the soldiers here.

"The camp means millions of dollars to Des Moines and Iowa. And Des Moines and Iowa mean more than we realize to the nation. It's the army of the hardest muscle, the keenest nerve and the clearest eye that counts. The men who train here will not be subject to the temptations that lead to the impairment or destruction of these things."

Connecticut Manufacturers Favor Prohibition

The Connecticut Manufacturers' Association, representing more than 200 of the leading manufacturers of the state, by a vote of 176 to 1, passed a resolution for complete wartime prohibition, it is reported.

White Ribboner Honored by President Wilson

Years ago. Frances E. Willard said: "Woman will better every place she enters, and she will enter every place in this round world." That prophecy is being fulfilled today, for women are fast entering every industry and are making good in high official positions that years ago would have been thought far and away beyond woman's reach and capability of service.

The appointment of Mrs. Frances C. Axtell of Bellingham, Wash., as vice-chairman of the United States Employes' Compensation Commission, is one which does credit to President Wilson's administration. Mrs. Axtell is the only woman ever appointed by any president to such a federal position. Her duties are to protect the employes of Uncle Sam from endangering their lives over carelessly guarded machinery. Since her appointment Mrs. Axtell has personally visited and made a survey of every arsenal and navy yard in the country. She will make her report to the Council of National Defense from the viewpoint of women in industry.

Mrs. Axtell was a member of the Washington state legislature in 1913 and made a very creditable record as a legislator. She was a candidate for Congress in 1916 and received a very large vote from her district. As the only woman on the Federal Employes' Compensation Commission she is regarded as "mother" to the half million men and women working in Uncle Sam's navy yards and arsenals. Mrs. Axtell is a loyal white ribboner and did her part in making and keeping Washington a dry state.

Florida Medical Association Passes Strong Anti-Alcohol Resolution

At the annual meeting of the Florida Medical Association held recently at Atlantic Beach the following anti-alcohol resolution, introduced by Dr. H. Gates, a prominent physician of Bradentown and president of the Manatee county Medical Association, was passed:

"In view of scientifically proved unfavorable effects of the use of alcoholic beverages even in small quantities,

"And in view, therefore, of the colossal physical, mental, economic, social and racial evil which the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquor entails,

"And in view of the inadequateness of all methods hitherto employed to check or regulate these evils,

"And in view of the great and rapid growth of public knowledge and sentiment on this subject as shown by anti-alcohol agitation and legislation through most of our national area, therefore be it

"Resolved that the Florida Medical Association believes the time has come for the Federal Government to take steps looking to the prohibition in the United States of the manufacture, sale, import, export and transport of alcoholic liquors."

Ambulance and Comfort Bag Jottings

The Adrian (Mich.) W. C. T. U. held a white ribbon motor ambulance entertainment in the public library auditorium recently. The attendance was good and the amount of the offering generous.

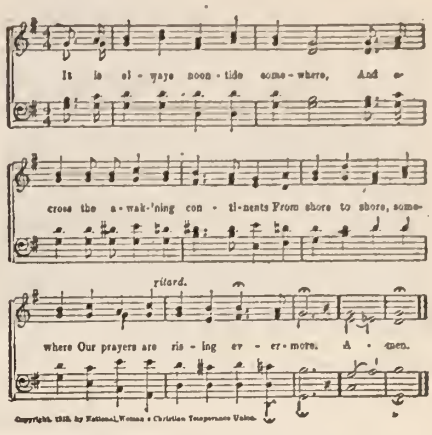
Mrs. A. C. McKinney, president of the Louisiana W. C. T. U., writes that the first dollar toward the ambulance fund of the state was given by Mr. Emile Gassie, an honorary member, who was recently "set upon by a policeman in the dark and almost killed for being active in the Sunday closing fight now on."

The Central W. C. T. U. of Olympia, Wash., has contributed $60 to the Ambulance Fund. Of this amount $40 was given by four Sunday schools of the city. An appeal was made to the children to let their patriotism take a practical, beneficial form by contributing to the fund the money usually spent for Fourth of July pleasures. The little citizens responded far beyond expectations.

Lieutenant A. B. Adams of the National Naval Volunteers, in acknowledging comfort bags presented by the Eureka (Calif.) W. C. T. U., expressed the sincere appreciation of the men for the thoughtfulness of the white ribboners. "It was announced that I had a dozen or so bags left," wrote Lieutenant Adams, "and after these were distributed there were requests for bags from about twenty of the boys. It takes the boys quite a while to get used to the proper care of their clothes and to properly wash and mend them, and such a bag comes in mighty handy."

Preparations are being made at the Northern California W. C. T. U. headquarters to take care of the thousands of comfort bags which are being made by the white ribboners of western states. Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Montana, Washington, Oregon, Nevada, California, Idaho and Western Texas are furnishing recruits for the San Francisco naval station and the white ribboners of these states will see that they are supplied with comfort bags.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



AT THE NOONTIDE HOUR

At the sacred noontide hour let the white ribboners of the land unite in prayer daily for our country and all other countries, that all may come to see the true Christian and humanitarian point of view in this world crisis; for the protection of "our boys" from the physical and moral deterioration from drink and vice that follow in the wake of war; for our President and his advisers that divine wisdom may rule every decision, that lasting peace may speedily come and the will of the Father of all peoples be done throughout the earth.

Sculpturing

JULIA H. THAYER

Roses die on earnest faces,
Lines and pallor take their places.
Useful hands are seldom pretty,
Honest lips are rarely witty.
Ears that hear high mandates ringing
Are but dull to pleasure's singing.
Vigils dim the eye of beauty,
Forms are bent by loads of duty—
Can these types, so faulty, seem
Worthy of the Sculptor's dream?

Aye, He recognizes truly
All of hidden worth, and duly
Cuts the rough outline away
(This the work we deem decay).
Lines of strength He carves intently,
Then more carefully and gently
Final grace He keeps supplying—
And we falsely call it dying.
Lovingly He views the whole,
Naming it The Priceless Soul.

Purity Campaign in Japan

(Continued from Page Six)

the wife of the English ambassador, was present. At this meeting, which was followed by a luncheon in my honor, I was given the largest liberty to speak of the needs of Japan and of my work in Burma.

Too much cannot be said of the good work done by the Foreign Auxiliary under the leadership of Miss Alice Lewis of the Friends' Mission. Miss Lewis feels that the Japanese W. C. T. U., which has been unusually flourishing the last three years, is now thoroughly established. Certainly with such workers as Miss Moriya, Mrs. Gauntlett, who gave her whole time to act as my interpreter and guide, Mrs. Ibuka, Mrs. Kubushiro, and others, and with Mrs. Yajima still to inspire, great things may be expected in the future.

Altogether my month in Japan was one of the happiest of my life. Only the vision of Miss Mack left to struggle alone with a big work in Burma arose to mar my pleasure, yet truly I knew that she is not alone, for God is blessing our work there, as in every part of the world. How I wish that consecrated, efficient young women would offer themselves for training to supply the demand for workers in so many fields!

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

July 21—Loyal Temperance Legion Day—Birthday of Anna A. Gordon.
July 31—White Ribbon Missionary Day—Birthday of Mary Allen West.
August 3—Fresh Air Mission Day—Birthday of Lady Henry Somerset.

NEW YORK'S SUCCESSFUL FINANCIAL PLAN

MILE OF DIMES PROVES EASY TO SECURE

ELLA A. BOOLE, President New York W. C. T. U.

A year ago last October, the New York W. C. T. U., on recommendation of its president, adopted as its financial plan the raising of a mile of dimes. Cards arranged to hold ten ten-cent pieces were sent to the unions by the county presidents. Every member of the W. C. T. U. was urged to give a dime and get a dime. November and December were chosen as the months to circulate the cards and the money was sent in in January. In this way the funds thus secured did not interfere with the money for dues.

The mile of dimes has been completed and although $8,800 was the amount estimated, before the end of the fiscal year we hope the receipts may reach $10,000. The money was sent to the state headquarters where one-tenth was retained to cover the expense of floating the plan. One-third of the remainder was forwarded to the state treasurer, and two-thirds returned to the county treasurers who sent to the local unions which had contributed money for the mile of dimes, one-half of the amount received. It is easy to see that nearly $3,000 has by this financial plan been made available for work by the county unions and an equal sum for state and local unions.

Probably very little of this money would have been available but for the financial plan. Both state and county unions have been able to accomplish many things they could not have undertaken, and everywhere the plan has been in operation, and especially where it has been the means of raising the largest sums of money, the testimony is that an easier way than the mile of dimes, to get money for our work, has never been found.

AMONG OUR WORKERS

The Oshkosh (Wis.) W. C. T. U., through the opportunity presented by the use of the public schools as social centers, was enabled to hold five high grade evening entertainments in the high school auditorium this spring. The series included "A Glimpse of Four Continents," an illustrated lecture by Rev. G. Kenneth MacInnis; an illustrated lecture on "Pompeii" by Rev. John W. Greenwood; "The Coming of the Birds," by Prof. E. A. Clemens, and "Russian Music," by the Twentieth Century Club, the closing number of the series being a temperance address by Father J. C. Hogan, who had just completed a lecture tour of nineteen Wisconsin cities and towns, nearly all of which voted dry at the spring elections, and who spoke most hopefully of conditions throughout the state.

The second annual meeting of the Young People's Branch and Loyal Temperance Legion of Iowa, held at Oskaloosa, June 26-28, was a most inspiring occasion. Round table discussions for the girls were led by Mrs. Linnie Carl, National Y. P. B. field secretary. Secretary G. R. D. Cramer, Jr., of the Y. M. C. A., had charge of the boys' group, and Miss Mary Ervin, National L. T. L. secretary, conducted the conferences for L. T. L. workers. Mrs. Jessie T. Williams, general secretary of the Iowa Y. P. B., and Mrs. Ruth Van Clark, general secretary of the state L. T. L., were at the helm. Mrs. Ida B. Wise Smith, state W. C. T. U. president, was in attendance at this meeting of the junior branches of the state organization, and her addresses were most helpful. One of the great needs of the W. C. T. U. is leaders, and this meeting was well fitted to train young people for service and leadership.

The Pennington (N. J.) W. C. T. U. awarded three prizes to the pupils of the public school giving the best answers at a recent examination to questions concerning the effects of alcohol. The union served refreshments on registration day, and has been active in poster work. The names of signers for the license at the local hotel have also been given publicity. One hundred copies of "A Saloonless Nation in 1920" were placed in the public school.

IT WOULD BE A KINDLY ACT

The following good suggestion is offered to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL by Mrs. Sadie A. Hall, New York's state superintendent of Proportionate and Systematic Giving:

"At this season of the year, when we are putting up our store of fruit for future use, would it not be a generous and kindly act to set aside a certain number of cans and glasses for those who never have such luxuries? One can of fruit of every ten belongs to the Lord at any rate. The fruit and flower mission of the W. C. T. U. knows just where to place such gifts where they will do the most good. There are sick in the tenements of the great cities to whom a bit of delicious fruit is an almost untold luxury. To our sick soldier boys in hospitals a taste of jelly 'such as mother used to make' will bring tender thoughts of home and loved ones. White ribboners know how to dispose of such gifts to the best possible advantage."

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do You Know the Answers to These Questions? They May Be Found in THE UNION SIGNAL of July 5

Ten questions, the answers to which will be found in the preceding number of THE UNION SIGNAL, will appear each week. The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. How has the Maryland legislature co-operated with Secretary Daniels to protect the men at the Washington Navy Yards, the gun factory and the marine barracks?

2. For what national prohibition measure will the W. C. T. U. continue to work regardless of action taken by the special session of the Sixty-Fifth Congress?

3. In what state did the prohibition law go into effect on July 1?

4. Explain the provisions of the federal "bone dry" law which went into effect the first of this month?

5. What federal law that has just gone into effect will prevent liquor firms advertising their wares in prohibition territory?

6. Give the main points in the temperance educational program recently outlined for the Army and Navy by a committee appointed for this purpose?

7. How is the Woman's Christian Temperance Union represented on this United Committee for Temperance Work in the Army and Navy?

8. Tell the story of the reception given comfort bags made by the Japanese W. C. T. U. for the soldiers of Japan during the Russo-Japanese war.

9. Why is the action of the Senate in exempting beer inconsistent with the present campaign for food conservation?

10. What will be the program of white ribbon activities at Chautauqua, N. Y., this summer?

PROMOTED COMRADES

News has been received of the Homegoing of Mrs. Elizabeth G. Emmons, National W. C. T. U. lecturer. Mrs. Emmons had been ill since last December at her home in Mexico, Mo., and her death came as a release from pain. She was superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction for the Missouri W. C. T. U. and also state lecturer and organizer, and will be missed greatly by the white ribboners of that state.

The prohibition forces have lost a firm friend in the promotion of Chaplain Orville J. Nave, for twenty-three years a chaplain in the United States army, retired in 1905 with the rank of major and a record of valiant service in the Civil War, the Indian and Philippine campaigns. Throughout his army days Chaplain Nave labored for the cleansing of social conditions among enlisted men and officers. He fought side by side with the W. C. T. U. against the army canteen.

KANSAS W. C. T. U. GAINING IN NUMBERS AND INFLUENCE

Special Correspondence

The Kansas Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in spite of war conditions, is organizing new unions, gaining new members, and the work was never more prosperous. During the last session of the legislature the W. C. T. U. did most efficient service. It was largely owing to petitions of white ribboners and personal work by Mrs. Lillian M. Mitchner, president of the Kansas W. C. T. U. and superintendent of legislation, that the bone dry bill was passed by so large a majority. Governor Capper presented to Mrs. Mitchner the pen with which the bill was signed.

The Kansas national prohibition rally held in Topeka, June 18-20, was an unqualified success. It was attended by delegates from the various temperance organizations of the state, and the W. C. T. U. was in it every minute. On the afternoon of the special W. C. T. U. meeting, at which Mrs. Mitchner presided, five long rows of seats in the center of the church were reserved for white ribboners, and a bow of white adorned the end of each of the pews. W. C. T. U. women marched in and filled the first five rows. Still they kept coming and it was necessary to vacate twelve entire rows in order to accommodate them, and when these were occupied and the white ribboners began to fill the seats on the side, delegates from other organizations began to applaud and the W. C. T. U. received quite an ovation.

The speakers on the program were the Rev. Eugenia F. St. John, National evangelist, and Miss Mary E. Dobbs, state corresponding secretary. The latter told of the number of speakers kept in the field during the past year by the W. C. T. U. and the amount of money expended. Rev. Mary Sibbitt, state lecturer and organizer, gave the principal address, speaking on our work among the soldiers and sailors. The meeting was intensely enthusiastic, and although an offering had been taken at every meeting for three days, a contribution of $37.47 was received. On the same evening, in the auditorium, Hon. Richmond P. Hobson delivered his address, "Destroying the Destroyer," and for two hours, by his eloquent presentation of the subject, held spellbound a large audience.

At the state Y. P. B. conference at Hays, Mrs. Mitchner spoke three times on Saturday, again on Sunday morning, and delivered one evening address during the week. At the prohibition rally during the conference a fund was raised to help furnish a rest room for the soldiers at Junction City. Mrs. Mitchner, Mrs. Sibbitt and Mrs. Sadie E. Lewis visited Fort Riley and arrangements have been made to send comfort bags and literature to the soldiers. The Kansas W. C. T. U. expects to contribute $75 to the National W. C. T. U. ambulance fund. Twenty-five dollars has been sent to Fort Bliss for the renting of an electric fan. Delicacies and fruit juices will be provided later.

Interesting programs are being arranged for the Winfield and Beloit Chautauquas, and at the latter Mrs. Mitchner will have an hour each day for the consideration of the laws of Kansas, civics and a parliamentary drill.

Already the Kansas W. C. T. U. is planning to send to Washington next December the largest delegation ever attending a National W. C. T. U. convention. It is hoped that at least 500 Kansas men and women will be in the parade on that occasion.

Boys of the McKinley L. T. L. at Work in the Fields

CALIFORNIA LEGIONERS BECOME SOLDIERS OF THE SOIL

The Loyal Temperance Legion of the McKinley Boys' Industrial Home, which for fourteen years has been under the supervision of the Los Angeles Central W. C. T. U., has a membership of more than one hundred boys. The first Sunday in each month white ribboners visit the home and once a year the W. C. T. U. in a body attends an all day festival. Mrs. Ellen A. Dayton Blair, National organizer and L. T. L. secretary for Southern California, has been for five years in charge of the legion at the home.

The boys are eager to assist in this world crisis. Orphans themselves, dependent upon the bounty of others, they are perhaps more deeply touched than other children by the sufferings the war has brought upon the children of France and Belgium. At any rate they enthusiastically voted to send all the money in their L. T. L. treasury, $2.52, to the French orphans, the first contribution for this purpose by a Southern California legion. A French and a Belgian orphan boy will soon be placed in the home as the wards of its financial secretary, Mrs. E. M. Potts. The boys are all working industriously in the truck garden belonging to the home, helping to increase the vegetable supply. The duties are divided equally among the boys, the lighter work being given to the younger and frailer boys. The McKinley home was founded by a white ribboner, Mrs. Alice L. Gregory, a former president of the Arizona W. C. T. U., and her husband. Mrs. Gregory, now a widow, is still actively interested in the home.

HARRY LAUDER A BAND OF HOPE BOY

The great Scotch entertainer, Harry Lauder, has come out as a vigorous champion of wartime prohibition for Great Britain. In a recent address he said: "I am not a crank or a fanatic, but I am fierce on everything for victory. Let the people demand from the government that, if drink is to postpone victory, drink must go." He is reported to have said at the close of the meeting:

"When I was a wee laddie I was a member of a Band of Hope away in Arbroath, on the east coast of Scotland, and that was the first thing which taught me to beware of strong drink as a danger to humanity—and I am still afraid of it."

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA L. T. L. RALLY CRY FOR 1917

Here we come, dear Uncle Sam,
Ready to help you all we can!
We'll dig and hoe to make things grow,
We'll help the orphans across the sea!
But hear, O hear us, this our plea,
Kill old King Booze, our greatest foe!
Hurrah for the flag that will make him go!

HOME-RUN OF ENGINEER JACK

JUSTINE CROSSETTE

When Margaret Holtz saw her husband stagger out of the room to carry "Number Forty-Six" going east, her resolve was taken. Often before she had threatened, but Jack always had pleaded that it was seldom he was not keeping the company's pledge, and he had promised faithfully, again and again, that each failure would be "the last time."

Until now, Margaret had yielded, hoping the promise would prove true. Thus far nothing had gone wrong with the train, for the fireman was reliable, and he had taken Jack's place whenever it had been necessary.

But Jack's "bracers," to ease the tension of a run, were of increased frequency and at last his wife knew that to delay her duty longer would be nothing short of a crime.

As soon as her husband had closed the door, Margaret made ready to follow. Jack must be reported. She knew she would be in time, for he would stop at a saloon near the station for one more drink before leaving.

So when Engineer Jack reached his train he found another man in the cab. In plain words, he was out of his job—out of his job!—and Margaret, his wife, had done the deed: she had betrayed him.

That was five years ago. Much misfortune had come after that. For a time Jack kept sober, but securing any kind of position was up-hill work. Influence gave him a few short runs on inferior roads; but he always lost them on account of drink.

At last he gave up trying. Margaret had been the cause of all his ill-luck, he argued, and now she could support the family. This she had done so far as she had been able, using, to the last few hundred dollars, a slender fortune that had been left to her. Actual poverty loomed ahead; but the hardest cross which she had to bear was to see her daughter Bettina's young spirit begin to bend and shrink under the ban of social ostracism and to know that her respect for her father no longer responded to his love for her. The one remaining hope had been that the affection between these two would work the miracle Holidays were Jack's special times of dissipation. On the morning of the Fourth of July he began his celebration in the early light, and when he sat down to breakfast he was in a maudlin frame of mind.

As Margaret regarded her husband, the lines of worry and fear, so frequent of late, deepened in her face, while Bettina's expression was one of absolute loathing.

Breakfast over, Jack left the house. As the door closed upon her father, Bettina sprang to her feet, her cheeks a flaming crimson.

"It is the last time, mother," she burst out, "that we shall have to sit down to a meal and stand such indignity."

"Bettina, Bettina, child!" Margaret gently chided, then with an appealing look from her quiet gray eyes, "Oh, what is the use?"

"Just this is 'the use,' mother." As she spoke the girl produced a letter and began to read excitedly. The contents stated that her application for a school in a little western town was accepted.

Margaret Holtz looked at her daughter in terror. "Bettina, are you crazy? Why do you wish to leave your present position, where you are getting forty dollars a month, and you're living at home, and go away among strangers?"

"I am not crazy at all," Bettina answered vehemently. "I have accepted this offer. I am going—and you, you, mother, are going with me. I shall buy our tickets today. My trunk is packed, and yours soon will be. We are going tonight."

"Bettina!" cried her mother in positive alarm; then, seeing the determined look on the girl's face, she realized that she no longer was a child.

For five years Bettina had controlled her feeling about her father. Now she spoke in a low, tense voice that Margaret understood only too well.

"Three years ago, mother, when the older girls were going away to school, you told me I would have to stay at home and help you. I was glad to make the sacrifice because I was doing something for you. But I could not help a lot of thinking. I used to envy the girls who adored their fathers, but as I became older I grew sensitive and ashamed that I did not have a father who loved me. No, you need not contradict me; it is a poor sort of love that cannot overcome a weakness which robs a wife of her happiness and a daughter of her youth, to say nothing about the common support to which they are entitled.

"Now, mother, I owe you a comfortable living, and you are going to have it from me. This position out West will give me a salary of a hundred dollars a month.

"O mother, you know I would not force you to go with me!" Bettina said more quietly, for her mother's face was colorless, and drawn with suffering that touched the girl's heart. "You shall go or stay—just as you think best. God knows I do not wish to make life any harder for you than it now is. Do what your conscience tells you is your duty. I know you will do that even if it kills you, mother."

Bettina looked up to find her father standing in the doorway. For a moment he stared at her with unseeing gaze, then he turned away quietly. They heard him go out and down the steps.

"My child, I have known lately that this day must come," sobbed Margaret Holtz—"this breaking-up time. I cannot keep you longer, daughter. You must go, but I—I must stay. My place is here with him—my husband. Don't oppose me. I cannot be responsible for what he may do or what he may become if he were to be left homeless and alone. Try to understand, daughter. God will not forsake—"

"Mother! You will stay with him and suffer more of the terrors and humiliation that are killing you—and without me to help you. Is it your duty? He cares nothing for such a sacrifice. He will go on living his sinful, selfish life. If it is your duty to stay with him, what about my duty? Oh, it is maddening!"

"Child, child! he is your father—"

"No, he is not my father. My father should be the trusted engineer of 'Number Forty-Six,' devoted to his wife and child—as he used to be. O daddy, daddy! come back to us!" cried the overwrought girl, as in memory there flashed the vision of those happy days when love made their hearts sensitive to one another's comfort and happiness.

During the year that followed, Bettina in that far-away western town wrote many pleading letters, urging her mother to come to her, if only for a time of peace and rest, but as often her mother had answered, "Not yet, daughter; trust me to know when is the best time for my coming."

On that day of poignant suffering, when Bettina had weepingly bade her mother a heart-breaking good-by, there had passed between them a tacit understanding that there must be no further discussion regarding her father. Margaret had accepted the burden that her husband had put upon her, and Bettina, whom he evidently had forgotten to love, was endeavoring to regain heart and spirit by teaching little children. Between mother and daughter existed the silent sorrow that was to endure until the mother should break the silence. As the weeks went by, Bettina lived in the half-hope, half-fear of that assurance given at parting: "I promise to tell you, dear, if there is anything you can do to help."

How many times during the lonely intervening months had the girl reviewed the tragic problem of her shattered home! And always there stood out from the wreck of their happiness the figure of her mother, fragile of body, but heroic of spirit, her face alight with the dauntless faith and courage born only of renunciation for the sacred cause of duty.

Removed as she now was from the befogging atmosphere of living shame, Bettina's heart often cried out for the comradeship that used to exist between herself and her father. During these months, what had he thought of her coming away? Had he cared? Had he missed her, even? Why had he not written? Doubtless he still was hopelessly seeking to drown his misery in his usual way—dulling any reviving sense of remorse that might rise to cleanse him. Then the old fear would possess the girl, always ending in a paroxysm of tears.

But at last a morning of joy came to her after her night of weeping—a glad letter from her mother. Some good fortune had come to her, the writer exulted, and she had decided to go out for the closing days of Bettina's school and bring "a certain weary little teacher" back with her for a much-needed vacation. The letter closed with,

"You cannot disappoint us, darling, for daddy has set his heart upon your coming home with me."

Bettina caught her breath at this first mention of her father.

"Mother!" exclaimed Bettina, after their rapturous greeting, "how well you look, and how—fine!"

"If I do," Margaret answered, "it is all to your credit, child;" but there was a little tell-tale quirk of prevarication about her mouth as she spoke, that Bettina was quick to recognize.

As they sat in the observation car, on their return journey, Bettina was idly watching the mile-posts race by, when suddenly there came to her a great admiration for the one who had the courage to control a locomotive of such speed. A glimmering of the old fond pride which, as a child, she had felt in her father, came over her: once he had held such power as this. She wondered what he was doing now. Something trivial, even menial, no doubt. But she did not care if it were so, since he had stopped drinking. Would he be much changed, she wondered. He had promised that he would meet them in Chicago.

The long train drew into the station at last, and with no little trepidation the two women walked down the platform.

"I almost shrink from seeing father," Bettina said, as she tremblingly slipped her hand into her mother's. "He used to look so proud and handsome as he brought in his 'Forty-Six.'"

"Courage, daughter. God rewards perfect faith," her mother answered.

Bettina's gaze searched the hurrying throng for the familiar figure, but she looked in vain. As she passed the great engine, from the very habit of old days, she instinctively glanced up at the man

(Continued on Page Fourteen)

DADDY'S FIRST AIDE IN AMERICANIZATION

EDNA SAXE

"Peter, Peter, pumpkin-eater
Had a wife—"

The front door closed with a bang and father's cheery whistle sounded in the front hall. "Daddy, oh, daddy," cried a child's eager voice, and little Beth, forgetful of her one musical accomplishment and the discomforts of Peter, slid from the piano stool and rushed to greet her father. They were chums, these two, and after the child had told him of the adventures of the morning, about the baby kittens which couldn't see "not nuffin," and about Fluff, Beth's pet chicken which would have been killed by a stray dog except for big Dan, next door, who had rescued the chicken and put its broken leg in a splint, she asked in persuasive tones: "Daddy take Beth to the park this afternoon? Beth wants to see the roaring lion and the monkey babies."

Mr. Leonard looked thoughtful. "The factory has an Americanization picnic this afternoon, sweetheart. Daddy has to go to help the men have a good time."

"Beth's been to a picnic, but not——" The child struggled heroically with the big word. "What picnic is that, daddy?"

"You know Banana Pedro," began Mr. Leonard, and although the subject seemed to the child's mind to have no connection with her question, she became interested at once, for Beth and Pedro were firm friends. "Pedro brings bananas, and I had a ride in his cart one day, and he talks, oh, so funny."

"Yes, Pedro doesn't know our language very well because he comes from another country, where all their words are different from ours. When Pedro came over here he couldn't understand any of our words, and if Beth had asked him for a banana he wouldn't have known what she meant. He came a long, long way on a boat and on a train to get to America, and he had to leave his father and mother and his little brothers and sisters. For a long time he was so lonesome. Now he can talk to us and he knows what Beth says to him and he likes our country. At daddy's factory there are many, many men, some of them like Pedro, and some of them not nearly so nice, but they are all lonesome because their country is a long way off. These men and boys will all be at the picnic this afternoon, and we are going to try to make them have a good time and like America. Now do you know what 'Americanization' means?"

The child looked doubtful. She knew about Pedro—the rest of the men she wasn't so sure about. Curiosity and the joy of going with her father were irresistible, however, and snuggling closer into her father's arms she pleaded, "Take Beth, daddy. Beth can help."

Thus it happened that a very happy child clung to her father's hand as he left the house for the Saturday afternoon Americanization picnic, although mother had somewhat doubtfully given her consent, for she knew that father would be busy and have little time to amuse the child.

And mother's fears proved true, for when they reached the picnic ground father rushed away and Beth felt quite alone. She didn't see Pedro nor any one who looked like him. It wasn't so much fun after all. Another look in the direction of her father, who was busily at work, and the dimples came back, and the white teeth showed in a bewitching smile. She had discovered a friend, no other than "Miss Ruth," Beth's name for Miss Ruth Elizabeth Stanley, the superintendent of the Loyal Temperance Legion, and the idol of the child's heart. Miss Ruth was to serve lemonade and grapejuice at an attractive booth under the large shade tree, and nearby were other tables where white ribboners were preparing good things to eat.

Then the men began to arrive. The band assembled on the band stand. A group of players were getting ready for a ball game. Some of the men had brought their wives and children and others were standing in little companies. Yes, daddy was right about the way they talked, for after Beth had approached one group and listened for an instant to their words she fled to Miss Ruth for protection. They were all talking at once, and such terrifying sounds as they made. Although one of the men smiled and held out his hand to her Beth was really very much frightened. After that she stayed with Miss Ruth and played contentedly around the booth. She quite forgot the picnic and daddy in her own little make-believe world.

Off for the Picnic!

"Beth, don't you want to help, dear?" The words recalled the child from dreamland and she hastened to Miss Ruth. Around the booth were grouped a company of men who had come up after the ball game for a cool drink. As Beth handed out the glasses which Miss Ruth filled they thanked her, watching her with interest as she walked back and forth among them. Some of them tried to make friends but Beth felt strange with these men who made such peculiar sounds when they talked.

A group of players, warm from the exertion of the game in the hot sun, sauntered up to the stand. Their faces and their bantering tone were sufficient evidence that they had enjoyed the game. There was one exception. One big fellow, larger and heavier than the rest and unmistakably a leader, was the center of the group. Just as Beth handed the first glass of lemonade to a merry-faced emigrant from Greece, the big fellow growled sullenly in broken English something quite unintelligible to the child. This is what he said: "Come on, fellows, let's get a real drink. Nothin' more doin' around here. Come on to Mike's." The others showed a desire to remain, and gratefully accepted the cooling drink from the friendly little maid. Again the giant, by name Val Potesta, spoke, this time in his own language and with still more commanding tone. Just then Beth spied her father coming toward the stand and hurried to meet him with a glass of lemonade. Mr. Leonard, holding the glass absent-mindedly in his hand, spoke to the hesitating men. They answered cordially. Only Beth noticed that Val was persuading a couple of those nearest him to leave the grounds before they were observed. He oughtn't to go and take the others with him. Daddy wouldn't want him to, the child was sure of that. What should she do? He hadn't had any lemonade, she remembered quickly. She rushed for a glass, picking one particularly tempting with a generous slice of golden yellow rind and a couple of pretty cherries. Shyly she approached the big player, timidity and good will struggling for mastery in the little face, and with bewitching grace extended the glass. The scowl on the face of the man as he saw her standing before him, glass extended, said plainly that she was unwelcome. Beth was thoroughly frightened, as he growled something to the two boys with him, and dropping the glass at his feet she ran away. Instant remorse was visible in the player's face. His eyes became tender, and he looked toward Beth, who had fled to Miss Ruth for protection and was peeking at him from behind a tree. He approached the child humbly, his eyes eloquently begging her pardon, but Beth refused to respond to these overtures.

Just then Mr. Leonard turned, and his face brightened as he caught sight of the player, who he feared had already left the grounds. Val Potesta was the trouble-maker at the factory. But for him the men would be contented and happy. He had come to the picnic only because the ball team had urged it. Val turned an anxious face toward Mr. Leonard. I scared de child," he said pointing to Beth. "I so sorry. My little girl in ole country same like dat. I no mean." Mr. Leonard lifted the reluctant Beth in his arms. "This is my little girl," he told his companion, "and I am sure she will be glad to be friends with you."

Late in the afternoon Val approached them again. Looking almost reverently at the child, he said in broken English, "Mister Leonard, my little girl just so big as this one when I come to dese country. When I come I mean to send money for her and her mother to come. I bin here tree year and I no send money. I spend it all at Mike's and I drink and it makes me—" he paused for a word. Mr. Leonard nodded understandingly. "Maybe you keep my money, so I no spend when I want a drink. Then I send for Tina and her mother?" he inquired with some embarrassment.

Mr. Leonard showed none of the amazement he felt, but answered quite as though he were in the habit of exchanging confidences with this big, and until now, entirely unfriendly citizen of the old world. Mr. Leonard with the child in his arms left the ground with Val, and as they walked the foreigner told the story of his homesickness and bewilderment in his new surroundings, and how Mike's place had been the only place open to him at first, and he had acquired the drink habit. Before they parted at Mr. Leonard's gate Val gave his new found friend the greater part of the money which he had that day received in his pay envelope. After that Val was no unusual visitor at the home of the Leonards, his savings grew steadily and he and Beth became the best of friends. With Val to help Americanization work went on rapidly at the factory but Daddy always proudly referred to Beth as his "first aide."

America — and Efficiency — First

Under the above patriotic caption the Seattle Daily Times, erstwhile friend and defender of the liquor traffic, speaks its editorial mind clearly on the question of retaining the booze business for the sake of revenue. It is another evidence of the converting power of the object lesson presented by the actual working of prohibition. The Times speaks as follows:

"The traditional war-time argument of the brewing and distilling interests—that the government cannot afford to declare for prohibition in such an hour because it needs all the revenue it can obtain from the liquor traffic—will not excite any marked degree of enthusiasm in the United States this year.

"Russia needed money at the start of its war just as greatly as the United States does today. Moreover, its sources of revenue were fewer and not nearly so prolific. Yet, Russia, as a war measure, abolished the sale of vodka.

"Shall it be said by another generation that democracy in the United States failed to measure up to the standard set by autocracy in Russia—that the greatest popular government in the New World, less thoughtful of the common soldier's good than even a corrupt bureaucracy in the Old, placed its revenue needs above the efficiency of its troops?"

W. C. T. U. NAPKINS
heavy crepe paper, with dainty pink flowered border and W. C. T. U. monogram in gold in corner.
Price, per 25, 20 cents; per 100, 75 cents.

FOLDED DRINKING CUPS
made of waxed paper with Woman's Christian Temperance Union printed on same in blue.
Price, per dozen, 10 cents; per 100, 50 cents.
NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

FANS
PROHIBITION FANS
make useful souvenirs for distribution in fairs and other open air meetings.
An attractive fan in flag blue, with the slogan
PROTECT OUR AMERICAN YOUTH
BY PROHIBITING
THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC
on one side, and upon the reserve side the map showing the dry states.
Place these in churches, send to the hospitals, and keep a liberal supply on your porch.
Spread the story of prohibition progress by the generous use of these fans.
Price, per dozen, 25 cents; per hundred, $2.00; per five-hundred, $8.00.
NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Alcohol and Marksmanship

A member of the French army medical corps has recently made public the results of investigations concerning the effect of alcohol on marksmanship. He chose the best shots from among the non-commissioned officers and soldiers of his regiment, says the organ of the American Medical Association, and had them fire a series at 200 meters. They were then given a dose of brandy, approximately 50 gm., after which they fired a second series similar to the first. These experiments were repeated at different times and under different conditions always with identical results. It was found that the efficiency of the marksmen after the absorption of the alcohol had depreciated 30 per cent in rapid firing and 50 per cent in slow firing.

Snap Up the Speaker's Open Date

LORA S. LA MANCE, National Organizer

The phone rings. Some one wishes to talk with the president of the union. The message is something like this: "Miss So-and-So, a National organizer, has had a date drop out of her itinerary. I wish your union could take her tomorrow. She is a fine speaker and will be a real inspiration to your community. Will you do the best you can?"

More than half the time the local president answers that it will be positively out of the question. She thinks the conditions in her town are peculiar, that a crowd can never be gotten up on short notice, and so on. Now and then a true-blue woman will rise to the occasion. She answers that she will do all that lies within her power and proceeds to do it.

One of the first things she attempts is a visit to the printer to get five hundred dodgers printed, giving the speaker's name, office, and the time and place of the meetings. She secures two or three reliable boys to carry the dodgers to each home, and place them in the hands of the housewives. She gets the dodgers into every shop and store window. Sometimes the innovation of putting women by twos on each main street for an hour or two in the afternoon to offer each passer-by a dodger, helps mightily.

Where it is not against the rules of the school board, some one is sent to the schools to announce the meeting. A chalk artist will chalk the notice of the address on the sidewalk and on bulletin boards. If there is more than a day's warning, local moving picture show men will often flash the announcement upon the screen. In villages of small population the telephone girls will usually, for a small fee, click the news throughout the community.

Another way to advertise is to call up a wide-awake woman from each church and get her to pass on the news by phone or otherwise. In this way the very best people will be quickly reached. Prepare the church or hall and provide for one or two musical numbers by the best local talent. Nine times out of ten a fair congregation is secured in this way. It takes quick work and considerable of it, but a meeting can be made a success on thirty-six or even twenty-four hours' notice.

"Lord Kitchener, being dead, yet speaketh, and every man remembers his plea that our men should keep fit by leaving drink alone; but every canteen mocks at him, and by the acts that speak louder than words authority scoffs at him, and tells our young recruits that they need not follow Lord Kitchener, they need not follow the King; it will be enough if they go on drinking and give the state the strength that alcohol leaves them."—Strength of Britain Movement.

Sanitary Drinking Fountains

Also Drinking Fountains for Man and Beast.

Special prices to W. C. T. U. and all Charitable Societies.

This Fountain was erected by the W. C. T. U. of Luray, Va.

Write for Catalogue

J. W. Fiske Iron Works
56 & 58 Park Place
NEW YORK

A GIFT
that will be prized by any white ribboner is the
DAINTY BOW PIN
Made of gold and set with thirty pearls.
(Size ¾ inch.)
Price, postpaid, $3.50.
NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

HOME-RUN OF ENGINEER JACK

(Continued from Page Twelve)

in the cab. The eyes of father and daughter met in a long, ecstatic thrill of understanding!

"Father!" the girl cried, and would have fallen had not he sprang to her support.

"Bettina, my darling," he said after the glad greetings were over, "it's your daddy sure—daddy on his old job—and you've come home to stay. But time's up. Mother'll tell you all about it. She got the boss to fire me, and you broke my heart, only to make it new again; after that, she got my job back for me—when she'd made me fit."

He ended with a sob, then for a moment he swept them both into his great arms. "Now, go home," he commanded huskily.

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

¶We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.
¶Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
118-120 Fifth Ave., New York
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

FANS AND LEAFLETS

for distribution in Chautauquas and other summer assemblies at

SPECIAL PRICES

Leaflets carefully selected.

PACKAGE NO. 1
Containing
50 Prohibition Fans
300 Leaflets
Price, $1.45.

PACKAGE NO. 2
Containing
100 Prohibition Fans
500 Leaflets
Price, $2.45.

PACKAGE NO. 3
Containing
150 Prohibition Fans
800 Leaflets
Price, $3.90.

PACKAGE NO. 4
Containing
200 Prohibition Fans
1,000 Leaflets
Price, $5.00.

Please order early.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

IN PROHIBITION WASHINGTON

Prohibition and better times have materially cut the number of inmates at the poor farm of Spokane county, Washington, according to the report of the superintendent for January, just submitted to the board of commissioners, says the Spokane Chronicle. The report shows 119 at the close of January, 1917, as compared with 189 at the same time last year. During January this year 12,019 meals were served while in the same month a year ago 17,798 meals were served.

Jennie Smith, National railroad evangelist, 319 E. St. N. E. Two squares east of Union Station, Washington, D. C. Rooms at reasonable prices.

WILL THE NATION SEE THE LIGHT?

With the above interrogation as its text the Daily Times of Seattle, referring to the assumption on the part of its Washington correspondent, that there is sure to be an exceedingly bitter fight between the wet and dry forces when the war with Germany is over, proceeds to state why in the opinion of the editorial mind the nation as a whole will be far more ready to adopt prohibition at the close of the war than at present. The Times' view of the case will encourage every worker to go on winning and holding dry territory locally, as every inch gained presents an object lesson not to be ignored. We quote:

"It is almost an axiom among the American people that we must learn by individual experiences—that we seldom profit by the bumps and knocks of others. True, we apply this rule only to the young, but if we are to be honest with ourselves we must admit that it applies equally well to the 'older heads.' Because of this fact, the people of Washington expect no more from the wet districts of the country than we ourselves were willing to grant before we had dryness thrust upon us. In other words, we do not expect our wet neighbors to admit the benefits of prohibition just because we tell them of our experiences. We understand that they must see for themselves, as we of Washington have seen. But it is not out of all reason to believe that after its enforced prohibition experience the nation will find itself with many converts to the cause.

"It will be remembered that when this state was voted dry there was opposition so strong as to convince the anti-prohibition forces that another election would result differently. The state did vote again, just as soon as was possible, but even this relatively short period of time was sufficient to convince many of those who were formerly loudest in their opposition that the blessings of the new regime were many more even than had been promised and the evils largely of the sort that do not materialize.

"If this was true in Washington, is there not a strong likelihood that it will prove true in other sections? The experiences here are apt to be the experiences elsewhere. And so it is just possible that the prohibition fight may settle itself before the hour of battle arrives. At least to those states that have gone through the experiences of Washington, the psychology of the thing is going to be a study of rare and absorbing interest."

POSTERS POSTERS

JUST FROM THE PRESS

A special patriotic poster in red, white and blue

National Constitutional Prohibition
By your vote
Help Conserve Your Country's Resources
YOUTH — FOOD — WEALTH

Size 28x42

Price, 10 cents each; 3 for 25 cents.

* * * *

ILLUSTRATED POSTERS

Size 19x25

THE BIG CITY PROBLEM

In Every Wet Community the Liquor Traffic is Responsible for
50 per cent of all arrests
50 per cent of the poverty
40 per cent of the insanity
85 per cent of the crime
The Non-Drinker has to Help Pay the Cost of All This

* * * * *

A NATIONAL DUTY

STRONG DRINK
THREATENS
THE CRADLE

CONSERVE
THE CHILDHOOD
OF THE NATION

* * * * *

A TAKING ARTICLE

Brewers Say:
"BEER TAKES
THE PLACE
OF BREAD."

It Often Takes the Place of Milk and Meat Also.

Millions of Dollars
Are Each Year Taken
From the Pockets of the
Workingman and
Put Into the Breweries.

BEER IS A VERY TAKING ARTICLE

Price, 5 cents each; per hundred, $3.50

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

"The plain fact about drink and food is that since the war began we could have had, at the very least, three and one-half million more tons of food in this country if there had been no drink trade," says the Strength of Britain Movement. "Drink has stolen one pound of food from every home in this country for every day of the war. That is what we have paid in food to keep the drink trade going."

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year
Club rate for ten or more subscriptions, 25c a year
No other premium allowed.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

He Signed the Petition

KATHERINE HAMILTON DAVIS

I was teaching in one of our western states at a time when suffrage and prohibition were as rampant there as they are now in the eastern states. The legislature was in session, and a bill prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors was soon to be considered by that august body. Petitions from many towns in the state, favoring the passage of this bill, were being signed and sent to the legislature. I was among the solicitors and I found that in doing this work many interesting and amusing things may happen.

Just before entering one home I noticed that an outer door leading to the cellar was open, and a boy about four years old, with a tiny cup in one chubby hand, by the aid of his two feet and the other hand, was slowly and cautiously climbing down a short flight of stairs leading to the cellar.

In this home I was well received and I presented the petition first to the father. He took it, read it carefully and passed it back without signing, saying, "I am on the fence. I am not ready at the present time to define my position by signing a petition for or against statewide prohibition."

Hardly had the father finished speaking when there came a clatter of hasty steps, a door flew open, and a boy of ten or twelve years appeared. "John has pulled the tap out," he cried, "the cider has all run out. John is drinking some of it."

The father started quickly for the cellar. The mother, meanwhile, signed the petition, saying as she did so, "I am very glad of this opportunity and I certainly hope for the success of this measure."

Although I hardly expected to see the father again, back he came with the mischievous John under his arm. The child, with head sticking out and feet hanging down, still held fast the tiny cup. He was wet from head to foot, and at his appearance the room quickly filled with the odor of hard cider. Passing the child over to the patient mother to be dried and cleaned, the father looked at me with a new light in his eye. He reached for the petition and signed it, saying, "Cider and the possibility of my little boy's fate in years to come, have defined my position for me. I see now, as never before, that there is no neutral ground."

Is Beer Neutral?

In Brand Whitlock's report to the State Department on the Kaiser's slave trade in Belgium, he makes a sad reference to "the breweries, the one institution that the Germans have scrupulously respected." No doubt beer is the crowning glory of any civilization, as the personal liberty fanatics have pointed out in impassioned advertisements, but we wonder how they like this indirect endorsement of their claims. If the foes of Belgium spared the breweries what would a friend of Belgium have done?—Collier's.

In the Footsteps of Their Father

Once upon a time, says the Christian Scotsman, there was a saloonkeeper who was classed by his associates as a "pretty respectable sort of a citizen—never drinks or gambles and thinks the world of his family, you know." The story is told that he went home one afternoon and found his wife away from home and his three boys in the back yard where they had a bench, some bottles and tumblers and were playing "keep saloon." The youngest, who was behind the bar, had a towel tied around his waist and appeared to be setting up the drinks pretty freely. The father was dismayed at the nature of the children's play, a feeling that turned to the deepest alarm as he realized that actual beer was being dispensed over the make-believe bar, and that his boys were staggering, while a neighbor lad lay drunk under a tree. When the mother returned she found the boys in bed and her husband sobbing like a child. That night the saloon was closed, and its former keeper entered another line of business.

"Business Never Better"

"I once knew a brewer, a good man in his way," says Rev. Charles Garrett in The Methodist Recorder. "He was a kindly man, generous, ready to help anybody in distress, and with a kind word for anybody in trouble. He said, 'Well, Mr. Garrett, I suppose you are as earnest in teetotalism as ever.' 'Yes,' I said, 'rather more.' 'Well,' he said, 'it's all right, you know; it pleases you and it doesn't hurt me. The fact is, I was never doing better than I am doing now; my business never paid me better.' Not long afterward I saw his second son coming out of the yard in delirium tremens with three men struggling with him, a fine young fellow. They carried him in. Half an hour afterward I heard a whisper, 'He is dead,' and I went in to try and comfort the family; and when I entered the room there was the body, and on that side was the mother, drunk, and on the other side the brother, drunk. And I heard that father's words again, 'It never paid me better.'"

"They'll Get Ye Goin' or Comin'"

In certain dry localities it has been suspected in numerous cases that young men "under age" were getting liquor permits regularly by making affidavit that they were over twenty-one years of age. The order for national registration has placed some of these frivolous booze-seekers in a corner from which they may find it hard to extricate themselves. The following conversation, overheard on the street, between an elderly Irishman and a young man of undetermined nationality, though apparently not a good American, is a case in point and also illustrates the disintegrating effect of booze upon moral character:

"Be markin' me wor'rd by—they'll get ye goin' or comin.'"

"But I tell you, on the level, I'm not twenty-one years old."

"I hear phat ye say, but 'twas only the day before yisterday I see your name on the permit register. If the army don't get ye fer lyin' the white ribboners will. Now be markin' me wor'rd."

Anyway you take it, strong drink is a poison to body, mind and soul—all suffer together. It is time the young manhood of our nation was conserved by putting temptation entirely beyond its reach.

$50 may be earned for your Church besides good pay for your time distributing Religious Literature in your section. Write Nichols Co., Dept. L. 1, Naperville, Ill.

Songs of the Economic War

Let's go down on our knees, boys, and sift
the seeds around,
Shouting the battle cry of "Feed 'em!"
We'll hoe the beets and peas, boys, on all
our garden ground,
Shouting the battle cry of "Feed 'em!"

The onion forever! Put on your jeans,
Chop down the pigweeds, hill up the beans!
So we'll rally to the fight, boys, and hoe
till candle light,
Shouting the battle cry of "Feed 'em!"
—The Oregon Journal.

Cut Your Tire Bills in Two

As your first practical economy of the economies we all must effect until this World War is over, put on DOUBLE TREAD TIRES, built by special process, guaranteed to meet the most exacting tests of everyday mileage, yet costing only a fraction of what average tires cost.

DOUBLE TREADS have been before the public for three years, and have built for us the largest tire business in this field. Do not confuse them with cheap, recased tires, flashily advertised to be "DOUBLE TREADS". Look for DOU TRE trademark. Compare these prices. Send for complete list of tires and accessories. Our business has been built on the good will and satisfaction created by first orders.

Size	Plain	Non-Skid	9 Ply Gray Tubes	Red Tubes
30x3.....	$5.50	$5.75	$2.75	$3.00
30x3½...	6.50	7.25	3.00	3.40
32x3½...	7.50	8.25	3.45	3.55
33x4.....	9.50	10.50	4.50	4.75

Also all sizes up to 38 x 5½. State whether clincher, "Q. D." or straight side.

Address Dept. U. S.

THE DOUBLE TREAD TIRE CO., Inc.
106 West 52d Street, New York City

Literature for Comfort Bags

Testament, special khaki cloth cover. Price, 18 cents.

Testament. Price, 12 cents.

"Home Hymns," a collection of hymns set to familiar tunes. Price, 3 cents each; per fifty, 60 cents; per hundred, $1.00.

Coupon Pledge Card, printed in blue with flag in colors.
Price, per hundred, 35 cents.

"A Friendly Word to Young Men," by Richmond Pearson Hobson of Merrimac fame. Printed in blue, with flag in colors. Price, 2 cents each; per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents.

"Letter from Mother." Facsimile letter with W. C. T. U. monogram and flag in colors, printed in blue. Price, 3 cents each; per fifty, 25 cents; per hundred, 40 cents.

Envelope for letter, with W. C. T. U. monogram. Price, per fifty, 25 cents; per hundred, 40 cents.

"Letter from Mother," with envelope. Price, 5 cents; per hundred, 75 cents.

"What God Says to His Soldiers." A unique arrangement of Scripture texts under subjects: Reveille—Roll Call—Attention — Quick March — Halt — etc. Printed on card 4¼x2¾, a convenient size to slip into a Testament, with flag in colors and texts printed in blue.
Price, 2 cents each; per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 30 cents.

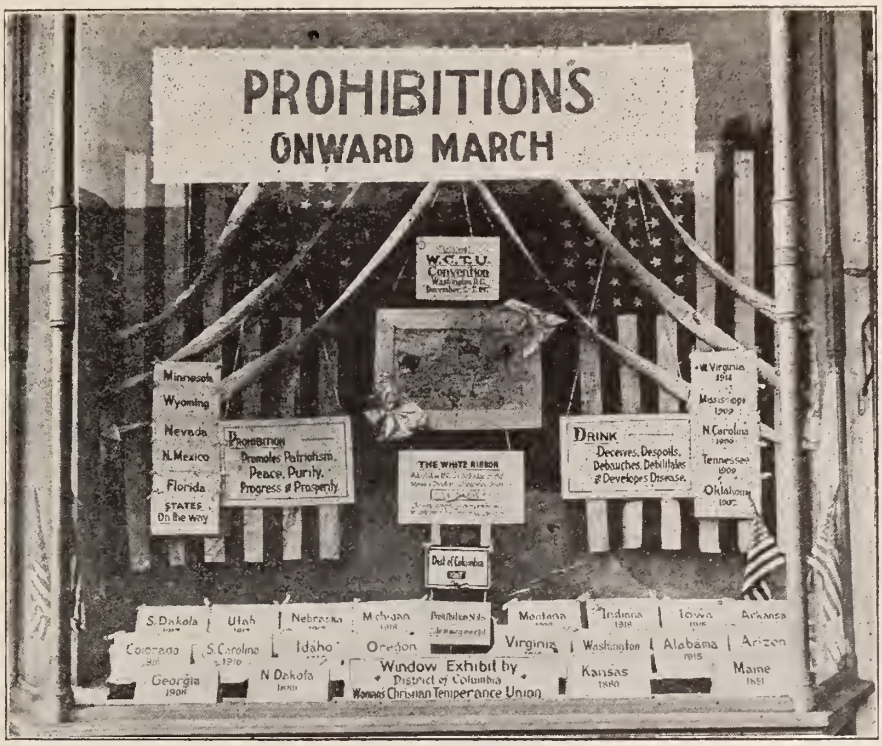
Directions for Comfort Bags.
Price, 2 cents each; per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred, 25 cents.
(When ordering, please state whether directions are wanted for comfort bags for soldiers or sailors.)

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., JULY 26, 1917 | No. 29



This District of Columbia W. C. T. U. window exhibit aroused much interest during inauguration week, last March, and has since that time been placed in seven different windows in the city of Washington, remaining in each three to six weeks. In one instance the exhibit was displayed next door to a saloon.

LATE NEWS

The Administration Food Control Bill, virtually rewritten after five weeks' bitter contest, was passed by the Senate on Saturday, July 21, by a vote of 81 to 6. The Senate prohibition sections, prohibiting the manufacture of distilled spirits during the war and directing the President to buy all distilled spirits in bond, were substituted for the House "bone dry" provision. The measure will now be taken under consideration by the conferees from the House and the Senate.

CAMPAIGN EDITION

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

FOOD CONTROL BILL STILL HOLDS CLOSE ATTENTION OF SENATE—FOREIGN MOTHERS COME TO WASHINGTON TO PLEAD FOR FOOD—PORTO RICO'S WONDERFUL VICTORY—LIQUOR DEALERS WITHDRAWING WHISKY FROM BOND AT TREMENDOUS RATE—NO CITY OF WASHINGTON HEREAFTER

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

Probably the most important event of this time in our nation's history, next to the declaration of war with Germany, is what is transpiring today as I write, namely, the drawing of the names of those young men who will make up our Army. It is taking place in a large committee room of the Senate office building. Secretary of War Baker is there watching the proceedings, and is to draw the first name. Members of the Senate and House military committees, with a limited number of newspaper correspondents and photographers, and the officials of General Crowther's office, who will conduct the drawing, are present. Each number corresponds with a name and has been stamped on a slip of paper, placed in a capsule, and deposited in a large glass bowl. One at a time the capsules are picked out, the contents of the bowl being stirred after each removal. The capsule is then handed to one of the announcers, standing at each side of the bowl, who breaks it, extracts the slip of paper and calls to the tally clerks the number it bears. The slip is then handed to an official in front of the bowl who verifies the announcer's report, whereupon another man, stationed at a great blackboard, writes thereon the number in its order. When it is filled, it is taken out of the room and photographed, cleaned off, and returned, the drawing meantime continuing with a second board and bowl in use. The official record of the numbers drawn, will be furnished by telegraph to the local boards over the country, in accordance with which they will call out the men to fill the quota from each district.

Senate Still Wrestling With Food Control Bill

For five weeks the Senate has been laboring over the Food Control bill, but by unanimous consent, they will bring it to a vote tomorrow, July 21. Yesterday, Senator Myers of Montana in a delightful speech in the Senate called attention to a resolution passed by the Continental Congress, February 27, 1777. It is truly remarkable that it so aptly fits in to the present conditions. It is as follows:

"Resolved, That it be recommended to the several legislatures of the United States immediately to pass laws the most effectual for putting an immediate stop to the pernicious practice of distilling grain, by which the most extensive evils are likely to be derived if not quickly prevented."

In the course of his ten minute address, Senator Myers named some of the illustrious men who were members of that Congress. "Benjamin Franklin and Robert Morris then occupied the Pennsylvania seats. The Adamses and Howard Treat Payne were worthy representatives of the Old Bay State. Patrick Henry, Benjamin Harrison, and Peyton Randolph spoke for the Old Dominion while Stephen Hopkins of Rhode Island, and John Jay and Philip Livingston of New York, clothed with solemn dignity, and perfumed with moral worth the honor of the seats that they filled with such lofty purpose and distinguished patriotism."

He quoted Abraham Lincoln who as far back as 1839 and 1842 declared: "And when the victory shall be complete—when there shall be neither a slave nor a drunkard on the earth—how proud the title of that land which may truly claim to be the birthplace and the cradle of both those revolutions that shall have ended in victory."

The Senator closed with these words: "Senators, why not catch up with our ancestors? Why not enact into law the advice of the Congress of 1777 for food conservation? Why not attain for the nation the vision of glory that charmed the prophetic eyes of Abraham Lincoln?"

Mr. Herbert C. Hoover, the food administrator by choice of the President, was the storm center about which much of the discussion revolved on Thursday in the Senate. Senator Reed of Missouri, who has made no secret of his hostility to Mr. Hoover, offered a number of amendments intended to change the text of the bill so that it would be impossible for Mr. Hoover to be eligible for appointment, and was so marked in his accusations as to call forth severe criticism and rebuke on the part of other Senators. Mr. Reed's amendments were in the main rejected, but a food board of three was substituted for a single head. After the bill is acted upon in the Senate it goes back to the House where it will be sent to conference—men representing both Senate and House—for agreement on the differences if possible. All this will take time, and the call from every quarter has been for speed in getting the bill into the hands of the President for action.

Foreign Mothers Plead for Food for Their Children

This week a dozen or more women of foreign birth, from the densely populated east side districts of the city of New York, came to Washington to spread their grievance of the high cost of living before the President, Mr. Hoover, and others. Miss Rankin, our Congresswoman, is advocating their cause. "We don't know much about politics, but we know we can't get food. If the government wants to take our sons to be killed in France, it must pass the food bill, so we may feed the children left at home, or our young men will go to war only over our dead bodies." This is the crux of their complaint to the men they have come to see. Miss Todd of New York, who accompanies them, says, "These women are not dependents; they are the wives of working men whose wages are no longer sufficient to buy food for their families, and the children eager to learn, go to school hungry." . . . . "You can't preach peace for years, and inculcate a deep belief that war is cruel and unnecessary, then have policemen club them into sending their sons into war. The only chance they have to hear what this war means is at the anti-conscription meetings. They go there to learn, and there they are told this is a rich man's war, for the Morgans and the Rockefellers to grow richer, and then the meetings are broken up by policemen and they are driven home." What wonder there are bread riots and disturbances among these people who do not understand our language, are crowded together, and have little instruction. Miss Todd said she visited fifty schools of the east side, with an average attendance of 1,200 children, and forty-three principals told her the children were falling behind in their lessons because they were under-nourished, and had as a result become a prey to disease.

Porto Rico's Wonderful Victory

We are continuing to rejoice over the wonderful victory for prohibition in Porto Rico. With a population of twelve hundred thousand people, about a quarter of a million of them voters, it has gone dry by a majority of 99,775 for prohibition to 61,295 against, according to the associated press dispatches. Fifty-one municipalities voted for prohibition, as compared with twenty-one opposed to it. All the large cities voted on the dry side. We believe this Porto Rico victory, coming at the psychological moment when Congress is debating war prohibition, will, without doubt, have a marked influence for good. All honor to those who have in any way helped to bring about this blessed victory.

Liquor Dealers Withdrawing Whisky from Bond at Tremendous Rate

Liquor dealers, alarmed at the prospect of the government seizing, under the terms of the food bill, the vast quantities of distilled spirits in bond, are withdrawing whisky from bonded warehouses at a rate never before equaled. Within the last ten days more than 10,000,000 gallons have been withdrawn, and the ratio of 1,000,000 a day bids fair to be continued.

A score of Kentucky, Baltimore, and Cincinnati bankers were given an informal hearing this week before members of the Senate Finance and Agricultural committees, in protest against the Smoot amendment to the Food Control bill providing for government purchase of all distilled beverages in bond. The chairman of the delegation said the banks have $120,000,000 loaned on bonded warehouse certificates, and that the Smoot amendment would cause tremendous losses. The bankers did not oppose proposals to stop further manufacture of distilled beverages.

There is no city of Washington on the map, and for the first time in history, a proclamation by the President is dated "In the District of Columbia," and not Washington, D. C. Since February 21, 1871, there has been no city of Washington, D. C. On that date Congress repealed the charter of Washington, Georgetown, and the levy court, and created instead the one municipality of the District of Columbia. The President in his proclamation of July 14 putting German insurance concerns out of business in the United States did it in the District of Columbia, and by order of the President this form will be followed for commissions, as well as proclamations, after the present supply of blanks is exhausted. So there is no city of Washington hereafter with officialdom.

Government Officials Speed up Their Health With Early Morning Exercise

Government officials who have been compelled to remain in Washington in order to be better fitted to handle the strenuous tasks before them because of the war, have engaged a physical instructor from Yale to drill them in early morning exercises. Secretary McAdoo, Secretary Lane, Attorney General Gregory, Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt and many others are numbered among them.

National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, Washington, D. C., July 20, 1917

MASSACHUSETTS CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION HEARS FROM PROHIBITION GOVERNORS

Gratifying testimony to the value of state-wide prohibition has been received by the committee on the liquor traffic of the Massachusetts constitutional convention from governors of prohibition states, mayors and boards of trade in prohibition territory.

"State-wide prohibition in West Virginia has lessened crime, increased efficiency of labor and reduced criminal costs very materially. I do not believe there is anybody in this state who will deny that it has been very beneficial," writes Governor John F. Cornwell.

Concerning the benefits of prohibition to Mississippi, Governor Theodore G. Bilbo says, "In the first place, state-wide prohibition has caused a decrease of 75 to 80 per cent in drunkenness and crime in our state, all of which can be conclusively shown by reference to the court records in the counties and municipalities of this state.

"The illegal sale of liquor has been reduced to a minimum throughout the entire state. Labor conditions have improved and the general attitude of business men is practically unanimous in favor of absolute prohibition.

"The success of prohibition and its effects upon all classes of people has been such that it has convinced practically all of our people of its virtues. So strong is the cause of prohibition in our state, I feel safe in saying that 80 or 90 per cent would very promptly vote against any effort to repeal our laws on this subject."

"It has been my privilege to live in North Dakota during all the stages of its development, including territorial days, prior to constitutional prohibition, effective in 1889, when North Dakota became a state," writes Governor Lynn J. Frazier.

"In certain localities the measure was for a time unpopular, but sentiment has changed until I do not believe there is a section in the state that would desire or tolerate saloons. There are occasional violations of the law, it is true, but this is largely due to the opportunities occasioned by the presence of large numbers of migratory workers, particularly in the harvesting season.

"The enactment of a 'bone-dry' law at the last session of our legislature was regarded by some as quite a long step at this time, but its enforcement is meeting with general co-operation both by business men and farmers.

"Although a large proportion of the crimes committed in our state are, according to personal statement of convicts, directly traceable to liquor, the ratio of persons confined in the penitentiary to the total population is at this writing but one to 3,000, and I trust that even may be reduced through the workings of the 'bone-dry' law."

Hotel in Prohibition Richmond Beats Wet Records

A convincing answer to a favorite argument of the liquor makers, that hotels cannot be successfully operated without the sale of liquor, comes from a hotel proprietor of Richmond, Va., who has made a comparison of the receipts of his business for January, 1917, and January, 1916, the last year the legislature met in Richmond, with its attendant crowds of hangers-on. "In making the comparison," he writes, "I was delighted to see that the increase for this year over the preceding year aggregated $4,000. My business is growing every month. People are coming in larger numbers. The change has done me a world of good in a business way. There is another thing: The same element that could be formerly seen here in large numbers, often coming into the hotel and making things disagreeable by loud talk and profanity, appears to have forsaken the city. I hope they have gone for good."

Ban on Liquor in Chinese Army

At the solicitation of Mrs. Mei Ren Yen, a white ribboner of China who is accomplishing great things for the temperance reform, General Wu has forbidden the use of drink and tobacco among his soldiers and is organizing a temperance band. His aim is to enlist 5,000 soldiers at Kui Kiang as total abstainers. Mrs. Mei has also addressed the pupils in the government schools of this city and has recently completed a week's work in the government schools of Haukan and Wuchang.

No Cause for Complaint at Virginia Navy Yard

According to information published in the Ledger-Dispatch, unlike the conditions prevailing at Newport, Boston, and Philadelphia Navy Yards those found at Norfolk are causing no worry among Navy officials. There has been a wonderful improvement at Norfolk. Three years ago Navy captains did not want to take their ships to that port. Now saloons and disorderly houses—the cause of complaint—have been closed out by the city and state authorities and conditions are much more satisfactory.

HONOR ROLL

—of—

PROHIBITION STATES AND TERRITORY AND DATE OF GOING INTO EFFECT

Maine		1851
Kansas		1880
North Dakota		1889
Oklahoma		1907
Georgia		1908
North Carolina		1909
Mississippi		1909
Tennessee		1909
West Virginia		1914
Alabama		1915
Arizona		1915
Virginia		1916
Colorado		1916
Oregon		1916
Washington		1916
Arkansas		1916
Iowa		1916
Idaho		1916
South Carolina		1916
Nebraska		1917
South Dakota		1917
Utah	†Aug.	1, 1917
Dist. of Columbia	†Nov.	1, 1917
Alaska	†Jan.	1, 1918
Indiana	†April	2, 1918
Michigan	*April	30, 1918
Montana	*Dec.	31, 1918
New Hampshire	†May	1, 1918

*Enacted 1916. †Enacted 1917.

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1917

Iowa†† Ohio New Mexico

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1918

Utah†† Missouri Florida
Minnesota Wyoming Nevada

††Now have statutory prohibition. Will vote on constitutional amendment.

Ex-Czar Nicholas of Russia a Total Abstainer

A vivid word picture of the life of ex-Czar Nicholas of Russia, given by the Moscow Russkoye Slovo, describes the one-time ruler of all the Russias as still a total abstainer from intoxicating liquor. At the four-course dinner, served at eight o'clock, half a bottle of red wine is placed on the table, "but nobody touches it, and the bottle travels back to the cellar unopened," says the Moscow paper.

Brewing Company to Operate Chain of Grocery Stores

The Grand Rapids Brewing company is said to be planning, at the expiration of the license period in Michigan, to operate a chain of retail grocery stores in the saloons formerly under its control. The brewery buildings will be used for warehouse purposes to store the wholesale stock and possibly for the manufacture and processing of some of the articles handled. Most of the saloons run by this brewery are well located, on street corners and along the lines of greatest traffic both in Grand Rapids and in live towns nearby, and these locations will lend themselves equally well to the grocery trade.

Prohibition Towns Easily Distinguishable

Appearances are often deceptive, but there is something about the trim, prosperous appearance of a dry city which shouts "prohibition" to the visitor entering its gates. Writing in the Atlantic Monthly, Ida M. Tarbell tells of her experience in visiting unfamiliar towns and cities. She says:

"We came to know almost as soon as we reached a new place whether the town was dry or not. A town that had been dry over a period of a dozen years had a trimness about the streets and buildings, a look of freshness and energy about young people and old, which stood out in almost incredible contrast to what we found in the wet town of the same size. We went to one town in Ohio, which had been dry for thirty-one years, so the hotelkeeper told me. He claimed to be a much-traveled person, and said that in all the many towns which he had known intimately, he had never found one in which there was such a fine lot of young people as here. In health, in vigor, in initiative, he believed that the young men and women, particularly of the working classes, were tremendously ahead of the same group in the towns where liquor was freely displayed."

WHITE RIBBONERS ON BEACON HILL

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION LIQUOR TRAFFIC COMMITTEE FAVORS THE SUBMISSION OF A PROHIBITORY AMENDMENT

ELIZABETH P. GORDON

It was the inimitable Sam Jones who once said when visiting the Hub, "I would make Boston a suburb of glory." In answer to this discerning southerner's complimentary sentiment the city's most exclusive evening daily published these lines, written in true Bostonese vein:

"Make Boston a suburb of glory, Sam Jones!
Do you know what such sacrilege means?
I fear you have not read the story, Sam Jones,
Of that city of culture and beans.

"You're sailing 'mid breakers and rocks, Sam Jones!
A dangerous sea you are tossed on;
Hereafter be sure in your talks, Sam Jones,
To make glory a suburb of Boston!"

The writer, a native of Boston, believes there will be an incalculable distance between Boston and "Glory" so long as the city continues to license the liquor traffic. But prohibition is surely coming!

Not only "the city of culture and beans," but all Massachusetts is being stirred by the constitutional convention now being held in the state house on Beacon Hill. Three hundred delegates sit daily under the historic cod fish—that valued emblem of the commonwealth's prosperity. The women people look on! The convention is fortunate in having as its esteemed presiding officer Hon. John L. Bates, a former governor of the state. In his opening address to the assembly he made this significant statement: "The constitution of Massachusetts was the first written constitution in which the people appear at once as authors of the government and subjects of its laws. When adopted in 1780, no nation had a written constitution. It is the Massachusetts idea of democracy then, that is the center of the world's storm today."

The writer was present in the gallery when the oath of allegiance was administered to a belated delegate—a Mr. Sullivan of Boston. "I do solemnly swear," he affirmed, "that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the commonwealth of Massachusetts and will support the constitution thereof." Having recently seen Miss Jeannette Rankin filling with honor her seat in the National House of Representatives a great longing possessed the soul of the gallery on-looker to see Katharine Lent Stevenson take the oath of office, be seated as a member of the constitutional convention and give those three hundred men a woman's interpretation and a white ribboner's vision of "true faith and allegiance to the commonwealth of Massachusetts." A witty westerner once said: "You can always tell a Bostonian, but you cannot tell him much!" That day, however, has long since passed. When women surged through the state house at a great suffrage hearing a policeman on duty at the front smilingly told the writer that he was stationed there to defend the men; "for when women come in at the front door," he said, "the men will have to go out at the back door!" Evidently "much" has been heard. Lucy Stone, Julia Ward Howe and Mary A. Livermore did not live in Massachusetts in vain.

In large numbers, the Massachusetts white ribboners and representatives of other temperance organizations rallied to the hearings given by the Liquor Traffic committee of the constitutional convention. The twelve thousand white ribboners of the state were splendidly represented by their president, Mrs. Katharine Lent Stevenson, whose plea was eloquent and convincing. Miss Cora Frances Stoddard, Mrs. Elizabeth Tilton, Mr. Robert H. Magwood, Professor John A. Nicholls and representatives of the Good Templars, churches and Granges made excellent speeches. Mr. Willard Wylie, chairman of the Allied Temperance Forces, ably conducted the hearing. The speakers were at their best. No stronger arraignment of the liquor traffic could have been made. The gilded, de luxe license law of the commonwealth was made to appear just what it is—a stupendous failure! All who made pleas for the submission to the people of the prohibitory amendment said that they hung their heads in shame and confusion because of the license law of Massachusetts.

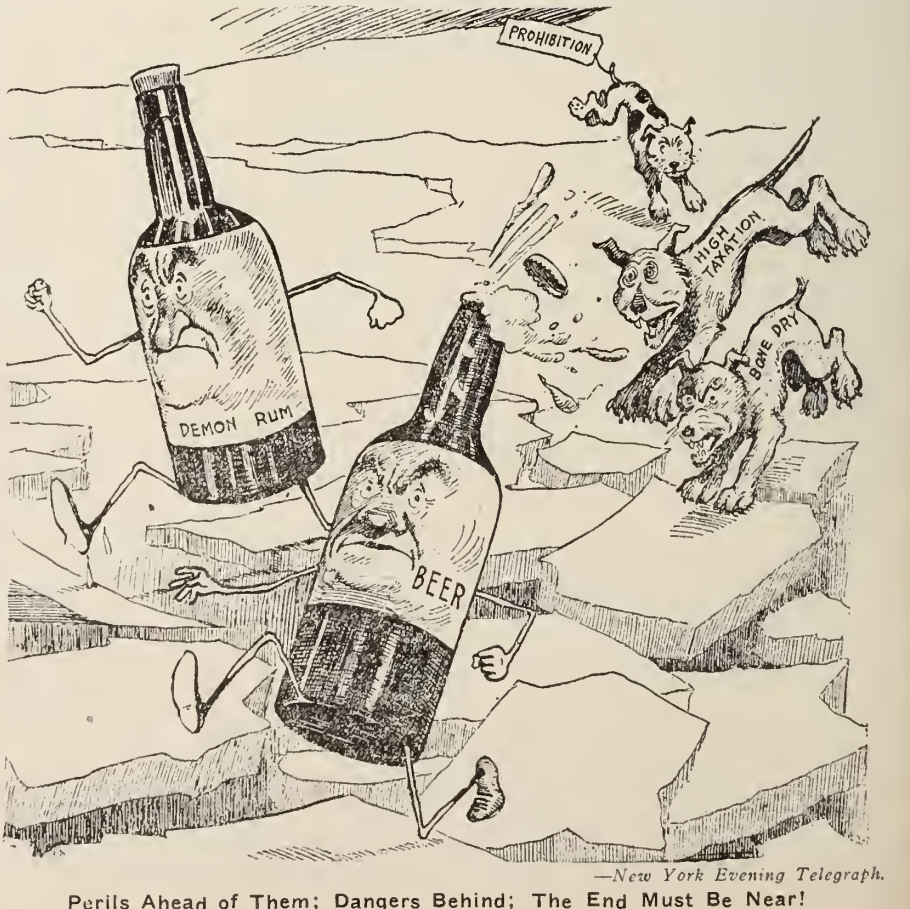
The speeches of those who represented the liquor organizations were pitiably weak and bombastic. "Man is a sensual being," said one, "and there is no community happiness without personal liberty." "Drinkers as a class live longer than non-drinkers." "Non-drinkers in the labor movement draw more sick benefits than do the drinkers." Members of the committee, well acquainted with the facts concerning prosperity under prohibition, even in large cities, asked pointed questions that the liquor advocates could not or would not answer. The discomfiture of the liquor fraternity was complete. The committee reported to the convention the next day a resolve in favor of submitting to the people an amendment to the constitution prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquor. Action on this resolve by the constitutional convention is still pending. It is believed that the resolve will pass, and the men will have the opportunity to vote on the question next November.

Work for the Soldiers and Sailors

Activities for the protection of the soldiers and sailors continue. The recent attempt to transfer a saloon in Boston to a place in front of the Navy Yard in Charlestown was frustrated by the vigorous protest of the allied temperance forces. Already the sailors and marines in the Navy Yard, three thousand men in all, have to run the gauntlet of eighty-two saloons and the addition of another was unthinkable. Mrs. Stevenson quickly rallied a force of white ribboners who nearly filled the room of the license commissioners, and herself made an admirable, spirited protest against the transfer of the saloon. It was a hard battle, for already the building had been partially erected. The speaking by the allied temperance forces was strong, sensible and in support of our nation's defenders, and the commissioners decided in favor of the petitioners. One more victory for those who are protecting our boys in blue!

The tourist now "doing" the Hub in a sight seeing car finds greater Boston up and doing. Boston Common, that ancient cow pasture, is alive with the insignia of preparedness. A huge, towering red cross several feet in width, illuminated with hundreds of electric lights, surmounts a platform from which daily appeals for subscriptions to the Red Cross society are made. Almost any day the listener is gripped by the tragic words, "It may be your boy who will need help in the trenches." Boys in khaki and in blue are met at every turn. The Harvard University regiment, trained in part by French officers, is on daily drill. At the commencement exercises the Army uniforms appeared on many graduates and undergraduates. "Caliban," the greatest open air drama of a high type ever staged, is successfully making sentiment for the Red Cross. Seated, with thousands of spectators, in the Harvard stadium—an immense amphitheater, with the stars overheard and wonderful colored electric lights playing on the ancient Egyptian, Greek, Roman and English scenes depicted on the "yel-

(Continued on Page Five)



—New York Evening Telegraph.

Perils Ahead of Them; Dangers Behind; The End Must Be Near!

PROHIBITION WINS IN PORTO RICO TWO TO ONE

THE "BOTTLE" AND THE "COCOANUT" IN A SHARP CONTEST ON JULY 16

This is the Way to Vote. Our Children Would be Saved from Danger

By an overwhelming majority of over 37,000 Porto Rico on July 16 bade John Barleycorn goodby. The event marks a new epoch in prohibition history, for the Porto Ricans are the first Latin people to declare against the traffic in alcoholic liquors. The question was decided at the first election at which the natives of the island voted as American citizens.

It is said that seventy per cent of the registered voters who cast their ballots were illiterate and that to enable them to make their mark at the proper place, it was necessary to have symbols printed on the ballot to point the way, the bottle being used by the anti-prohibition element, the prohibitionists choosing the cocoanut, the chief ingredient of the most popular soft drink of the island.

The Jones Porto Rico Citizenship bill, passed last winter by Congress, provided that prohibition should go into effect in the island on March 2, 1918, with the proviso that at any time within five years the question might be submitted at a general election upon the petition of at least ten per cent of the qualified voters. The liquor interests started a movement for a referendum and petitions signed by several thousand more than the requisite number were presented to the supervisor of elections. This precipitated the contest between the adherents of John Barleycorn and his enemies.

The anti-liquor movement met with no favor from the governor, who in his report for 1916 made it evident that the present administration did not want the trouble of readjusting its budget to prohibition. The treasurer of the insular government likewise in his report of 1916, announced as a part of his program for the coming year the starting of new retail liquor places. Shortly after the opening of the campaign the report was circulated that the anti-prohibitionists had dissolved their campaign committee and given up the fight. It was soon learned, however, that the liquor men were working quietly and persistently to gain their end.

For years the National W. C. T. U. has been systematically seeking to create in Porto Rico public sentiment which should in time prove the undoing of the liquor traffic. Through its faithful and efficient representative, Miss Annie A. Robbins, much good foundation work was laid, and the individual efforts of other white ribboners, conspicuous among whom was Mrs. Edith R. Hildreth, acting president of the Porto Rico W. C. T. U., contributed to the final success of the movement. Local unions were organized in several communities and anti-liquor literature widely distributed.

When the campaign opened a call came to the National W. C. T. U. for a Spanish-speaking prohibition worker to lend knowledge and experience in helping to achieve the hoped-for results. To meet this need the National W. C. T. U. sent as its representative Mr. Paul Barnhart, who had recently returned from South America and from wide experience in work among Spanish-speaking people was peculiarly fitted for the task. Reports from the island indicate that Mr. Barnhart handled the situation in a masterly fashion, showing keenness, alertness and zeal. The large cities were placarded with some of the most striking W. C. T. U. prohibition posters, translated into Spanish, and a large quantity of the best campaign literature in Spanish was distributed throughout the island. Prize contests on the alcohol question were held in the public schools and realistic portrayals of the evils of intoxication were given in moving pictures.

It is significant that many men engaged in the sale of liquor as a part of their business not only favored but actively helped the dry cause. The "saloon" is quite different from the place of that name in the United States, as liquor is sold almost exclusively in groceries or provision markets, and the proprietors of these places found it not only the least profitable feature of their trade but realized that it brought to them a most undesirable class of customers, and therefore were not sorry to have it abolished.

This is the Way to Vote in Order to Save Our Island from Poverty

Evidence was not lacking here, as in our own country, that most of the crimes committed could be traced to the use of liquor. One chief of police declared that "all of our arrests come at the end of the week when the men are paid off and get drunk."

The credit for this magnificent victory for righteousness and sobriety registered at the polls July 16 should be accorded not only to the natives who were clear-sighted enough to recognize in John Barleycorn an enemy to progress, but especially to the missionaries of the Protestant churches and the temperance forces who have been endeavoring for years to instil in the minds of these impressionable people a realization of the destructive effects of alcohol upon their health and their prosperity.

WHITE RIBBONERS ON BEACON HILL

(Continued from Page Four)

low sands," one is impressed with the wonderful advance of Christian civilization. "Miranda," who might well be termed a twentieth century woman, is the means of transforming the animal-man, "Caliban," to a normal, virile human being. In the last scene, hundreds fall prostrate on the sands as, shining with radiant light, several crosses are reverently raised on high.

Under the able direction of the state superintendent of the department of Soldiers and Sailors, Mrs. Arabella W. Wilson, white ribboners are busily at work, knitting, making comfort bags and also Red Cross hospital supplies. In place of the well known "Boston bag" it is a pleasure to see many women carrying rainbow receptacles made of flowering chintz from which wooden needles conspicuously protrude. Messages galore have gone from Massachusetts white ribboners to their recreant Senators in Washington. A prominent Wellesley College educator and writer recently wrote Senator Lodge this trenchant telegram: "Isn't it rather inconsiderate for the Federal government to ask us women to economize to the last bread crumb and then throw billions of loaves of bread into a beer barrel?" Apropos of this message, which it is hoped will greatly disturb the New England conscience of Senator Lodge,

BOOZE BIG PROBLEM OF THE WAR, SAYS COLONEL NICHOLSON

"I have found in my forty-two years' experience with young men in the army camps that booze is responsible for ninety-five per cent of all the trouble they get into." Thus spake Colonel W. J. Nicholson, commandant at Fort Sheridan. "When a young fellow with $15 in his pocket comes into a city for the first time he thinks he has to blow it in to be a man. And when he gets three or four drinks his whole viewpoint changes. My business is training men for the United States Army, and in all the time I have been engaged in this work I have known of very few cases where liquor did not play an important part in causing the misdeeds for which men are disciplined. A soldier who gets drunk is only forty per cent efficient and men of that type are not the ones this country is looking for to defend it."

the bill-of-fare of an emergency cafeteria luncheon recently enjoyed by a Boston white ribboner might well be given. Here it is: Beans, squash, creamed onions, corn muffins and coffee, all for twenty-five cents. "Fletcherizing" one's food is no longer a Boston fad. "Hooverizing" has come to the front. Almost unconsciously Mrs. Emma Howland, one of our ablest Massachusetts white ribboners and a National organizer, has been qualifying for work among the soldiers. Her recent address at Hopewell, Virginia, where the Du Pont gun-cotton works employ two thousand men, was heard by many soldiers in uniform. A Y. M. C. A. official told some Virginia white ribboners that it was the very best, plainest and sincerest address to young men ever given under the society's auspices.

The handwriting on the wall of the state house at Beacon Hill is plain. The spilling of alcoholic liquor by the Massachusetts legislature will not be as spectacular as was the spilling of the tea in Boston Harbor in Revolutionary times, but the spilling will be just as thoroughly done. Woman's ballot will hasten the victorious day. Massachusetts, through no-license, is now two-thirds dry and the glorious day is hastening when the great commonwealth is to be "redeemed, redeemed, Immanuel's land."

"With a Sober People There Will Be No Trouble About the Revenue"

PROF. JOHN A. NICHOLLS

These are stirring times in the war against alcoholism. All around the world the liquor forces are on the defensive. The threatened overthrow of the kingdom of John Barleycorn has everywhere aroused the privileged classes of drinkdom to the defense of their sovereign, and frantic appeals are now being made to all who appear to be directly or indirectly interested in the liquor business, to unite their forces, in order to save it from destruction. The sad condition of a nation free from the drink traffic is everywhere held up to the public gaze. A world free from alcoholism would be a terrible place for brewers and distillers. We are gravely informed that National Prohibition would mean the loss of hundreds of millions of dollars to the treasury of our national government, and also large loss of revenue to the states and municipalities of the United States. We are told that past war debts have been paid by the so-called liquor industry, and an appeal is made to us to continue the traffic because "not only has the liquor industry paid past war debts, but it is now ready to pay the nation's part of the present world conflict." This offer to bribe the country is now being emphasized, on account of the statement just given out by the Internal Revenue Department, showing a large increase in the amount collected as tax on liquors. This is represented as showing an increased consumption of liquors, and it is stated that prohibition "would produce complete paralysis of trade in many communities, and its blighting effect would be felt throughout the whole country." The startling declaration is made that: "Somebody will have to pay the revenue if the government gets it" as if a new and solemn truth had just been discovered, and the climax is reached when the question is propounded: "What part will you have to pay?"

—The Seattle Daily Times

A Dangerous Departure

Truly these liquor appeals are fearfully and wonderfully made. Let us examine them in the light of a few plain facts. In regard to the increased revenue, the explanation is very simple. A large part of the liquor manufactured each year is placed in bonded warehouses. In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, there were produced for all purposes 249,000,000 gallons of spirits. Of these, 123,000,000 were used for munitions here and abroad. The remaining 126,000,000 gallons were used in the United States for many purposes. Less than one-half of these 126,000,000 gallons were bonded or used for beverage purposes. The tax is paid on liquor only when it is taken out of bond. In estimating consumption all liquor taken out of bond during the fiscal year is generally classed as consumed. It may be piled up in the liquor stores, or in the saloons, but the government tax being paid upon it it is all placed in the same category. Let us see what has happened this year.

It was generally understood, some time ago, that the Senate committee contemplated a heavy increase in the tax on liquors. It also looked as if the manufacture of distilled spirits for beverage purposes might be prohibited. The liquor men saw the danger, and immediately began to withdraw liquors from the bonded warehouses. They were thus stocking up for future use, and at the same time avoiding the payment of an increased tax, should such be levied. This liquor is now in their possession, and unless we get war prohibition of its sale, can be used to supply the demand for the coming year. The increased revenue is thus accounted for, not by increased consumption, but because the patriotic distillers were so anxious to avoid paying the extra war cost, that they at once removed their liquor from government control. They have already increased the price to their customers, and thus reap an additional harvest of profit, with no risk to themselves.

The dollar mark is the proper symbol of the liquor interests. The appeals now being made for the protection of the traffic find their tap roots in greed and avarice.

Next let us consider the claim that the liquor industry has paid the past war debts of the nation. Where does the liquor revenue come from? Out of the pockets of the brewers and distillers? No, certainly not. They simply act as tax collectors, paying over to the government a small part of their collections, and retaining vast sums for themselves. The poor fellow, who, met by the temptation of drink, enters the saloon, and orders and consumes intoxicants, when he ought to be buying food or other necessities for his family, is the one who provides the revenue. When he purchases the pint or quart of whisky, what does he pay? He pays the cost of manufacture, the profits of the dealers, the proportionate share of the license fee, and the revenue. It all comes from him. There is not a student of political economy in the world but will admit that in this case the consumer pays it all. And for every dollar that finds its way to the government exchequer, from seven to ten dollars go to the liquor dealers and manufacturers. And such is the nature of the business, that it injures the customer, impoverishes the community, and works disaster and ruin to the nation. The system which gives license to waste, encourages a destructive and dangerous traffic, simply because it can be used as a means of raising revenue, certainly can not be defended, either on economic or moral grounds. It interferes with the production of wealth, because it employs labor in a destructive business, which destroys food needed for human subsistence, impairs the efficiency of the nation, and retards the growth of its material resources. It is an infamy to allow such a traffic to continue as a revenue producer. Denouncing such a system in Great Britain long years ago, the poet, Cowper, exclaimed:

"Ten thousand casks, dribbling out their base contents,
Touched by the Midas fingers of the state, bleed gold for parliament to vote away.
Drink and be drunk, it is your country bids, gloriously drunk, obey the important call,
Her cause demands the assistance of your throats,
Ye all can swallow, and she asks no more."

"Why Kill the Goose?"

A cartoon issued by the publicity department of the liquor traffickers is entitled, "Why Kill the Goose?" It represents a fat goose, labelled, "Internal Revenue." Its three eggs are very conspicuous, but an axe marked, "Prohibition," is in dangerous proximity to its neck. Well, there are many reasons why the goose should be killed. In the first place, the cost of feeding it is too great. What would you think of a farmer that kept a flock of geese at a cost ten times greater than the amount realized from the eggs produced? If, when his attention had been called to the matter, he tried to defend his position by telling you how much he obtained from the sale of the eggs, and spoke of it as a profitable transaction, you would at once consider him a fit subject for some kind of mental treatment. For many years Uncle Sam has been that kind of farmer. But skillful mental treatment, in the form of scientific and economic facts, having been administered to him for some time, he is beginning to show signs of sanity, and we hope ere long this expensive and dangerous goose will no longer find pasture on Uncle Sam's farm.

But who will make up this revenue lost through national prohibition? The people, of course. It will come from the same place that it comes from now, out of the pockets of the people. In the final analysis, labor pays it all. The abolition of the liquor traffic as a revenue collector, will, of course, make necessary a readjustment of taxation. Congress is just now finding out a great many methods of raising money for war purposes.

Surely in this land, with all its great natural resources, and an intelligent people, it is not desirable to harbor a vice-producing traffic in order to meet the necessary expenses of government. The experience of states where the liquor traffic

(Continued on Page Seven)

FERMENTED LIQUORS CALL FOR GREATEST AMOUNT OF GRAIN, SAYS AGRICULTURAL EXPERT

"The fermented rather than the distilled liquors call for the greatest consumption of grain in the liquor business," asserts the dean of the College of Agriculture of the University of Illinois, writing in the Atlantic Monthly.

"That is to say, about 120,000,000 bushels—or approximately the world shortage—are used for fermented liquors, against some 35,000,000 bushels, practically none of which is wheat, used for distillation.

"But it is a different matter when we consider fermented liquors. Here are 120,000,000 bushels of grain, partly wheat, all destroyed so far as food values go, except for minor by-products for the feed lot. This is approximately the amount of the world's shortage, and in that sense is large and exceedingly significant.

"To transport the grain now used for fermented liquor in the United States alone would require the entire fleet of a thousand wooden ships, such as are now contemplated for the war trade. This 120,000,000 bushels of grain is the equivalent of over half the wheat crop of France or of Canada, and it is twice that of England. It represents the entire grain food of over 15,000,000 people, and that is no negligible amount. It represents in the form of meat no less than 750,000,000 pounds, or the carcasses of more than a million of the heaviest beeves. With people starving abroad, with large sections of Europe desolate, and with food riots beginning in this country as a result of high prices, there can be but one answer to the question whether this wastage shall continue.

"One of our greatest needs, present and prospective, is labor—men to work the land; men to fill the ranks of the nonproductive armies; men to equip the manufacturing industries; men to extend and operate the railroads suddenly called upon to carry unaccustomed burdens; men to keep the mines running as they never ran before; men to do all the thousand and one necessary things involved in war—the successful prosecution of hostilities, the preservation of society while war endures, and the mighty labor of restoration afterward.

> The use of grain for fermented liquors is the one great waste that can be prevented without the disturbance of any essential public interest. Not to prevent it is to pursue a course little short of criminal negligence.

"Now, it so happens that the Brewers' Year Book for 1914 contains an article on 'The Economic Importance of the Liquor Business,' in which it is shown that this business affords direct employment to some 500,000 men, and indirectly to as many more. To quote the final sentence, 'Thus we may reckon on a total of considerably over a million who are dependent for wages upon the manufacture and sale of liquor. If their dependents are considered, a grand total of about 4,000,000 persons is involved.'

"Here it is frankly stated, as an economic asset, that practically one person out of every twenty-five in the United States is devoted to the liquor business and dependent upon it for support. Can we afford at any time, much less now, so heavy a draft from an unproductive industry, particularly one that subsists by the destruction of necessary food?

"Here again the count is chiefly against the fermented liquors, which consume the bulk, not only of the grain, but also of the labor involved both in the manufacture and in trade. Clearly it is the fermented liquor that economic necessity will first attack.

"A principal point made in the article first cited from the brewers' yearbook is that the liquor business consumes grain equal in value to the total crops grown in the states of Maine, Connecticut, Delaware, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico, and Wyoming combined. Rhode Island might have been added, still leaving a balance of some seven or eight millions of dollars to be accounted for. Under present conditions this is surely no sustaining argument. Here is the entire crop output of eight states, great and little, consumed in ways other than for food. More than four-fifths of this consumption serves no useful purpose in the arts or sciences, and at the best caters to an appetite that takes bread from children and support from wives and mothers by the thousands."

"Time to stop giving it to him"

—Science Service.

"WITH A SOBER PEOPLE THERE WILL BE NO TROUBLE ABOUT THE REVENUE"

(Continued from Page Six)

has been prohibited, shows that it is not only morally beneficial to put the traffic out of commission, but also a great advantage from an economic standpoint.

The warring nations of Europe have found out something about the danger to national efficiency resulting from the liquor evil. Every national interest calls for its suppression. No cry of compensation or vested right should stand in the way of the safeguarding of the people. In the words of Sir William Blackstone: "No man and no body of men has a right to prosecute a calling which is necessarily antagonistic to the interests of the community." And we can say with England's great statesman, William E. Gladstone: "With a sober people there will be no trouble about the revenue."

Important as are the economic phases of this question, still more important are the moral considerations involved. What is morally wrong cannot be economically right. That the liquor traffic is morally wrong is shown by the application of the Master's test: "By their fruits ye shall know them." Let us sever our national partnership with this evil and dangerous trade, spurn the proffered bribe of liquor revenue, decline to tax vice in order to support government, meet our expenses by a method which shall be in harmony with the principles of righteousness, and give to even the humblest citizen beneath the flag safety from the presence of a death dealing scourge.

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, The Union Signal, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, July 26, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

Miss Anna A. Gordon, National W. C. T. U. president, left Evanston Thursday, July 19, for the East. She went directly to New York City to attend a meeting of the executive committee of the United Committee for Temperance Work in the Army and Navy. The executive committee consists of the officers of the United Committee and chairmen of permanent committees. There were present Mr. Daniel A. Poling, chairman; Miss Anna A. Gordon, vice-chairman; Miss Cora F. Stoddard, secretary. Dr. Charles Stelzle, chairman of committee on Ways and Means, and Mr. D. Leigh Colvin, of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, sat with the committee. Miss Gordon will spend this week in Washington.

NATIONAL SUPERINTENDENT TRANSLATED

Word has been received at National Headquarters of the promotion to heavenly activities of Mrs. W. A. Loyne, for many years National superintendent of Work among Lumbermen, and one of the honored pioneers of the W. C. T. U. A life sketch of Mrs. Loyne will be published later.

THE BREWERS AND THE BABIES

In their desperation the brewers are hiding behind the babies. They plead, "Do you realize that if the manufacture of beer is stopped there will be a shortage of milk for the babies?" The statement that the interests of brewers and infants are identical will startle the average American citizen. Whatever may be his views in general, the adult has always believed that children of tender years should have nothing to do with beer. Here is the plain assertion in the American Brewer, "The milk production would greatly suffer if brewers' grain should not be available for the dairymen." This claim is of course based on the assumption that from the breweries comes the fodder necessary for the cows if they are to give large supplies of milk.

Some time ago, when there was talk of curtailing the manufacture of beer in Great Britain, the beer makers made the same plea, and the other side of the question was given wide publicity. It was discovered through personal interviews that the best and greatest dairy farmers in the world will not use the brewers' grain for cattle. The Strength of Britain Movement declares that the brewer takes, say, 100 pounds of barley and leaves 30 pounds of cattle food, chiefly husk and woody fiber; the same authority asserts that the dairymen are not allowed to use this fodder for the cows that yield milk for Copenhagen, as the brewers' grains make milk injurious for infants. One farmer, when questioned on the subject, informed a representative of the W. C. T. U. paper of Great Britain, "I have been concerned in the production and distribution of milk for a great many years, and can certainly say most emphatically that the milk trade is under no obligations to the brewers. Not more than one dairy farmer in twenty uses wet grains for cow feeding, and many institutions, in their milk contracts, expressly provide that the 'contractor undertake to use no brewers' grains.'"

Let the brewers beware of the baby argument. Like the appellation—"nursing mothers" amendment—applied to the beer measure in Oregon, which created countless votes against it, their daring method of reasoning will arouse an interest that will lead to investigation and in the end throw upon the whole beer question the searchlight of truth, which is all that is needed to utterly destroy the brewery business.

CATHOLICS AND PROHIBITION

The liquor publicity bureaus are making much of the fact that Cardinal Gibbons is opposed to prohibition. They would have the public forget the many stalwart champions of the anti-liquor cause in the Roman Catholic church. They would like to blot from its memory the words of Archbishop Ireland: "Were God to place in my hand a wand with which to dispel the evil of intemperance, I would strike the door of every saloon, every distillery, every brewery, until the accursed traffic should be wiped from the face of the earth." They would erase from the remembrance of the communicants of that church the scathing indictment of Archbishop John J. Keane: "If I could cause the earth to open and swallow up every saloon in the world, I would feel that I was conferring upon humanity a blessing. The saloon is bad for the home, the church and the country. It has no redeeming feature. No wonder the bishops of the Third Council of Baltimore anathematized it. And if any man praise it, if any man countenance or encourage it, does he not deserve to share in the anathema?" They would have the good Catholics forget the advice of Cardinal Manning: "The drink traffic is a public, permanent and ubiquitous agency of degradation. The drink trade is our shame, scandal and sin, and unless brought under by the will of the people, it will be our downfall. Do you know how you can help to break up this unholy alliance between government and the greatest fraud of the age? Vote against it."

One could quote pages of testimony from men prominent among the Catholic clergy, as well as from laymen like John F. Cunneen, who appeals to Roman Catholics "to stand solidly united with their Protestant brethren in their warfare against the saloon." Urge your Catholic fellow citizens to send telegrams to Senators in the interests of the passage of a total national prohibition measure.

BRAVO, PORTO RICO!

The victory for prohibition in Porto Rico on July 16 is prophetic of what may soon happen in South America. A worker in the island reports that difficulty was at first experienced in arousing the native residents to think seriously of voting out liquor; they regarded it as a problem for the Anglo-Saxon countries to deal with. Because no Latin-American republic had taken the lead on this question, they did not consider they had yet reached the time for action. But agitation and education aroused their interest and later brought the conviction that the only right way to begin their career as American citizens was to emancipate themselves from the legalized liquor traffic. The energetic style in which they voted against the "bottle" in the battle of ballots has set an example for residents of the South American republics, who already are giving the most serious consideration, individually and officially, to legislation against the drink evil.

The magnificent fashion in which Porto Rico has demonstrated her fitness for American citizenship, by outlawing the most deadly enemy of civic virtue, may well cause an arrest of thought on the part of some of the very men in that august body, the United States Congress, who voted to give to the island dependency prohibition, but are still uncertain whether the parent country, the United States, is ready for it.

BONE DRY ZONES FOR THE SOLDIERS

That the United States government is in earnest in its desire and intention to protect the military camps and naval stations from the liquor and social evil is evident. Following closely after the order making it unlawful to sell or give any intoxicating drink to any enlisted man in uniform, either in the Army, the Navy or the marine service, came the letter from Secretary Baker of the War Department to the governors of the states urging the elimination of all places for the sale of liquor or houses of vice in the vicinity of camps, and declaring that if such protection were not afforded them they would be transferred to more favorable locations. As a result of this dictum and agitation, notorious resorts at El Paso and San Antonio, Texas, at Newport, R. I., and other places, have been closed. Within the past week the War Department has ordered that a dry zone five miles wide, unless there is a city or town within that limit, be thrown around all camps.

While one regrets that the administration does not see fit to urge the passage of a measure by Congress providing for a nation-wide dry zone, until it has been secured, as it will be before the war is over, the measures above mentioned, if properly enforced, will furnish a good degree of protection for the camps. Law enforcement will not, however, be secured without the co-operation of all good citizens. Every man should constitute himself a committee to see that any violation of either of these orders is promptly reported to the proper officials, and that the offenders are brought to justice. Such co-operation will help mightily.

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, 561 Thirty-third St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

Good Reasons for Refusing Liquor Advertisements

Many leading newspapers are refusing liquor advertisements and the number openly opposing the liquor traffic is constantly increasing. Liquor forces face the fact that the press is turning against them and that despite their vast wealth they can no longer subsidize the press as was formerly done to considerable extent. Among the reasons for refusing to exploit liquors are the following given by important Massachusetts dailies:

"The Standard's position regarding liquor is that it is best for people to let it alone. If nobody drank, the world would be a great deal better off. Perhaps the angle from which we view the matter can be made clear by supposing that a boy approaching his majority has asked this question: 'Would you advise me to start in drinking—in moderation, of course—or to let liquor alone entirely?' What answer can there be to this question except to advise abstinence? It all seems so obvious as to be hardly worth stating, yet it is just this consideration which lies at the bottom of the Standard's decision that, after the expiration of a reasonable notice to present advertisers, it will cease lending its circulation and the weight of its influence to urging people to drink."

From the Mercury: "In reaching this conclusion we do not set up a better-than-thou standard in comparison with other newspapers. Many newspapers and most of the leading magazines adopted this policy some time ago. The sale of beer and spirituous liquor is a business countenanced at the present time by the laws of the nation and the state, and a majority of citizens are on record as favoring the licensed sale. The printing of such advertising is legitimate and, as a general thing, the only question to be raised regarding the acceptance of such business is one of taste or the principles of the publisher.

"But when any advertiser, or group of advertisers attempts to dictate the policy of a newspaper, or to influence the presentation of the news in the newspapers they employ, on the strength of their patronage, there is no choice for self-respecting publishers but to cast out their business."

Catechism on Beer

Is beer a harmless drink, as so often stated in the brewers' periodicals?

The New York Health Department places beer in the same category with whisky. It says: "Alcohol is alcohol and harmful to the human body no matter in what agreeable form it is handed around. The rich man's alcohol is champagne, wine and cocktail; the poor man's alcohol is whisky, gin and beer. In prohibition communities, alcohol appears in vegetable bitters and patent medicines, and parades under many other fine-sounding names, such as tonics, nervines, medicated wines, etc., but since they all contain alcohol they are all dangerous."

Is there any truth in the statement which recently appeared in the American Brewer, "There can practically nothing be said about waste of grain in using it for brewing purposes, as part of it is consumed in liquid form, therefore not wasted, and of the other part at least half is turned over into fodder for the cattle"?

Congressman Charles H. Randall, in a speech in the House of Representatives, has dealt with the question of the food value of the protein in beer in the following terms: "The food value of the protein in beer is of most doubtful character. To secure that protein the drinker must also ingest alcohol. And alcohol is a poison. It paralyzes and impairs physical functions to a degree that more than offsets any food value that would otherwise be derived from the protein. But, making full allowance for it, and for the stock feed from slops and dried grain, the actual loss remains at nearly 8,000,000 pounds of bread daily. Calculating conservatively, call it only 7,500,000 pounds; the annual loss represented, counting the bread at five cents per pound, which is less than present retail cost, is $146,000,000. Please set that down as one item against the $500,000,000 revenue.

The case could not be better put than in Mr. Charles Smith's letter to the London Times. He says: "Of 65,000,000 bushels of grain destroyed in Great Britain by the drink trade in the year ending September 30, 1916: 24,700,000 bushels are changed into alcohol, carbon-dioxide (a poisonous drug and a poisonous gas), yeast and sediment—mashtub and barrel bottoms; 9,970,000 bushels are washed away, turned into gas, or evaporated as water; 19,500,000 bushels are barley husks and malt culms—two deteriorated residues useful as cattle food, but for that purpose inferior to equal measures of barley; 11,030,000 bushels remain in the intoxicating liquor in a decomposed and putrefying condition, pickled in alcohol."

Should beer be classed as a non-intoxicating liquor, as the brewers contend?

This is what ex-Governor Carlson of Colorado has to say concerning beer as an intoxicating liquor: "Let us see—is beer a non-intoxicating liquor? . . . All the scientists who have analyzed its contents think that beer is an intoxicating and not a non-intoxicating liquor. All the doctors who have noted some of its sickening effects share the same opinion. Every policeman who has seen how it makes men stagger has an idea that beer is an intoxicating liquor. Our courts in innumerable cases have judicially declared beer to be an intoxicating liquor. I imagine that if you should tell a drunkard, barkeeper or saloon man that beer was non-intoxicating he would laugh in your face.

"Think of the United Brewers' Association of America spending countless thousands of dollars to have beer constitutionally declared a non-intoxicating liquor, when, if it were so in fact every court in the state would be bound, under all existing laws without any constitutional change whatever, to judicially declare it a legal and lawful commodity!"

"John Barleycorn's Rations"

The Seattle Times speaks for a very large proportion of the American people when it enunciates the following sentiments:

"The use of food products in the manufacture of beverages is contrary to the spirit of the legislation that the administration has urgently requested Congress to enact. It is certain that the demands made upon America's supplies during the war will tax its resources to the limit. Even under the most favorable circumstances, it is highly probable that this country will have to 'go on rations' during the winter of 1917-18, if it is to export to the Allies such quantities of foodstuffs as they will require.

"To permit part of this precious, because necessarily limited, supply to be utilized in the production of beverages would be worse than a blunder."

The Times dismisses the subject for the time being with the following pertinent paragraph as to "John Barleycorn's Rations":

"No matter what attitude Congress may assume in an attempt to justify a postponement of prohibition, the fact will remain that continued brewing of beer will involve an annual loss, among other things, of 141,000,000 pounds of rice, 109,000,000 pounds of grits and 650,000,000 pounds of corn or cerealine. These were the figures during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and they will be equaled, possibly surpassed, during the current year."

AT THE NOONTIDE HOUR

At the sacred noontide hour let the white ribboners of the land unite in prayer daily for our country and all other countries, that all may come to see the true Christian and humanitarian point of view in this world crisis; for the protection of "our boys" from the physical and moral deterioration from drink and vice that follow in the wake of war; for our President and his advisers that divine wisdom may rule every decision, that lasting peace may speedily come and the will of the Father of all peoples be done throughout the earth.

The Gain in Sacrifice

THOMAS W. GRAHAM in North American Student

Sacrifice is a new word. The past thirty months have built a new meaning into many familiar words. There is an entirely new content in "pain" and "sorrow." The fellowship of tears is now a much more poignant phrase. We wonder if the world before the war knew "sacrifice" at all. . . . .

One gain of sacrifice is the chance it gives to make something great of life. It was a dim recognition of this fact that led all primitive people to offer sacrifice. Somehow—they did not know just how—they felt that life poured out in blood produced in them some of the high character for which they yearned. It is the Suffering Servant of the New Testament who comes to know most of the spirit. Out of sacrifice Paul comes into possession of that love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, which are the marks of uplifted life.

I shall not soon forget the words of a Canadian recruiting officer. He stood at the corner of the street confessing to a great crowd years of life misspent. He told how the call of the colors had come to him and he had made the first clear decision of his life. He had faced the hazard and had welcomed the chance to serve.

"Some could have said that old Tom was a complete failure. I knew there wasn't much to his life, but there is now. Not since he took the uniform of the King dare any man say that Tom's life is not the equal of the best."

There was in those words the evidence of long neglected resources summoned to effectiveness, of a new grip on life that promised power. The call to sacrifice had produced this familiar result.

Gain is in a growing power to bless others. The word "bless" is derived from the Anglo-Saxon word for blood. The idea of the word is that before you can really bless a fellow creature you must part with your own life or give a part of your life for him. There is much that may be done by little things. Smiles, kind words, cups of cold water have their place. But at the same time if you are to bless a soul in the superlative sense you cannot do it in any such easy way. You have to sprinkle that other soul with your own love. Sacrifice makes possible that sympathy which is essential to great service. That is why the blood of the martyrs has been the seed of the church.

Thus in the growing power of service, in the deepened gravity of thought and in the enlarging effectiveness of life is the gain of sacrifice found.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

July 31—White Ribbon Missionary Day—Birthday of Mary Allen West.
August 3—Fresh Air Mission Day—Birthday of Lady Henry Somerset.
August 28—Birthday of Lucy Webb Hayes.

TRANSPORTATION NOTES

ELLA A. BOOLE, Chairman Transportation

Already inquiries are being received in reference to convention rates for the National W. C. T. U. Convention at Washington, D. C. The New England, the Central and the Trunk Lines Associations have granted a rate of two cents a mile in each direction. Round trip tickets, requiring validation in Washington, will be sold on November 29, 30 and December 1, with final time limit to reach original starting point not later than midnight, December 12, 1917.

These rates will enable members of the National Executive Committee to reach Washington by noon on Friday, and we call attention to the dates for the purchase of tickets as they will only be sold on the three days at the specified rate.

The Western Traffic Association has not granted rates, but we suggest that delegates in that territory purchase tickets to Chicago, Peoria, or St. Louis and then re-buy, taking advantage of the reduced fares authorized therefrom.

Announcements as to special trains or designation of trains so that delegates may travel in company will be made later.

It will be a great event to be in Washington at the opening of Congress. Many conventions will be held about that time. It is not too early even now to begin to plan for the trip. If national prohibition has not already come as the result of the war, let us make this convention so large and so important that its influence will result in the submission of the prohibition amendment.

ALLIED RELIEF WORK FOR LOCAL UNIONS

As World's W. C. T. U. superintendent of the department of Work for Soldiers and Sailors, Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher asks that the following appeal be published in THE UNION SIGNAL:

From the experience gained by operations on many thousand wounded soldiers in England, an American surgeon, recently returned, has asked for a new bandage, and at his request the British War Relief Association has created it, and asks that as many women in America as possible make these bandages and send them to the British War Relief Association, Inc., 542 Fifth Avenue, New York City, N. Y.

This is the description: Take six strips of unbleached muslin or other heavy material, thirty inches long, and four inches wide. For a space of five inches, at the center, overlap each on the other, two inches. Make two rows of stitching across the six bandages holding them together, the rows being five inches apart, and the width of the bandage twelve inches, where stitched. The six ends on each side will be loose.

The bandage is used to slip under a shattered arm or leg, which need only be raised once to let the bandage go beneath it. After the dressings are placed, the loose ends are brought over the arm or leg and pinned into place. In the usual method, a rolled bandage is used, which necessitates lifting the limb many times while dressing. This causes much suffering, especially in the shell wounds that damage the limb so terribly.

I am sure that every one who has made surgical dressings will appreciate what this dressing means and that the overlapping strips are different from the other arm stump or splint bandages made by the various committees.

We have decided to list this new bandage as "The Arm or Leg Many Tailed Bandage."

G. S. MULLINER,
Secretary British War Relief Association.

INDEPENDENCE DAY CELEBRATION OF MONTGOMERY WHITE RIBBONERS

The Montgomery (Ala.) W. C. T. U. took a notable part in the unusually attractive Fourth of July celebration planned by the League for Woman's Service and the chamber of commerce of the city to emphasize particularly woman's part in patriotic and humanitarian enterprises. The float of the Montgomery union, in which the women took great pride, represented Miss Willard standing with open Bible, her arms full of golden sheaves. Around her were grouped twenty-seven girls in white wearing "crusade caps" typifying the twenty-six white states and the District of Columbia. The Flower Mission department was represented by two girls bearing gifts of flowers. Banners and flags completed the decorations of the float. Mrs. J. B. Chatfield, state secretary of the Loyal Temperance Legion branch and superintendent of the department of Prison Reform, impersonated Miss Willard. The local option governor, and his cohorts, had been invited to review the great patriotic pageant, and as the W. C. T. U. float passed them the girls sang with fine effect: "All round the world the ribbon white we'll twine." The Montgomery union also observed Flower Mission day with a service at the penitentiary where five hundred beautiful Dorothy Perkins roses were distributed among the prisoners.

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do You Know the Answers to These Questions? They May Be Found in THE UNION SIGNAL of July 12-19

Ten questions, the answers to which will be found in the preceding number of THE UNION SIGNAL, will appear each week. The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. What remarkable victory for prohibition has occurred during the month of July?
2. Tell the story of the recent conversion of a United States Senator to the cause of prohibition and the tragedy which occasioned his change of heart.
3. Outline the provisions of the Reed "Bone Dry" Amendment as construed by Attorney General Gregory in a circular sent by him to United States attorneys.
4. Give Mr. Hoover's Seven Service Rules for housewives told in rhyme by Mrs. Ella A. Boole.
5. What encouraging evidence of the value of the prohibition law of Kansas to the young manhood of the state has the war brought to light?
6. Explain the financial plan of the New York state W. C. T. U. which has netted approximately $9,000 for local, county and state work.
7. Name incidents of gratifying advance in prohibition legislation in the Mexican states.
8. What action of the Ohio Democrats and the Ohio Republicans points to a prohibition victory at the November election?
9. What immediate action by white ribboners and their friends is being urged by the National W. C. T. U. as best calculated to impress upon the United States Congress the desirability of national wartime prohibition?
10. In what way has the Florida state medical association recently shown that it is up-to-date?

PATRIOTIC ST. ALBANS

The St. Albans (W. Va.) W. C. T. U., of which Mrs. V. E. Mohler is the moving spirit, is participating largely in war relief enterprises. It is planning to send at least $100 to the Ambulance Fund. One thousand paraffine containers and sugar to make the jelly to fill them have been purchased. Already eleven dozen glasses of jelly and a quantity of fruit juice have been shipped to the base hospital at Fort Bliss, Tex. One hundred thumbless bath mits are almost completed and the members are working on the making and filling of 100 comfort bags. For more than two months members of the union have taken turn about in sending lunch to the soldiers doing night guard duty at a bridge in the vicinity of St. Albans.

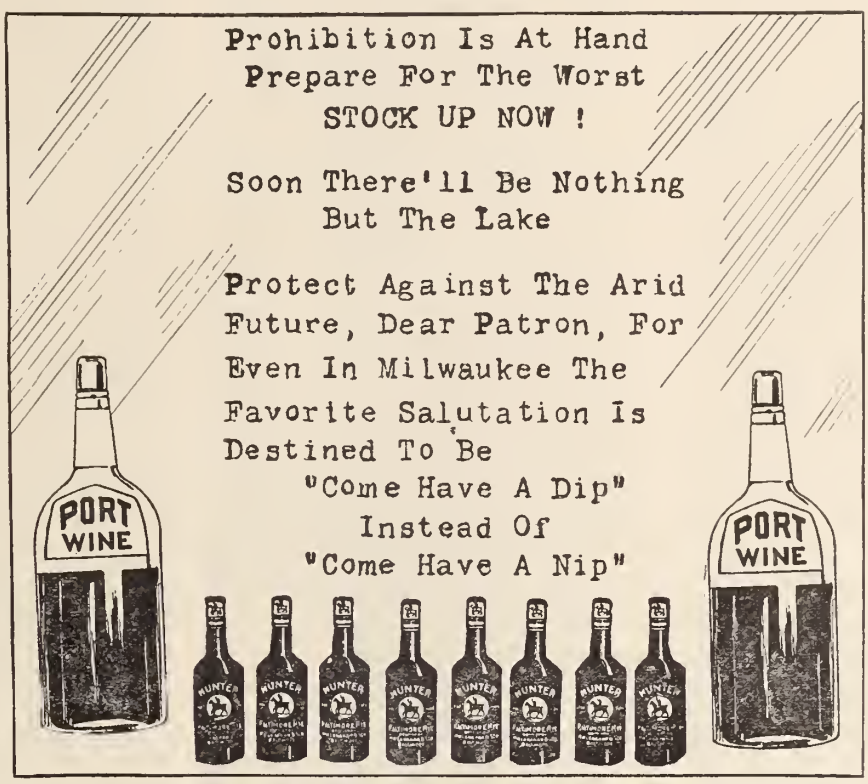
AMBULANCE FUND JOTTINGS

The Beresford W. C. T. U. of South Dakota, a union with only a small membership, sent $80 for the Ambulance Fund.

WHY I BROKE WITH JOHN BARLEYCORN

E. V. LAUGHLIN

I am of Irish-German descent. In my father's home whisky and beer were household necessities. One of my first remembrances is of mother dosing me on warm, sweetened whisky to cure a sudden colic. I remember, also, that on very cold days father always poured out a little brandy for us boys, saying that it would help keep out the cold. In the summer time regularly every Monday morning a keg of beer was put on tap out in the spring house, and the entire family directed to help themselves as they might wish. The fact is we were on extraordinarily good terms with booze—so good in fact that occasional intoxication did not seem to any of us particularly serious. Mother and the older brothers always laughed heartily on those occasions when father drank a little more than he was wont to, and drew to an unusual extent on his fund of witty stories. "Dad's feeling pretty happy," was about all that was said, and we went on about our respective duties with no feeling of disgrace or alarm. Before we boys had reached twenty—there were five of us—we had each been intoxicated more than once. Sam, the oldest, was the only one who drew from father any serious protest. He had gone into church one Sunday evening and disturbed the services by maudlin whispering. When father heard of it he was furiously angry, and told Sam that a man was a fool who couldn't stop drinking when he'd had enough.



In a show window of a Milwaukee saloon recently appeared the warning, "Prohibition is at hand," as pictured above.

It must not be thought that father or mother were disreputable people. On the contrary, they were among the most respected citizens of the community. Time after time, father was elected town supervisor, and he was foremost in every effort for community betterment. He was the chief organizer of the local bank, and for a long time was its president. He never failed to give something to the church, and numerous were his quiet deeds of charity. I remember that he hired old half-blind Ben Stubbs day after day to do work that we boys could have done without any effort. For the prohibitionists he had no toleration, for he regarded their claims as utterly impractical. "People always have drank," he remarked to me once, "and always will." But for the person who drank to excess he had no apology. "A little won't do anybody any harm," I've heard him say repeatedly: "it's the fellows who never know when to quit that make fools of themselves." Such was father's temperance philosophy.

Father passed away in his fiftieth year as the result of a mild spell of typhoid. "Not a very strong constitution—exposed himself too much on the farm," was the physician's explanation of his failure to pull through. His death meant the breaking up of the home, except that it was arranged that Sam was to stay on the farm and operate it for mother. As for myself I had practically perfected my plans to go west, when I was approached by Patrick Hines, the political boss of the village nearby, who confided to me that the time was ripe to vote a saloon on the community. "We soaked them on taxes this year, and didn't give them anything to show for it all," he chuckled. "Them bonds are coming due next fall, and they'll want the license money to help pay with," he added knowingly. "Mighty good thing when Jim"—a wet alderman—"put that deal across. There's plenty of money to run a saloon on if we can get it voted. If you're a good boy"—and here Pat winked suggestively—"we're going to put you in charge. There's a hundred fifty a month in it. Talk it up with the boys all you can."

The prospect of an easy job was very alluring; besides I had no scruples about asking my friends to vote for a saloon for it looked to me like a very commendable business. I knew, of course, that some people in the community were bitterly opposed to such places, but I thought they were merely an unreasonable, cranky set who would oppose anything having a bit of real life in it. I looked upon them, in other words, as a set of sissies with possibly a yellow streak in them. In view of all this I quietly talked license to all my friends, and because I was regarded as a pretty square fellow, turned over a dozen indifferent votes to the saloon cause. When the votes were counted it was found that license had carried by a majority of eight. Pat Hines and Alderman Jim patted me on the shoulder and said that I had done them a good job, and that I'd get what was coming to me—a promise that later was faithfully fulfilled.

When I took my place behind the bar of Dorkey's place—the license was issued in the name of the brewery's agent—I felt no pangs of conscience, nor had the slightest inclination to wish things otherwise. I did not feel that I was engaging in a business that meant harm to anyone. After a fashion I pitied those who were prone to drink to excess, and mentally characterized them as fools, as my father had done before me. I knew that a great deal of money would be spent that ought to go to the support of wives and children, but I reasoned that it would probably be fooled away anyway and that the saloon might as well have it. In all honesty I did not wish anyone to suffer poverty or come to grief through the presence of the saloon. My candid opinion is that ninety out of every hundred dispensers of liquor over the bar are quite human in their sympathies for unfortunates. Nevertheless, not many of them will admit that the system is wrong—that the state ought to render less possible the creation of such conditions. Invariably saloonkeepers and bartenders attribute the fault to an individual's lack of self control; the down-and-out drunkard is almost always described as a fellow who doesn't have backbone enough to straighten up.

As a matter of course the licensing of a saloon in the village awakened a great deal of criticism and antagonism on the part of the church folks. Pat Hines, Jim, the alderman, and I were the subjects of a perfect flood of condemnation; and it came to our ears also that in the prayer meetings not a few were the divine appeals that we might see the error of our ways. The latter caused a somewhat unpleasant inner feeling—a wish that my opponents might be content to make it a flesh and-blood affair. I have since analyzed this spark of conscientiousness as being due to several years of random attendance upon Sunday school service during my middle teens, due to the unceasing pleas of a good elderly woman, Aunt Sallie Gates, who defended me when as a stripling I was being bulldozed by the town lads, and for whom I maintained a sincere regard. For the general flood of condemnation I cared very little; in fact the effect was to make me fighting obstinate. My attitude was one of complaisant self-satisfaction: My business was legal; I observed the laws and town ordinances to the letter; folks who didn't drink were not asked to do so. Mentally I labeled the opposition a lot of "butinskies"—meddlers with the rights of honest business and personal liberty. "If a fellow wants to drink why hasn't he a perfect right," I reasoned to myself; "and so long as he doesn't get drunk and disturb the peace whose business is it?" Pat and Jim sided with me when behind closed doors we discussed the drift of public sentiment, and prepared our plans to vote license when next the question came up at an election. "You're level headed all right when it comes to the rights of the public," Pat said approvingly, while Jim nodded acquiescence.

The saloon had been running nearly a year before I received my first really severe jolt. One busy Saturday evening Aunt Sallie Gates entered, and with tears in her eyes, marched straight to me, and in a voice which trembled said: "Eddie, I want you to quit this wicked business" —those were her exact words—"Don't you know you're helping to send our boys and young men to perdition as fast as they can go. How much I loved you when you used to come to my Sunday-school class; O Eddie, how can you—why do you—sell this damnable stuff? Didn't I teach you that no person should put drink to another's lips either for gain or through friendship? Oh, my dear boy, I want you to quit it while there is time."

(Continued on Page Twelve)

WHY I BROKE WITH JOHN BARLEYCORN

(Continued from Page Eleven)

"Making People Believe"

While Aunt Sallie was pleading with me I could only hide my face in silent shame. I was not at all angry with her for I knew that all she said came from the depths of her heart; but when a stranger, thinking no doubt to win my favor, remarked in a patronizing tone: "Some bossy old dame! Believe me, if I'd been you I'd not have taken any of her gaff," my anger blazed hotly, and with one bound I reached the fellow's side and threw him headlong into the street—an act that shortly after cost me fifty dollars and costs. In addition my superiors hauled me severely over the coals reminding me that nothing would discredit a saloon more than to have it get the name of being a rough-house joint. I quote two sentences from a letter received from the brewing company which was practically the owner of the saloon: "As a bartender you must be clean, polite, courteous, unmindful of rude or unseemly remarks on the part of customers. Be sure that you never become angry and above all things never assault a customer even though he abuses you; call the police or other officers of the law. And remember always that the continuance of our business depends upon making people believe that it is strictly moral and law-abiding." I read and re-read this letter, pondering long over the clause making people believe. Whether the brewery official had intended to convey to me a delicate hint as to the genuineness of their motives, or had chanced inadvertently, through haste in dictation, to reveal his own attitude of mind, I could not decide. In either case I was shocked at the discovery that the liquor chiefs were insincere in their repeated declamations against the infringement of personal rights. Prior to this I had quite faithfully believed that a great, economic industry was being endangered through the hostility of a misguided set of reformers. I had read with avidity all the pamphlets that reached the saloon —and there were many of them—dealing with the commercial features of the manufacture of liquors, all seeking to prove that countless people were benefited through the existence of the industry. These I accepted as the work of learned students of the subject of economics, and I could not understand how sane people could advocate the discontinuance of an industry that added so largely to the wealth of the world. The chance expression making people believe was the entering wedge of doubt that left me slightly unsettled in mind as to the integrity of the economic claims.

Learns of Publicity Methods of "The Trade"

The suspicions that had been aroused were strengthened and practically confirmed several months later on the occasion of a visit to the headquarters of the brewing company with which we dealt. The secretary personally was showing me through the large establishment. In an elaborate office close to his own was seated a young man vigorously operating a typewriter. "Our publicity agent," the secretary volunteered. "Just now he is engaged in getting out a series of leaflets on 'Why the Laboring Man Should Drink Beer'"; and in conversation with the young fellow I learned that he was the author of a pamphlet, "The Farmer Should Vote for the Sustaining of the Brewing Industry," that I had been instrumental in circulating widely in my home community, and which I knew had not been without effect. "Yes, I wrote that circular," he admitted when I spoke approvingly of it. "Dope that touches the pocket-book of the country folks goes pretty well with them." To say the least I was interested. Visions of grey-haired professors soberly tabulating economic facts, debating and weighing the same in the light of truth and justice, went a-glimmering; and when the young man confidingly admitted to me that he had left the newspaper work for this form of publicity management because it offered much bigger pay, the scales dropped from my eyes and I realized that the printed material I had sworn by was prepared merely by shrewd writers for the purpose of influencing a gullible public. My informant probably noticed the shade of disapproval that flitted across my face, and adroitly managed to add: "Our business —your business, too—is being attacked vigorously by church and anti-liquor people, and our only chance of defeating prohibition is to make the people believe that their pocket-books are going to be dipped into. This is our only show of keeping going. Of course it costs money. This department spent $250,000 last year alone."

"THE BEER THAT MADE MILWAUKEE FAMOUS"

"It made Milwaukee famous," was the legend flaunting there,
O'er the dramshop on the corner, underneath the arc-light's glare,
And I thought of soaring tax rates, and improvements overdue,
Of paupers quite too numerous, and pavements quite too few;
Of failures of the merchants who were caught by liquor's lure—
It made Milwaukee famous, but it made our city poor.
It made Milwaukee famous, but that fame cannot repay
Our people's toll of broken lives that went the liquor way;
For the peril of our children, who are ever on the brink
Of temptations that are fostered by the deadly demon, drink;
For faces pinched with hunger and bodies thinly clad—
It made Milwaukee famous, but it made our mothers sad.
It made Milwaukee famous, but who would own a fame
Whose price is untold suffering and poverty and shame
But if 'tis thought this monstrous price is only right, why then,
How heavy must the bosoms be of all Milwaukee men!
For we're sending into exile, and sending it to stay,
What made Milwaukee famous, in a most infamous way.

—Tom English in Pioneer.

The reader may think it peculiar that a bartender should have been disturbed over the discovery that the publicity end of the liquor business was a snare and a delusion, that the so-called scientific truths, good-health hints, pure product claims, along with the economic assertions that thousands were being benefited by the manufacture of alcoholic products, were prepared by skillful writers who had sold their talent for this purpose. Nevertheless, I could not get away from certain fundamental principles that Aunt Sallie Gates had hammered home during the Sunday school lessons, and which father had emphasized from time to time when wrought up over some attempted trickery. "Be square, Eddie, be square," I recall as his most repeated assertion; and I remember that on the day when I was twenty-one he talked with me quite seriously on this same matter. "Don't trick people, or make claims that are not true, or pretend a thing is something when it isn't," he asserted with emphasis. "In the long run you'll win out by being straight in all you do and say. People have no use for a liar after they find him out." In this way my father, blunt and emphatic at times, honest to a penny, true to his friends, although a victim to racial freedom in the use of alcohol, taught me one of the truest lessons of life. All honor to my father! He never was guilty of a single act of trickery.

Although I had received an insight into certain phases of the liquor business that I detested, nevertheless I was not prepared to denounce the entire system. I salved my conscience by remembering that all great businesses were reputed to be guilty of deeds not sanctioned by moral law. The tactics, I reasoned, were quite parallel to those employed by the great political parties, or at least reputed to be employed by them. The result was that though I ceased to distribute printed matter defending the saloon and its interests, I remained fully loyal to the general principle that an individual had a right to use liquor if he so desired.

Pat and Jim were astute politicians. Through their efforts the saloon was voted in year after year until it practically became a fixture. Gradually the opposition ceased until there was very little contest. The people of the village seemed to have reached an apathetic attitude of mind in regard to the effect of the saloon upon the community—the attitude characteristic of a farmer who has carried a mortgage for a score of years and gives up all hope of ever paying it off. I remained in charge as manager and dispenser. In addition to my monthly check of two hundred dollars—my salary was increased during my second year—I received always at Christmas time a check for $1,000 from the brewing company, with the brief statement: "A Christmas gift for faithful service." My bank account had grown until it had assumed very generous proportions, and various fortunate investments had further tended to increase it. I never drank to excess, though I always took a morning toddy on opening the saloon, and an evening one on retiring. I drank more or less beer, but never to the extent that I became intoxicated. I knew that a majority of the people of the community regarded me as a bad man, but that did not disturb me particularly for I had reached an attitude of general indifference to public opinion.

The effects of saloons in a community are never immediate. Often several years must elapse before the harm they do is apparent; and in a similar manner the effects are slow in disappearing. The taste for liquor does not seize upon people in a few days or a few months; time is necessary to establish the thirst that only King Alcohol can quench. My observation as a bartender is that not many men naturally care for alcohol in any form; invariably the appetite is acquired by enforced participation in the saloon or by being with a group of jolly fellows. Frequently have I seen young men turn away in disgust from their first glass of beer or whisky. Ashamed to admit that the taste was nauseating, I have heard them bravely proclaim that it was "bully good stuff," a falsehood as all the old fellows admitted by sly winks at one another. Of one thing am I firmly convinced: The crop of new drinkers, the drunkards and bums of the future, would grow less and less each year if there were not saloons and near-saloons in which the taste for liquor is formed by repeated drinking. Blind tigers and other illicit places of sale often outwardly magnify the drink evil through bringing intoxication immediately under the public eye; but as

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

DON'S SHOPPING EXPEDITION

EDNA SAXE

"Oh, mother, isn't this shoe store where Riley's old saloon used to be? Let's get my shoes here and see what kind of a store a saloon makes." Don was going to the country and he had come down town with his mother on a shopping expedition.

Before Mrs. Leroy could protest Don was leading the way into the transformed saloon whose walls were now lined from ceiling to floor with shoe boxes.

"Look, mother, see that poor woman with the baby and the two boys," whispered Don. "She told the clerk that she wanted shoes for both the boys and the baby. My, but they surely need them. That shoe one of the boys has just taken off has no sole at all."

"Say, mother, them's some shoes," Don heard the younger boy exclaim excitedly as a clerk tried a pair of shiny new shoes on his brother. "Just think, if this was still Riley's saloon we couldn't have new shoes, for dad would still be spending his wages for beer. Now Henry can have shoes, and I can have shoes, and baby can have shoes. You need some, too, mother. Are you going to get you some shoes, today?" Don felt so glad when the tired looking little woman nodded in the affirmative.

"Look there, mother," Don leaned toward his mother and spoke in a low tone. "There by the door. See the poor man and the little girl?"

Don caught the man's eyes and smiled encouragingly. "How do you do," he inquired politely as the man stood looking at him. "It's a nice day, isn't it?"

"I buy my liddle Stell some shoes, some fine, fine shoes," exulted the man in reply, his face lighting up with pleasure as he glanced at the little girl.

"That's probably the first pair of new shoes that child ever had in her life," the sympathetic clerk nodded in the direction of the pair to whom Don had been talking. "The father no doubt drank up his money when the saloons were open and never gave his child's clothes a thought."

Mrs. Leroy's next errand was to the bank, and as she and Don stood in the long row waiting to get to the window the boy overheard two men in conversation. "Yes, it is marvelous," said one. "I voted against prohibition, thought sure it would ruin business. I was wrong, I can see that now. The law has only been in effect four weeks and already business is greatly improved. The first week of prohibition two hundred new savings accounts were opened and bank business has increased every week since."

"Did you hear that, mother?" Don inquired excitedly of his mother. "It seems like everywhere today we are seeing and hearing something about prohibition."

As they left the bank Don stopped before a store window which contained a display of boys' khaki soldier suits. While he was loudly admiring them, two men paused beside him for a moment before entering the store. "Sure, me bye, it's from O'Shaugnessy oi'll be gettin' me new suit," said one of them. "Didn't he have his saloon on this viry spot, and ain't he atryin' to sell clothes for an honest livin'. It's meself as will be buyin' from him now as wouldn't when he sold nothin' but booze."

"Oh, mother, this must have been a saloon, too. Let's get my things here. Won't you buy me one of those suits?" Don was already halfway in and a genial faced Irishman was hastening forward. "Shure, ma'm," he told Mrs. Leroy, for he talked volubly as he brought forward garments for their inspection, "it does my heart good to be selling things for the childer instead of keeping a saloon. I used to say to the missus often as how I'd be quitting the business, but I put it off and prohibition just took me joh away. It's a blessed change, the clothing business, and I says the same over and over again. Yes, mum, shure the business is payin'. It's money aplenty I'm makin', more than ever I did with the saloon."

"Look, mother, that boy there looks like Stan Sullivan who used to live in the shanty by the river. Isn't he fixed up, though!" Don and his mother were waiting for the car to take them home. Maybe it was telepathy, but the boy of the new clothes turned and faced them, a roguish smile showing through freckles and tan. "It is Stan," exclaimed Don, as the former, with a shrill "hello," dashed across the street.

"How nice you look, Stan," commented Mrs. Leroy at the first pause in the boys' eager conversation.

"Yes'm, they are nice, these clothes. Dad got them for me. The first day the saloons were closed father came home sober. You never saw my father when he was sober, did you?" the boy inquired eagerly of Mrs. Leroy. "Since prohibition he's the finest father in the world. The first night after the saloons closed we all thought we must be dreaming and we kept watching every minute for fear he'd do something to us. The second night he came home sober again. By the third night Baby Bess could hardly wait until dad got home, and he had her on his shoulder every minute. Payday he took us all downtown and bought us all new togs, Bess, and Peter and Lou and me and mother. Say, we've got the finest father in the city."

"Three cheers for prohibition!" cried Don. "What's the matter with prohibition?" "It's all right," chimed in Stan. "Hurray," shouted the two happy boys.

WHY I BROKE WITH JOHN BARLEYCORN

(Continued from Page Twelve)

for creating a crop of new drinkers their influence is immeasurably less than that of the legalized saloons. While I enforced very rigidly the laws against selling to minors, I was aware that in devious ways liquor found its way out to fellows nineteen and twenty years old—young men who had just reached that age in which insubordination to law looked manly. Human nature is such that few individuals calmly submit to class or age prohibitions. Few red-blooded boys admit that their elders justly have the right to enter a saloon when they are denied. The fact that these prohibitions exist without doubt whets the desires of a majority of boys to see behind the scenes, and taste that which is forbidden. I am assured in my own mind that the restrictions that are intended to save the youth from entering the downward way only act as spurs to entice him on. Now that I am convinced that permitting the sale of alcohol is a great economic mistake I sometimes wonder why the public tolerates the evil. But of this I will have more to say later.

Crop of Economic Failures Began to Ripen

It was during my eighth year as manager of Dorkey's place that I became keenly aware that the saloon was beginning to ripen its crop of economic failures. The instance of Sam Burns brought this home to me. Sam was a carpenter, about my age, a splendid workman. Like many others he had formed the habit of stopping in every morning on his way to work for a toddy or a glass of beer. After this had gone on for four or five years Sam began to lose his grip on the community. People said he could no longer be depended upon; besides that he was irregular in attending to his work, prone to drop his tools at any moment he took the notion. As his business fell away he took to hanging around the saloon; naturally his appetite increased, and he became a burden on my hands. One evening, at closing up time, something moved me to speak to him about straightening up. "Cut out booze, you say," he howled at me, "why, you scoundrel, you're the cause of my being here. What did you make me vote for the saloon in the first place for?"

His accusation cut me to the quick. I looked at him. Could it be that I had produced this drunken, ragged hum, this man that otherwise might be a success in life. I remembered that it was but too true he had voted for the saloon to please me, and that his taste for liquor was formed over my bar. For hours I pondered the worth-while of it all. Sincerely I regretted that Sam was down and out, for we had been chums together.

That same night Sam Burns failed to reach home. When he was discovered next morning both hands were so badly frozen that they had to be amputated. That was ten years ago. During this time Sam has been a charge upon the county. The expense of his keep has been five hundred dollars a year. This one individual has cost the county half of all the license money received during the ten years that the saloon legally existed in the community. In the dead hours of night, when the forces of argument hurn low and conscience prods us for our misdeeds, I toss and turn whenever I think of Sam Burns and my share in his wrecking.

Sam's case was but the first of many that followed in rapid succession. The saloon had sown its seed of ruin, disaster, sorrow, crime, suffering, in a fertile soil. Two or three weeks later Benny Higgs, a mother's only support, while intoxicated with liquor purchased over my bar, attempted to hoard a train and lost both legs. Five young men, the sons of good families, committed a burglary and were sentenced to the penitentiary. The father of one of the young men, while temporarily crazed over the disgrace, attempted to shoot me; and while I secured police protection I was aware that I had no large measure of sympathy. I could see that the finger of the community was pointed against me, that I was regarded as being the real source of the distress that had come upon them. I chanced one day to hear a remark not intended for my ears in which the public estimate of myself was revealed: "That fiend, Eddie, ought to be hanged; for his paltry salary he'd ruin the whole community. The whisky crowd has got him body and soul. Some of these days they'll kick him out; it will be good enough for the brute, too."

I think it must have been the statement that I was owned by the whisky crowd that stirred me within, for I had always prided myself that I was an independent fellow, running at the heck and call of no one. I think it was largely this self-judgment of myself that had held me to my conceptions of the right and wrong of the saloon business, for I had all along thought of the drinker as one who braved the conventions of society and did what he wanted to, regardless of consequences. Could it be, was it possible, I meditated, that I had been a fool and a dupe during all the years that I had been passing liquor across the bar? Had I been but a tool in the hands of forces that cared not for me or the people? The more the possibility of such a thing seemed true, the madder I got. I resolved then and there I'd find out in some way if my suspicions were correct. In a flash it came to me that Judge Graham—the man who accidentally had stirred up this dispute within me—would be just the person to set me right if I went to him in a spirit of candor. I knew that he was only nominally a church member, and that he invariably voted without any consideration of prohibition; I further knew that he was considered a fair and square thinker, and a man well-versed in practical politics and economics. Intuitively I felt that from him I would receive an unbiased judgment as to the ethics of the liquor industry, though I remembered, of course, that his statement about me had been extremely condemnatory.

(Continued on Page Fourteen)

WHY I BROKE WITH JOHN BARLEYCORN

(Continued from Page Thirteen)

It was midnight when I knocked at Judge Graham's door—he always sat up late—and without waste of time explained why I was there and what I wanted. Though the judge at first regarded me with manifest suspicion he warmed up after he became convinced that I was a sincere seeker after truth, and in a kindly, scholarly manner explained the status of the liquor industry just as he saw it. It was quickly evident that the jurist had delved deep into the facts and figures underlying the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages. He brought before me in a clear-cut, bird's-eye fashion the economic conditions that have sustained and developed the traffic to its present gigantic proportions. Alcoholic liquor, in an ancient and pioneer day, he reminded me, aided people to temporarily forget the extreme hardships of living; at a later date it furnished governments a convenient and ready means of providing revenue, and in that way established itself firmly as an institution. The capital now tied up in its manufacture has increased to immense proportions and the amount of money expended for liquor in various forms exceeds that spent for food, clothing, and education. He explained why those who have money invested in breweries and distilleries will fight to the bitter end to keep legalized the manufacture and sale of their products. "Eddie," the judge remarked soberly, "you are a cog in the machinery by which an injurious and uneconomic industry is perpetuated. Like thousands of your kind you are unaware that mankind is seriously endangered through the business that you follow. You have deluded yourself into thinking that human rights are sustained through giving people the right to partake of that which makes them less fit to render industrial and social service. With honest intentions towards your fellowmen you have been a party to the greatest, most far-reaching economic crime ever perpetrated—a crime compared with which war pales into insignificance."

"Eddie" Becomes Deadly Enemy of Booze

We talked into the wee hours of the morning. Just as the first pale blushes of red were lightening the east, I departed for my home, clothed in my right mind. From that hour I have been the deadly enemy of booze. The money piled up in ten years of tending bar is being expended in undoing the wrong that lies at my door. But the sight of helpless Sam Burns, legless Benny Higgs, haggard fathers and mothers, reminds me that no amount of repentance will undo certain wrongs. In the silent hours of the night I roll and toss. How I wish I had never made the acquaintance of John Barleycorn.

A GIFT

that will be prized by any white ribboner is the

DAINTY BOW PIN

Made of gold and set with thirty pearls.
(Size ¾ inch.)
Price, postpaid, $3.50.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

HOW TO ADDRESS MAIL TO OUR SOLDIERS IN THIS COUNTRY AND ABROAD

We are frequently asked how to address mail to enlisted men at the various camp sites. The following information is taken from bulletins issued by the Post Office Department at Washington:

There will be established a military branch post office at each of the thirty-two cantonments in the United States listed herein. This branch office at the camp will be a branch of the nearest large post office. For example, there is to be a cantonment at Ayer, Mass. The post office at Ayer, of course, is small and could not handle the mail, therefore the military post office will be a branch of the Lowell post office. This plan is being worked out by the post office department, but the list of branch post offices cannot be furnished for at least one month. In the meantime specific directions should be given to have letters addressed to soldiers (full name and company and regiment if possible) always using words "Military Camp." If a letter were to be sent to the cantonment at Ayer, Mass., "Military Camp" should be a part of the address. This insures its going via Lowell and being promptly delivered.

To reach our soldiers abroad the Post Office Department issues the following instructions:

"Letters, post cards and printed matter originating in the United States or any of its possessions for transmission to the United States Expeditionary Forces in Europe are subject to the United States domestic classification, conditions and rates of postage.

"Mail addressed to members of the Expeditionary Forces should bear the complete designation of the division, regiment, company and organization to which the addressee belongs, as well as the name and address of the sender, and be fully prepaid by postage stamps affixed. Patrons should be instructed under no circumstances to attempt to designate on the addressed envelope the location of the unit. The correct manner of addressing such a letter would be as follows:

Return to
Mrs. JOHN SMITH,
——— Blank Street,
New York City.

Stamp

JOHN SMITH, JR.,
Co. X, ——— Infantry,
American Expeditionary Forces.

"Postmasters shall forward all mail matter addressed 'American Expeditionary Forces' to New York."

Mailable merchandise may be sent by parcel post to France, according to U. S. Post Office regulations. The postage rate is uniform at 12 cents a pound or fraction of a pound, which must be prepaid IN FULL. A parcel must not weigh more than 11 pounds nor measure more than 3 feet 6 inches in length or 6 feet in length and girth combined nor contain matter prohibited in the domestic mails. Provided they are properly packed, fatty substances, liquids and those which easily liquefy, confections and pastes, may, if not otherwise unmailable, be sent in the parcel post mails.

The Post Office Department has also made provision whereby magazines can be forwarded, at a cost of only one cent to the sender, to United States troops in Europe. Place a one cent stamp on the cover of the magazine, no matter how much it weighs, and hand it to any postal employe. This mailing privilege is extended to readers, not to publishers.

Magazines, to be accepted for mailing, under this order must have printed in the upper right hand corner of the front cover the following:

"NOTICE TO READER: When you finish reading this magazine place a 1 cent stamp on this notice, hand same to any postal employe and it will be placed in the hands of our soldiers or sailors at the front. NO WRAPPING. NO ADDRESS.

"A. S. BURLESON,
"Postmaster General."

Postmasters will be given instructions from time to time as to the manner of forwarding such magazines.

REVISED LIST OF CAMPS

The camps for the national army will be as follows:

Ayer, Mass., first division, comprising the New England States.

Yaphank, South Haven, L. I., second division, Congressional districts Nos. 1 to 26, comprising Long Island, New York City and a small territory immediately north of New York City.

Wrightstown, N. J., third division, comprising the remainder of New York State and the northern tier of Pennsylvania counties.

Annapolis Junction, Md., fourth division, the remainder of Pennsylvania, which includes Philadelphia and Pittsburgh.

Petersburg, Va., fifth division, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

Columbia, S. C., sixth division, North Carolina, South Carolina and Tennessee.

Atlanta, Ga., seventh division, Georgia, Alabama and Florida.

Chillicothe, Ohio, eighth division, comprised of Ohio state troops.

Louisville, Ky., ninth division, Indiana and Kentucky.

Rockford, Ill., tenth division, Illinois state troops.

Battle Creek, Mich., eleventh division, Michigan and Wisconsin.

Little Rock, Ark., twelfth division, Arkansas, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Des Moines, Iowa, thirteenth division, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, North and South Dakota.

Fort Riley, Kans., fourteenth division, Missouri, Kansas and Colorado.

Fort Sam Houston, Tex., fifteenth division, Oklahoma and Texas.

American Lake, Wash., sixteenth division, Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada, Utah, Wyoming, Arizona and New Mexico.

In addition to these cantonments, six camp sites for the tented camps of the national guard have been located at Fort Worth, Texas; Waco, Texas; Houston, Texas; Fort Sill, Oklahoma; Deming, N. M., and Linda Vista, Calif. Ten more of these camps are yet to be located in the southern and southeastern departments.

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

¶We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.
¶Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
118-120 Fifth Ave., New York
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Prohibition and the War

From The Outlook

The United States is at war. A nation at war is like a crew in an open boat far out at sea.

The first duty of such a crew is to win its way to safety. If tearing the shirts off the backs of the crew, patching up a sail, and using the oars for a jury mast will best speed the boat to shore, that is what must be done.

If leaving the shirts untouched to protect the crew from the cold and rowing with the oars will bring the boat more quickly to safety, then no other method need be discussed.

When the crew reaches shore, it can sit down at its leisure and discuss the abstract advantages of sail power and oar power—but not before.

In just this spirit the country should approach the present question of adopting National prohibition.

Will National prohibition save enough foodstuffs to help us to win the war?

Professor Irving Fisher tells us that it will save 11,000,000 loaves of bread a day. The brewers themselves admit that they use one per cent of the food products of the country, and one per cent of the food products of the country means enough food to feed a million people for a year. Mr. Hoover tells us that by the abolishing of beer alone "we can save from fifty to sixty million bushels of grain, ... and that grain is of the utmost value to our allies."

Will National prohibition help us to protect the health and morals of our soldiers and of our civil population? Apparently the War Department thinks so, because it has asked and received from Congress the power to prohibit the sale of liquor to men in uniform. The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America believes that it will, for it is working for prohibition to the best of its ability. The National Conference of Charities and Correction recently violated its custom of passing no resolution on a controverted subject by adopting a declaration favoring "the absolute prohibition of the manufacture, importation and sale of intoxicating beverages during the war and for at least one year thereafter."

Literature and Supplies for Comfort Bags

LITERATURE

Testament, special khaki cloth cover. Price, 18 cents.

Testament. Price, 12 cents.

"Home Hymns," a collection of hymns set to familiar tunes. Price, 3 cents each; per fifty, 60 cents; per hundred, $1.00.

Soldiers' and Sailors' Songster. Price, 7 cents.

Coupon Pledge Card, printed in blue with flag in colors. Price, per hundred, 35 cents.

"A Friendly Word to Young Men," by Richmond Pearson Hobson of Merrimac fame. Printed in blue, with flag in colors. Price, 2 cents each; per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents.

"Letter from Mother." Facsimile letter with W. C. T. U. monogram and flag in colors, printed in blue. Price, 3 cents each; per fifty, 25 cents; per hundred, 40 cents.

Envelope for letter, with W. C. T. U. monogram. Price, per fifty, 25 cents; per hundred, 40 cents.

"Letter from Mother," with envelope. Price, 5 cents; per hundred, 75 cents.

Protecting the Home Folks (a warning against vice). Each, 2 cents; 50, 25 cents; 100, 40 cents.

"What God Says to His Soldiers." A unique arrangement of Scripture texts under subjects: Reveille—Roll Call—Attention — Quick March—Halt—etc. Printed on card 4¼x2¾, a convenient size to slip into a Testament, with flag in colors and texts printed in blue. Price, 2 cents each; per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 30 cents.

Directions for Comfort Bags. Price, 2 cents each; per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred, 25 cents.

(When ordering, please state whether directions are wanted for comfort bags for soldiers or sailors.)

SUPPLIES

Metal mirrors, 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.75.

Scissors, 15 cents a pair; per dozen, $1.50.

Two-inch gauze sealed bandage, 10 cents net.

One-inch adhesive tape, 10 cents; per dozen, $1.00.

Prices subject to change without notice.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

The Magnificent Steel Steamship "Minnesota" to BUFFALO (NIAGARA FALLS) and RETURN $40 Including Meals and berth

via Charlevoix, Harbor Springs and historic Mackinac Island, stopping at Detroit and viewing both ways by daylight the beautiful scenery of the Detroit River and St. Clair Flats, stopping at all points of interest. Nine-hour stop at Buffalo allows plenty of time to see Niagara Falls. One way $25, including berth and meals. During season leaves Chicago Saturdays 1:30 p. m.

The Elegant Steel Steamship "Missouri" to SAULT STE. MARIE and RETURN $27.50 Including Meals and Berth

via Charlevoix, Petoskey, Harbor Spgs & Mackinac Island—running the "Soo" River by daylight, returning via a portion of Georgian Bay and the scenic Grand Traverse Bay, stopping at all points of interest. One Way $14, including meals & berth. During season leaves Chicago Mondays 4:00 p. m. S. S. "Missouri" also makes a special trip each week to Onekama, Frankfort, Glen Haven and Glen Arbor, leaving Chicago Saturdays at 4:00 p. m.

Our line of steamers offers you the greatest possible opportunity for real rest and genuine pleasure.

The Elegant Steel Steamships
MINNESOTA, MISSOURI, MANITOU, ILLINOIS

offer unrivaled service between Chicago, Charlevoix, Petoskey, Bay View, Harbor Springs, Mackinac Island, Ludington, Manistee, Onekama, Frankfort, GlenHaven, GlenArbor, Leland (via auto or connecting steamer from Glen Haven), and Traverse Bay ports, Sault Ste. Marie, Detroit and Buffalo, connecting with all lines for Lake Superior and Eastern Points. Book of tours and folder mailed on request.

Northern Michigan Transportation Co.
J. C. CONLEY, Gen. Pass. Agt., New Municipal Pier (East End Grand Ave.,) Chicago, Ill.

The "Bone Dry" Law at Work in Tennessee

Special Correspondence

Tennessee's "bone dry" law, which has been declared constitutional by a Nashville judge, is fastening its fangs, indiscriminately and relentlessly, upon would-be violators. Never before has old booze had so slight a foothold in the state. Most of those attempting to aid him and his colleagues are fifth-rate negroes and illiterate whites. However, one prominent official in the capital city winked at such, and his official head was taken off by the ouster law. It is "good-by booze," in Tennessee.

The birthday of Silena Moore Holman, July 9, is a Red Letter day in Tennessee, and is known as Membership day. By common consent the unions all over the state this year observed the month of June as membership month, with the first nine days of July thrown in for good measure. Special effort was put forth to secure new members and collect dues of old members. There is every indication that it was generally and successfully observed. One union, New Market, in a town of some 500 inhabitants, in Jefferson county, has gained thirty-one new members so far this year. Many of the unions put on a "double-barreled win-one campaign," every member endeavoring to win another, and each union putting forth every effort to organize another union. July 9 was celebrated in various ways. Some of the unions held temperance rallies in the evening, others gave temperance receptions, while two unions at least, united in a beautiful temperance picnic.

Along other lines of W. C. T. U. endeavor, Knox county, with such leading spirits as Mrs. Estella M. Knox, state corresponding secretary, Mrs. Mary C. Baker, the veteran editor of the Open Door, and Mrs. J. H. Sensabaugh, county president, has done excellent work during the past several months. These good women, with others, have been untiring in their efforts to promote the best interests of the W. C. T. U. Especially have they excelled in S. T. I. work. Of the boys thus vitally reached, two are going to the front as Y. M. C. A. secretaries. One young prize-winner, W. O. Lane, is taking officers' training at Fort Oglethorp. One of the contestants in Knoxville College (for colored people) was a native African. And so the good work reaches out and its circle widens.

Tennessee expects to have some good reports at the state convention which meets in October at Bristol. This picturesque little city is in the extreme eastern part of the state. In fact half of it is claimed by the Virginia W. C. T. U., and half of it by Tennessee. We are hoping to have a good many of our Virginia sisters present at our convention, where a cordial welcome awaits all.

PROHIBITION FANS

make useful souvenirs for distribution in fairs and other open air meetings.

An attractive fan in flag blue, with the slogan

PROTECT OUR AMERICAN YOUTH BY PROHIBITING THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

on one side, and upon the reserve side the map showing the dry states.

Place these in churches, send to the hospitals, and keep a liberal supply on your porch.

Spread the story of prohibition progress by the generous use of these fans.

Price, per dozen, 25 cents; per hundred, $2.00; per five-hundred, $8.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year
Club rate for ten or more subscriptions, 25c a year
No other premium allowed.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . $1.52 a year (6s. 3d.)
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . . . .
. . . . . 47c a year (1s. 12d.)
THE YOUNG CRUSADER, 37c a year (1s. 6d.)
Address Evanston, Ill.

"Do Your Bit"

VIDA THOMPSON, Manager Circulation Department

Perhaps some of you have seen in a newspaper recently, an article telling of an interview with a man who has been in France for some years, working in the aviation corps, and who has the reputation of being quite a thinker. He makes the statement that whether we wish it or not, American life is bound to be revolutionized after the war,—that men will be "broader-minded" along moral lines, that "Puritanism will be a thing of the past"—and so on. In other words, morality will be at a lower ebb.

Can this be so? Do we want it? Does not such a statement constitute a real call for us to guard against laxness of morals as a result of the war? We must both work and pray, and one way of working is to furnish good reading material for the soldiers, which will help to strengthen the influences on the side of right.

Mention is made below of what others have done. "DO YOUR BIT."

A Word From New Jersey

"Enclosed find $1.00 for the weekly edition of THE UNION SIGNAL to be sent to the New Jersey regiment. Our union is also sending state and National papers to local libraries."

What They Are Doing in New York

Enclosed find $2.50 for ten Campaign Edition subscriptions to be sent to one address for our enlisted boys, preferably some camp in New York.

FRANCES E. MCCLARRIE,
For the North Cohocton and Atlantic W. C. T. U.

West Washington's Special Efforts

West Washington sends seven subscriptions for the soldiers' camp at American Lake, paid for by Mrs. A. C. Shook, Lynden union, Excelsior union and Central union (both in Bellingham), "A Friend" in Whatcom county, Skagit county, Whatcom county.

Maine's Plan and Purpose

Enclosed find $5.00 from our W. C. T. U., to be used to send THE UNION SIGNAL to soldiers' camps, as you think best.

ADA M. UPHAM, Old Orchard, Maine.

Wisconsin's Patriotic Program

Enclosed find $5.00 for UNION SIGNAL subscriptions to be sent to the soldiers, one to the address given, the other four where most needed.

MRS. D. E. MARSH, Palmyra, Wis.

A War Time Economist

"Tommy"—the fond mother was leading her hopeful to think for himself—"isn't it rather extravagant to eat both butter and jam on your bread at the same time?"

"No, it's a saving," Thomas informed her. "One piece of bread does for both."—Epworth Herald.

Beer Breeds Degeneracy

D. H. KRESS, M. D.

Beer brings about degeneracy more rapidly than does the same proportion of alcohol taken in the form of whisky. Beer drinkers who have maintaincd their vitality and possess a normal blood pressure at the age of forty are a rarity. The malt liquors in addition to the alcohol contain other poisons, besides products which favor the growth of intestinal bacteria, which cause autointoxication and arteriosclerosis.

The heavy mortality of brewery employes is evidence that beer instead of being a hygienic drink, as is claimed, is a dangerous and harmful beverage. Beer is not employed because it is a nutrient, but because it is an intoxicant. It is drunk solely for its alcoholic effect. Should beer not intoxicate or produce this alcoholic effect, its use would be at an end.

The moral degeneracy caused by the habitual use of beer is more pronounced than the physical degeneracy. "Among the academic youth of Germany the drinking of beer has killed the ideals and ethics and has produced an incredible vulgarity," says Dr. A. Forel, of the University of Zurich. The general culture of the higher classes is unmistakably undergoing frightful retrogression because of the beer consumption of its students. Beer drinking has produced a grossness among the people of Germany that is becoming noticeable to travelers and in fact proverbial.

FANS AND LEAFLETS

for distribution in Chautauquas and other summer assemblies at

SPECIAL PRICES

Leaflets carefully selected.

PACKAGE NO. 1
Containing
50 Prohibition Fans
300 Leaflets
Price, $1.45.

PACKAGE NO. 2
Containing
100 Prohibition Fans
500 Leaflets
Price, $2.45.

PACKAGE NO. 3
Containing
150 Prohibition Fans
800 Leaflets
Price, $3.90.

PACKAGE NO. 4
Containing
200 Prohibition Fans
1,000 Leaflets
Price, $5.00.

Please order early.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

The General's Answer

Not long since the Bishop of London related the story of his visit to the headquarters of the Australian troops to ask the general in command in what way he might assist in maintaining the moral tone of the Australian troops while in the city. The answer of the general was this: "You can help us best, Bishop, by closing every public-house in Westminster."

Series of Short Leaflets

For General Distribution Among Mothers, Fathers, Girls and Boys.

MOTHERS' HOME SERIES
"Watch Me."
The Things We Forget.
Mother's Smile.
His Mother's Version.
The Word of Commendation.
A Mother's Forgiveness.
The Timely Rest.
Your White Ribbon.
Home Keeping Hearts Are Happiest.
Mothers' Sons.
A Word to Mothers.

FATHERS' HOME SERIES
Ought Little Ones to Sign the Pledge?
What Burbank, the "Plant Wizard," says of Alcohol and Tobacco.
Saloon Couldn't Have His Boy.
To Make a House Into a Home.
A Safe Place.
Papa's Prayers.
What Changed Him.
Written on the Heart.
Nurturing a Cheerful Spirit.
An Unusual Chum.

GIRLS' OWN SERIES
Character Pots
The Words of My Mouth.
Martha Ann's Song.
Gifts and Love.
A Lavender Voice.
Kept Clean.
Where Are Your Thoughts?
When the Bible Speaks.
The Rule of the Game.
Mother.

BOYS' POCKET SERIES
His Turn Now.
Too Small to Divide.
A Talk by Burdette.
The Child is Father of the Man.
It Takes Two.
Prompt People.
Two of Us.
The Power of Control.
Stop a While.
Still Chiselling.
A Message.
How Alcohol Works.
How Are You Building?
The Law of Habit.

Size, 3½x6 inches.
Price, 2 cents each; per 50, 15 cents; per 100, 20 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

W. C. T. U. NAPKINS
heavy crepe paper, with dainty pink flowered border and W. C. T. U. monogram in gold in corner.
Price, per 25, 20 cents; per 100, 75 cents.

FOLDED DRINKING CUPS
made of waxed paper with Woman's Christian Temperance Union printed on same in blue.
Price, per dozen, 10 cents; per 100, 50 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

A new edition of the
SUPERINTENDENT'S MANUAL
is just off the press. To every local officer this book is a NECESSITY, while every white ribboner would become more efficient by the study of department work and department plans as set forth in the manual.

Price, 10 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Jennie Smith, National railroad evangelist, 319 E St. N. E. Two squares east of Union Station, Washington, D. C. Rooms at reasonable rates.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., AUGUST 2, 1917 | No. 30

Participants in a Triple Grand Gold Medal Contest, held in Los Angeles, California

(For description see page eleven)

SOW THE SEEDS OF TOTAL ABSTINENCE AND PROHIBITION, CULTIVATE WISELY AND LOVINGLY THIS IMPLANTED TRUTH, AND A GENERATION HENCE THESE GIRLS AND BOYS, GROWN TO WOMANHOOD AND MANHOOD, WILL DEMAND PROTECTED HOMES AND RIGHTEOUS LAWS.

—Lillian M. N. Stevens.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

SENATE AND HOUSE CONFEREES AGREE ON PROHIBITION SECTION OF FOOD CONTROL BILL —SENATE TO VOTE AUGUST 1 ON NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION—DISTILLED LIQUOR AT RATE OF A MILLION GALLONS A DAY BEING WITHDRAWN FROM BOND

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

After six weeks' discussion in the Senate, the Food Control bill passed that body Saturday, July 21, by the overwhelming majority of 81 to 6. The bill now goes to conference between the two houses, where it will be put into final shape for action by Congress. Before the final vote was cast amendments of vast importance were adopted, among them one authorizing the President, during the period of the war, to fix the prices of coal and coke, and if the producers and dealers do not comply, to take over the coal business and operate it. The Senate voted 72 to 12 in favor of this provision. An amendment fixing a minimum price of $2 a bushel for wheat at the principal interior primary markets was adopted also, without a roll call. It creates a board of food administration of three members to be appointed by the President, and confirmed by the Senate, to have charge of the food administration. The President is to have supreme supervision of the enforcement of the Food Control law. Senator Reed of Missouri made a bitter attack on Mr. Hoover, food administrator appointed by the President, in an effort to make him ineligible to membership on the new food board, but it was unsuccessful.

The bill prohibits the use of food or feeds in the manufacture of distilled spirits during the period of the war; prohibits the importation of any such spirits into the United States and directs the President to purchase for the government all the distilled spirits in bond at a price equal to the cost plus ten per cent. The President is also authorized to commandeer any or all the distilled spirits in bond for the use of the government. These two provisions conflict, but it is expected that they will be straightened out in conference.

The question of the use of food stuffs in the manufacture of beer and wine during the war, was entirely eliminated by the Senate from the bill. The conference committee is composed of seven Senators, and seven Representatives. Indications are that the Senate prohibition provisions may be greatly strengthened. It is thought that at least five of the seven Senate conferees will favor such action, and Chairman Lever of the House conferees has promised the Representatives who favor prohibition that he will endeavor strenuously to retain the House provision which prohibits the use of food stuffs for the manufacture of beer and wine during the war. It is impossible to tell how long a time may be taken by the conference committee in coming to a mutual agreement, but it is generally supposed it will take a week, perhaps longer.

Senate to Vote on National Constitutional Prohibition August 1

After the passage in the Senate on Thursday of the Rivers and Harbors bill, after a spirited discussion, Senator Sheppard rose, and asked unanimous consent for the Senate to proceed to the consideration of resolution 17 for the purpose of endeavoring to agree on a date for a vote upon the resolution, which is for a National Constitutional Prohibition Amendment. After an hour of argument pro and con, and the roll had been called, fifty-three Senators answering to their names, Senator Sheppard presented the following unanimous consent agreement:

"It is agreed by unanimous consent that immediately upon the conclusion of the morning hour on Monday, July 30, 1917, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution 17 proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States and that on the calendar day Wednesday, August 1, 1917, at four o'clock p. m., the Senate will vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the resolution (S. J. Resolution 17) through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition."

"Provided that on Monday, July 30, and Tuesday, July 31, no Senator shall speak more than once, or longer than one hour upon the resolution and amendments offered thereto, and that after Tuesday, July 31, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than ten minutes upon the resolution and amendments thereto."

The unanimous consent of those who are opposed to prohibition was given in the hope that the resolution may be amended to include a time limit for ratification.

The Senate in less than an hour on Thursday, passed the aviation bill designed to give the United States a large fleet of air planes with which to carry on the war. The bill carries a total of $640,000,000. No change whatever was made in the bill and it passed the Senate just as it passed the House. As soon as it was signed by the Vice-President, and the Speaker of the House, it was hurried to the President for his signature and approval and the work of developing America's great air fleet will now shortly begin. During the first year officials hope to produce at least 3,500, with a great increase the next year.

Representatives of southern cotton mills attacked in force the tentative rules and regulations for carrying out the Child Labor law, which goes into effect September 1, at a hearing held at the Court of Claims this week. More than fifty attorneys and representatives of manufacturing interests of New England, the middle, eastern, and southern states principally, were present to give their views on the regulations which will be submitted to the Attorney-General and the secretaries of Commerce and Labor very soon. Southern textile men declare it to be "utterly impossible to comply with the rules and regulations drawn up by the advisory committee," especially with rule 3 which requires proof of the ages of children more than fourteen years old working in the mills. Miss Julia Lathrop, chief of the Children's Bureau, was present and gave an outline of the attitude of the bureau relative to the law. She insisted that the ages should be certified to by parents and not physicians as suggested by some of the mill men. Tentative regulations, requiring, for instance, that a child work eight hours straight through, not four hours in the morning followed by a two hour rest period, and then four hours in the afternoon, will have to be decided by the board named in the Act.

LATE NEWS

Senate and House Conferees Agree on Prohibition Section Food Control Bill

According to Associated Press reports, received as we go to press, conferees of the House and Senate on the Administration Food Control bill have agreed on the prohibition clause to be inserted therein as follows: That the manufacture or importation of distilled beverages during the war shall be prohibited; that the President shall be authorized to limit the alcoholic content of beer and wine, and to commandeer distilled beverages when necessary, including not only those in bond but also those in stock.

Distilled Liquors at Rate of Million Gallons a Day Being Withdrawn from Bond

I stated in last week's letter that the liquor men realizing the danger confronting their business from the provisions of the bill, have been withdrawing whisky held in bond at the rate of a million gallons a day, and will therefore have a sufficient quantity to supply the trade for several years, at a greatly increased price. By this procedure, too, distillers are paying the old tax of $1.10 per gallon, evading the increased tax of $2.20 per gallon as provided in the new war revenue bill.

Letters have been received again and again at this office, asking if the W. C. T. U. is a party to picketing at the gates of the White House, expressing surprise and often indignation, and inquiring if such tactics are to be continued. To set the minds of our women at rest concerning the matter, I will try to explain the situation. There are two factions of suffragists in Washington, each with fine headquarters, each with a goodly following. One, formerly the Congressional Union, now known as the Woman's Party, is the one carrying on the picketing, etc. The other is the National American Suffrage Association, Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, president, Dr Anna Howard Shaw its honored vice-president. Both Mrs. Catt and Dr. Shaw have through the Washington press expressed disapproval of the peculiar methods employed by the sister organization, and have urged that it discontinue them. Naturally, the two organizations are frequently confounded one with the other. It would seem pitiful, were it not ridiculous, that these otherwise sensible women stood on the corner of a street facing the Capitol grounds for weeks last winter. Day after day, on one of the bleakest corners in the city, in all sorts of weather, with their yellow and purple banners whipping in the wind, they maintained their position, blue with cold.

The long time picketing at the White House gates, which so recently culminated in a small riot, and later the incarceration of sixteen of their number for two or three days in the penitentiary, where they were treated as ordinary prisoners, and shown no favors, was to say the least, most unfortunate. Instead of gaining sympathy from Senators and Representatives, they were objects of condemnation and severe criticism.

Miss Gordon has been in Washington for a few days, and in attendance at conferences held in our headquarters. Mr. Paul Barnhart, the worker sent to Porto Rico by the National W. C. T. U. to help in the campaign for prohibition, recently gave before a most interested audience a graphic description of his experiences on that beautiful island. Mr. Barnhart, who is a fine Spanish scholar, was very helpful in the campaign. He speaks of the W. C. T. U. of Porto Rico with great enthusiasm.

National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, Washington, D. C., July 27, 1917

Patriotic Service Plans Urged by National W. C. T. U.

While believing that difficulties between nations should be settled by a World's Court of Justice, members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union are heroically responding to the emergency call for patriotic service. The overwhelming need and the intense interest of white ribboners call for a definite plan toward which our entire organization can work and one which will closely coördinate our efforts during the time of the war.

We, whose names are appended to this announcement believe that this emergency work can be more adequately done if directed by the combined forces of the General Officers and the superintendents of departments most closely allied to the requirements of the new situation. Hence we, as a National W. C. T. U. Committee on Patriotic Service, recommend that a similar committee be constituted in every state, county and local union. Under this coöperative plan all work properly belonging to any one of the departments mentioned should continue to be reported to its superintendent. The plan is a temporary one for the period of the war and does not contemplate any change in the constitution of national, state, county or local unions.

The departments most closely related to emergency service are: Legislation, Work Among Soldiers and Sailors, Flower Mission and Relief Work, Moral Education, Temperance and Labor, and Work Among Foreign-Speaking People.

SERVICE PLANS

1. Nation-Wide Prohibition as a War Measure

Conservation of food products and the protection of the health and morals of men in the Army and Navy, and of civilians as well, demand this. To this end continue the educational campaign through the distribution of suitable literature and through anti-alcohol demonstrations and public addresses. Respond promptly to calls from national and state officers and the National superintendent of Legislation in the sending of letters and telegrams to the President and to members of Congress. (Report through department of Legislation.)

2. Soldiers and Sailors

(a) The exigencies of war are emphasizing the value of comfort bags for men in the Army and Navy and women's organizations everywhere are making them. The W. C. T. U. was pioneer in this industry. For over thirty years our department of Work Among Soldiers and Sailors has been providing these homey necessities. If the personal card and address of the bag-maker be included, an individual touch is given which is deeply appreciated. It is natural that every union should desire to send bags to the men from their own state, but it should be remembered that when the troops go into the national training camps or board the battleships there are no state boundaries; they are all from the United States.

(b) Establish rest rooms at training stations and see to it that the men are heartened by friendly good-bys when they leave home and when they entrain from the mobilization cities.

(c) Continue to make the new "many-tailed bandage" called for by the British War Relief Association.

(d) Get a list of enlisted men in your community and see that they receive letters and papers from home.

(e) Provide all Army and Navy men with letters from pastors, officers of the W. C. T. U. or of any society they have come in touch with in their home life. Then when a young man is homesick for an evening in a real home he can find the local officers of the society, whose letter he bears, and will be received, not as a stranger but as a welcome guest. It is not intended that this plan take the place of any other that may be attempted in the way of entertainment, but with intelligent coöperation on the part of churches and societies, it may bring blessing and cheer to many a homesick boy. The mother-love in the hearts of white ribboners will suggest many ways by which kindness and sympathy may be shown the boys away from home—some of them guarding lonely bridges and public utilities, many surrounded by temptations and discomforts, and nearly all of them home hungry. (Report through department of Soldiers and Sailors.)

3. Relief Work

(a) Allied Relief. The appeal of the hungry children of Europe touches the hearts of "organized mother love," as Miss Willard called the W. C. T. U. Ten cents a day, or $36.50 a year, will provide necessary nourishing food for an orphan child in France in addition to the ten cents per day allowed by the French government. Money is sent through regular W. C. T. U. channels.

(b) Home Relief. All too soon the need for comfort and relief for the families of men called to the colors will be apparent. The bouquet with its message from the Bible will bring comfort to the sad-hearted, as will the timely visit. Food and clothing for families left destitute must be provided. When the clothes are outgrown or are replaced by new ones, those discarded can be neatly mended and laid aside for the sure time of need. Delicacies for the hospital and for the home invalid are among the necessaries. The woman who has an abundance of fruit can do team work with the one who furnishes the sugar and the time for making jellies, etc. (Report relief work through the department of Flower Mission and Relief Work.)

4. Moral Education

Of no less importance than conservation of material resources is conservation of the moral forces of our nation. Temptations to vice must be removed by an appeal to the highest instincts of young American manhood, through instructive literature, the spoken word and the use of the White Cross pledge. In the field of moral conservation we depend largely upon our young women. We urge that by precept and example they aid the young men called to the defense of home and country in maintaining the highest standards of moral excellence. In no better way can they prove their patriotism than by guarding the American soldier's ideal of womanhood. In this work coöperate with other women's organizations, with Army and Navy chaplains, Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A.

Call attention of parents and of the public generally to a phase of the problem which is becoming increasingly serious, namely the attraction of Uncle Sam's uniform for young girls. This has already been a cause of many a downfall. It is most important that girls be warned of the dangers of hanging around the camps. Stir mothers to the need of instructing and guarding their daughters, securing in this work the co-operation of Protestant ministers, Catholic priests and Jewish rabbis. (Report through the department of Moral Education.)

5. Women in Industry

(a) Try to secure the employment of women on fair terms as substitutes in business positions and in agricultural and industrial occupations left vacant by men who are entering military service. Guard against short-sighted tendencies to overwork and overstrain. The W. C. T. U. in its creed declares for "a living wage; an eight hour day; justice opposed to greed." With the united effort of women's organizations to protect women in industry, proper environment and care can be secured for wage-earning women.

(b) Food is as necessary to an army as guns; bread as important as bullets. Every housewife is expected to enlist for patriotic service in the field of home economics. The production, conservation and preservation of food products are branches of service open to every woman. (Report through the department of Temperance and Labor.)

6. Americanization

The W. C. T. U. is prepared to lead in creating a community attitude of friendliness and helpfulness toward alien families. Through the "do everything policy" a neighborly approach can be arranged to families in any way embarrassed through loss of men who have responded to the call of their adopted country. In the present industrial crisis the foreign-born women are the first to be exploited. The pressure for high production is already affecting these women and their children. They need to be helped to a speaking acquaintance with the English language. (Report through the department of Foreign-Speaking People.)

7. Co-operation With the United Committee on Temperance Activities in the Army and Navy

This is a federation of eighteen national temperance organizations, including the W. C. T. U. The United Committee will provide for the distribution of special temperance literature inside the sixteen national cantonments established for the new Army and will place in each a stereomotorgraph machine which will automatically show prohibition cartoons and otherwise emphasize prohibition truth. Funds to aid this program may be sent through regular W. C. T. U. channels. (Report through Treasurer.)

8. Finance

A fund for carrying out the plans for patriotic service is a necessity. Although large sums have been raised by other worthy organizations, there is sufficient for the needs of the W. C. T. U. if the people are informed about our plans. Women are ingenious in thinking of ways for raising money. Many will prefer the simplest method of asking for volunteer contributions for definite objects. Patriotic medal contests or concerts; wheatless food sales; war-time dinners; a "melting pot," in which all kinds of trinkets and saleable articles can be placed; an "allied bazaar"; a food conservation exchange of recipes—these may be suggestive to W. C. T. U. women seeking ways of obtaining financial help. (Report through Treasurer.)

9. Community Interest

Arrange neighborhood meetings for the families of officers and men for the purpose of friendly acquaintance and exchange of news received from the front and from the training camps. Develop a varied scheme of service in which there shall be room for original features and in which the people of the community will be seeking an opportunity to participate. (Report through Corresponding Secretary.)

10. Membership

The present national crisis affords such opportunities for enlarging our membership as have never before come to us. An organization which for forty-three years, under Divine guidance, has been toiling and achieving for home pro-

(Continued on Page Nine)

Float of the Indianapolis Central W. C. T. U. in Centennial Parade

"GET FIRST HAND EVIDENCE," SAYS OREGON PAPER

The Portland (Ore.) Telegram, a newspaper which was formerly hostile to the principle of prohibition, in an editorial addressed to convention visitors to Portland advises a first hand investigation of the results of closing the saloons rather than the acceptance of the word of radicals on either side of the liquor question.

"Call on the chief of police," urges the former pro-liquor paper, upon the visitors to Portland "and ask him as to general conditions among the class with which his department of the city government deals. Let him show you the record of arrests during 1916, the first dry year, and compare it with the record for 1915, the last wet year. Look over the record for the first six months of 1917, the first 'bone dry' period. Don't confine yourself to arrests for drunkenness, but examine the books for minor and major crimes directly attributable to excessive alcoholic drinking.

"Talk with the state district attorney and the United States district attorney. Don't ask their opinion; just let them give you the facts. The United States marshal will tell you, when you inquire, that his prisoners have decreased about 75 per cent. You will be astounded to learn, for instance, that the crime of white slavery has almost disappeared. These officers will confirm the impersonal information disclosed by the cold statistics you saw at police headquarters. The official story of decreased crime and misdemeanor will make a very deep impression.

"As students of economic questions, with a special bearing on war conditions, you will naturally wish to know something about the effect on the household of the wage earner since he has been bringing home his pay-envelope with no heavy toll taken out in advance by the saloon. Of course, it will not do to interview home mothers whom you do not know, but inquire of any grocer or butcher how much money has been diverted from drink to nutritious food. Ask these tradesmen concerning the prompt payment of bills now as compared with any year prior to 1916.

"Then go to the clothing stores and the shoe stores with an inquiry concerning sales to laboring folk; then to the department stores and ask about the unprecedented rush for three weeks preceding last Christmas. Based on information received from their floor-walkers, the superintendents will tell you there were literally thousands of eager purchasers who could not be recognized as former customers. Talk with cashiers of savings banks and have them tell you of the opening of accounts with working people who had never before been depositors, and how these same people bought $50 and $100 Liberty bonds.

"Finally, on the economic side, call former saloonkeepers as unwilling witnesses. The testimony of at least half of them can be boiled down into one meaty sentence: 'It drove me out of business, but it's a good thing for the town.' While the remaining half may be too stubborn to admit the fact, they know in their hearts that it is true.

"Inquiry into the moral effect of prohibition, apart from its bearing on crime and misdemeanor, is not necessary. Facts cannot be tabulated. In this advanced day, not even the distiller nor the brewer will defend the saloon on ethical grounds. Its removal raises the moral standard of any community.

"Does prohibition in Portland really prohibit? This is a perfectly natural question for the visitors to ask. It merits a perfectly candid answer. Prohibition does not entirely prohibit. How could it be expected that the lifelong custom of alcoholic drinking could be abandoned altogether within six months? A few bootleggers are still doing business in Portland. We have ocean communication with California, a wet state, and a little booze is smuggled in by vessels, and a negligible quantity gets in by rail. Severe penalties have been imposed in perhaps fifty cases of bootlegging. By the very nature of the traffic, Portland cannot be made 100 per cent dry within a year. Very small quantities of liquor will be brought in for personal use in suitcases. But as to traffic in booze, the Telegram believes it a fair statement to say it has decreased fully 95 per cent since January 1, 1916. The use of alcoholic drink in Portland as a beverage has decreased fully 90 per cent. Now that the federal government has forbidden the transportation of liquor into dry states, prohibition may, indeed, be made absolutely to prohibit."

BEER vs. WHISKY

HON. WILLIAM J. BRYAN
(Published in Congressional Record)

—Chicago Tribune

The effort to separate beer and wine from distilled liquors, so as to continue their sale and use under laws prohibiting whisky and other beverages containing a large per cent of alcohol, is supported by arguments which are, to a certain extent, plausible, but the movement would not be a serious one if it rested upon argument alone. The real force behind this proposal lies, first, in the financial and political influence of the brewers and, second, in the appetite of the drinkers. Those pecuniarily interested in the manufacture of beer or in the making of wine quite naturally contend that they are less harmful than stronger drinks, and those who are fond of their beer or wine echo the argument, but it is not likely to convince the disinterested. It may be worth while, however, to lay before the general public the objections to the beer and wine propaganda in order that well-meaning voters may not be deceived.

The first objection is based upon the fact that a surrender to the brewers and wine makers would compel the temperance forces of the country to give up the fundamental proposition upon which their entire fight is built, namely, that alcohol is a poison and that, because alcohol is a poison, alcoholic beverages are harmful.

To draw a distinction between whisky, for instance, which contains a high percentage of alcohol, and wine and beer which contain a lower percentage of alcohol, would be like trying to fix a line between moderate drinking and immoderate drinking.

All Alcoholic Drinks Harmful

No words have yet been coined which can fix the point at which the use of liquor becomes excessive. The line moves forward as the habit grows—it recedes like the horizon until it is lost in the black night of intoxication. Failure would, in like manner, overtake any effort to fix a line between harmless and harmful alcoholic drinks. It is impossible to classify drinks according to the percentage of alcohol which they contain; they must be classified as alcoholic and non-alcoholic, because it is the alcohol in the drink that makes it objectionable.

Alcohol is harmful, first, because of the immediate injury which it does, and, second, because of the appetite which it creates. Scientific experiments have been carried so far as to leave no doubt of the injury which alcohol does to both the physical and intellectual man. Beverages that contain but a small percentage of alcohol will unsteady the nerves and impair the productive value of the drinker, no matter what his occupation may be. They will lessen the accuracy of his aim at target practice; they will increase the number of his mistakes at type-setting; they will confuse his thought and enfeeble his hand. The use of beer and wine increases accidents in industry and decreases the expectancy of the user as measured by the insurance tables.

But, even if it could be shown that the immediate effect of the alcohol contained in beer and wine was not perceptible, it would be unsafe to permit their sale and use because alcohol produces disease in both the brain and the blood. It creates an appetite which calls for more and more and more.

The beer hall and the wine room are the vestibules, so to speak, of the whisky shop. The brewer and the wine maker are schoolmasters—they take the beginner through the kindergarten and the lower grades, instructing him in the art of intoxication until he is ready to enter upon the career of the drunkard and the sot.

But few of those who develop into whisky drinkers begin with that beverage; they commence with light wines and beer and then go on from stronger drinks to drinks still stronger as the taste becomes fixed and the craving increases. For this reason some argue that instead of giving a preference to beer and wine, it would even be safer to give the preference to the stronger drinks on the theory that, while they might more quickly kill off those already addicted to the liquor habit, they would not bring in so many new recruits. But it is not wise to prefer either; both should be put under the ban for both are enemies to man's welfare and progress.

If any one doubts the evil effects of beer and wine upon the individual let him visit the saloons and inquire into the habits of those who have not yet gone beyond these beverages. He will find that even beer and wine benumb the better nature and deaden the sensibilities. They wean the father, the husband and the son away from the family and its interests as effectually as do the stronger drinks. Even before the drinker begins to stagger and reel he becomes brutish, selfish and inconsiderate. His thirst for beer and wine will have more influence over him than the hunger of wife or child, and the coarse companionship of the barroom will have more charms for him than the holier environment of the home.

If the champions of the beer saloon and the wine room desire real information as to the character of the beverages which they are trying to protect let them submit the question to the women voters of the country and get their opinion as to the effect of these kinds of liquor upon men. They will find that the female members of the family have accurate knowledge and very positive convictions as to the effect of beer and wine drinking, as well as to the effect of whisky drinking.

But there is also a political objection to the proposition that beer and wine be excepted from the prohibited drinks. The brewers of the United States have, in recent years, been the most corrupting influence in our nation, as shown by investigations conducted in several states. No one interested in the purifying of politics can, for a moment, think of showing favor to so mercenary and conscienceless a group.

The objections to the sale and use of beer and wine are so weighty and so manifest that any truce entered into would be short-lived. To prohibit the sale and use of whiskies and stronger alcoholic drinks, while permitting the manufacture and sale of beer and wine, would simply postpone the real struggle and strengthen the adversary for the final fight. The brewers would be encouraged by any consideration shown them and would use the government's partiality as an argument in favor of the legitimacy of their business, just as the licensed saloon seeks to cover its criminality with the cloak of legality.

The brewers' corruption fund has grown from year to year as the temperance sentiment has more and more menaced the industry. The investigation in Texas disclosed the systematic efforts of the brewers to pollute the electorate. Huge sums have been spent throughout the country in the support of lobbies and in the subsidizing of newspapers. In Pennsylvania the brewers by taking refuge behind the objection that their testimony would incriminate them, confessed that they would be proven criminals if they revealed the business methods shown by their books.

The fight that the brewers have made against woman suffrage is another evidence of their determination to oppose anything and everything calculated to lessen their profits. They libel womanhood while they use the barroom vote to defeat laws proposed for the protection of the home.

The country understands that the issue is indivisible. When, a short time ago, Congress enacted a law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors to any man in uniform, it did not attempt to draw any distinction between whisky and beer; such an attempt would have been met with derision.

Prohibition States Refuse to Reinstate Beer and Wine

The states that have prohibited saloons cannot be inveigled into a return to beer and wine. When, in 1914, the state of Colorado adopted constitutional prohibition the city of Denver registered its protest against the change, but after a year's experience under a prohibitory law, the city of Denver, by a substantial majority, rejected an amendment which proposed to reinstate beer. Any action by the national Congress which would seem to sanction the use of beer and wine would make more difficult the enforcement of the laws in the states, now numbering more than half of the Union, which operate alike against all kinds of alcoholic drinks.

The fight must go on; there can be no compromise. Whisky and beer will stand or fall together; it is the alcohol in both that makes them a menace to health, to home and to all that is highest and best in the nation. A division of the temperance forces would be disastrous. Any attempt to make a distinction between beer and whisky would drive away more voters than it would draw to the cause.

Those who have entered upon the work of making the United States saloonless will, therefore, give no heed to the plea of the brewer and wine maker. The manufacturers of these so-called milder beverages have, during all the years past, cast in their lot with the distillers. They have been partners in a long career of lawlessness; they have made the barroom the bureau of information on crime; they have clustered about the saloon every form of vice and sin. It is too late now for them to seek an extension of life by promises to reform, or of separation from their associates. The entire firm of "Barleycorn, Gambrinus and Bacchus" must retire from business—a dissolution of partnership is not sufficient.

PERMANENT VALUE OF THE MEDAL CONTEST

ITS EFFECT UPON COMMUNITY AND INDIVIDUAL

MARGARET B. PLATT

As one who has had wide experience in medal contest work the writer desires to express the belief that it is of great permanent value in a variety of ways. The application of mind and body that must necessarily be given to the task in hand, if one hopes to be successful, strengthens memory, arouses thought and often presents to the student an entirely new viewpoint and opens an unexplored field of opportunity. The practice required in order to be able to acquit oneself creditably gives the ease and poise of mind and body so desirable in one who must face an audience, and bestows upon the contestant who has conscientiously prepared for the final trial that exultant confidence that makes him master of the situation and helps him to do his best.

All this, beyond doubt, is of great value to the contestant and also, in the final analysis, to the community at large. The quickening and fostering of latent ideals and aspirations by the study of the selections presented, thus familiarizing the mind with the character of the reform to be secured, naturally exert an influence for good over the future life of the contestant and therefore must be a source of positive benefit to the community.

A contest superintendent who keeps her work going, is quick to grasp opportunities and has always something doing, is distinctly a moral asset to her locality. She offers to those who will participate in the work of her classes a wholesome rivalry and healthful employment of mind. The study and practice required will occupy odd moments that might otherwise be given to less desirable pursuits, while the incentives offered will furnish sufficient zest and thrill to hold each member of the class taut in an honest effort to excel.

To secure best results contest work should be continuous and so skilfully managed as to reach, at one period or another during the year, every available section of the superintendent's province, thus assuring a widely scattered presentation of the subject matter and giving the additional advantage of acquainting large numbers of contestants with the benefits accruing to themselves from participating in the class work and the pleasure they may derive from assistance rendered to a good cause.

In an era when almost any one may be called upon at almost any time for some kind of public service it is well for the young to make definite preparation so that if unexpectedly required to face an audience there may be in reserve the power adequately trained to meet the emergency gracefully and perform the duty imposed in a way to merit general approval. The preparation obtained by participation in medal contests will frequently be found useful, rendering the individual capable not only of delightfully entertaining others, but at the same time giving an uplift of thought and an inspiration to aid in civic service that may prove of lasting worth to himself and others.

Then, too—and this is worth remembering—those who join in this line of altruistic service will ever belong to that class who while life lasts may cherish precious memories of having had a part in that glorious revolution that banished the tyrant alcohol, freed the world from his blighting thralldom, and lifted all humanity to higher levels of life and thought. Beyond doubt the medal contest work has been of great value in helping the world thus far toward that final consummation now so near at hand.

CULTURAL VALUE OF THE MEDAL CONTEST

ADELIA E. CARMAN

In every state and locality where there is (or soon will be) a prohibitory law, there are doubtless those who have been working for years, perhaps since the Crusade, to bring about the glad day of freedom from the liquor traffic, who now feel that the time has come for them to relax from their strenuous activities. Is it wise to do this? No! The day will never come when we can lie back on our oars and cease our endeavors for moral uplift and individual culture, the two great aims of the medal contest. You say you live in a "bone dry" state? Yes, but it must be kept dry. How? By enforcement of the law. The young people of your community are needed in this work. The truths they learn regarding temperance, the cigaret, moral education and kindred subjects will turn their minds into the right channel and when they become voters will influence their action. Then, too, even in a "bone dry" state there cannot be total abstinence though such a condition may be closely approached. Nor is your state likely soon to entirely rid itself of the cigaret pest, nor will it secure perfect social purity. These and many other topics touching upon reform are forcefully taught through contest selections and often whole families have been converted to temperance and prohibition because the children declaimed so earnestly against alcoholism and for abstinence.

Your young people need just as much individual culture today as they did before your state became dry. Hundreds of young men and women who have had no opportunity for self improvement have been taken from the small town, the farm, the city, and through becoming interested in this work have formed new ideals and now have a brighter perspective in life. They have acquired poise, self-confidence, correct speaking and, above all, the discipline that tends to develop Christian character.

Therefore, contest workers in dry states, continue your efforts along lines new or old, whichever in your opinion will bring best results.

The state of Kansas has offered special inducements for better work this year, and in states that are in a prohibition campaign great interest is manifested. The state officers, state superintendents and local unions are talking and working for contests. The children are being formed into classes for Sunday school contests, the two fine programs prepared by the National department being used. The indications now are that many contests will be held. One superintendent conducted twenty last year with excellent results. Send to the Sunday school superintendent for the programs and to your National superintendent for medals.

We are still urging contests in the public schools, especially on temperance day and at commencement. Ask the teachers to give credits on public speaking and oratory. There will be no objection to contests in the public schools in prohibition states; in fact, they will be welcomed by teachers as many of them have great faith in the cultural growth resulting from contest work, and believe that the possibilities of making future advocates for a great cause more than pay for the effort involved.

Truly it is glorious work to help form the character of the youth of our country and surely we are all of one accord in the conviction that there must be no relaxing if we are to be faithful servants along our chosen line for the advancement of the kingdom.

Temperance Contests Help

For two years past I have taught in a one room school with an average attendance of about thirty. The school had never had a very good name. During my first few weeks the pupils thought of many ways to annoy me.

I finally made up my mind that they needed some outside interest to arouse them. Very few of them even attended Sunday School. So I decided to start some temperance medal contest work. To create interest I had six young people from my home town give a contest in the church next door to the school. As it was something new, a large crowd gathered to hear them. I had taught the school children temperance songs to sing between the temperance recitations. At this contest we cleared enough to pay in part for an old square piano for the school.

The result of this contest was that the older ones in the school wished to speak in a contest. Of course I could not allow that unless they learned their lessons. For two years we have been holding contests, not only in our own district but also in other towns, and twice in a nearby city. Meanwhile the school work has been of a higher standard as no one could take the contest books or songs until all lessons were learned.

Do not imagine that I did not meet with opposition. The children themselves at first would whisper, "We're on the 'water wagon' now." But you would not know the school. Even the little tots wish they were big enough not only to sing but to speak. The moral tone of the school is much improved, and more pupils passed in June than ever before. One pupil who has spent a great deal of time in contest work and has won both a silver and a gold medal passed not only her sixth grade examinations but also got an average of eighty-five per cent in seventh grade examinations.

As an indirect result of one of these contests, I have secured a much better position for next year. Best of all, a number of boys and girls recently signed the triple pledge.—Normal Instructor and Primary Plans.

Utah Prohibitory Law in Effect August 1

August 1 marked the beginning of the prohibition era in Utah. Although by the terms of the prohibition law the saloons were allowed to operate throughout the month of July, many liquor dealers closed their doors July 1, rather than pay the semi-annual tax due on that date. Fifteen saloons in the poorer districts of Salt Lake City are among those which closed prior to August 1. Plans for the enforcement of the prohibition law have been under consideration for some time. Governor Simon Bamberger has given instructions that the law must be enforced to the letter. On July 27 a conference of sheriffs, justices of the peace and county representatives called by Attorney General Shields met in Salt Lake City.

The Utah prohibition law provides that no liquor shall be stored by any private individual, even if purchased prior to August 1. A fine of not less than $50 nor more than $299, or imprisonment for not less than thirty days nor more than six months, or both, is provided for the first violation of the act. A second conviction provides for imprisonment, without the option of a fine, of not less than three months nor more than two years. Druggists are prohibited from selling articles containing more than one-half of one per cent of alcohol, unless it is needed by hospitals, experimental and manufacturing institutions. Alcohol may be supplied to individuals upon a doctor's prescription and when it is deemed necessary as medicine.

Panama White Ribboners, in Conference with President Valdes, Urge Wartime Prohibition

The Isthmus of Panama W. C. T. U., organized in the spring of 1916, at the close of the Pan American religious congress, with members from Ancon, Balboa, Panama City and vicinity, is working to secure prohibition for the Isthmus. Although the Canal Zone has been dry since July 1, 1913, by action of the Panama Canal Commissioners, there is great need for temperance work throughout Panama. On a recent occasion some twenty members of the W. C. T. U. called upon President Valdes at the palace in Panama and presented a petition for wartime prohibition. The white ribboners were introduced by United States Minister Price and were received very cordially by the president, who promised to present their petition to the ministers and urge immediate action. President Valdes conversed with the delegation for some time in cultured English and the women felt much encouraged with the success of the mission. The petition presented was as follows:

To His Excellency,
Doctor Don Ramon L. Valdes,
President of the Republic.

Whereas, the world is passing through a period of stress and danger such as it has never before known, as the food supply of the world is growing alarmingly small, and all nations are awakening to the need of strictest economy and conservation of all resources, particularly food; and

Whereas, the foremost nations of Europe have found that the manufacture of liquor is not only a waste of valuable food-stuff, but the use of liquor increases crime and poverty and greatly reduces the efficiency of armies, as well as of civilians;

Therefore, believing that Panama, in prohibiting the manufacture and sale of liquor, would show herself in the universal march of progress, and render invaluable aid to the United States, we, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, do respectfully and earnestly request that your Excellency, the President, and your Cabinet, enact a law prohibiting the use of any cereal, grain or other food-stuff in the manufacture of intoxicating liquors, during the period of the war, and prohibiting the sale or distribution in any way of such intoxicating liquors as a beverage, for the same period.

Liquor Ban to Quell Trouble in Coal Field

In the northern part of the Irwin (Pa.) export coal field, where strike threats among the 10,000 miners are causing uneasiness, a "bone dry" order has been put into effect. Hotels at Delmont and Claridge have been closed and the numerous clubrooms have been directed by the court and Sheriff Kilgore to close. Breweries have promised to keep delivery agents out of the field.

As Prohibition Becomes More Stringent

The relation of liquor to crime is well illustrated by the police records of Pendleton, Oregon, for the past three years. In June, 1915, while saloons were still open, arrests numbered 105. The following June, under prohibition the number had shrunk to 23, and under "bone dry" prohibition the number of arrests for June, 1917, was only 12, the lowest number for any month for many years.

HONOR ROLL

—of—

PROHIBITION STATES AND TERRITORY AND DATE OF GOING INTO EFFECT

Maine		1851
Kansas		1880
North Dakota		1889
Oklahoma		1907
Georgia		1908
North Carolina		1909
Mississippi		1909
Tennessee		1909
West Virginia		1914
Alabama		1915
Arizona		1915
Virginia		1916
Colorado		1916
Oregon		1916
Washington		1916
Arkansas		1916
Iowa		1916
Idaho		1916
South Carolina		1916
Nebraska		1917
South Dakota		1917
Utah	†Aug.	1, 1917
Dist. of Columbia	†Nov.	1, 1917
Alaska	†Jan.	1, 1918
Indiana	†April	2, 1918
Michigan	*April	30, 1918
Montana	*Dec.	31, 1918
New Hampshire	†May	1, 1918

*Enacted 1916. †Enacted 1917.

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1917

Iowa†† Ohio New Mexico

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1918

Utah†† Missouri Florida
Minnesota Wyoming Nevada

††Now have statutory prohibition. Will vote on constitutional amendment.

Spanish-American War Conditions Recalled in Prohibition South Carolina

No Liquor Problem in the State Now, Says Columbia Daily

In an illuminating editorial concerning the enforcement of prohibition in South Carolina the State, of Columbia, refers to the remarkable change from conditions at the time of the Spanish-American war when liquor was sold in the state. "While the number of soldiers here is comparatively small, some dozens are to be seen at all times. No one has seen a noisy, drunken or disorderly soldier," is the testimony of the State.

"For a month the city of Columbia has been thronged, especially at night, with workingmen, many of them white and hundreds of them negroes," says the editorial, "but there is little or no evidence of disorder and practically none of drunkenness in the streets."

It is a matter of prohibition enforced without fear or favor that has brought about this encouraging state of affairs. "The time has come in South Carolina," says the State, "when white men of Charleston are convicted of selling whisky and are sent to the penitentiary. In these times a man may be white and may have plenty of money and be sent to the penitentiary for selling whisky—and there he will stay until his term ends.

"With the country engaged in war and with the nerves of the people at high tension, with money abundant, with soldiers better paid than ever before, with wages high and with an immense transient population, does not the Columbia of 1917 present a contrast to the Columbia of the Spanish-American war that those who remember that time could hardly believe to be possible if they did not see it before their eyes?

"What the future of the whisky traffic shall be it is not worth while to discuss, but it is the simple truth that PROHIBITION IS PROHIBITING and the old argument to the contrary, so long relied on by the whisky dealers, is, for the present at least, discredited. Whoever says that prohibition will not prohibit is heard with derision.

"The problem may not be solved—but there is, at present NO PROBLEM of the liquor traffic in South Carolina.

"When we contemplate what might have been, in this period of military preparation and mobilization, we say, without equivocation or qualification that prohibition and its enforcement by a resolute governor are at this time immeasurable blessings to the people of South Carolina."

Marked Increase in Piano Sales in Dry Western States

According to traveling representatives of eastern piano manufacturing concerns who have recently been in San Francisco, says the Musical Times, piano sales in the western states that have joined the dry ranks show marked increase. This fact is commented upon by almost every traveling piano man who reaches San Francisco. They report that business in Colorado, Arizona, Washington and Oregon was never better and that retailers, many of whom opposed prohibition, are now heartily in favor of the change. More pianos are being sold, it is asserted, initial payments are larger, collections are much better and fewer instruments are returned. Local houses with branches in these states back up the assertions of the traveling men.

Prohibition voted in Porto Rico two to one is only another of those vast flanking operations by which New York is to be encircled and, eventually, captured.—New York Evening Post.

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss JULIA F. DEANE

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, August 2, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

Have you sent in your contribution for the National W. C. T. U. Ambulance Fund?

The article of supreme interest to all white ribboners in this issue is the Patriotic Service Plans urged by the National W. C. T. U. Read them carefully and note whether your local union is actively at work along the various lines suggested.

Owing to the unprecedented demand for Testaments, the Bible houses are unable to print them rapidly enough to supply the needs for war work, and the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House cannot, therefore, fill its orders promptly. It asks that all who have sent in orders for Testaments exercise patience under this necessary delay. The books will be forwarded to them at the earliest possible moment.

"Better a beer riot without beer than a bread riot without bread," was the clever retort of a friend from Maine to the prediction of the brewery representatives that national prohibition of beer would precipitate riots among the drinkers of that beverage.

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, 561 Thirty-third St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

GENERAL PERSHING AND COMFORT BAGS

If any within your circle of acquaintances seems inclined to minimize the value of the comfort bags that are being made in such quantities for the enlisted men, call his attention to the words of General Pershing. Certainly this hero of many battles might be expected to recognize real values in anything that relates to the well-being of his men; he would hardly be accused of being a sentimentalist in that regard. In a message of thanks for a large consignment of comfort bags said to have been requested by the War Department for the troops that recently sailed for France General Pershing is reported to have said: "These things cause the soldier to remember that the people at home are behind him. You cannot know how much they signify to any American who is over here in France carrying the flag of his country. This is the point that should be impressed upon the minds of those who are working for the soldiers."

Greater than the usefulness of the varied assortment of articles placed in each comfort kit—buttons, thread, pins, mirror, needles, etc.—must be rated the certain intangible, invisible things of moral worth, such as love, sympathy, appreciation, that go with each bag and bring to the minds of the recipient sweet memories of mother, wife and children, home and America. For these he is willing to endure hardship, face certain danger, and, if need be, embark upon the great adventure from which no man ever returns to this world.

THE SOLDIER'S POINT OF VIEW

The United States government is furnishing unanswerable arguments for national prohibition in its establishment of dry zones around military camps and its issuance of orders against the sale or gift of alcoholic beverages to soldiers and sailors in uniform. Having admitted by these acts the necessity for safeguarding the enlisted men against alcohol, how can it justify itself in continuing to legalize the traffic in drink, thus imperiling the remainder of the 100,000,000 men, women and children in this great commonwealth? That the boys in these protected dry zones, in their inmost hearts somewhat resent this discrimination, is evident. Dr. William A. Evans, former health commissioner of Chicago, recently took occasion to discuss the subject with a group of the nation's defenders, and reports them as saying that if they are under prohibition they think it only right that other men, too, should be under it. They insist that if prohibition promotes health and efficiency in the members of the Army and Navy, "as you fellows say it does," it also promotes the same desirable conditions in the men who clerk, who sell goods, who work in the factories, who raise crops, argue in court, and practice medicine.

They say they do not want to be singled out as exceptionally bad or weak or to be held up as especially in need of protective care; they want to be treated just like other people.

There is something convincing and logical in this presentation of the case that the cleverest liquor sophist cannot gainsay. If the welfare and excellency of work of the enlisted men and lads are promoted by keeping liquor away from them by law, why must the remainder of the nation go stumbling along at a poor dying rate, handicapped at every step by the diabolical accessibility of the legalized liquor shops? In this great war of the ages, the people who are left at home as well as those who are to fight, are going to need sound brains and sound bodies. Why should they be allowed to run the risk of being rendered unfit by the continuance in their midst of the dramshop, the brewery and the distillery?

Turn and twist the facts as one may, there seems not a scintilla of common sense or justification for permitting the liquor traffic to continue to disease, destroy, demoralize and degenerate the citizens of our great commonwealth.

"GOING OUT OF BUSINESS"

Whether or not the Sixty-fifth Congress distinguishes itself by passing a nation-wide prohibition war measure, the drink business is losing heart and gradually eliminating itself. On their own initiative sagacious liquor dealers are withdrawing from the trade in alcoholic beverages. Especially significant was the announcement the other day of the president of Chapin & Gore, among the largest and oldest whisky manufacturing concerns in the country, that it was preparing to sell out. Not all the men who are retiring from liquor selling are quite so frank in giving their reasons therefor as was a St. Louis dealer, Emil Nathan by name, who, on withdrawing from a business he had conducted for forty-nine years, explained that he was taking this action because the prohibitionists "had so discredited the liquor business that a man of culture and refinement could no longer remain in it."

If he voices the feelings of many of his fellow liquor dealers, as undoubtedly he does, it is verily a sign even more encouraging than the constantly increasing acquisition of prohibition territory and enactment of prohibition legislation. This change of attitude on the part of the liquor men themselves is the end toward which the temperance advocates have been working since the day of the Crusade. When the people who patronize the saloons have come to see how thoroughly unmoral and vicious the traffic in liquors is, and have therefore ceased to help perpetuate it, and when the men engaged in the business have come to realize that no decent, self-respecting man can engage in it, the victory is at hand, and it is a permanent victory, a victory forever and a day, that can never be overturned.

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do you know the answers to these questions? They may be found in this number of THE UNION SIGNAL.

The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. What prohibition measure is under consideration by Congress at the present time?
2. What is the one basic fundamental truth that disproves the "harmlessness of beer" argument?
3. Explain why prohibition of the manufacture and sale of beer is a necessary step in the purification of politics.
4. In what state did the prohibition law go into effect the first of the month?
5. Contrast war conditions in South Carolina at the present time with those obtaining during the Spanish-American war.
6. What testimony to the value of prohibition is given by piano salesmen covering the dry western states?
7. Give the explanation of a St. Louis liquor dealer for withdrawing from the business after having been connected with it for forty-nine years.
8. Name certain benefits resulting from a vigorous prosecution of medal contest work.
9. Mention some of the changes that have taken place in Portland, Oregon, during the year and one-half in which prohibition has been in effect.
10. What different lines of patriotic service are suggested in the plans given by the National W. C. T. U.?

PROMOTION OF MRS. W. A. LOYNE, NATIONAL AND STATE W. C. T. U. SUPERINTENDENT

ELLEN R. RICHARDSON, President New Hampshire W. C. T. U.

In the home-going of Mrs. W. A. Loyne, the National W. C. T. U. and the state W. C. T. U. of New Hampshire have sustained the loss of a most efficient and faithful worker. For more than a quarter of a century, with rare consecration and devotion, Mrs. Loyne served the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the Granite state as superintendent of Work Among Lumbermen. So well was the work conducted under her supervision that it attracted the attention of the National organization, and at the convention held in Denver, Colorado, October, 1908, Mrs. Loyne was made National superintendent of Work Among Lumbermen and Miners.

Mrs. Loyne greatly enjoyed the National Convention at Indianapolis last fall. She appeared in such good health when she gave the annual report of her special line of work that the announcement, a few weeks later, that she had entered the hospital at Laconia, New Hampshire, for a serious operation, was a complete surprise to her friends. For a time she rallied from the ordeal and with her usual optimistic and heroic spirit resumed the lighter duties of her office and these she continued until a short time before her promotion to higher activities.

Quiet and unassuming in manner, Mrs. Loyne was a doer rather than a talker. She was a devoted wife and mother, and it was in her home that she appeared at her best. She was an ideal hostess; many times has the writer enjoyed her hospitality. The latchstring was always out at the Loyne home and whether the guest was a lumberjack from the woods or the District superintendent, the welcome was equally cordial.

During the years of her willing service she uttered in the hearing of her comrades no word of discouragement concerning the work or disparagement of the workers. Always willing, cheerful and uncomplaining under all circumstances, she earnestly and faithfully performed the manifold duties of her busy life.

For many years Mr. and Mrs. Loyne have labored together most harmoniously in the service of the Master. Without the help of his wife Mr. Loyne could not have accomplished such successful work in his pastorate, and without his sympathy and co-operation Mrs. Loyne would have been unable to carry on her great work for the men in the woods and mines of the state and nation. During the past year Mrs. Loyne also had the assistance of her daughter, Mrs. Etta Loyne Davis, who tenderly cared for her mother during her illness.

Mr. Loyne and his family have been residents of New Hampshire for more than forty years, but at the last session of the New Hampshire Methodist Episcopal conference he was appointed pastor of St. Paul's church, Lawrence, Mass., which is in the state conference. Funeral services were held at the parsonage July 16, and the following day in the Methodist church at East Haverhill, N. H., a former pastorate.

In their bereavement Mr. Loyne and his family have the sympathy of a very large circle of friends. New Hampshire has lost a worker whose place it will be hard to fill.

PATRIOTIC SERVICE PLANS URGED BY NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

(Continued from Page Three)

tection and national betterment commends itself to every woman citizen who is seeking channels through which she may express her awakened patriotism. Under our "do everything" system every woman may "do something"—something practical and immediate—for home and country, and for the "boys" who have left the one to serve the other. Let the local union, then, invite every woman of its community, who does not already belong, to become a member of the W. C. T. U. and enroll in some branch of practical W. C. T. U. emergency activity. (Report through Corresponding Secretary.)

In order to do efficient work THE UNION SIGNAL and your own state paper are indispensable. Plans will be amplified, new plans suggested and the latest news in the temperance field brought to the local union through the medium of these papers.

GENERAL OFFICERS

ANNA A. GORDON, President.
ELLA A. BOOLE, Vice-President-at-Large.
FRANCES P. PARKS, Corresponding Secretary.
ELIZABETH P. ANDERSON, Recording Secretary.
SARA H. HOGE, Assistant Recording Secretary.
MARGARET C. MUNNS, Treasurer.

NATIONAL SUPERINTENDENTS

MARGARET DYE ELLIS, Legislation.
ELLA HOOVER THACHER, Soldiers and Sailors.
LELLA M. SEWALL, Flower Mission and Relief.
MARY E. BROWN, Moral Education.
LUCIA F. ADDITON, Temperance and Labor.
ELLA B. BLACK, Foreign Speaking People.

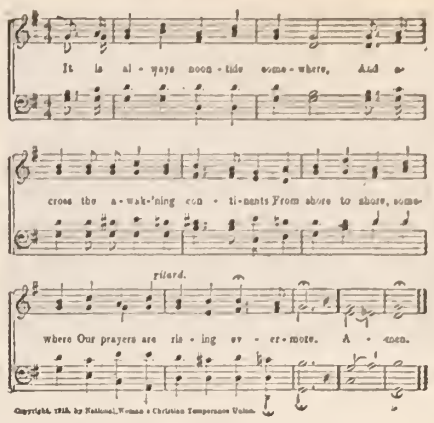
WHITE RIBBON LEADER FIRST WOMAN MEMBER OF A CANADIAN LEGISLATURE

Mrs. L. C. McKinney, vice-president for the West of the Dominion of Canada W. C. T. U., has been elected to the Alberta legislature as an Independent member, the first Canadian woman to be honored in this way.

THE NO-DRINK MILITARY ORDER AT WORK IN CALIFORNIA

Since prohibition has been in effect among the men of the United States Navy, the saloons of Vallejo, California, are being transformed into candy stores and ice cream parlors. The first week of July two saloons were converted into ice cream parlors. Every week since has seen a similar change. Although cafes, cabarets and dance halls are operating very little liquor is in evidence.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



AT THE NOONTIDE HOUR

At the sacred noontide hour let the white ribboners of the land unite in prayer daily for our country and all other countries, that all may come to see the true Christian and humanitarian point of view in this world crisis; for the protection of "our boys" from the physical and moral deterioration from drink and vice that follow in the wake of war; for our President and his advisers that divine wisdom may rule every decision, that lasting peace may speedily come and the will of the Father of all peoples be done throughout the earth.

THE PERFECT WAY

O Lord, by all thy dealings with us, whether of joy or pain, of light or darkness, let us be brought to thee. Let us value no treatment of thy grace simply because it makes us happy or because it makes us sad, because it gives us, or denies us what we want; but may all that thou sendest us bring us to thee, that knowing thy perfectness, we may be sure in every disappointment that thou art still loving us, in every darkness that thou art still enlightening us and in every enforced idleness that thou art still using us; yea, in every death that thou art giving us life, as in his death thou didst give life to thy Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

—Phillips Brooks.

GIVE THE CONTROLLING MOTIVE!

Lord, keep me one—in deed and word and thought;
With such distractions all the world is rife
And different aspects cleave, as with a knife,
In fragments small the good that must be sought.
Give the controlling motive, for untaught
By thy divinity I am at strife,
And shreds and patches make my troubled life;
From out my chaos order must be brought.
Oh, unify, direct, subdue, control
These warring elements, diverse desires,
These conflicts of the timid flesh with soul;
Hush thou the voice that breathes the worldly word.
Attune these ears to hear thee speak, O Lord;
Quench with thy spirit all the earthly fires!

—Caroline Hazard.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS ELLA A BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N Y
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS FRANCES P PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N D
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

August 3—Fresh Air Mission Day—Birthday of Lady Henry Somerset.
August 28—Birthday of Lucy Webb Hayes.
September 28—Children's Harvest Home (Birthday of Frances E. Willard)

OF INTEREST TO CONTEST WORKERS

ADELIA E. CARMAN

The demand for new selections has been heeded and the book containing them is sent out with the hope that it may bridge over the time until the next edition with more patriotic selections added, is published. Several have been sent me by Medal Contest superintendents; one or two are familiar to many.

The selections, "His Flag and the Country for Which It Stands," and "His Mother," are too long for a contest recitation but may be used while the judges are arriving at a decision, or may be divided and given by two contestants. The first selection mentioned has been dramatized and makes a fine play. It may be secured from the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill., or from me. The price of this contest book, owing to the increased cost of production, is fifteen cents net.

5414 Broadway, Chicago, Ill.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. M. C. PATE, Hawkinsville, Ga., a white ribboner, well known and active in county and state organizations.

MISS AGNES TENNANT, Wauwatosa, Wis., treasurer of the local union, and a faithful and loved worker in both local and county W. C. T. U.

H. FRANCES MILLER, Philadelphia, Pa., a consecrated Christian, the octogenarian aunt of Miss H. Frances Jones and Miss Josephine Jones, prominent W. C. T. U. workers in state, county and city. Like her nieces Miss Miller was active from childhood along Christian development and temperance reform lines.

MRS. LILLIE BAKER, Brasher Falls, N. Y., the beloved president of the local union and a worker who will be greatly missed.

GEORGE L. KNAPP, Moscow, Idaho, an honorary member of the local union and husband of one of Moscow's most devoted white ribboners.

MRS. MARY F. HUXTABLE of Conway, Fla., president of the Third district W. C. T. U. and formerly a resident of Connorsville, Ind. Ever forgetful of self she worked tirelessly for the cause of prohibition, and as a faithful Christian, left her mark for good on home, community and state, endearing herself to many.

MRS. ANNA ANDERSON, Milton, Ore., a devout and consistent Christian, active in church and temperance work. A few weeks before her death she was made a life member of the local union. As a tribute to Mrs. Anderson, at the memorial service ten members of her Sunday school class joined the W. C. T. U.

At the end of life we shall not be asked how much pleasure we had in it, but how much service we gave in it; not how full it was of success, but how full it was of sacrifice; not how happy we were, but how helpful we were; not how ambition was gratified, but how love was served. Life is judged by love, and love is known by her fruits.—HUGH BLACK.

Mrs. Ella A. Boole a Welcome Speaker at New Jersey Institute

Special Correspondence

A fine array of speakers graced the platform of the summer institute of the New Jersey W. C. T. U. held in Ocean Grove, July 19, Miss Esther H. Elfreth, state president, presiding. The guest of honor, Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National vice-president-at-large, the state vice-president, Mrs. Emma Bourne, the state corresponding secretary, Mrs. Isabella H. Demarest, Miss Elma A. Mathis, state recording secretary, the state treasurer, Mrs. Ethel S. Ackerman, Mrs. Mary D. Tomlinson, National superintendent of Social Meetings, and for thirty-one years president of Union county, and many members of the state executive committee were all there to add interest and inspiration to the occasion.

The opening song service was conducted by Mrs. Morton Bateman, followed by prayer by Mrs. Tomlinson and a talk on the benefits of the institute by the president of Monmouth county, Mrs. S. S. Smock. The state superintendent of the Literature department, Miss Ida Lillian Page, and others, discussed "Some of Our Weapons," periodicals, literature, cartoons, and posters. It was a great disappointment that Mrs. Addie B. Parsels of Pennsylvania could not be present to address the institute. "The Religion for a Troubled Age" was the subject of a choice Bible reading by Mrs. W. S. Barker. Mrs. Robertson, president of Passaic county, led in noontide prayer. The "Four-fold Cord: Woman, Christian, Temperance, Union," was eloquently unraveled by Mesdames Irving and Demarest, Miss Goodwin and Dr. Eva W. Lake. "The Prohibition Situation in our State" was discussed by Mrs. Gebhardt, president of Hunterdon county, and others.

Anti-Narcotics Contests

In view of the established fact that tobacco is poisonous to the system and undeniably injurious to the eyes, that students using the weed in any form are seldom graduated with honors, and that the cigaret habit is rapidly on the increase among the youth of the land, it should be the bounden duty of every local W. C. T. U. to appoint a department superintendent who will conduct as often as permitted anti-narcotic contests.

Go into the schools and note the nervousness and the dull, expressionless eyes of many of the pupils. Investigation reveals that the use of cigarets, which opens the door to continuous indulgence in vile thoughts, and also to liquor drinking, is responsible for the alarming condition of affairs.

Through ignorance many stumble and fall who might be saved if told of the barriers in the way of attaining noble manhood. The coming generation is upon the verge of a horrible deathtrap; let us use the trumpet call of the contest, that new ram's horn, which will awaken the consciences of the indifferent and arouse young and old from the demoralizing stupor caused by the use of narcotics.

Ask the teachers and the principal if you may not have the privilege of furnishing to the children contestants recitations dealing with the evil effects of tobacco upon the system and you will be surprised to find that in nearly every case they will gladly consent to help in the effort.

New Jersey is one of the four states without a single dry county. Cumberland, Salem and Ocean counties make the best dry showing. Salem has seven dry townships and as many dry towns and villages. Cumberland exceeds that number.

There was joy in the white ribbon heart of New Jersey when the state president announced that Mrs. Ella A. Boole would be the evening speaker in place of the Rev. Dr. Clarence True Wilson who was unable to fill his engagement. "The Onward March of the Great Reform" was the subject upon which she spoke. Going back to Ocean Grove beginnings she referred to the time when with Dr. Boole she helped in the establishment of W. C. T. W. work there. "Nothing has changed more in its aspect than the work of this great reform," she said, "and we seem just on the brink of prohibition for the nation. If we win prohibition for this nation it virtually means prohibition for the whole world."

Her description of her Alaskan campaign of a year ago was indeed fascinating and made Americans feel rich in the possession of that great country. The first bill in the first legislature of Alaska gave women the vote, so much do they honor and appreciate the worth and wisdom of their women.

FIRST TRIPLE GRAND GOLD MEDAL CONTEST

PROFESSOR W. P. RANKIN, M. A.

A triple grand gold medal contest, probably the first of its kind in America, was held May 25 in Los Angeles. It was the thirtieth contest within the year held by Mrs. Rosa Elwell, Medal Contest superintendent for the East Hollywood union.

All competitors in these thirty contests were boys averaging about fourteen years in age, not a girl having competed.

Nine of the boys who had already won both silver and gold medals in these contests, and none of whom had previously competed for a higher medal, entered this triple contest. Six of them came on at the Y. M. C. A. auditorium in the morning, Walter Swearingen being declared the victor, and five at the Y. W. C. A. auditorium in the afternoon, with George Drasher unanimously selected as winner by the judges. In the evening a very elaborate program was given at the First Methodist church as the finale of the thirty-fifth annual convention of the Southern California W. C. T. U., Mrs. M. Haddow, state superintendent of Medal Contests, presiding, and Mrs. Rosa Elwell conducting the contest. Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, state W. C. T. U. president, was the guiding spirit and inspiration of the occasion. At this meeting seven contestants appeared, and Stanley Quebe was the fortunate winner in this, the third contest at which he had spoken that day. More than seventy-five boys, representing nearly all the high schools and intermediate schools, and many of the grammar schools of the city, took part in this entertainment.

The Custer school orchestra, consisting of thirty-four instruments, and the Polytechnic boys' glee club of twenty-two voices added much to the excellence of the program, as did also the charming personality of little James Bush, a nine-year-old dramatic artist and vocal soloist of marvelous ability. James was with us in the first silver contest, the first gold contest, and this, the first grand gold contest. In this contest he sang "Little Boy Blue," whom he truly represented in his dainty blue attire. Other good musical numbers were also enjoyed.

The awarding of the three grand gold medals took place at the evening meeting and was indeed a notable event. Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, in her happy and inimitable manner, presented the medals as Mrs. Rosa Elwell proudly pinned them over the hearts of the winners, Stanley Quebe of Manual Arts high school, George Drasher of Manchester grammar school and Walter Swearingen of Virgil Intermediate school.

Three of these nine competitors in this first triple grand gold contest, Gordon Elwell, Donald Miller and Marden Paterson, were on the first silver contest program a year ago. During the year Gordon spoke on fifteen of the programs, Donald on seven and Marden on twenty of them. Of the remaining three contestants, Donald Johns and Harold Miller, each spoke on nine programs and Willard Warner on fourteen. Willard, whether on the program or not, attended every contest held after he first entered. These nine boys made ninety-nine speeches on these programs during the year in twenty-five different churches of Los Angeles and many other speeches elsewhere.

There are now seventy boys of the city vitally interested in this contest work, fifty-eight having already selected declamations, and thirty-eight having delivered one or more during the year, some of them having at their tongue's end as many as four ten-minute declamations, any one of which they could give on request.

At present four boys are eligible for a diamond medal contest, nine for a grand gold contest, six for a gold contest and six are ready and eleven partly ready for a silver contest. There are many others who look with favor on the work and will doubtless join us.

In starting boys on these contests we have limited them to boys of the eighth and ninth grades in school so as to make age, size and ability approximately the same for all contestants. However, when a boy once enters we do not bar him from future contests on account of grade.

As we avoid duplicating the selections, only three have been repeated, one once and two twice, in all these contests. We have taken contests to twenty-five different churches of the city and the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. during the year.

We frequently have in the same contest Protestant, Catholic and Jewish boys who draw no lines on religion but on good citizenship only, and the friendly rivalry that develops and the due deference they show each other is of the highest value. Every boy knows every competitor well, for we introduce each new contestant to the members of the old force and make it a feature of the work to have him feel welcome. We seek to cultivate an altruistic spirit which shall make each individual boy truly generous and helpful to his fellows.

NOTE

This article, written by Mr. Rankin, will be of much interest to contest workers everywhere. The conditions in many localities would be greatly benefited if such a worker as he has proven to be could be secured. His influence over the boys has been wonderful in development of character as well as along oratorical lines and we hope it may be continued indefinitely. It may be said, also, that Mr. Rankin provided two of the medals in the name of the W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Rosa Elwell, Medal Contest superintendent for the East Hollywood W. C. T. U., received most efficient aid from Mrs. B. F. Bailey, Sunday School superintendent, Miss Leisk and Miss Mary S. Jones, teachers, and Mr. George M. Pierson and Mr. C. L. Welch, attorneys. They and the members of the Hollywood union who worked with her and Mr. Rankin say it would have been impossible without his help to accomplish what has been done. In the words of the state president, Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, "The whole thing was a wonder to me and one of the greatest joys of my life."—A. E. C.

Medal Contests Pay

For the last twenty-two years the average yearly net receipts to local unions from medal contests has been $25,000. One year it was $35,000, and the least amount in any one year was $19,000. As an illustration of the way medal contests help the finances of local unions, Mrs. Etta B. Hite, Illinois superintendent of Medal Contests, recently reported the receipt of $100 from one diamond medal contest. Other organizations are noting with keen interest the financial success of this work and are taking it up enthusiastically. This is especially true of church societies.

World's Contest Notes

Esther Griffin of Yokohama, Japan, who superintends the contest work in that city, reports that great interest is being taken and much good accomplished.

The first contest held in Liberia, Africa, was recently conducted at the Industrial Academy in Fortsville, Grand Passe county, by Mrs. E. L. Davis. She feels that the pleadings of the children against strong drink have great effect.

Mrs. S. W. Bare, superintendent of the Medal Contest department of India, is doing splendid work. The children and young people are greatly interested and the contests are well attended.

The contests introduced in Porto Rico by Miss Annie Robbins helped very materially in educating public sentiment, resulting in the victory for prohibition July 16.

A Loyal Temperance Legion has recently held its fifth silver medal contest in Aneon, C. Z. The sixth silver contest will be held soon and the legion will then be ready for a gold contest. Mrs. C. W. Ports is the energetic superintendent.

T. S. Phillips of the Times, Jamaica, B. W. I., is deeply interested in declamatory contests. He writes, "You will be pleased to hear that the contests so far have taken a firm hold in Kingston, Jamaica. Much good is being done to educate public opinion and to create a healthy temperance tone. We want to extend the movement." Mrs. V. O'Sullivan of Grand Cayman, Jamaica, is superintendent of this work.

Contest supplies have recently been sent to Chili and Argentine Republic, also to the Isle of Sicily.

Mrs. Jessie Breaden of Tasmania has ordered supplies and is planning to hold several contests.

Bible Reading Contest

Information is asked regarding Bible reading contests. Quite a number have been held in different states. Oregon conducted the first one and has held the largest number. These contests were endorsed by the National Evangelistic superintendent at the time and also by the present superintendent, Mrs. Mary E. Kuhl, selections from their compilations and Bible stories being used. The Bible furnishes oratory, as for instance Paul's defense before King Agrippa. For romance, read Ruth and Naomi and you will find poetry in the Songs of Solomon. Many chapters may be given in their entirety and excellent compilations may be arranged. Take the subjects of purity, total abstinence, obedience, charity, etc.

Such contests may be successfully inaugurated by any union and they certainly would not fail to interest the pastor and members of the churches.

Readers should be careful to avoid dramatic effect. A plain, unvarnished, dignified presentation of the truth as contained in the Bible, with clear, distinct enunciation and a pleasing voice will not fail to interest an audience, and prove beneficial to the contestant. The young people of the different church societies should have the help of their pastors in arranging and compiling the different selections.

Read Nehemiah 8:8: "So they read in the book of the law of God distinctly and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading."

MRS. WHITNEY'S HOUSE CLEANING PRINCIPLES

MRS. F. M. HOWARD

Mrs. Whitney was the pink of perfection. At house cleaning she was unexcelled. In fact, even the town of Hastings in which she had recently taken up her abode had attractions for her as a place of residence because of its tidy appearance. Its white houses and wide lawns, clean streets, and well-kept park had met the requirements of her beauty loving soul and caused her to choose it rather than a larger place ten miles away.

"It seems so tidy," she said to the minister's wife who came to call, "and I hope on closer acquaintance it will prove as good as it looks."

"It is like most of us, Mrs. Whitney, it has its faults," the caller replied with a faint smile. "We have tried to keep these in the background, segregated in a way, but I greatly fear—I dare say you haven't been up Saloon St. yet."

"Oh, is there a Saloon St.? Haven't you a W. C. T. U. here?" Mrs. Whitney's tone was brisk and alert, and her eyes bright. She was scenting war paint.

"Yes, we have one, but it is stationary, as one might say. We meet and part, and have only attained a program. Most of us are rather ashamed of it—but we are glad of an excuse to stay away."

"How many members have you?"

"Only ten, but we shall hope to have eleven since you have come, Mrs. Whitney." A suggestive smile dimpled Mrs. Moore's pretty face. "Perhaps a new member will brighten us up."

"Of course you have THE UNION SIGNAL."

"The president takes it, I believe, but as for the rest of us, we all have some really plausible excuse, I presume—so much other reading matter, for instance." Mrs. Moore smiled again, archly, and with a twinkle of merriment in her bright eyes, for she had tried to get a club of subscribers for a church paper once, and had had her experiences!

"I really do not see how you can expect to raise crops without machinery," Mrs. Whitney mused thoughtfully. "If there is a Saloon St. in this town, I'll venture to say there is need of real aggressive work, and THE UNION SIGNAL is as necessary as a needle in sewing a seam."

"Well, you join us, Mrs. Whitney, and tell the ladies so. We need you," Mrs. Moore urged, beginning to awaken to a real interest in the subject. "We meet at my house next week, and I will make a special effort to get all our ladies out to welcome you."

"Perhaps I shall stir up such a fuss that they will be sorry I joined," Mrs. Whitney laughed grimly. "I love to clean house, and it looks as if things needed to be set to rights some in Hastings, for all it looks so tidy and attractive, if a Saloon St. is supported here."

"Yes, indeed." Mrs. Moore's voice had a new ring of seriousness. "There are young people to guard, and older ones to help into reform work, and I am afraid we have become so accustomed to the sight of evil in our midst, that we are calloused."

After her caller had gone Mrs. Whitney's expressive face wore an earnest, thoughtful look. The liquor evil had entered very deeply into her life, and she hated it with all the force of her strong nature. She was childless and a widow because of it, and she detested a saloon from the very depths of her heart. She had ample means with which to work, her time was her own, and as she pondered, a plan slowly evolved itself in her active brain.

The first meeting was not satisfying. The attendance was good but there was a lack of enthusiasm which chilled the new member. The real, active work of the temperance cause seemed as far away from this nice, formal little meeting as the United Societies could desire. Indeed Saloon St. had no fear and no respect for the little "temperance club," which let them alone so conspicuously. The Hastings Gazette sometimes mentioned the meetings, but the liquor dealers were not close readers of that superior literature, and preferred to peruse the organs of their trade.

"I'll do it," thought Mrs. Whitney as she sat alone in the evening. "These good people need education, and nothing will rouse them out of their lethargy like fifty-two doses of UNION SIGNAL this coming year. Why that bright little Mrs. Cash didn't know what the constitutional prohibition amendment means. She had heard of it but she supposed it had something to do with the navy."

A few days later a crisp bill came out of Mrs. Whitney's tenth-box, for she was a careful tither, and a letter was despatched. She took no one into her confidence, obtaining the names in a most casual manner, and at the next meeting Mrs. Cash remarked, "THE UNION SIGNAL must be sending out sample copies. I found one in my mail box this morning."

Little Grandchildren of Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, Julia Adams Smith, Walter Armor Smith, and David Dudley Smith, Jr.

"So did I," chorused several of the others.

"Well, I am sure some of the items were most surprising," added Mrs. Moore. "I thought I was pretty well up on temperance, but I had really no idea the movement was making such strides. It makes one a little ashamed of living in a saloon town."

"But how can we help it?" asked one sister. "I suppose we have law enough on our side, to be sure, but if they won't enforce it—,"

"They must be educated until they will, and then vote the nuisance out. We can do it even without the suffrage; we would do it in short order if we had the vote behind us." There was a power as of dynamite in the clear, resonant voice, and the ladies looked at the new member respectfully.

The meeting was more interesting than any held for months, and Mrs. Whitney smiled as one after another mentioned some item she had read in THE SIGNAL which bore on the work.

"Suppose each one of us appoint ourselves a committee to go out and hunt new members," suggested Mrs. Brooks. "We are not strong enough to make an impression as we are, and I can think of so many who should belong—who would be a power and an influence if we could only get them to enlist."

Eyes brightened and voices took on quick, ringing tones at the thought of real work to do. It warmed Mrs. Whitney's heart like a ray of sunshine for she had been depressed by the lack of interest in a cause so vital.

The next meeting took place at Mrs. Whitney's own home, which was large and well appointed, furnished with taste and even elegance. She had made new friends in the meantime, and had taken the liberty of inviting a number who were not members and making a little social event of it. A half dozen or more young ladies assisted in the serving and listened eagerly to what was being said.

"I shall be so glad if they get after those saloons," remarked Nellie King as the girls were walking slowly homeward, "for Davie Cummings is getting so attached to his beer that I am ashamed to go out with him any more. There's never any telling when he will get really intoxicated, and then he's horrid and I'm afraid of him."

"It's the same with Billy Owen, though I mistrust that fraternal club of his is as much to blame as the saloons. Their bar is open any old time, and no one seems to object."

"That's true, Kate, and I know it," added Mary Oliver. "Jack never had touched a drop until he joined, and I know of other young men who would be ashamed to be seen on Saloon St. who think it quite respectable to drink at their club."

"That constitutional amendment which they were talking of would cover all that, wouldn't it?" asked Milly Price. "It seems to me that is the only effectual remedy for the whole thing."

"Of course it would, Milly, not in a day or a year, perhaps, but the point is just this: So long as breweries and distilleries are perfectly legal, and the sale of their products a commercial industry licensed by the government, there will be liquor sold and drunkards made."

Mary Oliver drew a long breath. "What a heaven this earth would be if every one were willing to do right."

"But as such an angelic condition is not likely to occur in our lifetime, Mary," laughed Milly, "let us do all in our power to get the people in our own town to come out for the decent thing. Mrs. Whitney wants to organize a Young People's Branch, and I told her I thought we could get a number of the other girls interested. For my own part I have never realized so clearly what the W. C. T. U. stands for as I have since THE UNION SIGNAL began coming."

"Nor I. Mrs. Wilson lent mother her National Convention numbers. They were great. I have never before been proud of being a woman."

The good seed sown that day began to spring up in abundant measure. THE UNION SIGNAL played a conspicuous part in inspiring, instructing and giving general help. The young people urged every new member, in particular, to become a subscriber. The circle widened until in time it became a force in the town.

"Saloon St. is beginning to tremble and, incidentally, to use bad language, mother," remarked the husband of one of the members, Mr. Oliver, one day before an important election, "so you see what you white ribboners are responsible for."

"We hope to be held guilty of a good deal more than that before we are through," Mrs. Oliver answered with a smile. "Mrs. Whitney says the house

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

THE SPIDER'S WEB

FOR THE CHILDREN

JENNIE N. STANDIFER

As Tommie Dale was returning from school one afternoon he picked up a small package of cigarets which had been dropped on the sidewalk. He was wondering if he could find the owner when a lady who was passing stopped and asked:

"Wouldn't it be wise, son, to throw those coffin tacks in the fire when you get home?"

"I don't know," stammered Tommie.

"Smoking is a habit that grows, my boy, and by and by it holds its victim as the spider does the fly—so that it is impossible to get free. Don't yield to the first temptation if you would grow up a strong, true man."

"I'll burn them," promised Tommie, with a grin.

She passed on and he put the package in his pocket and ran home. His mother had been called to see a sick neighbor, and Minnie, his older sister, was reading a book of fairy tales.

It was too warm for a fire in the grate, so he decided to burn the cigarets in the yard. He found some matches and went out in the back yard. He took the cigarets from his pocket and pulled one from the package. How nicely it was wrapped! The large boys in Tommie's grade smoked and said it was manly.

"Ben Garner says he smokes when he is lonesome and it does a lot of good," mused Tommie. "I'm lonesome. I wonder if just one little cigaret would help me? I'm going to try it, any way."

He struck a match, but his hand was shaky and the flame went out without lighting the cigaret.

Just then Towser began barking in the wood shed, and Tommie ran to see if he was chasing a rat. It was only a strange kitten, and he sat down on a box to watch the kitten climb to the rafters. Over the door he saw something white and filmy waving in the breeze. Sitting in a cunning little den was a great black spider.

"I don't believe he could catch a fly in that little wishy-washy web," thought Tommie. "That woman didn't know about spiders and cigarets. I will sit here and watch Mr. Spider and see what he can do."

For a few minutes nothing happened. Then a Daddy-Long-Legs peeped over the rafter and took a look at the spider's home. He seemed to like the pretty curtains, waving in the wind, and put one foot in the meshes. The spider came hurrying forward as if to say "How-do-you-do," and Daddy drew back his foot and ran away.

Then a fly buzzed by, and lighted just above the lacy hangings of the spider's house.

"You will have more sense than to go into Mr. Spider's house, Miss Fly," said Tommie, as he sprawled lazily on the floor.

But the fly took another journey around the pretty house and alighted quite near it. Tommie watched until his eyes blinked and then he imagined he heard the spider say:

"Walk in! Walk in, and welcome!"

"They say you would not let me out," buzzed the fly.

"You are strong and can break these little threads any time you wish. Walk in and see my pretty house." The spider's voice sounded so pleasant that Tommie wished that he could accept the invitation.

Then Daddy-Long-Legs came prancing down the wall and—zip! He landed squarely in the spider's curtain. He kicked and squirmed for a while and then seemed to go to sleep.

The fly was buzzing and circling around the web as if to find out what had happened to Daddy-Long-Legs and Tommie heard the spider give another cordial invitation to "walk in."

"Here is Tommie asleep in the wood shed, Mother." His sister's words roused Tommie and he sat up and looked around. "And there is my new kitty up on a rafter, hiding from Towser. O Tommie! See that dreadful black spider above the door! He has caught an old Daddy-Long-Legs and a poor little fly in his web."

"I will brush his house down and let them get away," said Tommie.

"With a stick he tore the lacy curtains from over the door, and down it fell at his feet! The big spider ran for a hiding place.

Carefully Tommie lifted the fly and Daddy-Long-Legs from the silky meshes, but they were quite dead.

"They got caught in the spider's web," said Minnie, "and he sucked the life out of them. It's just like the old giant in my fairy tales, who bound boys and girls with tiny cords called habits. They could not feel them at first, but after a while they could not get away and he choked them to death. What is that package sticking out of your pocket, Tommie?"

"It's a package of cigarets I found."

"What are you going to do with them?"

"Burn them, because a lady said they are to boys what spider webs are to flies."

MRS. WHITNEY'S HOUSE CLEANING PRINCIPLES

(Continued from Page Twelve)

cleaning will have just begun when we get our new mayor elected."

"Well, you must admit that the old one has kept the outside of the platter middling clean," he replied, quizzically.

"Yes. A man's neatness for all the world," scoffed Mrs. Oliver disdainfully, "but after the candidates of the Woman's Party, as you men are pleased to call it, are elected, we hope to make the inside of both cup and platter at least sanitary."

"No doubt we'll be able to see our faces in them, they'll shine so, father," added Tom, Junior, facetiously, as they went out together.

"Between you and me I hope they will win," added the young man as they went along. "Somehow I've never seen the matter in its true light until I began to read those SIGNALS that sis thinks so much of."

"It'll put a whole lot of fellows out of business if they do," remarked Mr. Oliver, thoughtfully. "Grass will grow in the paths of a number of court officials and others who make a living off the traffic, to say nothing of the saloonkeepers."

"Well, they might better get into some more honorable business than for us, as a town, to feed the saloon hopper. That slogan of the trade, 'Boys Wanted,' gets onto my nerves, father. I am so afraid that Harry is being drawn in—he is such a bright, willful little fellow, and—"

"My Harry. Tom, you must be mistaken. They shall never have my boy—," and Mr. Oliver turned a frightened face toward his eldest son. "We'll fight liquor out of this town, root and branch, Tom. The women are right—there's no safety for the boys and girls with wide open saloons gaping for them—," and Mr. Oliver passed his hand across his brow agitatedly. Danger to his boy put an entirely different complexion on the saloon question, kindling a fire under his lukewarm convictions which brought them to a boil in short order.

The house cleaning was carried to a most effectual finish, Saloon St. was swept clean of its spiders and their webs, and Mrs. Whitney's tidy soul rejoiced within her.

"We never could have done it without you to lead us, Mrs. Whitney," remarked Mrs. Moore as together they reviewed the past.

"Give God the glory, my dear," Mrs. Whitney made answer humbly.

A new edition of the
SUPERINTENDENT'S MANUAL
is just off the press. To every local officer this book is a NECESSITY, while every white ribboner would become more efficient by the study of department work and department plans as set forth in the manual.

Price, 10 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Sanitary Drinking Fountains

Also Drinking Fountains for Man and Beast.

Special prices to W. C. T. U. and all Charitable Societies.

This Fountain was erected by the W. C. T. U. of Luray, Va.

Write for Catalogue

J. W. Fiske Iron Works

56 & 58 Park Place
NEW YORK

A GIFT
that will be prized by any white ribboner is the
DAINTY BOW PIN
Made of gold and set with thirty pearls.
(Size ¾ inch.)
Price, postpaid, $3.50.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Series of Short Leaflets

For General Distribution Among Mothers, Fathers, Girls and Boys.

MOTHERS' HOME SERIES
"Watch Me."
The Things We Forget.
Mother's Smile.
His Mother's Version.
The Word of Commendation.
A Mother's Forgiveness.
The Timely Rest.
Your White Ribbon.
Home Keeping Hearts Are Happiest.
Mothers' Sons.
A Word to Mothers.

FATHERS' HOME SERIES
Ought Little Ones to Sign the Pledge?
What Burbank, the "Plant Wizard," says of Alcohol and Tobacco.
Saloon Couldn't Have His Boy.
To Make a House Into a Home.
A Safe Place.
Papa's Prayers.
What Changed Him.
Written on the Heart.
Nurturing a Cheerful Spirit.
An Unusual Chum.

GIRLS' OWN SERIES
Character Pots
The Words of My Mouth.
Martha Ann's Song.
Gifts and Love.
A Lavender Voice.
Kept Clean.
Where Are Your Thoughts?
When the Bible Speaks.
The Rule of the Game.
Mother.

BOYS' POCKET SERIES
His Turn Now.
Too Small to Divide.
A Talk by Burdette.
The Child is Father of the Man.
It Takes Two.
Prompt People.
Two of Us.
The Power of Control.
Stop a While.
Still Chiselling.
A Message.
How Alcohol Works.
How Are You Building?
The Law of Habit.

Size, 3½x6 inches.
Price, 2 cents each; per 50, 15 cents; per 100, 20 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

AMONG OUR WORKERS

Mrs. Etta Sadler Shaw, National evangelist, during the last four months of the school year gave more than 150 talks on ethical and patriotic subjects in the schools of Grand Rapids, Mich., and organized thirteen Loyal Temperance Legions with a joint membership of more than 1,000.

Rushford, (Minn.) W. C. T. U. recently celebrated its thirtieth anniversary, Miss Rozette Hendrix, state W. C. T. U. president, being the guest of honor on that occasion. Its members are busily occupied with war relief work. Twenty-seven "housewives" for the boys at Ft. Snelling, have been completed, and the women are knitting wristers and other articles. This union, with ninety paid members, is working strenuously to increase its membership. The finances of the union are in a gratifying condition, fifty dollars' worth of rugs have been made and sold during the year, in addition to other activities which have added to the balance in the treasury. The union owns a moving picture film, purchased at a cost of $20, which was presented to a good house at the moving picture theater.

ST. LOUIS WHITE RIBBONERS WORKING FOR AMBULANCE FUND

Special Correspondence

Most gratifying has been the response of the good people of St. Louis to the call of the St. Louis Woman's Christian Temperance Union to do their bit for the white ribbon ambulance to be sent to France. Again it has been conclusively proved that W. C. T. U. women are minute women, for within two weeks a patriotic lawn fete of large proportions was planned and carried to a most successful finish. The fete was held from three to ten p. m., July 17, with an almost continuous program, on the spacious lawn of Mrs. M. F. Watts, one of our members. Old Glory, bunting, flowers, Japanese lanterns and parasols, and daintily garbed girls were everywhere in evidence. The program was strictly patriotic, which means that the patriotic measure of first importance, War Prohibition, was not overlooked. Addresses were made by Rev. Geistweit, D. D., pastor of the Third Baptist Church, and recently of California, where he was in the forefront of the state-wide prohibition fight; by Madame Pernet McCarty of France, whose appeal for ambulances and yet more ambulances was most touching; and by J. Lionberger Davis, president of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce, who urged the women to be unceasing in their fight for clean moral conditions surrounding "our boys" both at home and abroad. The afternoon's program was brightened considerably when Miss Sarah Edwards, formerly of the Park Opera Company, St. Louis, sang "It's Heaven in Old Missouri," accompanied by the First Regiment band.

The evening program was rendered especially interesting by the singing of the national airs of all the allied nations in their native languages as the respective flags were enthusiastically unfurled. The singers were among the very finest the city affords and as the air for many blocks rang with the strains of the national melodies, the large company gathered on the lawn paid fitting deference to the countries represented. Preceding the singing of the "Star Spangled Banner," a detachment of "Our Navy Lads" arrived aboard a ship-on-wheels, with flags flying and bugles blowing, and circling about the singer, they held above her, as she sang, a star spangled banner by the side of the navy ensign.

The address of the evening was given by Mr. Charles M. Hay, one of St. Louis' ablest lawyers and orators, and a man who has long stood for prohibition in the state legislature and elsewhere.

The ceremonies of the day were presided over by Mrs. Ross Hayes-Schachner, recently elected president of the St. Louis Federation, assisted by Mrs. Charles M. Hay, vice-president. Mrs. Eliza B. Ingalls, for twenty-seven years president of the Federation, was present during the afternoon, much to the delight of her audience, and also assisted with the program.

Throughout the day ice cream in cones, dishes and bricks, and pure fruit juices were sold to such an extent that the supply had to be many times replenished. Carnations were also sold by the girls of the Y. P. B. The crowd for the day was conservatively estimated at between nine and twelve hundred.

St. Louis has been made the distributing station in the Soldiers' and Sailors' Work for a large section of Missouri (W. C. T. U.) territory, and has discharged this duty faithfully, having sent out 750 song books, a large number of Testaments and Gospels and countless magazines. On its own account it has given entertainments to the boys at Camp Maxwell, has kept them supplied with clean gun rags, was largely instrumental in the establishment of a Y. M. C. A. tent and prior to the placing of this tent held the first and only Protestant services at the camp. Its members have made regular visits to the Barracks Hospital, carrying flowers and delicacies, and before Camp Maxwell is broken up it plans to give a large entertainment, with the assistance of the boys themselves, followed by a pie supper.

In the midst of all these activities, telegrams, letters and petitions to Congress in behalf of war prohibition have not been overlooked. The summer months witness no cessation in the efforts of the St. Louis W. C. T. U.

PROHIBITION FANS

make useful souvenirs for distribution in fairs and other open air meetings.

An attractive fan in flag blue, with the slogan

PROTECT OUR AMERICAN YOUTH BY PROHIBITING THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

on one side, and upon the reserve side the map showing the dry states.

Place these in churches, send to the hospitals, and keep a liberal supply on your porch.

Spread the story of prohibition progress by the generous use of these fans.

Price, per dozen, 35 cents; per hundred, $2.00; per five-hundred, $8.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

¶We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.
¶Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
118-120 Fifth Ave., New York
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

Indiana Liquor Politicians Oppose Constitutional Convention

MARY WOODARD

For fifty years the suffragists of Indiana have been trying to secure legislation granting to women some form of franchise. In all but nine sessions of the legislature since 1865 one or more bills have been introduced only to be voted down or buried in committee. Since the organization of the W. C. T. U. in the state the leaders of our organization have been active in the work and have led the agitation for suffrage. No history of the suffrage movement would be complete that did not include mention of Zerelda G. Wallace, Helen M. Gougar and other notable women. The rank and file of the organization have also been a unit in demanding the right of franchise and have walked weary miles securing signatures to petitions, holding public meetings and in every other way trying to make their influence felt in favor of the ballot in the hands of women.

Just before the legislature of 1915, through the influence of the leaders in the W. C. T. U., notably Mrs. Culla J. Vayhinger, state president, and Mrs. Luella McWhirter, then state superintendent of Franchise and a former state president, there was organized the Legislative Council of Indiana Women composed of representatives from the W. C. T. U. and seven other women's organizations of a state-wide character. This council has been interested in a number of bills that have been introduced in the legislature but has been most active in trying to secure "votes for women." Constitutional revision is necessary to give women full suffrage, but a W. C. T. U. woman, Mrs. Gertrude Q. Campbell, state Press superintendent, first suggested the partial suffrage bill which was passed by the legislature of 1917 and has now become a law. A similar bill was introduced in the legislature of 1915, but at the behest of a most disgraceful liquor lobby was "buried in committee."

The legislature of 1917 also passed a bill providing for the holding of a constitutional convention and specifically granted to women voters the right to vote for delegates to the said convention. The W. C. T. U. at once entered upon a campaign of education to prepare the women of the state for their new duties as voting citizens. A course of study was prepared and material provided for carrying out the work. Our speakers have been doing valiant service in the field and local women have been polling the voters and securing the registration of the women.

In the meantime the liquor men, machine politicians and others opposed to a new constitution have been busy. An injunction against holding the constitutional convention was filed and tried before Judge Thorne of Marion county circuit court who rendered a decision sustaining the bill calling for the convention, except the part which granted to women the right to vote for delegates. An appeal from this decision was taken to the supreme court of the state, which gave its decision July 13 that the entire bill was unconstitutional. Four judges concurred in this decision, but the fifth, Judge Lairy of Logansport, dissented. The partial suffrage law still stands, but may also be attacked in the courts.

The women of the state are disappointed, but not discouraged or disheartened. With greater earnestness and zeal than ever we shall work for a new constitution in Indiana that shall include state-wide prohibition and ballots for women.

Jennie Smith, National railroad evangellst, 319 E St. N. E. Two squares east of Union Station, Washington, D. C. Rooms at reasonable rates.

Virginia News and Narrative

Special Correspondence

An interesting and helpful conference of the general officers of the Virginia W. C. T. U. was recently held at Evergreen Home, the residence of Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, state W. C. T. U. president. There was great rejoicing that the beloved state leader is again able to resume her work. Plans were made for the annual convention to assemble in September at Charlottesville, the seat of Virginia's famed university. It is easy to predict that the first convention since state-wide prohibition became effective will be enthusiastic.

The strongest evidence, perhaps, of the success of prohibition is the change of mind of its former enemies, who having seen the marked improvement in general conditions are now soundly convinced of its benefits and have become the outspoken champions of prohibition.

State's Attorney Taylor of Henry, a small county near the mountains and a former moonshiners' stronghold, said recently, "Formerly Henry averaged a dozen murder trials a year, but since last November there has not been one." Judge Harvie, of the judicial circuit which includes the surrounding sections, is quoted as saying that not one felony case has come before him since the advent of prohibition.

Many of the colored race are being led away by labor agents who promise them not only high wages but the opportunity for getting strong drink in abundance, in Ohio particularly. As the Buckeye state has a large contingent of Virginia settlers, may they work with special diligence to win in the present campaign.

Recently there passed away in Auburn, Maine, a faithful worker, Mrs. S. I. Roberts, for whose memory the Roberts Memorial union in Dareville, Virginia, is ever grateful. Mrs. Roberts and her husband, a prominent cotton mill superintendent, were both loyal and generous white ribboners, contributing money for a temperance hall as a memorial to a young son. There is no finer union in Virginia than the one bearing the family name of its beloved benefactors, both of whom have passed to their reward.

A pretty tribute was recently paid to a winsome local union president in Richmond. The women of the union bearing her name, Ella V. Wood, gathered on her birthday and planted a beautiful tree in her honor.

W. C. T. U. NAPKINS
heavy crepe paper, with dainty pink flowered border and W. C. T. U. monogram in gold in corner.
Price, per 25, 20 cents; per 100, 75 cents.

FOLDED DRINKING CUPS
made of waxed paper with Woman's Christian Temperance Union printed on same in blue.
Price, per dozen, 10 cents; per 100, 50 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Chippewa Indians Give Suffrage to Women

Minnesota Chippewa Indians, in council at Bemidji recently, granted suffrage to women, although they refused representation in their council to the chiefs of the tribe on the grounds of democracy, it is stated. The matter came up for consideration because of the presence of a United States government stenographer, a young woman, who was the solitary woman delegate. The younger Indians championed equal rights, and Miss Coffey was duly seated as a delegate.

In the Greater Contest

We have only to be honorable men to agree with that solemn appeal by the Times in supporting Lord Kitchener's protest against drink:

"Supposing our soldiers were preparing themselves to uphold the honor of their country in the Olympian Games," said the Times. "Their friends would help them and would be filled with horror if they saw one going wrong. To encourage him to drink would be held an act of treachery deliberately intended to injure him and the national cause. What are the Olympian Games, or any other contests whatever, compared with this? They are play, make-believe. This is the real thing, the true test of manhood. Is our manhood, then, to be a shame or an honor to us?"—Defeat or Victory.

Cruise for Vacation on the Lakes

7 day Trip

5 day Trip

The Magnificent Steel Steamship "Minnesota" to BUFFALO (NIAGARA FALLS) and RETURN $40 Including Meals and berth

via Charlevoix, Harbor Springs and historic Mackinac Island, stopping at Detroit and viewing both ways by daylight the beautiful scenery of the Detroit River and St. Clair Flats, stopping at all points of interest. Nine-hour stop at Buffalo allows plenty of time to see Niagara Falls. One way $25, including berth and meals. During season leaves Chicago Saturdays 1:30 p. m.

The Elegant Steel Steamship "Missouri" to SAULT STE. MARIE and RETURN $27.50 Including Meals and Berth

via Charlevoix, Petoskey, Harbor Spgs & Mackinac Island—running the "Soo" River by daylight, returning via a portion of Georgian Bay and the scenic Grand Traverse Bay, stopping at all points of interest. One Way $14, including meals & berth. During season leaves Chicago Mondays 4:00 p. m. S. S. "Missouri" also makes a special trip each week to Onekama, Frankfort, Glen Haven and Glen Arbor, leaving Chicago Saturdays at 4:00 p. m.

Our line of steamers offers you the greatest possible opportunity for real rest and genuine pleasure.

The Elegant Steel Steamships
MINNESOTA, MISSOURI, MANITOU, ILLINOIS

offer unrivaled service between Chicago, Charlevoix, Petoskey, Bay View, Harbor Springs, Mackinac Island, Ludington, Manistee, Onekama, Frankfort, GlenHaven, GlenArbor, Leland(via auto or connecting steamer from Glen Haven), and Traverse Bay ports, Sault Ste. Marie, Detroit and Buffalo, connecting with all lines for Lake Superior and Eastern Points. Book of tours and folder mailed on request.

Northern Michigan Transportation Co.
J. C. CONLEY, Gen. Pass. Agt., New Municipal Pier (East End Grand Ave.,) Chicago, Ill.

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year
Club rate for ten or more subscriptions, 25c a year
No other premium allowed.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . $1.52 a year (6s. 3d.)
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . . . . 47c a year (1s. 1?d.)
THE YOUNG CRUSADER, 37c a year (1s. 6d.)
Address Evanston, Ill.

Give the Plan a Trial!

VIDA I. THOMPSON, Manager Circulation Department

Writing in the Iowa W. C. T. U. Champion of the need for THE UNION SIGNAL, Mrs. Ida B. Wise Smith says, "This is the time when the people must know the truth, if we are to be free. Let me again call your attention to a pet scheme I have often advanced, but which I believe no one has ever tried: To select a day and go out, singly or in couples, and canvass for the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL. If the more than four hundred unions of Iowa would do this at once and get these papers in the hands of the voters, it would make many votes before October 15. Go directly to men and ask for their subscriptions. In clubs of ten it can be still had at the 25-cent rate. Try it and report to me, please. I believe it is as good campaign work as we can do. In connection with this subject, let me urge the use of the 'Quiz' in your meetings."

Will not local superintendents try Mrs. Smith's plan and write us as to its results? If ever there was a time when we needed to take THE SIGNAL, that time is now when we must all help our country, and desire to do it intelligently. Each week this paper is full of suggestions, methods and plans for work.

FANS AND LEAFLETS

for distribution in Chautauquas and other summer assemblies at

SPECIAL PRICES

Leaflets carefully selected.

PACKAGE NO. 1
Containing
50 Prohibition Fans
300 Leaflets
Price, $1.45.

PACKAGE NO. 2
Containing
100 Prohibition Fans
500 Leaflets
Price, $2.45.

PACKAGE NO. 3
Containing
150 Prohibition Fans
800 Leaflets
Price, $3.90.

PACKAGE NO. 4
Containing
200 Prohibition Fans
1,000 Leaflets
Price, $5.00.

Please order early.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Literature and Supplies for Comfort Bags

LITERATURE

Testament, special khaki cloth cover. Price, 18 cents.

Testament. Price, 12 cents.

"Home Hymns," a collection of hymns set to familiar tunes. Price, 3 cents each; per fifty, 60 cents; per hundred, $1.00.

Soldiers' and Sailors' Songster. Price, 7 cents.

Coupon Pledge Card, printed in blue with flag in colors. Price, per hundred, 35 cents.

"A Friendly Word to Young Men," by Richmond Pearson Hobson of Merrimac fame. Printed in blue, with flag in colors. Price, 2 cents each; per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents.

"Letter from Mother." Facsimile letter with W. C. T. U. monogram and flag in colors, printed in blue. Price, 3 cents each; per fifty, 25 cents; per hundred, 40 cents.

Envelope for letter, with W. C. T. U. monogram. Price, per fifty, 25 cents; per hundred, 40 cents.

"Letter from Mother," with envelope. Price, 5 cents; per hundred, 75 cents.

Protecting the Home Folks (a warning against vice). Each, 2 cents; 50, 25 cents; 100, 40 cents.

"What God Says to His Soldiers." A unique arrangement of Scripture texts under subjects: Reveille—Roll Call—Attention — Quick March—Halt—etc. Printed on card 4¼x2¾, a convenient size to slip into a Testament, with flag in colors and texts printed in blue. Price, 2 cents each; per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 30 cents.

Directions for Comfort Bags. Price, 2 cents each; per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred, 25 cents.

(When ordering, please state whether directions are wanted for comfort bags for soldiers or sailors.)

SUPPLIES

Metal mirrors, 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.75.

Scissors, 15 cents a pair; per dozen, $1.50.

Two-inch gauze sealed bandage, 10 cents net.

One-inch adhesive tape, 10 cents; per dozen, $1.00.

Prices subject to change without notice.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Feeling the Pulse of the Liquor Interests

Brewery securities throughout Ohio at the present time are quoted at less than 10 per cent of their original valuation. According to the Cleveland News, "You can buy a perfectly good brewery for the cost of a steam yacht, and all because of prohibition."

Charles H. Hermann, president of Chapin & Gore, one of the oldest and wealthiest whisky manufacturing concerns in this country, has expressed himself recently as believing that the whisky business is practically at an end in the United States. Any attempt to repeal whisky prohibition after the war, he thinks, will be unsuccessful.

As liquor stocks go down liquor prices go up. Since Congress has been considering the prohibition of the use of grain in the manufacture of distilled liquors, prices have taken a high jump. The prices of drinks in New York city have increased. A meeting of New York liquor dealers was recently called to arrange a scale of uniform prices for the 11,000 drinking establishments in the greater city. One New York saloon man has made the prediction that whisky prohibition will close 75 per cent of the saloons of the city.

Under the law enacted last winter by the New York state legislature, limiting the number of saloons in third class cities to one for every 500 population, at least 1,400 liquor selling establishments throughout the state will be closed by October, it is reported. The 1916 legislature also gave the cities of the state the right to vote on the saloon question and hundreds more will unquestionably be voted out.

Several hundred Chicago saloons have closed or are about to close on account of the prospects of war prohibition. The liquor interests are greatly troubled and in many instances breweries are not putting in their money to keep licenses from lapsing.

Mother Goose Hooverized

Old King Cole
Was a merry old soul,
And a merry old soul was he.
To help conserve food
He dined as a rule
On corn bread and milk, don't you see?

Little Jack Horner
Sat in a corner
Eating a Christmas pie.
It's too rich, oh my,
He mused with a sigh,
In these war times
When things are so high.

Mary, Mary, quite contrary,
How does your garden grow?
Beans and peas and spinach, too,
Are canned all in a row.

Old Mother Hubbard went to the cupboard
To get her poor doggy some bones.
She decided to use them for soup, so we've heard,
And the family had rice broth and scones.

Jack Spratt could eat no fat
And his wife could eat no lean,
So they both turned vegetarians
And licked the platter clean.

High diddle, diddle,
The cat played the fiddle,
The cow jumped over the moon.
Perhaps that is why
Roast beef is so high
And we dine on the boarding house prune.

A diller, a dollar, a ten o'clock scholar,
What makes you come so late?
I hoe in my garden, I rake and I weed
To raise good things for our winter feed.

Mother Thompson union of Hillsboro, Ohio, has quite a number of gavels and placques made from the wood of the original Crusade Church.

Gavels, plain, 50 cents each.

With sterling silver plate date engraved, $1 each.

Placques, all plain, 6x8 inches, 25 cents each. To make attractive can be hand-painted or mounted with postcard of the Crusade Church.

Apply to Mrs. Anna C. Van Pelt, 129 Collins Ave., Hillsboro, O.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., AUGUST 9, 1917 | No. 31

Patriotism vs. Booze

¶ Patriotism means taking thought for others and making sacrifice for the good of others.

¶ The great war demands of every man, whether in the shop or on the field of battle, the very best he can do for his country and for the world.

¶ Booze is made because some men demand it, but booze-making wastes grain which just now is badly needed for food both at home and by our allies.

¶ By increasing the price of bread and meat, booze-drinking is boosting the high cost of living.

¶ Booze-Drinking means self-indulgence at the expense of others, instead of self-denial for the good of others.

¶ Booze-Drinking partially paralyzes the drinker's brain and nerves so that he cannot possibly do his best work.

¶ Booze-Drinking makes the drinker liable to disease and shortens his life.

¶ A patriot is a man who, by cutting out his booze, is ready to do his bit toward a speedy victory on the battlefields of Europe.

ABSTINENCE MEANS PATRIOTISM AND SAFETY

—Fox River Valley Efficiency League, Appleton, Wisconsin

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

RESOLUTION TO SUBMIT PROHIBITION CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT TO THE STATES PASSES SENATE BY VOTE OF 65 TO 20—ELOQUENT SPEECHES IN FAVOR OF AMENDMENT MADE BY PROHIBITION SENATORS—ARMY AND NAVY CLUB OF WASHINGTON CLOSES ITS BAR

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

The words of an old hymn by Isaac Watts keep running through my mind this morning:

"Thus far the Lord has led us on,
Thus far his power prolongs our days,
And every evening shall make known,
Some fresh memorial of His grace."

Monday, July 30, Tuesday, July 31, and Wednesday, August 1, will go down in history as three great days. According to a unanimous agreement on the part of the Senate, they were ordered given over to a consideration of the joint resolution providing for an amendment to the Federal Constitution for nation-wide prohibition, the discussion to begin at two o'clock on Monday and conclude Wednesday at four o'clock, when the vote would be taken. Promptly on the minute Senator Sheppard rose, and requested a reading of the proposed amendment by the secretary. After a few parliamentary inquiries on the part of Senators, Senator Sheppard began his preliminary address by saying, "This is a historic occasion; for the first time in its annals the Senate is to vote on the submission of a constitutional amendment for nation-wide prohibition. The method ordained by the Federal Constitution for its own alteration is being strictly followed. If the proposed amendment should be adopted by three-fourths of the states, the traffic in intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes would be forbidden anywhere within the American republic. Prohibition would be imbedded in the organic law of the nation."

Senator Underwood of Alabama spoke next in strict rebuttal of the passage of the resolution, his argument being one for state rights, Colorado and several other states being mentioned by him. He declared with emphasis, "Some states would have prohibition thrust upon them without their consent, and it would have a tendency to place our government under a police power or autocracy such as exists in Germany and Austria-Hungary."

Colorado Rises to Explain

When he had concluded his remarks, Senator Shafroth of Colorado rose, and after explaining that he had not intended to speak at this time, but was moved to do so because the Senator from Alabama had alluded to the laws of his state, he proceeded to give some facts connected with Colorado's prohibition law. "We have found from comparing results of this law," he said, "that great good has been accomplished. When the law went into effect, there were 1,615 saloons closed and 17 breweries. Denver is a city of 250,000 population. The average number of arrests for all offenses in the city of Denver for the six years preceding the adoption of the prohibition amendment was 13,922. The total number of all arrests during the dry year was reduced by about one-third. The prediction was made that there would be vacant stores throughout all the business portions of the city, and that the numerous places made vacant by the numerous saloons would not be filled by those engaged in any other business, yet the record shows there was a very large increase in all business enterprises. There was an increase of more than 16 per cent in deposits in the banks and trust companies of Denver compared with the same period in the previous year."

Senator Jones of Washington stated among other things: "Seattle said she would not have prohibition but the state of Washington said she should, and she did, and Seattle likes it now. I am a Republican on party principles; I believe in the intelligence and capacity of the membership of the Republican party. This party will have to declare for prohibition because it will be necessary to success. Northern states now having prohibition laws cast 121 electoral votes. Of these, one hundred, if not more, are from states normally and reliably Republican. Republican success without them is extremely doubtful. The party will not dare to declare against prohibition in the face of these votes. And when the Republican party declares for prohibition, the Democratic party will do likewise."

During the debate it was brought out by Senator Thompson of Kansas that a certain member of the House, in asking for the privilege of extending his remarks in the Congressional Record, instead of extending his own remarks, extended the remarks of a paid attorney for the fifteen largest breweries in his district, in which Kansas was slandered and maliciously abused.

TEXT OF PROPOSED FEDERAL PROHIBITION AMENDMENT

The manufacture, sale or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into or the exportation thereof from the United States, and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof, for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the constitution by the legislatures of the several states, as provided in the constitution, within six years from the date of the submission hereof to the states by the Congress.

The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Senate Votes 65 to 20 for Submission

And so it went on all day Tuesday, from eleven in the morning until six in the evening. Wednesday all speeches were confined to the ten minute rule and every moment was taken. As four o'clock approached, members from the House gathered in the rear of the Senate chamber, and every Senator in the city was in his seat. Before the resolution was adopted an amendment offered by Senator Harding of Ohio was attached to it, providing that the proposed amendment to the constitution must be ratified by the states within six years. The Senate voted 56 to 23 in favor of the amendment, the dry Senators accepting it as innocuous. Several amendments were offered, but were voted down. The greatest interest, however, centered in the resolution itself, and as Senator after Senator voted for it, many of whom had been rated as opponents of prohibition, and of the resolution in the past, the real strength of the prohibition movement in the country became more and more apparent. Senator Stone of Missouri, one of the strongest opponents of prohibition in the Senate, voted for the resolution, and created no little stir in so doing. Others whose attitude has been one of opposition in the past, but who supported the resolution were Senator Harding of Ohio, Senator Saulsbury of Delaware, Senator La Follette of Wisconsin, Senator Knox of Pennsylvania, Senator Newlands of Nevada, Senator Watson of Indiana and Senator Frelinghuysen of New Jersey. A two-thirds vote was necessary. The vote recorded was 65 to 20. We could have yielded eight votes to the wets, and still have had a two-thirds vote.

The proposed constitutional amendment is the first initiated by Congress since that providing for popular election of United States Senators approved in 1911. It is the first time that either branch of Congress has approved a constitutional amendment for prohibition. The Hobson amendment received a majority vote in the House, but failed of the necessary two-thirds. Now the resolution goes to the House, and will be referred to the House Judiciary committee. Just when they will consider the resolution is uncertain.

The government is said to have lost close to $40,000,000 of revenue during the past two weeks by the abnormal withdrawal of whisky from the warehouses in anticipation of the increased tax. If the enactment of the bill into law is delayed six weeks longer, the loss will be doubled.

Army and Navy Club Closes Bar

A clipping from a Salt Lake paper reached my desk this morning which stated that the Army and Navy Club of Washington, one of the most popular and influential clubs in the United States, had closed its bar. As no word concerning such action on the part of the management had appeared in the Washington papers, I at once phoned to ascertain if it were true, and received the reply: "It is true. We have closed down the bar for good." The management state that, responsive to the law which prohibits the sale of alcoholic liquors to anybody wearing a United States uniform, they have reached the conclusion that if members of the service can not have anything to drink in the way of stimulant in their own club, there is no reason for their maintaining a bar for the pleasure of outsiders.

Representative Campbell of Kansas has introduced a bill in the House which would require the President to select the members of his Cabinet from the membership of the House. The purpose of the bill is to get the government back as close as possible to the people.

For the first time in its history the Health department of the District of Columbia has employed a woman inspector. Dr. Woodward, the District of Columbia health officer, thinks a woman is better fitted temperamentally to judge kitchens in the lunch rooms and restaurants, and the cleanliness of grocery stores, markets, soda fountains etc. "While I have no complaint to make of the male inspectors," he said, "I think a woman is better fitted to inspect these places because of her home training, and this is a test of the matter. If my theory is correct, I intend adding more women inspectors."

The conferees of the House and of the Senate on the Administration Food Control bill have agreed on the prohibition clause to be inserted therein as follows: That the manufacture or importation of distilled beverages during the war shall be prohibited; that the President shall be authorized to limit the alcoholic content of beer and wine, and to commandeer distilled beverages when necessary.

National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, Washington, D. C., August 2, 1917.

Beer Strokes

Beware of drinking beer during hot weather is the warning of Dr. William A. Evans, former health commissioner of Chicago, published in the Chicago Tribune.

"There are several factors which operate to produce the various forms of heat prostration. The sun's rays is only one of these, and probably not the most important one," says Dr. Evans.

"One of the principal factors is the drinking of beer. It has been proposed that the name heat stroke be changed to beer stroke. Dr. Kuhn says, in the Manufacturers' News: 'It was found that a large percentage of "heat cases" entering Cook county hospital last summer were directly traceable to chronic alcoholism.'

"The colonial government of Australia reports that, of all the predisposing causes, 'undue indulgence in intoxicating liquor is the most common and the most dangerous.'

"The use of beer is more harmful than the use of whisky, because most people have sense enough to keep away from distilled liquors in hot weather, but somehow they have gotten the idea that beer is cooling."

Vermont State Prison Inmates Petition for Prohibition

Inmates of the Vermont state prison, located at Windsor, to the number of 143, or practically the entire prison population, recently signed a memorial addressed to the Vermont members of the United States Congress, asking them to use their influence in securing national prohibition. All the men, says the one who circulated the memorial, seemed glad to sign this document, and without exception blamed booze either directly or indirectly for the acts which had brought them to the state prison. "I'll sign quick," said one broad-shouldered, big-hearted man who is serving a long sentence for the accidental death of thirteen men through the liquor traffic. "I have always honestly wished the recipe for making the stuff was lost."

Dry Zone Closes Thirty-Five Saloons

A dry zone established by the state excise department around ship-repairing and munitions plants in Brooklyn affects thirty-five saloons and three hotels. In this entire district, says a New York dispatch, only soft drinks are on sale, and police are detailed to see that the order is enforced.

HONOR ROLL

—of—

PROHIBITION STATES AND TERRITORY AND DATE OF GOING INTO EFFECT

Maine	1851
Kansas	1880
North Dakota	1889
Oklahoma	1907
Georgia	1908
North Carolina	1909
Mississippi	1909
Tennessee	1909
West Virginia	1914
Alabama	1915
Arizona	1915
Virginia	1916
Colorado	1916
Oregon	1916
Washington	1916
Arkansas	1916
Iowa	1916
Idaho	1916
South Carolina	1916
Nebraska	1917
South Dakota	1917
Utah	1917
Dist. of Columbia	†Nov. 1, 1917
Alaska	†Jan. 1, 1918
Indiana	†April 2, 1918
Michigan	*April 30, 1918
Montana	*Dec. 31, 1918
New Hampshire	†May 1, 1918

*Enacted 1916. †Enacted 1917.

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1917

Iowa†† Ohio New Mexico

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1918

Utah†† Missouri Florida
Minnesota Wyoming Nevada

††Now have statutory prohibition. Will vote on constitutional amendment.

Harvard Club Bar to Become Non-Alcoholic

The Harvard club, of New York City, perhaps the largest of its kind in the country, with a membership of approximately 5,000, is said to have established a soda fountain and a non-alcoholic bar. The fact that 900 of its members are already in military and naval service, and are therefore prohibited from drinking while in uniform is at least partly responsible for the action of the club.

Ohio Distilleries Will Make Alcohol for Munitions

Two, at least, of the Cincinnati distilling companies have announced that they will endeavor to keep their distilleries in operation making alcohol for munition purposes. "We will make every effort to get enough orders for industrial and munition alcohol to keep our distillery going," said a representative of James Walsh & Company, distillers, "and will, of course, have to close down if we are unable to get enough orders. Ordinarily industrial alcohol is only a small percentage of the total. But what American distillers are looking for now is a big order from Europe. It has been said that at the single battle of the Somme the Allies used up more alcohol than is made in a year in the United States. The alcohol is used in the making of the powder. If this proves true, and no contradiction has yet appeared, our plants will prove useful for the government's needs."

"We shall continue to operate our distillery for the manufacture of alcohol for government, industrial, mechanical, medical and sacramental purposes," said another prominent Cincinnati distiller. "We have already made some alcohol for the government for war purposes and will offer to do more work along this line. We will also make denatured alcohol. The law will mean that we shall employ fewer men and reduce the output, but the distillery will not be closed down."

Race Riots Due to Rum Politics

Race riots in Chester, Pa., similar to recent trouble in East St. Louis, Ill., and charged to the rum-controlled political system of the city, have resulted in the death of two white men and the injury of fully a hundred whites and blacks. To quell the disturbance all saloons were ordered closed. Protection given by the wet political forces to negroes who voted "right" is said to have bred the trouble.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AS INSURANCE MEN SEE IT

"One of the brightest hopes that this country had in its entrance into war was the hope of the abolition of the manufacture and use of booze. It is permissible to disagree with the President that beer and wine are in any way more necessary than whisky. Every one of them is a first aid to German bullets, an enemy to food conservation and a deliberately unjust tax upon the entire country in time of war." These are not the words of a temperance reformer. They are found in an editorial utterance in the July number of the Insurance Magazine which deals with the waste of the liquor traffic. After referring to the estimated annual drink bill of $2,300,000,000 and the further waste of approximately $6,000,000 annually for the maintenance of jails, insane asylums, and other institutions for the victims of the traffic, the editorial makes this additional statement concerning the waste caused by the liquor traffic:

"There is another not reckoned in figures—the human waste, and it begins with a little lost time over the social glass and halts in the potter's field—the end of a wasted existence.

"It would be interesting, if it were not so appalling, to know how many prospects for life insurance were blighted by the use of booze.

"Another feature of interest to the actuary is how many life expectations are curtailed because the insured becomes a victim of the booze habit.

"The revenue derived from malt and vinous spirits is a boomerang, for liquor not only destroys millions of bushels of grain that should be used to maintain life, but its effects upon the human constitution inaugurate a system of expense that dwarfs the liquor tax to a bagatelle in comparison.

"But that which every insurance company will recognize is that it costs them millions of dollars in new business every year, that it also increases their risks on the number already insured and that their business and the conservation of the most valuable asset of any country—good citizens—suffer because of the liquor evil."

"At some national or perhaps international conference all the chiefs of the insurance world will put a co-operative ban on intoxicants," says the editorial.

"It is the man who drinks who is more largely responsible for the present mortality tables than any other factor.

"It is the man who drinks who is forced to pay a greater sum for his insurance than otherwise would be the case.

"If the man who drinks is still acceptable as a risk at a certain price, then the man whose system is free from the brain-numbing poison is entitled to a lower rate."

DOES LIQUOR-MAKING REDUCE THE PRICE OF MILK?

IRVING FISHER, Professor of Political Economy, Yale University

The liquor interests in a circular to Congress (signed by the "Farmers' Feed Company," New York) state that "to eliminate brewers' grains for milch cattle food will unquestionably lessen milk production twenty per cent—will unquestionably increase the cost of production to such an extent that the purchase price of a quart of milk now fixed at eleven cents per quart will unquestionably force the price to twenty-five or thirty cents per quart in all great centers of population where a pure milk supply is most required."

These bogies need not frighten us, inasmuch as in the first place, the department of agriculture has shown how to secure leguminous foods in substitution, and, in the second place, the brewers' grains could not possibly supply twenty per cent or even one-third of that figure of the grain food of milch cattle, or even a far smaller percentage of their total food.

According to a table in the Agricultural Outlook, October 15, 1914, Farmers' Bulletin 629, about nine per cent of the corn crop, five per cent of the oat crop, and four per cent of the barley crop are used for feeding milch cows. These percentages applied to the production of 1916 would indicate that from these three grains alone, without counting other cattle feeds, the milch cattle obtained 300,000,000 bushels of grain. The entire amount of brewers' grains in that year would, according to brewers' own claims, not exceed 25,000,000 bushels, or eight per cent of 300,000,000.

The price of milk may indeed rise from the general war conditions, but the withdrawal of brewers' grains will not be the cause.

One of the chief dairy companies in the United States, when asked this question by our Committee of Sixty replied:

"Probably the single factor of withdrawing brewers' grains from the market would not affect the price of milk or have any material influence on the price of other cattle feeds."

Prohibition would tend greatly to lower the cost of living, including the cost of milk, in many different ways, some direct, and others, quite as important, indirect.

Incidentally, however, we may note that, as we all know, alcoholic beverages now waste both the money and the power to earn money of the poor. Dr. Haven Emerson, health commissioner of New York City, finds, in a recent investigation, that five per cent of the income of the poor in New York city is spent on alcoholic beverages. A much larger per cent of earning power is lost thereby. Consequently, out of the saving in both these respects which war time prohibition would bring, there would be a large net gain for the babies' milk (about which the breweries and distillers are suddenly so solicitous) even if the price of milk should rise several fold.

The economy in buying brewers and distillers' grains, as compared with other foods, some of which have a great food value per ton, has also been exaggerated.

The prices per ton on May 18, 1917, were as follows:

Spring bran	$42.60
Brewers' grains	43.50
Malt sprouts	45.60
Choice yellow gluten	48.60
Winter wheat middlings	50.10
Oil meal	53.10
Distillers' dried grains	53.10
Corn and oats	61.75

The brewers and distillers' grain are not regarded as the best cattle feed. They need to be supplemented by other foods, such as miller's grains and are not used at all by many of the best dairies. This fact is vouched for by one of the best-known of these dairies in a letter to this Committee of Sixty.

GETTING ACQUAINTED WITH VITAMINS AND CALORIES

AN AID IN SOLVING THE FOOD PROBLEM

ESTELLE MOORE

The energetic little president of the Rustleville union looked meditatively at her associate, the helpful vice-president of the same society. "Now about food conservation," she mused. "The union hasn't done what it should along that line. I often wonder if one of the benefits of the war—and goodness knows there ought to be a legion to offset its horrors—won't be to make the American nation regard the feeding of its people more in the light of a scientific experiment. In addition to helping in the campaign for food conservation our women can perhaps be made to understand something of the relative values of foods."

"Why, just the other day I ran across an article that explained some of the terms used by the magazines in discussing the food problem," the vice-president offered as the president paused for breath. "I'd heard of calories and carbohydrates until my head swam, and I never could make out whether those terms referred to soft coal or a new variety of shingle nails. But I know now what they all mean. Let's start in with a definition of some of these high sounding names which are practically unintelligible to the housewife who has not made a study of domestic science."

"Do you honestly mean to tell me that you know what a calory is?" the president asked with awe.

"A calory is the measure of the heat in food fuel. They measure coal by heat units, why not food? A calory is the amount of food fuel required to raise one pound of water 1° Centigrade. What '1° Centigrade' is, I'm sure I don't know, but some of the more important things I do know, as, for instance, this: A business or professional man requires about 2,500 or 3,000 calories a day, whereas he more often eats 4,500 calories. Moreover, it is comparatively simple to reckon the calories served at a meal. An ordinary helping contains about 100 calories. There are about 100 calories in a banana or an orange, in a thick slice of whole wheat bread, in half a good-sized potato or in an ounce of butter or oatmeal or beans or white flour. An ounce and a half of steak contain only as many calories as are contained in an ounce of butter or half a potato. A graham roll contains more calories than a small lamb chop."

"Good," teased the president. "Possibly you have progressed far enough to tell carbohydrates from hydrocarbons."

"Why, of course. Carbohydrates are starches and sugars. Hydrocarbons are fats," replied the vice-president, warming up to her subject. "And proteins! They are tissue-building foods. Protein is found in almost all articles of diet. Meat, fish, fowl, white of egg and cheese are richer in proteins than are cereals, milk, bread and some of the vegetables. A heavy meat diet is too rich in protein and clogs the system. In a food allowance of 3,000 calories a day per person about 300 of these should be protein. A third of a pound of roast beef should supply this protein, or four eggs, or a quarter of a pound of full-cream cheese. Proteins are also found in cheaper foods, such as peas, beans, lentils and milk. Cereals contain about the right proportion.

"Then the vitamins. They are the life principle. Vitamins are found in milk, fresh fruits, vegetables and whole cereals from which the covering has not been removed. The mineral salts, also, are essential to health. Of these lime and phosphorus are particularly important. Lime is found in fruits and vegetables, whole cereals, milk and milk products (except butter) and eggs. Phosphorus is found in egg yolk, milk, whole cereals and whole wheat bread. The water in which vegetables have been cooked should never be thrown away. The mineral salts cook out and if this water is not used as food the best part of the vegetables is lost.

"Put little water on spinach and peas,
And other vegetables, too, if you please.
For a nourishing soup, add milk to this juice,
Or serve over whole wheat bread toast, if you choose.

"How's that for 'on the spot' poetry?"

The vice-president continued, "I have a quotation from Dr. Eugene L. Fisk, director of the Life Extension Institute, which would be worth quoting. You see, I'm thoroughly prepared." As she spoke she took the clipping from her hand bag which she proceeded to read: " 'One of our worst habits of extravagance as a nation is that we so often heat our bodies with teak wood and mahogany kindling when pine sticks would serve just as well. It is not necessary and not good for us to eat so much meat and other costly high-protein food. No, I am not taking up cudgels for vegetarianism. I am simply contending for the undeniable principle that meat should be used sparingly. This is not only in the interest of economy but also for the sake of our kidneys and livers.' "

"Help, help," gasped the president. "That will do. I see that one member at least of the Rustleville union is posted on food values. I hereby appoint you committee-in-chief to have full charge, care and control of all food discussions at our local union's meetings."

And the vice-president accepted the honor.

VERSIFIED ECONOMICS

Prepared by the Daughters of Mrs. Ella A. Boole

Eat what you want,
Want what you eat,
So all may eat,
And none will want.

Then fill up the glasses with grape juice or tea
Or anything else that's from alcohol free,
Join the grain-savers' league for the time of the war,
And keep the wolf, Hunger, from many a door.

Grow what you can,
Can what you grow.

Right in the corner where you are
Do your bit and keep up to par,
You'll do as much as a soldier or tar
Right in the corner where you are.

PROHIBITION AND THE PRICE OF COAL

LEWIS E. THEISS, in Outlook

Some months ago an American corporation contracted to furnish a certain number of rifles for the Russians. When that contract was signed, the corporation was buying coal for $3.50 a ton. War business started idle factories at full time, and soon the demand for coal was greater than the supply. One manufacturer bid against another and the price of coal went up and up. The coal operators who agreed to supply the rifle-makers at $3.50 a ton canceled their contract, and now the rifle-makers must pay more than $6 a ton.

With billions of dollars to be spent in this country in the next few years for war materials and new factories springing up everywhere, it is evident that the demand for coal will grow heavier and heavier. Nothing but a hugely increased output of coal can prevent prices from reaching a ruinous figure.

That increased output has been promised by the coal operators. But there are many things that stand in the way of their success. Manifestly there can be no increase in the number of miners. Largely our coal-miners come from foreign lands, and immigration is now at a very low ebb. The draft will take away some of the men now in the mines. Finally, it is not easy to increase the efficiency of so bulky an organization as the United Mine Workers. Their long struggle for a fair working day and the redress of certain grievances, the widespread ignorance among them of our language and traditions, and the feeling of mistrust and ill will that has too often existed between operators and miners, all will tend to make it difficult to bring about any considerable increase in coal production by the usual methods of speeding up.

Under these conditions, it is interesting to note the effect of prohibition on the output of coal in mines in regions that have gone dry. At the time of the trouble between the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company and its employes (before the dry law went into effect) it was reported that the company was operating saloons for its men. The company denied this, stating, among other facts, the following:

"With the advent of the Federal troops all saloons in the coal-mining district were closed, and, as a result, the efficiency of the workmen has greatly improved. The average production of coal per man has greatly increased.

"The production of this company's mines in the southern district of Colorado for the first eighteen days of April averaged 5.85 tons per day for each miner at work. That was before the Federal troops closed the saloons.

"For the first eighteen days of June (with all saloons closed) each man produced 6.52 tons, which meant an average increase in wages of over eleven per cent per man."

The Methodist Board of Temperance publishes a letter received from W. B. Reed, chief accountant for the White Oak Coal Company, of Macdonald, West Virginia. In part it reads as follows:

"We have made a comparison for three months prior to June 29, 1914, and for three months subsequent thereto, and the result is shown in the tabulation below:

WITH SALOONS
April	10,960.50 tons
May	7,902.20 tons
June	16,752.70 tons
	35,615.40 tons
WITHOUT SALOONS
July	24,852.65 tons
August	16,199.65 tons
September	26,761.45 tons
	67,813.75 tons
	35,615.40
Increase	32,198.35 tons

"It is safe to assume that the same rate of increase would be carried out throughout the entire year, and, if that be the case, the result would show an increased production per annum, due to the absence of liquor in the field, of 128,793 tons.

"The production of our mines has increased considerably since that time. I believe there are more men in the field than there have been for a number of years, all of which goes to combat the theory that it is impossible to secure and keep miners unless they can be regularly supplied with booze."

Recently the Rev. H. N. Cameron, of Latrobe, Pennsylvania, wrote to Mr. Herbert Hoover concerning the latter's appeal to the people to be saving of food. In a part of his letter Mr. Cameron said this: "I have lived all my life in western Pennsylvania. Worked for seven years at the rolls, and have seen the effect of beer on output; and I know it is true, as J. D. A. Morrow, of the Pittsburgh Coal Producers' Association, declared before the Inter-State Commerce Commission, that the production of coal in the Pittsburgh district alone would be increased five million tons if strong drink were eliminated. And beer, may I repeat, the so-called light drink, causes more inefficiency in men and pre-empts more space in freight trains than whisky."

In fact, all testimony on the subject—from factory, mine and shop—tells the same story. Take away drink, and the efficiency of the workingman increases amazingly. The simplest, the surest, the only certain way of increasing coal production at this time is by prohibiting drink. Unless we do that our citizens will suffer from cold, our factories will be hampered for lack of fuel, our production of war material will be hindered, the war will be lengthened, and thousands of lives will be lost needlessly. If we want cheaper coal during the war, we must take, as a war measure, the one and only step that will surely increase coal production.

Can National Prohibition Be Enforced?

The opponents of prohibition as a war measure are insisting that if such a national prohibition law is enacted the government will find the task of enforcement impossible of achievement, and that "moonshining" on an enormous scale will become the prevailing fashion.

Before taking these statements too seriously, call to mind the dismal prophecies of the liquor publicity bureaus prior to the going into effect of prohibition in any state, their predictions of labor panics, cessation of prosperity and the advent of a reign of lawlessness. Did any of these awful calamities actually befall when the liquor traffic was outlawed? No, the liquorites' reputation as prognosticators is absolutely nil. Over and over again it has been demonstrated that even the people who opposed prohibition, after it went into effect submitted to the new order of affairs and soon became convinced of its undisputed advantages.

Not otherwise will it be with a nation-wide law. The people will realize that national prohibition as a war measure has been enacted in their interests. They are beginning to think largely "in terms of food units" these days and are realizing that many commodities they heretofore deemed indispensable can easily be left out of the day's schedule. They will speedily, in a patriotic spirit, adjust themselves to the dry régime.

—Brooklyn Eagle

Retreat of the Spirits

National General Secretary
MARY FRANCES WILLARD ANDERSON
79 Trowbridge St., Cambridge, Mass.

"Attempt Great Things for God. Expect Great Things from God."

National College Secretary
CHRISTINE I. TINLING
605 Westover Ave., Norfolk, Va.

HOW WE MAY BECOME BETTER SOLDIERS FOR TEMPERANCE

MARY FRANCES WILLARD ANDERSON

An officer in one of our Massachusetts regiments has sent to one of his friends the following acrostic which he declares comprises a real military man. (You will notice that the first letters of the lines spell "Soldier.")

Sobriety
Obedience
Loyalty
Daring
Intelligence
Energy
Responsiveness

We Young People's Branch members are temperance soldiers in a war which has lasted for years and in which we propose to fight to the end, and we should combine these elements our military friend claims make true soldiers.

As Y. P. B. members we are pledged to sobriety; we strive to be obedient to the "still small voice" within that directs our daily lives; with loyalty to God, to our country and our cause we dare stand alone, if need be, for our principles. With intelligence we are called upon to present the claims of our cause to others. The energetic member is our best recruiting officer and the responsive member is the one in our ranks who gladdens the heart of every officer in our Y. P. B.

But there is no reason why each one of us cannot cultivate all these splendid qualities and so become better temperance soldiers and Young People's Branch members.

Y. P. B. CONFERENCES, CONVENTIONS, ENCAMPMENTS

FLORIDA ENCAMPMENT

"Florida! Florida, dry! dry! dry!
Hear us tell it! Everybody yell it!
1918 is the day. You help, I help!
That's the way!
We can do it! Try! try! try!
Line up Florida—Dry! dry! dry!"

With fifty young women from all over the state in attendance the Florida Y. P. B. encampment of 1917 was a great success. For ten days the beauty of delightful Coronado-by-the-Sea was enjoyed. The morning program consisted of Bible lessons, a round-table, physical culture drills, character building talks, discussions of Y. P. B. plans and methods and the "Problem Hour." The afternoons were given over to sports and recreation Each evening a public entertainment was provided. Surely each girl went back to her home with new resolutions and higher ideals instilled into her life. We know each one is going to help make her Florida Dry!

NEW YORK Y. P. B. CONVENTION

"New York! New York Y. P. B.
1920, don't you see!
Can we do it? Well, I guess!
Work for it! Pray for it!
Yes! Yes! Yes!"

Enthusiasm!—intelligent, bubbling-over enthusiasm and consecration to God and to His cause marked the New York Y. P. B. federation convention held in Ithaca, July 2-6. With 264 delegates, some coming over three hundred miles, and many visitors, the 1917 convention was the largest thus far held.

From the early morning prayer and praise service until the last evening hymn a deep spiritual tone was felt. The efficiency congresses, the exhibits, the reports, the demonstrations, the addresses, the music were all of highest order. And the rally cries! They seem to ring in my ears even now! Surely New York Y. P. B. carries away the banner for songs and rally cries!

Meal time was the occasion for jollification of all kinds. The delegations adopted the fashion of calling aloud for various leaders to sit with them. While the feast was proceeding it was not unusual for some one to call every little while for the "Star Spangled Banner," causing every one to rise. Candidates for the "second table" were not slow to take advantage of the opportunity afforded to pre-empt the vacant places, causing no end of merriment by their shrewd action!

The parade on July Fourth, when 594 marched through beautiful Ithaca made a profound impression! I wish there was space to describe the convention in detail. In my heart is a new song of thanksgiving for our New York Y. P. B.

Accounts of Missouri, Ohio and Southern California Y. P. B. conventions will appear in a later issue. M. F. W. A.

IOWA'S Y. P. B. CONFERENCE

For three days Iowa's Y. P. B. representatives met together in Oskaloosa, the home city of the state Y. P. B. secretary. With a program of great interest, with National and state speakers imparting inspiration at every session the conference far exceeded the expectations of the workers. Addresses by the state W. C. T. U. president, Mrs. Ida B. Wise Smith, the National Y. P. B. field secretary, Mrs. Linnie Carl, the National general L. T. L. secretary, Miss Mary Ervin, a diamond medal contest and banquet were taking features.

DEFINITE THINGS TO DO

Prepare a comfort bag for every Y. P. B. young man who enlists or better still, present a comfort bag from your Y. P. B. to every young man who is called from your community!

Salute the flag at each meeting.

Send to your state Y. P. B. secretary a list of all Y. P. B. members who are leaving for the front.

Plan now for August.

Have a Y. P. B. picnic or lawn fete.

Let your Y. P. B. songs and rally-cries be heard out of doors.

Invite those who are not members and win them for our cause.

Let us not forget our motto, "A good time with a purpose."

PENNSYLVANIA Y. P. B. CONVENTION

Special Correspondence

The twenty-sixth annual convention of the young people of the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U. was most hospitably entertained in Newtown, June 25-28.

As a start-off a "get acquainted" reception was held at the home of J. Marguerite Hibbs where supper was served on the lawn by the local Y. P. B. The exercises following included music by the Bristol Y. P. B. orchestra, prayer by Mrs. Sylvia B. Norrish, state W. C. T. U. corresponding secretary, words of greeting by R. Clyde Smith, president of the Newtown Y. P. B., a response by J. Donald Rohrer and a playette, "The Card on the Door," by the Newtown Y. P. B.

A half hour praise service in charge of Miss Bessie Eckman, evangelistic superintendent, was held one morning. This was followed by a business session, after which came an efficiency congress in charge of Mrs. Norrish, with the watchword, "Conservation as Well as Efficiency."

A splendid afternoon address on "The Psychology of Tobacco" was delivered by

(Continued on Page Eleven)

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

NEW YORK YOUNG PEOPLE "OUT TO WIN" AT ANNUAL SESSION

Consecration was the keynote of the great annual convention of the New York Young People's Branch, enthusiasm its "sign and symbol." There were countless features of interest from business meetings, prayer and praise services, to a pageant of large proportions which called forth unstinted praise from those who witnessed it. Banners naming the prohibition states, and emphasizing "Patriotism," "Prosperity," "A Stainless Flag and A Saloonless Nation," "The Growth of the Temperance Reform," "Suffrage," and other subjects made of the parade an admirable object lesson. An especially appropriate float was that showing the brewer bargaining with Uncle Sam for barley and rye, while an anxious-eyed mother with an empty basket on her arm begged him for food. "Extermination" and "National Constitutional Prohibition" gave the pageant an impressive ending. In every particular the New York young people demonstrated at their convention that they mean business where John Barleycorn is concerned.

COLLEGE FRATERNITIES FROWN ON LIQUOR DRINKING

The use of liquor by college students and at college functions is rapidly on the decrease. Tufts College, Massachusetts, furnishes a striking illustration of the attitude of colleges, or more particularly college fraternities, toward the use of intoxicating liquors. According to the Christian Science Monitor, of the nine prominent fraternities of Tufts College eight are dry by local or national rulings, the remaining fraternity, the Commons Club, claiming no such rule has been needed because of the individual stand of its members on the temperance question. Of the six national Greek letter fraternities at Tufts, three: Alpha Tau Omega, Zeta Psi and Delta Tau Delta, through an amendment to their constitutions, in 1914 prohibited the serving of liquor and its keeping for private use in an individual locker in every chapter house of the fraternities in the country. The other three national fraternities, Delta Upsilon, Theta Delta Chi and Phi Epsilon Pi, have local rules forbidding the presence or use of intoxicants in the chapter houses. Two local fraternities, Sigma Tau Alpha and Phi Delta, have by-laws which forbid drinking in the fraternity houses.

The following statement by a leading member of the Commons Club explains the position of that organization on the liquor question: "The Commons Club has no rule forbidding drinking because there is no need of it. In the last few years the drinker has been dropped and any attempt by a member to drink in the house is dealt with harshly." While the Tufts undergraduates took a leading part in driving intoxicants outside the walls of the fraternity houses, they have had the support of many alumni in their efforts to abolish intoxicants from college functions.

Hermon C. Bumpus, president of Tufts College, is reported to have made the following statement: "The fraternities of Tufts College have abolished liquor from their chapter houses and during my term of office there has been no trouble from this source.

"No college man or in fact any man ever attained a high standard in scholarship through artificial stimulation, and if a few exceptions seem to appear, I believe it will be found that the men were successful in spite of drink, and that their success would have been greater in the event of their abstinence.

"I would like to emphasize the fact that this change in condition has not been the work of a moment or the impulsive action of a group of young fellows. It is the result of much time and energy directed by the most far-seeing and efficient men connected with modern business and education.

"The old idea of the fellowship of college men as exemplified by the stories of Heidelberg, and the spirit of the 'flowing bowl' has been abandoned, and I am glad to say that the alumni and students all seem to realize that fact, and through the college fraternity they have expressed their alliance with prohibition."

HAVE YOU?

Have you sent your contribution to our National Y. P. B. French Orphan Fund? Do not delay. You desire a share in this work. New York state Y. P. B. has adopted one of France's little ones. We are looking for prompt response. Remember the Master's words, "Inasmuch as you did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me."

KANSAS Y. P. B'S IN CONFERENCE

Special Correspondence

"The Y. P. B. shall be victorious
Through our own and every land;
Our aims are high and glorious,
We're a consecrated band."

It was indeed a victorious band of young people who gathered for the second conference of the Kansas Y. P. B. The welcome to Hays City, seat of the famed Industrial Normal school, was most cordial and gracious.

The devotional services, which were an important part of the conference, bore testimony to the fact that workers are being trained not only to lead in the fight against the crumbling power of King Alcohol but to help usher in the glad new day of Christ's reign on earth. Miss Alma Beye, Miss Mabel Holmes, Miss Lulu Rhodebaugh and others, were the leaders.

Children were conspicuous throughout the meetings. Sixteen white ribbon recruits were dedicated, visiting children assisted, and a medal contest by children was one of the delightful surprises of the program.

While Miss Mary E. Dobbs, corresponding secretary of the Kansas W. C. T. U., took charge of the program, Miss Zoe Atchison, general secretary of the Kansas Y. P. B., Mrs. Mary Sibbitt, Kansas W. C. T. U. evangelist, and others, visited the normal school and at its chapel hour presented to it on behalf of the Y. P. B., a framed picture of Frances Willard.

The Y. P. B. banquet the first evening of the conference, was perfect in every detail. The guests were a genial, happy company and were served to a menu royally abundant. The program included a welcome by Miss Mabel Landon, former

(Continued on Page Eleven)

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, August 9, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

Miss Anna A. Gordon, National W. C. T. U. president, returned from Washington to her home in Evanston Thursday, August 2. She remained in the capital city until the result of the vote on the federal amendment in the Senate was knowu and then immediately left for Evanston.

Temperance Sunday (September 9) is only one month distant. Preparations for its observance should begin immediately. Do not fail to read carefully the official communication on page 10 of Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, National superintendent of Sunday School work.

CO-OPERATING WITH UNCLE SAM

The desire of the government to utilize to the best advantage the patriotism of its women citizens led it some months ago to appoint the Woman's Committee of the Council of National Defense, the first time in its history it has called together such a body, which has been well described as a clearing house between the government and the women. Upon this committee of ten members, of which Dr. Anna Howard Shaw is chairman, devolved the responsibility of organizing the women's societies of the nation into an army of voluntary service. It began its work by appointing in each state a temporary chairman, who was instructed to call together the presidents of all the state organizations. The next step was the formation of a permanent committee of state chairmen made up of one representative of each state organization that agreed to co-operate. Each county and city will be similarly organized for work.

Dr. Shaw defines the purpose of the Woman's Committee in the following words:

"We need an army of women ready and eager to perform whatever service may be asked of them for the sake of their country.

"In order that this service may be most effective, we ask that they work in the woman's organizations already existing through their state division of the Woman's Committee of the Council of National Defense.

"We do not wish to create any more organizations, but to see that those already created co-operate helpfully. We urge that for not one minute shall any line of helpful service already begun be allowed to lapse; that during the weeks and months to come the women of the country will express that same high courage and devotion which they showed at the beginning of the war. We ask that all women combine to keep life steady, normal, and sane, and that everywhere a spirit of cheerful courage, a patriotic co-operation, and a high resolve be cultivated.

"None can realize more keenly the horror of war, the sickening heartbreak of it, than the women of a nation. But now that it is upon us, no woman can shirk her part. Women of all creeds and nationalities who call America their country must stand together, forgetting all differences in one great likeness—their desire to be of service."

The Woman's Christian Temperauce Union is, of course, one of the societies represented in the Woman's Committee, and this is the only connection it has, at the present time, with the government. Miss Anna A. Gordon, National W. C. T. U. president, is a member of the national advisory board; state W. C. T. U. presidents are members of the state divisions, and local union presidents have been or will be asked to act on permanent local committees. The W. C. T. U. is especially fortunate in having well tested organization machinery for carrying on most of the lines of work suggested by the central committee. As enumerated in the Patriotic Service Plans last week white ribboners will specialize on ten different departments of work: Nation-wide prohibition as a war measure; work for soldiers and sailors; relief work; moral education; women in industry; Americanization; co-operation with the United Committee on Temperance Activities in the Army and Navy; finance; community interest, and membership. Reports of work being done in different sections of the country and practical suggestions for carrying out the National plans will be given in THE UNION SIGNAL from time to time.

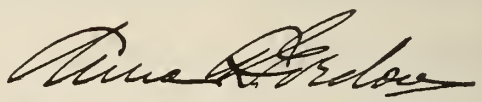
"WE SHALL WIN"

The Senate's action last week in submitting the prohibition federal amendment to the states came with surprising suddenness. When the House passes the referendum resolution we enter at once the final stage of our great campaign for nation-wide prohibition. The amendment must be ratified by thirty-six states. We have twenty-six states about which there should be no question as to ratification at the first opportunity offered by a legislative session, and all our energies must be directed to hold these states and secure ten others. The liquor trade will at once begin to circulate its corruption funds wherever it thinks a state legislature in one or both of its branches can be bought and all states alike will come under the baneful influence of such an effort.

If the House adopts the resolution during December, a ratification resolution will be presented to the legislatures of about a dozen states in 1918, to all the other states in 1919. Under a six-year limitation clause Alabama, the only state where the legislature meets but once in four years, would have but one opportunity for ratification or rejection of the amendment. Six states meeting annually would have six opportunities and forty-one meeting biennially would have three chances to vote on this vital question.

We have one decided advantage in our struggle to secure thirty-six state legislatures to ratify our measure, namely, that when once a favorable vote is secured in any state legislature it will stand and cannot be changed by a subsequent legislature. On the other hand if a state legislature fails to ratify the amendment, any succeeding legislature within the six years has the chance to overturn this action by a vote for ratification of the federal amendment. The liquor trade will make its supreme endeavor to secure thirteen states to stand solidly against ratification in order to defeat the enactment of our amendment.

Since there is a strong probability that the House of Representatives will act favorably on the national amendment at the opening of the December session we ought at once to decide our plan of campaign to aid in influencing the state legislatures to ratify at the earliest possible moment after opportunity is given. Time is of the essence of this proposition and we know that the white ribboners of every state will respond enthusiastically to the call.



A CHALLENGE TO THE YOUNG WOMEN

The charge was made the other day by a young man at one of the training camps that the girls who flock to these military centers on every possible occasion, making no effort to suppress their admiration for the wearers of the uniform, render it difficult for self-respecting youths to maintain the best standards of manhood. Whether or not this assertion, made in an open letter in a metropolitan daily, has foundation in fact, it will be believed by many. Certainly it places upon the Christian young women of this country the responsibility to prove its falsity, or if it be true in any measure, to do their utmost to correct the evil.

The sisters and girl friends of the young men who have enlisted can, if they will, throw around them a moral protection immeasurably greater than any prescribed anti-liquor or anti-vice zone, necessary as are such restrictions. Let the high-minded young women of the nation place high the standard of morality which they expect the wearers of Uncle Sam's uniform to observe and their brothers, college comrades, and friends will live up to it. Girls and young women of noble ideals in every community, and especially those in the vicinity of military camps and naval training stations, should definitely determine to use for good their influence with their sisters who through lack of home training or thoughtlessness are by foolish sentimentality putting temptation in the way of the young patriots of the land.

The members of the Young People's Branch might well engage in this work as one of their definite responsibilities. By interesting the young women of the cities in sensible, wholesome entertainment for the enlisted men, they can divert foolish enthusiasm for the khaki and the blue and the white. By counseling with Branch members now in training they will be able to ascertain how best to deal with the problems of camp life.

PREPARING THE SOLDIERS AND SAILORS TO MEET TEMPTATIONS OF STRONG DRINK

"The United Committee on War Temperance Activities in the Army and Navy" was proposed by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America at its war emergency session in Washington, D. C., early in May last. The committee is now permanently organized and represents the leading temperance groups of the country and the temperance committees of the churches, both Catholic and Protestant.

The constituent groups are the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Anti-Saloon League, National Committee of the Prohibition Party, Catholic Total Abstinence Union, Catholic Prohibition League, Presbyterian Temperance Board, Methodist Board of Temperance, Independent Order of Good Templars, Sons of Temperance, Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, Scientific Temperance Federation, United Society of Christian Endeavor, Epworth League of America, Flying Squadron Foundation. The officers of the committee are: Daniel A. Poling, chairman; Miss Anna A. Gordon, vice-chairman; Miss Cora F. Stoddard, secretary; Rev. Charles Stelzle, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

The committee has called as its executive secretary, Rev. Harley H. Gill, pastor of the First Congregational Church of Niles, California. Although a young man, Mr. Gill has had wide experience in anti-alcohol campaigns. He was formerly national vice-president of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association and for two years one of its traveling secretaries. He was campaign manager for the Dry Colorado League in 1912, and executive secretary of the Prohibition Headquarters Committee of Northern California from 1914 to 1917.

After an exhaustive survey of the entire Army and Navy field, and after a conference with the War Department, the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A. and representative leaders in many other associated activities, the committee has prepared a comprehensive program of temperance education, publicity and entertainment for the training and mobilization camps.

The carrying out of the specific features of the program will be in the hands of the Army and Navy chaplains and the secretaries of the Y. M. C. A.

Dr. George Fisher, of the War Work Committee of the Y. M. C. A., represents that body in an advisory capacity on the United Committee. The committee also has the sanction and the support of the Committee of the War Department on Recreational Activities outside of the camps, of which Mr. Raymond Fosdick is chairman.

Among the features of the temperance program are specially prepared stereopticon slides covering every phase of the alcohol question in its relation to the individual. These slides visualize the menace of liquor drinking, showing how it unfits a man for soldierly duties by breaking down his power to resist cold, disease and wounds, and by slowing up his mental faculties. The most recent utterances of great generals and statesmen and the very latest findings of the war are reproduced with gripping force. Each of the new series contains reproductions of a number of patriotic posters and cartoons.

The committee will purchase a large number of stereomotorgraphs which automatically show the slides and which can be set up in places where the men gather in large numbers. Several stereomotorgraphs will be supplied to Y. M. C. A. secretaries who visit the smaller out-lying camps where permanent "huts" are not established.

An entirely new set of patriotic temperance posters for bulletin boards is now nearing completion, under direction of the United Committee, and an edition of a million copies of a special Soldiers' and Sailors' Manual, which will be filled with general information of value to the men in uniform, is being printed.

During the fall and winter inspirational and educational temperance lectures by men and women of national reputation will be arranged for the camps and mobilization centers. Such speakers as ex-Governor J. Frank Hanly, Captain Richmond P. Hobson, Dr. Daniel A. Poling, Charles Stelzle, Dr. Charles Scanlon, and Governor Carl E. Milliken of Augusta, Maine, have already been secured.

To assist in meeting the menacing conditions that our army will face in the rum and wine rations of Great Britain and France, an investigation is now being carried on and a commission may eventually be sent abroad.

For the immediate expenses of the committee, $100,000 has been called for. Organizations supporting the committee's program are appealing directly to their local societies for funds to carry on this work, which they believe to be of exceptional moral and patriotic value. It is hoped that many individuals will give their financial assistance to the project.

BEWARE OF THE ALCOHOL IN BEER, SAYS BRITISH REPORT

The brewery interests of the United States are making liberal use of a report on the food value of beer and other alcoholic beverages which has been issued recently by the British government under the title, "The Food Supply of the United Kingdom." The authorities issuing this report claim for liquors a certain food and energy value. This part of their report the brewers have been diligent in quoting. But the report does not end with the statements to which the liquor men have been giving such wide publicity. The final conclusion of the committee differs but little from the claims of out-and-out enemies of beer.

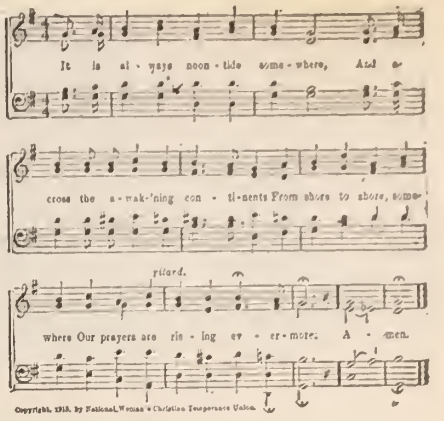
"Were it (beer) not possessed of other qualities," says the report, "the food value of alcohol would, therefore, be measured by its full caloric value. But, unlike food stuffs more strictly defined, alcohol exerts effects as a drug which cannot be ignored in appraising its value as a food.

"Against the experimental data mentioned above (food and energy value found in beer) must be put the results observed in practice on a large number of individuals as to the effect of alcohol on the accomplishment of physical work.

"We may point, for instance, to the results exhibited by troops on the march. Repeated experiments have shown that regiments not supplied with alcohol marched farther and were in better condition at the end of the day than others to which it had been given. Experiments in mountain climbing have given similar indications, the total work done being smaller under alcohol and the expenditure of energy greater.

"There is little need to decide as to how these effects are purely physical or to what degree they are psychological. The facts show that the value of alcohol as a source of maintenance and of work power for the nation, cannot, as in the case of a normal foodstuff, be logically measured by its gross caloric value."

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



AT THE NOONTIDE HOUR

At the sacred noontide hour let the white ribboners of the land unite in prayer daily for our country and all other countries, that all may come to see the true Christian and humanitarian point of view in this world crisis; for the protection of "our boys" from the physical and moral deterioration from drink and vice that follow in the wake of war; for our President and his advisers that divine wisdom may rule every decision, that lasting peace may speedily come and the will of the Father of all peoples be done throughout the earth.

OUR ROCK OF REFUGE

ELLA M. GEORGE, President Pennsylvania W. C. T. U.

A dark and ominous war cloud has been hanging over our nation for months. We have hoped against hope, and wrestled with God in prayer that He would avert the threatened danger, but the cloud burst over our heads and we have been swept into the arena of the conflict. The flower of our youth have entered the fray, some voluntarily and some by conscription. Separations have come that have left hearts crushed and bleeding because of this cruel war. We are in distress, with the sword on one hand and famine on the other. What shall we, as a nation, do to extricate ourselves from this awful dilemma? The way is clear. We must turn to God as the nation of Judah did under Hezekiah when the Assyrian, mighty, arrogant, and aggressive, purposed to crush everybody and everything that opposed him. Hezekiah, in dread of Sennacherib, shrank into the shelter of Jehovah, spreading the insolent letter of this haughty king before the Lord, who stretched out his right arm of might and saved the nation of Judah. We have been guilty of many national sins, not the least of which is the sin of permitting the precious grain which God has so bountifully bestowed upon us to be manufactured into that which kills both the bodies and souls of men.

In speaking at an intercessory service held by the ministers of Philadelphia, the Rev. Lloyd W. Tomkins, D. D., declared that while preparedness, liberty bonds and Red Cross contributions are important, the most vital thing of all is that the nation and its allies fall on their knees and ask God's forgiveness for their sins. Dr. Tomkins further said, "Can we, like the Pharisees, thank God that we are not what other nations are, when we know that the trinity of intemperance, impurity and dishonesty hath mightily controlled us?"

May our nation take unto itself wisdom, confess its sins and turn to God for pardon. Then can we sing with rejoicing the forty-sixth Psalm, ever regarded as a hymn of thanksgiving in memory of Sennacherib's discomfiture.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

August 28—Birthday of Lucy Webb Hayes.
September 28—Children's Harvest Home (Birthday of Frances E. Willard)

SUPERINTENDENTS
SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK

Dear Sunday School Worker:

The third quarterly Temperance Sunday is at hand. The date, September 9, reminds us that there is no time to lose if we prepare well for the observance of the day in the Sunday schools.

The quarterly temperance lesson of the International Uniform Lesson Series is found in Daniel 1. The topic is "The Benefits of Total Abstinence" and suggests the direct line of Temperance Teaching. Daniel's purpose, as given in the Golden Text (Dan. 1:8), reveals the true meaning of a pledge. It is first a determination within the heart followed by the outward act which reveals that purpose. The signing of the total abstinence pledge is a tangible revelation of a "purpose" and is most desirable as an example and a fortification.

The quarterly temperance lesson leaflet gives valuable blackboard teaching points with practical application. Price, 30 cents per 100, postpaid. Sunday school teachers will welcome this leaflet. It should be given out one week in advance of the temperance lesson.

Our temperance lesson for September 9 is a timely one. Thousands of the best young men of the country are being selected by the government and placed in training for war. They will need every possible fortification against the tempter who will come to them in varied guise to lure them from the path of rectitude.

Because of our responsibility as Sunday school workers we must pause in our regular work and study the situation to discover what we can do to stimulate patriotism, protect our "boys" and relieve suffering caused by the war. Our duty as Christian temperance workers demands this and we must not fail.

Your National superintendent suggests the following plans as a basis for work: First, let the flag be unfurled in every Sunday school and let it be saluted by all departments of the school as a part of the opening exercises. The wearing of the colors by every member of the Sunday school, old and young, will stimulate patriotism.

Second, appoint a Committee on Patriotic Service which should insure definite plans for each department and the enlisting of every member of the school. The superintendent of the Temperance department should be a member of this committee. The local superintendent of this department should seek to cooperate helpfully with the Committee on Patriotic Service and endeavor to have uniform work done in all the schools.

Third, let a patriotic honor roll be prepared and hung on the wall of the Sunday school auditorium. It should contain the engrossed names of all young men members of the school or of the church who have enlisted in the army and navy. It will have peculiar significance to the classes from which the young men have gone and will mean much to the church and school. It should be the prayer list of the school. Pastor and superintendent will be prompted to pray for those on the honor roll, naming them one by one.

Fourth, let regular "letters from home" be sent to the enlisted "boys" and so planned that a letter will reach each one at least once a week. These can be written by pastor, superintendent, teachers and members of classes to which they belong. No one can estimate the influence of such letters in helping the "boys" to resist temptation and maintain religious experience.

Fifth, let a comfort bag be made for every soldier and sailor on the patriotic honor roll of the Sunday school. These can be made under the direction of the Committee on Patriotic Service, and should be sent, if possible, direct to each enlisted boy. Local superintendents should provide the W. C. T. U. directions for making the comfort bag which may be had in illustrated leaflet form from the National W. C. T. U., Evanston, Ill.

Sixth, every member of the adult portion of the Sunday school should feel it a privilege to join the Red Cross and contribute to its work. This will line up the Sunday school and pave the way for such relief work as can be done under the direction of the committee.

Seventh, the Sunday school should cooperate with all organizations through whose instrumentalities patriotic service may be promoted and the enlisted Sunday school "boys" be reached. Particularly should our workers endeavor to seek cooperation with the W. C. T. U.

Eighth, report all patriotic work done in the Sunday school to our department and a summary will be sent to the National superintendent of the department of Work among Soldiers and Sailors.

The Quarterly Budget for September is essentially a patriotic budget and designed to promote Sunday school patriotic service. The above suggestions, amplified and printed in leaflet form will be found in the Budget, also directions for making the comfort bag, sample pledge cards, and leaflets suitable for use in the bags or to enclose in letters. It also contains the usual helps for the Sunday school hour—the outline program, lesson leaflet, responsive reading, recitation, exercises and helps for teachers of all departments. A sample lot of well selected leaflets for general distribution is also found in the Budget. Price of Budget, 15 cents or 50 cents for the year. (Money must be sent in advance.)

We are looking forward to World's Temperance Sunday as the day when we hope to have Sunday school temperance exhibits in the schools. To this end a new method leaflet has been prepared and included in the Budget of this quarter. It gives suggestions and instructions for this exhibit including expressional work by the pupils and also directions for general exhibit work in conventions and institutes. The price of the leaflets, "The Sunday School and Patriotic Service," and "The Sunday School Exhibit" is 25 cents per 100, postpaid.

Workers are urged to order supplies early and also to send for their report blanks at once. I will send the blanks in any quantity for 15 cents per 100 which pays postage and wrapping. Let us have a complete statistical report and a comprehensive view of the work of the Sunday School department to present to "Mother National" at the convention this fall. Loyally yours in Service,

STELLA B. IRVINE, Nat'l Supt.
115 Walnut St., Riverside, Calif.

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do you know the answers to these questions? They may be found in this number of THE UNION SIGNAL.

The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. What action looking toward National Constitutional Prohibition has been taken by the United States Senate?

2. After similar action by the House of Representatives, how many state legislatures are required to ratify the amendment?

3. How many state legislatures probably can be counted upon to act favorably upon a constitutional prohibition amendment?

4. Give the substance of the prohibition provision of the Food Control bill pending in the House and Senate.

5. What effect has prohibition had upon coal production?

6. Explain why the manufacture of liquor does not have any bearing on the price of milk.

7. The indulgence in what beverage during the hot weather is liable to cause sunstroke?

8. Give the date of the next Temperance Sunday, the subject to be considered, and plans suggested for the occasion.

9. Explain the attitude of college fraternities toward liquor drinking, as exemplified by a Massachusetts college.

10. What large metropolitan club has installed a non-alcoholic bar?

FROM OUR Y. P. B. MAIL BAG

The District of Columbia Young People's Branches are working in the interest of the soldiers,—making comfort bags and assisting at the W. C. T. U. soldiers' rest rooms.

Fifty new Y. P. B.'s have been organized in Ohio this year. Three cheers for Ohio!

A splendid new Y. P. B. has been organized in Roundup, Montana, under the leadership of the state Y. P. B. secretary, Miss Sue Bragstad. We regret that Montana is to lose this capable, consecrated worker, but we congratulate Idaho, whither she is going, and under a new name! Idaho must capture her. The Montana branches are engaged in work for soldiers and sailors and in poster campaigns.

The Baltimore (Md.) Y. P. B. federation has been holding most successful get-together meetings and each month new members have been added and much enthusiasm generated. During the summer the regular meetings are to be Y. P. B. picnics under the direction of Miss Roberta D. Carnes of Goucher College. A committee has made arrangements to plan an entertainment in aid of the Ambulance Fund and altogether the work is advancing splendidly. A party of girls from the Baltimore Y. P. B. made a visit to the penitentiary and conducted a Sabbath afternoon service. Each inmate was given a potted plant with a Scripture card attached. This is a practical line of work. More Y. P. B.'s should "lend a hand."

Our former and much loved National Y. P. B. secretary, Mrs. Ross Hayes Schachner, has been elected president of the St. Louis W. C. T. U. Federation. With wee Ellen Ann also calling for "Madame President" we can imagine the busy life of our Mrs. Schachner, but we know she is equal to every emergency. God bless her!

We are rejoiced to hear news from the Granite state! A new Y. P. B. has recently been organized at the New Hampshire State Industrial School in Manchester and another at Newport. The members are at work for the sailors on the steamship, "New Hampshire."

New Jersey Y. P. B.'s have been making special efforts to increase the subscriptions to the state paper. The Bayonne branch has made a gain of sixty members, and fifty members have subscribed for the New Jersey White Ribbon News. With such up-to-date members we expect THE UNION SIGNAL to hear from New Jersey Y. P. B.'s.

Mrs. Fannie Drummond, National W. C. T. U. organizer and general secretary of the Ohio Y. P. B., conducted a Y. P. B. encampment and training school at Lakeside-on-Lake-Erie, July 16, 17, 18. Both in interest and numbers the meeting was a gratifying success. An efficiency congress, a Y. P. B. clinic, and a council of war were features of the program. The session closed with a striking playlet, "Aunt Columbia's Wash Day," in which forty young people took part. Mrs. Maude B. Perkins, general secretary of the New York state Y. P. B., was guest of honor and brought inspiration and enthusiasm to the Ohio young people.

PENNSYLVANIA Y. P. B. CONVENTION

(Continued from Page Six)

Arthur Holmes, dean of the general faculty of Pennsylvania state college. Brimful of illustrations, facts and figures, which proved a revelation on the tobacco evil, it gripped and held the young people to the end. Mr. Holmes also spoke with great force, on "Heredity and Its Meaning."

A Young People's Branch clinic, created interest: A case diagnosed (need of organizing); treatment needed (helps for new organizations); later and often fatal complications (what to avoid); value of a specialist for diseases (organizers); the crisis over (good developed for future citizenship).

Commencement night, the graduates in the L. T. L. course, seventeen girls and three boys, were presented with their diplomas by Miss Ella Broomell, state L. T. L. secretary, who made a brief and appropriate address. Miss Edna M. Smiley, the state Y. P. B. secretary, presented the diplomas to those completing the National Y. P. B. study course. The address to the graduates was given by Mrs. Addie B. Parsels.

A delicious picnic lunch was served at Neshaminy Falls by the Bucks county W. C. T. U. At the Burns oratorical contest, Beatrice Search won the first prize and Bessie Mordan the second prize. A banquet was held later.

The young people were delighted to have in their midst the "queen mother," Elma M. Preston, honorary state secretary.

The following officers were elected: President, Howard D. Bell; first vice-president, Anna Michener; second vice-president, Donald Rohrer; corresponding secretary, Marion McCorkle; treasurer, Leon Sickles.

KANSAS Y. P. B'S IN CONFERENCE

(Continued from Page Seven)

president of Russell county W. C. T. U.; an address by Mrs. Emma W. Grover; greetings by Miss Gladys Noland who spoke for the Fort Hay Kansas Normal; readings by Miss Ollie May McCormick and Miss Mabel Lindley, and a description by Mrs. Ladie Simonton of "Buoy Bells" she had heard on Tampa Bay. Platform night was patriotic to a high degree with Mrs. Sibbitt, Mrs. Grover, Mrs. Minnie J. Grinstead, National organizer, and Mrs. Lillian Mitchner, state W. C. T. U. president, participating.

The program in general contained many hints and helps for the local worker. A discussion, "How I Make My Y. P. B. Meetings so Interesting that Young People Like to Come," was led by Mrs. Grinstead. "Advertise the programs well," she advised; "have time for recreation and games, something to eat, socials." In this connection she recalled the recommendation of Frances Willard, "Ever at it." The question box conducted by Mrs. Mitchner was an enjoyable feature and furnished the solution for many local problems.

Greetings from Mary Frances Willard Anderson, National Y. P. B. secretary, and from Miss Anna A. Gordon, National W. C. T. U. president, were read and replies ordered sent them. The announcement that Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National vice-president-at-large, will attend the next conference, was received with evident pleasure.

Big features were the medal contest at the normal school auditorium, with Mr. F. W. Bettis as winner, and the cantata, "A Saloonless Nation," presented to an audience of six hundred.

As permanent results of a mass meeting held on Sunday an L. T. L. of thirty-eight members and a Y. P. B. with a membership of fifty-five were organized. In the evening a union temperance mass meeting of the county W. C. T. U. was held in the auditorium of the state normal, at which Mrs. Grinstead spoke on the subject, "Make Your Own Sunshine."

All in all, the conference was a delightful gathering. On every hand were heard the enthusiastic comments of the young men and young women, "Hasn't it been great!" and similar expressions which seem to foretell growth in the work of the organization and in the lives and characters of the young people.

WHAT ONE WOMAN ACCOMPLISHED IN A SHORT SPACE OF TIME

Culled from the Correspondence File of the National Department of Flower Mission and Relief Work

"Last night was full of sleepless hours for me. While meditating over the sad time in prospect the next day when I must bid adieu to a boy of twenty-three, one who had been tenderly reared and of whom we were proud as a college man, the query came to my mind, 'What can I do to help the W. C. T. U. in its work for French orphans?' Like a flash came the answer, 'Send to Chase & Sanborn of Chicago, asking them to donate one hundred coffee cans with a slot cut in the top of each, then place these in stores, restaurants and all clean places.' This was at 1:45 a. m.! I arose, wrote a special delivery letter to the firm indicated and at 11:40 my phone rang and over it came this message: 'You shall have one hundred cans. We will pay the express. If the number is not enough, call for all you want. This is a grand idea.' I and the children set to work on labels, bearing these words: 'Do your bit; $36.50 will support a French orphan for one year. Flower Mission department ———— W. C. T. U.'

"After opening a few cans we were able to hand to our president $6.50, which sum she had advanced towards our first French orphan. Now, July 14, we have $3.50 additional with which to start in on our second French orphan."

Experience No. 2

"I was called on the phone the other day and asked to visit a family. At first I refused to go, saying that this kind of work among the poor I did for my church only at the holiday season. Then the thought came to me that as a Flower Mission superintendent the work was properly mine.

"I can never express my gratitude to the merchant who asked my services. On a bench lay a man, pale and starved, just returned from the hospital; two loaves of bread in the house; five hungry children. I drove home, filled two baskets out of my own pantry, took them back, then hurried home again and called thirty of my friends on the phone for a 'neighborhood food shower.' By night my dining room presented the appearance of a variety shop! ! !

"The Associated Charities will now take charge of the case and we have the comfort of knowing that a dairy will provide buttermilk for the sick man and two quarts of milk for the family; a bakery will supply left-over bread every day for three months; a physician will give his services."

Alaska dry—Porto Rico dry—verily the youngsters shame their mother country. —Christian Advocate.

ALMOST

VIDA IRENE THOMPSON

Freda Thorne stood in the city depot, waiting for the train which was to take her to her home town, a half hour's ride distant. She was a quiet, frail-looking schoolgirl, rather pretty, with a heavy braid of dark brown wavy hair. Mrs. Thorne did not like Freda to be alone on these trips three times a week, but they were necessary, and she could not go with her daughter, whom she had so carefully brought up. But for some months now Freda had gone back and forth in safety.

This afternoon, as her gaze was directed outside the dusty window to the crowds of people on the platform, a young man, neatly and quietly dressed, approached her, raised his hat, and extended his hand, saying in a tone of pleased surprise, "Why, Miss Brown, I m so glad to see you."

The girl looked up startled, and almost afraid, and his hand dropped, as he said in a chagrined manner, "I beg your pardon. I thought it was a friend of mine from my home." His abashed air and quick apology more than made amends to Freda, but, naturally somewhat timid, she only murmured rather doubtfully, something about its being "all right."

But the stranger was apparently eager to retrieve himself, if possible, for instead of withdrawing, he asked Freda if she were going far, and, only trying to be polite, and more particularly because she thought him embarrassed at his blunder, she replied, "Oh, no, only home, to Ravendale."

"Why, is that so," rejoined her companion, "I am going through there myself, on my way to M—," a large city.

Freda's grandparents, of whom she was very fond, lived in M—, so her eyes lit up with interest. Seeing this the young man asked with friendly interest if she had ever been there, or knew anyone in the city.

"Yes," she answered, "my grandparents and two aunts live there and I have been to see them a good many times."

"Well, now, isn't that nice? I have a sister there, too. In what part of the city do your relatives live?" and Freda told him.

"Now I call that quite a coincidence, for my sister lives in the same part of the city and only a few squares from them. It's a beautiful place, isn't it? Don't you wish you were going that far yourself and could see them all?"

Freda had begun to lose her shyness and frankly said she certainly would like to be able to do so, but did not expect to get a chance very soon, as she was in school. The young man sympathized with her, asked a few questions about her home and her mother, talked a little more about M—, meanwhile consulting his watch, and commenting on the lateness of their train.

Finally he seemed to have come to some pleasant decision, for leaning toward Freda, and speaking in a somewhat lower tone, he said, confidentially, "Listen, and I'll tell you what let's do. If you will come on with me this afternoon, I'll pay your fare to M— and back again. This is Friday and you could stay in M— over Sunday, visit your folks, and get back on Monday morning in time for school"—then, as he saw dissent in the girl's eyes—"Just think what a fine time you could have. I'll help you to enjoy yourself, take you out to see the town, and over to my sister's, too. I'm always taking someone in there and she likes to have folks come. You would like her ever so much."

Poor Freda! How nearly lost she was she did not realize for years afterward.

"The angels up in heaven took a fleecy cloud of white
And fashioned it into a banner fair,
Then striped it with the crimson of the dawn's eternal light
With just a bit of sky to hold the stars a-gleaming there;
Then with their wings they fanned it till its spangled folds unfurled
With radiant splendor on the throne above.
Then God Almighty blessed it as He gave it to the world,
That's the story of Old Glory, the flag we love." —Ball

She had never been told of the dangers lying in wait for unprotected girls; nevertheless, her home training stood her in good stead at this time. She looked up, wondering how she could best refuse the kindness of this young man who was so willing to do his best to give a good time to a stranger, with no hope of any reward for himself.

She could only tell the truth, so she said timidly, "Thank you, sir, but mother does not like us to go anywhere without telling her, and I'm afraid I would better not go. Thank you just the same."

"But then, this is different, you see," he urged. "You will be going to your own folks, so that you will be all right, and your mother would surely be very glad to have you enjoy yourself. Now, wouldn't she?"

Freda thought of the times since her father's death that the mother had gone without, so that Freda and the little brother and sister might have a pleasure supplied, and admitted that it was true.

"Well, then," in triumph, "of course she will be glad to have you go, especially as we can drop her a card from here and another in M—. Just wait and I'll buy the tickets and a card." He was just starting away when Freda stopped him. She thought of the few quiet words of reproof from her mother. The look on the dear face, as well as the loss of confidence would, she knew, far outweigh any possible pleasure, and to that remembrance she owes her salvation.

"Wait, sir," and as he turned back, she went on hurriedly, afraid of offending, "I really mustn't. Mother would not like me to go, I know."

The young man was a little less pleasant-looking now, and his voice was not quite so gentle, but he tried again to convince Freda that it would be all right to carry out the proposition. His continued insistence began finally to bring to the girl a sense of danger and she looked around for help, for she half feared being somehow carried away against her will.

A glad sense of relief came, however, when she saw two ladies from her home town sitting at the other end of the large room, busy in conversation. She wondered if she could attract their attention and how she could get rid of her now unwelcome companion.

But he had been closely watching her and, following her glance, saw the ladies, and her glad look as she evidently recognized them as acquaintances, and seeing that his chance was gone, he turned sharply on his heel and disappeared without another word. Freda made her way slowly to the other side of the room and taking her seat just behind the ladies began to cry softly from excitement and relief.

As she took her seat on the train a few minutes later, again behind the ladies, who all unconsciously had proven guardian angels, Freda was still afraid of being followed, but though she watched the platform very carefully from the window, she saw no sign of the young man.

When she arrived at home she was glad to pour out her story to her mother. And that mother, having listened with inward trembling but outward calmness, must have breathed forth a prayer of thanksgiving, as the daughter does now, for the training which made mother a confidant in everything, to which fact that daughter owes more than life.

THE WILES OF THE WHITE SLAVER

The following incident was sent us by Lucy Rider Meyer. She vouches for its authenticity. We print it here because it reveals a real peril attending the arrival of every girl that comes to a great city. City streets are still inhabited by wolves and hyenas. Here is how one attempted to destroy one girl who was so protected by the shield of purity that she escaped. We believe the incident will serve as a caution to others:

A young woman having to wait over night in a large Wisconsin city found her way to one of the best and largest hotels in town. She registered quietly and was shown politely to her room. Hardly had she removed her wraps when the phone in her room rang. She was surprised, having no acquaintances in town, but, of course, she answered.

"Who is it?" she called.

"It's me," was the reply. "Guess who I am."

"I don't recognize you. Please give me your name."

"Think a minute—one of your old Vineland friends. You surely know my voice. Come down and I'll meet you at the foot of the elevator. You know me well."

"Please tell me your name."

"O ribbons! You didn't ask my name when we met last—don't you remember?"

"When did I ever meet you?"

"Come down and I'll tell you. Come on and we'll have a gay time this evening. I've nothing else to do. I know a dandy movie and we can have a little supper afterward."

"I do not wish to meet a man who is not willing to give me his name," said the wise young lady, and she hung up her receiver with a click emphatic enough to make the waiting scoundrel below understand its significance.

But suppose she had been coaxed and cajoled into meeting him. Suppose the promise of the "gay time" and the movie and the little supper—with not unlikely a cup of drugged wine—had deceived her into intimacy with this designing, bad man! Suppose—the chill of terror comes as one writes the word.—Northwestern Christian Advocate

THE DOOM OF KING ALCOHOL

MRS. W. H. PRESTON

Dramatis Personae: KING ALCOHOL, young person, fifteen to twenty years of age. WHISKY, BEER, NEAR-BEER, CIGARET, TOBACCO, MORPHINE and COCAINE (twins), UNCLE SAM, GODDESS OF LIBERTY, VICTORY, PEACE, children between the ages of ten and fifteen.

COSTUMES

KING ALCOHOL: Loose black robe. Sash bearing the words, "King Alcohol," in red letters. A pointed cap of red, and red wand

WHISKY: Black robe, black pointed cap, badge with "Whisky," in red letters

BEER: Brown robe, pointed cap of brown, "Beer," in yellow letters on badge

NEAR BEER: Same as Beer

TOBACCO: Same as Beer. Sash with word, "Tobacco"

CIGARET: Gray robe, with word, "Cigaret" in red letters on sash

TWINS—MORPHINE AND COCAINE: Green robes. Sash of black, with names in red

UNCLE SAM: Conventional costume

GODDESS OF LIBERTY: Costume of white and blue. Carries flag

VICTORY: Loose white robe, hair flowing, crown of gold. Sash with name in gold. Carries a horn, or trumpet

PEACE: Pale green robe, crown of gold. Name in gold letters on sash

CHILDREN, YOUNG PERSONS, WOMEN: White robes, carrying banners inscribed, "The Saloon Must Go," "Victory," "A Saloonless Nation," "King Alcohol is Doomed," "John Barleycorn, Good-bye," etc.

(King Alcohol seated in large chair by table. Uncle Sam back of him on a raised stool, head bowed as if in thought.)

KING ALCOHOL: All night long I have tossed restlessly on my couch, trying in vain to sleep. It seemed to me that the air was full of strange sounds, and that they grew more intense with each passing hour. At times I could see a multitude of people marching and triumphantly singing. Then it seemed to me I was surrounded, and—as they came nearer—I could feel the breath of those who would strangle me. I could stand this no longer, so I arose; and, as the crowds grew greater and greater, I came in here where I might be at peace.

What does this dream mean—no, it was not a dream, but a reality! Try as I will, I can not forget what I have seen and heard! I wonder if—(picks up paper)—Ah! here it is again: (reads from paper) "King Alcohol is doomed! The White Ribbon Army is marching on to Washington by thousands and tens of thousands! They gather force as they march through every state, and victory is certain! Within a short time King Alcohol and his co-partners will be utterly destroyed, the white dove of peace will hover over our fair land, and a stainless flag float over the Capitol at Washington!" (King Alcohol rises excitedly.) This oncoming army must be met and conquered. (Rings bell.) I will call my subjects, and they must go forth to quell this mighty foe! Hither, my brave soldiers!

(Enter WHISKY, BEER, NEAR-BEER, TOBACCO, CIGARET, MORPHINE and COCAINE.)

KING ALCOHOL: My subjects, listen to me! I have just read (picks up paper) that a great and powerful army is marching to Washington to dethrone King Alcohol. Now, what can each one of you do to stop this onward march of the white ribbon host? WHISKY, old boy, let us hear from you first.

WHISKY: I will do as I have been doing in the past. I will curse those who use me, I will ruin homes, and reduce women and children to poverty and disgrace. I will bring the brightest and the best men to the level of the beast. I am ready to go forth to battle!

KING ALCOHOL: Ah, that is good. Let us hear from BEER. What can you do to help?

BEER: I will begin on the boy, and slowly I will wind about his little life a habit that can not be broken. Young men, too, shall be my victims.

KING ALCOHOL: Well said, well said! Now, my little NEAR-BEER, what can you do?

NEAR-BEER: I shall go where father goes, and do as he says. I will look after the voter, and the so-called gentleman drinker.

TOBACCO: And I will strike at the health of boys and men—yes, and women, too. Through me, they are made ready for you, my honored king!

CIGARET: And I? What can I do to maintain my good name? Why, I can debase boys and men—yes, and women, too (sadly), and even girls. Ha! ha! I can dull their reason, and impair their health. I can fill insane asylums and graves. I will be your "minute man!"

KING ALCOHOL: Yes, yes, I know I can depend on you. Now, MORPHINE and COCAINE, what can you do to help? This army must be overthrown.

MORPHINE AND COCAINE: (Speaking together): Why, we are among the mightiest! We are ruining men, women and children by the thousands! Reason, virtue, honor, all vanish at our approach. We will fight to the finish all who attempt to oppose US!

KING ALCOHOL: Ah, I am counting on you, my guard! You are a band of noble soldiers! We must make one more effort to overthrow this army. Uncle Sam has always been our captain in war. With him we can accomplish everything. Uncle Sam, what say you?

UNCLE SAM: King Alcohol, I have been your friend and partner all through the years. We have had great times, and made much money together; but—somehow—somehow—I see—tonight—I see—the dawn of a new day; and, in the light of the rising sun, I hear the tramp, tramp, of a mighty army, as it advances. They say they are coming to protect the homes of their loved ones, which you and your co-partners, with their vile concoctions, have despoiled; yea, many times felled with one mighty blow.

Yes, I have been with you all these years; but now that my eyes are opened, my mind enlightened, my conscience awakened, I HERE AND NOW DECLARE OUR FRIENDSHIP AT AN END!! (KING ALCOHOL gasps.)

Poor, ignorant fool that I have been not to better conserve our greatest treasure! I have thought more of gold than of human lives! May the God of America forgive me! As I listened to each one of your heartless men telling his gruesome story, I thoroughly awoke from the spell which has bound me, and now I am ready to strike a blow in defense of our flag, and make it stainless! (Raises flag.)

Hark! I hear the army as it approaches! Do you hear the tread of this mighty host?

KING ALCOHOL: Alas, alas, we are doomed if Uncle Sam has forsaken us. But—let us make one more mighty effort to defend our cause: Soldiers, forward march!

(Exit. A few strains of a funeral dirge may be played here.)

(Children enter singing, "Saloons Must Go," and group themselves on left of stage. They are followed by twenty-six young people representing the dry states, each carrying a banner inscribed, "Maine Dry," "Kansas Dry," etc. They take their places in the center. Others march in singing one verse of "Star Spangled Banner." Enter Victory, Goddess of Liberty and Peace, who complete the company. All sing these words to the tune of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic":)

"Old rum has been rejected, yes,
In many states disowned;;
The many wives and mothers
Say he won't be re-enthroned;
And soon we'll shout for glory,
For saloons will all be gone.
Prohibition draweth nigh!

CHORUS:
Glory, glory hallelujah!
Glory, glory hallelujah!
Glory, glory, hallelujah!
The nation's going dry!

"Oh, the day of prohibition
Will bring happiness by and by;
No power on earth can stop it now;
The nation's going dry.
Oh, we can hardly wait to hail
That grand and glorious time,
Prohibition draweth nigh!"

UNCLE SAM: Yes, it shall be written in the constitution of our nation AND THAT SHORTLY. Goddess of Liberty, I hail thee! Victory, I welcome thee! Peace, I love and cherish thee! May you never fall me.

(King Alcohol and his subjects may return to the platform, and the King declare that they are ready to acknowledge defeat.)

KING ALCOHOL: I was Satan's right hand man. I was the mightiest king that ever lived. Other kings yielded to me as a child to its sire. With my breath I have wiped whole nations from the face of the earth. For me men have discarded honor and women virtue. I destroyed ambition, ruined statesmen, and still they loved me. I filled insane asylums and prisons, housed my subjects in hovels, and fed them on husks. Still they loved me. Fathers gave me their sons, mothers their daughters, maidens their lovers, and begged me to stay. With one touch I have ruined industries. Judges yielded to my power. I burned cities. I sank navies and destroyed great armies. But you have overpowered me. I surrender.

(All join in singing "John Barleycorn, Goodbye.")

The song, "John Barleycorn, Goodbye," can be secured of the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill. Price, 10 cents. "Saloons Must Go," price 25 cents per 100.

DO YOUR BIT

IDA M. ARCHER

If you cannot cross the ocean,
And help at the battle front,
You can be one of the home guard,
And faithfully do your stunt.

You can help to save the food-stuff
From the booze which poisons men;
Save it for the hungry millions,
By your voice and by your pen.
Women can conserve the products,
They are doing their big bit;
Shall the men, then, keep on drinking,
Smoking, chewing? Why not quit?

Is it right to raise tobacco
On the ground where food should be?
Is it just to spend your money
For the weed when, as you see,
Every cent will soon be needed
In this bloody, world-wide war?
Do your bit for home and country;
"Brighten the corner where you are."

There are many ways for service
In this time of greatest need,
If the men, as well as women,
LIVE,—in thought and word and deed;
Be true blue, then, soul and body;
"Son of man, stand on thy feet."
Let thy service now, if ever,
Be wholehearted and complete.

PENNSYLVANIA TRAINING SCHOOL FOR W. C. T. U. WORKERS

Special Correspondence

The first training school for Pennsylvania workers was held by the state organization during the first two weeks of July in Millersville, selected because of its beautiful location, fine equipment and easy access. The meetings were held in the model school and gymnasium, while the sessions of the summer normal school took place at the same time in the other buildings. Without the slightest friction, but rather with an interchange of courtesies, the two schools worked side by side.

There were thirty-seven members of the school, including faculty and students. Of the state executives, the president, Mrs. Ella M. George; the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Sylvia B. Norrish, and the treasurer, Mrs. Leah Cobb Marion, were present the entire time and conducted conferences and classes in organization work. The recording secretary, Miss Margaret Irwin, and the vice-president, Mrs. Addie B. Parsels, attended the last two days. Chaplain Charles E. Varney conducted classes in platform work, lecture and sermon building, and Pennsylvania civil government. Rev. Mecca Marie Varney gave most valuable instruction in suffrage, parliamentary usage and physical training. Mrs. Azuba Jones was in attendance the first week and inspired her hearers with her lessons in organization work. The National superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction, Mrs. Edith Smith Davis, was present the second week, and the white ribboners were fortunate in receiving the benefits of her marvelous skill and great experience. Miss Amanda Landes, preceptress of the normal school, acted as director of the training school, as well as instructor in public speaking.

The classes met every day from eight to twelve in the morning, and at three-thirty in the afternoon. There were four afternoon conferences during the two weeks, and three public evening meetings —one, at which Mrs. Azuba Jones was the speaker—a Sunday vesper service, when Mrs. George and Chaplain Varney made addresses, and a closing meeting, with Mrs. Parsels as the speaker. The annual Lancaster county W. C. T. U. picnic was held this year at the normal school. On account of heavy rains the attendance at the morning session was small and the picnic lunch was eaten in Day Students' hall, but there was a good attendance at the afternoon meeting, when Mr. and Mrs. Varney gave instruction on the question, "How to Reach the People."

There were a number of musicians in the party who were helpful in the public meetings. Mrs. Ada B. Lyon, Miss Dunkle and Mrs. Marion were the vocalists, and Miss Cassler and Miss Willard served as pianists.

A very delightful feature of the school was the social gathering, which met each evening on the campus or in the reception room, when stories, games, recitations and charades delighted us all. One evening was devoted to a mock anti-suffrage meeting, a bright, enjoyable and profitable burlesque. On the last afternoon the students gave a reception to the faculty, when toasts from the faculty and officers, also refreshments, were enjoyed. Before separating the "I. T. S." society was formed. (Read the letters backward; you'll see the meaning). The object of the society, of course, is to perpetuate and carry forward the work of the training school.

Five state officers, one National superintendent, two special welfare workers, the publisher of the Bulletin, the state Y. P. B. secretary, the state L. T. L. secretary, two state lecturers, a state field worker, a special S. T. I. field worker, a state superintendent, the office secretary at state headquarters, and seven county presidents constituted the personnel of the school. The unanimous verdict was that for profitable instruction and happy fellowship, the training school was a great success.

Mrs. Sylvia B. Norrish, corresponding secretary of the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U., recently made a map of the United States, showing that the state of Pennsylvania is not so black as it is sometimes pictured. It now has eleven dry counties and, estimating the number of people for each liquor license granted, stands eleventh in the list of the twenty-two states not yet dry.

Miss Christine I. Tinling, National W. C. T. U. lecturer, has recently spoken and worked in several counties of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Viola D. Romans and Mrs. Florence Ewell Atkins, National lecturers, are expected to fill engagements during August. Mrs. Lora S. LaMance was engaged for a part of the month, but at the earnest request of the Iowa W. C. T. U. was released to help in its prohibition campaign.

Poster Campaign in Philadelphia County

Special Correspondence

Philadelphia county W. C. T. U. has observed many Poster Days. The poster work began in March with a fine display at the annual conference of the Methodist Episcopal church held in Cookman church. Miss Gertrude W. Pennington presided at the poster table and talked constantly on the importance of poster work. In April a large room was secured in the Wesley building, 1703 Arch St., and visitors were invited to examine a vast collection of telling posters. A relay of white ribboners assisted Miss Pennington in the management of this exhibit, which was on display for more than two months. Thousands of posters went out to all parts of the city and the surrounding towns. In addition to this enterprise Miss Pennington was successful in persuading the billboard company to give publicity to prohibition sentiments. In all parts of the city may now be seen such statements as these: "The Liquor Traffic Must Go," "Safety First Means No Alcohol," "Stop Treating Your Friends," "The Man Who Drinks is the Last to Be Hired." Under each appear the magic letters, "W. C. T. U."

Willow Grove, the favorite musical resort, has again entertained the white ribboners, the county unions of Chester, Delaware, Montgomery and Philadelphia holding a delightful institute at that place on July 26. Mrs. May Mackin, Y. P. B. secretary for Philadelphia county, gave a glowing account of the institute at Millersville. A petition for wartime prohibition, signed by the county presidents of the four counties in attendance, was forwarded to President Wilson. "Americanization as War Service," was the topic ably handled by Mrs. S. G. McFarland. Miss H. L. Lee, corresponding secretary of Philadelphia county W. C. T. U. and secretary of the Loyal Temperance Legion Branch, conducted an instructive and enjoyable conference on the best ways of capturing the boys and girls for temperance. Mrs. A. C. Peacock, president Philadelphia union, as Legislative superintendent, was instrumental in having sent from the Home Missionary Conference at Chambersburg a petition to President Wilson asking for bone dry legislation.

FANS AND LEAFLETS

for distribution in Chautauquas and other summer assemblies at

SPECIAL PRICES

Leaflets carefully selected.

PACKAGE NO. 1
Containing
50 Prohibition Fans
300 Leaflets
Price, $1.45.

PACKAGE NO. 2
Containing
100 Prohibition Fans
500 Leaflets
Price, $2.45.

PACKAGE NO. 3
Containing
150 Prohibition Fans
800 Leaflets
Price, $3.90.

PACKAGE NO. 4
Containing
200 Prohibition Fans
1,000 Leaflets
Price, $5.00.

Please order early.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

W. C. T. U. NAPKINS
heavy crepe paper, with dainty pink flowered border and W. C. T. U. monogram in gold in corner.
Price, per 25, 20 cents; per 100, 75 cents.

FOLDED DRINKING CUPS
made of waxed paper with Woman's Christian Temperance Union printed on same in blue.
Price, per dozen, 10 cents; per 100, 50 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

¶We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.
¶Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
118-120 Fifth Ave., New York
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works
Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

Series of Short Leaflets

For General Distribution Among Mothers, Fathers, Girls and Boys.

MOTHERS' HOME SERIES
- "Watch Me."
- The Things We Forget.
- Mother's Smile.
- His Mother's Version.
- The Word of Commendation.
- A Mother's Forgiveness.
- The Timely Rest.
- Your White Ribbon.
- Home Keeping Hearts Are Happiest.
- Mothers' Sons.
- A Word to Mothers.

FATHERS' HOME SERIES
- Ought Little Ones to Sign the Pledge?
- What Burbank, the "Plant Wizard," says of Alcohol and Tobacco.
- Saloon Couldn't Have His Boy.
- To Make a House Into a Home.
- A Safe Place.
- Papa's Prayers.
- What Changed Him.
- Written on the Heart.
- Nurturing a Cheerful Spirit.
- An Unusual Chum.

GIRLS' OWN SERIES
- Character Pots
- The Words of My Mouth.
- Martha Ann's Song.
- Gifts and Love.
- A Lavender Voice.
- Kept Clean.
- Where Are Your Thoughts?
- When the Bible Speaks.
- The Rule of the Game.
- Mother.

BOYS' POCKET SERIES
- His Turn Now.
- Too Small to Divide.
- A Talk by Burdette.
- The Child is Father of the Man.
- It Takes Two.
- Prompt People.
- Two of Us.
- The Power of Control.
- Stop a While.
- Still Chiselling.
- A Message.
- How Alcohol Works.
- How Are You Building?
- The Law of Habit.

Size, 3½x6 inches.

Price, 2 cents each; per 50, 15 cents; per 100, 20 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

FLASHLIGHTS OF FUN

Passing a hand over his forehead, the worried drill sergeant paused for breath as he surveyed the knock-kneed recruit. Then he pointed a scornful finger. "No," he declared, "you're hopeless. You'll never make a soldier. Look at you now. The top 'alf of your legs is standin' at attention an' the bottom 'alf is standin' at ease!"—London Tidbits.

Editor of Rubetown Weekly Intelligencer: "Here's a letter from our correspondent at Hike's Corners striking for a raise of salary."

Proprietor: "What? These hard times? What are we giving him now?"

Editor: "Stamps and paper, but he threatens to resign unless he gets a pencil a month raise."—Puck.

Fond Papa: "Well, son, what did you learn in school today?"

Son: "Aw, not much, dad. We hadda couple of two-reelers in history, a three-reel travelog in geography, and a split-reel nature-study. They useta give us a Wild West pitcher once in a while, but they don't do it no more."—Widow.

Dr. Mary M. Cutler, president of the W. C. T. U. of Korea, with her assistants at work in the hospital at Seoul

Dr. Cutler has served as a missionary in Korea for a quarter of a century; for twenty years she has been the superintendent of the "Salvation for all Women" hospital, at Seoul, and for five years superintendent of the hospital of "Extended Grace" at Pyeng Yang. In her training schools for nurses she conducts courses in scientific temperance, and her students go out to spread the gospel of total abstinence among the people. In all her work of healing she strives to impress her patients with the danger from the use of alcoholic liquors and drugs.

SIDETRACK BOOZE BEFORE BOOZE SIDE-TRACKS YOU!

Booze and work simply don't mix. Sooner or later one or the other must be sacrificed. Officials of the National Paper Mills realize this and have posted the following placard in their offices:

"We want only clear-thinking men in our employ.

"You cannot think clearly and act safely if you are a boozer.

"Booze poisons the brain. It stimulates for a short time only—then deadens the senses.

"When men's minds are dull, accidents are bound to occur. It takes alertness—quick thinking and acting—to avoid danger.

"If you must booze, then don't report for work. We don't want boozers on our premises. They are dangerous, not only to themselves but to all others who come in contact with them.

"Booze will never get you a job or help hold one.

"Booze will not help you pay your debts nor increase your earning power.

"Side-track booze before booze side-tracks you."—Good Health.

Literature and Supplies for Comfort Bags

LITERATURE

Testament, special khaki cloth cover. Price, 25 cents.

Testament. Price, 12 cents.

"Home Hymns," a collection of hymns set to familiar tunes. Price, 3 cents each; per fifty, 60 cents; per hundred, $1.00.

Soldiers' and Sailors' Songster. Price, 7 cents.

Coupon Pledge Card, printed in blue with flag in colors. Price, per hundred, 35 cents.

"A Friendly Word to Young Men," by Richmond Pearson Hobson of Merrimac fame. Printed in blue, with flag in colors. Price, 2 cents each; per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents.

"Letter from Mother." Facsimile letter with W. C. T. U. monogram and flag in colors, printed in blue. Price, 3 cents each; per fifty, 25 cents; per hundred, 40 cents.

Envelope for letter, with W. C. T. U. monogram. Price, per fifty, 25 cents; per hundred, 40 cents.

"Letter from Mother," with envelope. Price, 5 cents; per hundred, 75 cents.

Protecting the Home Folks (a warning against vice). Each, 2 cents; 50, 25 cents; 100, 40 cents.

"What God Says to His Soldiers." A unique arrangement of Scripture texts under subjects: Reveille—Roll Call—Attention — Quick March—Halt—etc. Printed on card 4¼x2¾, a convenient size to slip into a Testament, with flag in colors and texts printed in blue. Price, 2 cents each; per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 30 cents.

Pledge Cards, "White Cross Obligations." Price, 2 cents each; per 50, 20 cents; per hundred, 30 cents.

Directions for Comfort Bags. Price, 2 cents each; per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred, 25 cents.

(When ordering, please state whether directions are wanted for comfort bags for soldiers or sailors.)

Metal mirrors, 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.75.

Scissors, 15 cents a pair; per dozen, $1.50.

Two-inch gauze sealed bandage, 10 cents net.

One-inch adhesive tape, 10 cents; per dozen, $1.00.

Prices subject to change without notice.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year
Club rate for ten or more subscriptions, 25c a year
No other premium allowed.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . $1.52 a year (6s. 3d.)
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . . . . 47c a year (1s. 1?d.)
THE YOUNG CRUSADER, 37c a year (1s. 6d.)
Address Evanston, Ill.

Can You See the Connection?

"A supper given by the young men of the Schultzville Y. P. B. proved to be one of the pleasing features of their third annual Y. P. B. birthday anniversary celebration. The young men cooked the supper and acted as waiters, and later as dishwashers. They had a splendid time and so did their guests. Songs were sung, yells given, and altogether it was a most pleasant evening. This Branch is 'waking up temperance sentiment' among the young people of Dutchess county."—Extract from the July issue of Woman's Temperance Work, the New York W. C. T. U. paper.

"One member of our Schultzville Y.P.B. has secured up to date since September, 1916, 65 subscriptions to the Y.P.B. Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL. His name is Mr. G. B. Stickle,, Clinton Corners, New York."

Is your Union or Y. P. B. "waking up temperance sentiment?" If not, why not try Mr. Stickle's method?—Extract from letter of Mrs. Margaret Townsend, May 31, 1917.

Local unions whose membership seems lagging in interest should try THE UNION SIGNAL Quiz.

If you would have a wide-awake interested membership push THE UNION SIGNAL.

Every minister should have the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL. It will pay to take the money from the local treasury for this purpose.

Local unions, are you trying to bring your union up to a front rank union? Then see that twenty-five per cent of your members are subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL.—Dora A. Farrow in the Iowa W. C. T. U. Champion.

PROHIBITION FANS

make useful souvenirs for distribution in fairs and other open air meetings.

An attractive fan in flag blue, with the slogan

PROTECT OUR AMERICAN YOUTH
BY PROHIBITING
THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

on one side, and upon the reserve side the map showing the dry states.

Place these in churches, send to the hospitals, and keep a liberal supply on your porch.

Spread the story of prohibition progress by the generous use of these fans.

Price, per dozen, 35 cents; per hundred, $2.00; per five-hundred, $8.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

"What Shall I Eat?"

Haven't you often asked yourself this question when your doctor told you to get more carbohydrates, or proteins, or bulk? To help you answer it we offer the following table, which contains all of the more common articles of diet:

Carbohydrates
Dates
Corn flakes
Figs
Sugar
Rice
Honey
Breads and other wheat products
Corn products
Oatmeal
Pearl barley
Macaroni
Potatoes
Sweet potatoes
Apricots
Prunes
Cherries
Strawberries
Oranges
Plums
Grapes
Raisins
Peaches
Apples
Bananas
Huckleberries
Raspberries
Cranberries
Currants
Pears
Pineapple
Rutabagas
Squash
Parsnips
Spaghetti (cooked)

Fats
Olive Oil
Butter
Hazel nuts
Almonds
Pecans
Brazil nuts
Ripe olives
Cream
Buttermilk
Egg yolk
Pine nuts
English walnuts
Hickory nuts
Butter nuts
Beech nuts
Cocoanut
Macaroni, with egg
Coshew nuts
Cheese
Cottage cheese
Spaghetti (cooked)

Proteins
Cheese
Eggs
Cottage cheese
Navy beans
Soy beans
Lima beans
Kidney beans
Pine nuts
Peanuts
Brazil nuts
Almonds
Milk
Buttermilk
English walnuts
Lentils
Peas (dried
Hazel nuts

Mineral Salts
Tomatoes
Spinach
Lettuce
Beets
Celery
Cauliflower
Radishes
Endive
Swiss chard
Potatoes
Apples
Asparagus
Parsnips
Whole wheat bread
Graham bread
Egg (yolk)

Bulk
Bran
Oatmeal
Whole wheat bread
Rye bread
Graham bread
String beans
Cabbage
Parsnips
Celery
Turnips
Beets
Cucumbers
Radishes
Asparagus
Carrots
Spinach
Cauliflower
Tomatoes
Lettuce
Endive
Green peas
Rutabagas
Swiss chard
Prunes
Apples
Raisins
Huckleberries
Raspberries
Currants
Blackberries
Figs
Egg plant
Kohl-rabi

—Good Health

Who Is Responsible?

Of what use is the corner saloon? What good has it ever done to anybody but the owner of the property and the saloonkeeper? Adjacent properties depreciate in value, and neighborhoods lose in standing if there is a saloon in proximity. No reform can be effective until the responsibility is placed. Who is responsible for the saloons? Not the drunkards alone, for they are not yet quite numerous enough to support them; not the brewers and distillers, for there is no money in merely making wines and liquors, if no one buys them. No, primarily it is the government and next the temperate man, who will not give up—the man who reasons that because another man chooses to make a beast of himself, is no reason why he should deprive himself of a pleasant indulgence; the man who has himself well in hand, and has been mercifully spared a constitutional weakness, from which his erring brother is not exempt; the man who thinks he is not his brother's keeper, and for these reasons would rather drunkenness should continue as it is today, than practice the self control that he advises, and thinks is so easy for the inebriate to exercise. Without the support of the moderate drinker, the liquor business would die a natural death in a year.—Mrs. Victor du Pont, Sr.

POSTERS POSTERS

JUST FROM THE PRESS

A special patriotic poster in red, white and blue

National Constitutional Prohibition
By your vote
Help Conserve Your Country's Resources
YOUTH — FOOD — WEALTH

Size 28x42

Price, 10 cents each; 3 for 25 cents.

* * * *

ILLUSTRATED POSTERS

Size 19x25

THE BIG CITY PROBLEM

In Every Wet Community the Liquor Traffic is Responsible for
50 per cent of all arrests
50 per cent of the poverty
40 per cent of the insanity
85 per cent of the crime
The Non-Drinker has to Help Pay the Cost of All This

* * * * *

A NATIONAL DUTY

STRONG DRINK
THREATENS
THE CRADLE

CONSERVE
THE CHILDHOOD
OF THE NATION

* * * * *

A TAKING ARTICLE

Brewers Say:
"BEER TAKES
THE PLACE
OF BREAD."

It Often Takes the Place of Milk and Meat Also.

Millions of Dollars
Are Each Year Taken
From the Pockets of the
Workingman and
Put Into the Breweries.

BEER IS A VERY TAKING ARTICLE

Price, 5 cents each; per hundred, $3.50

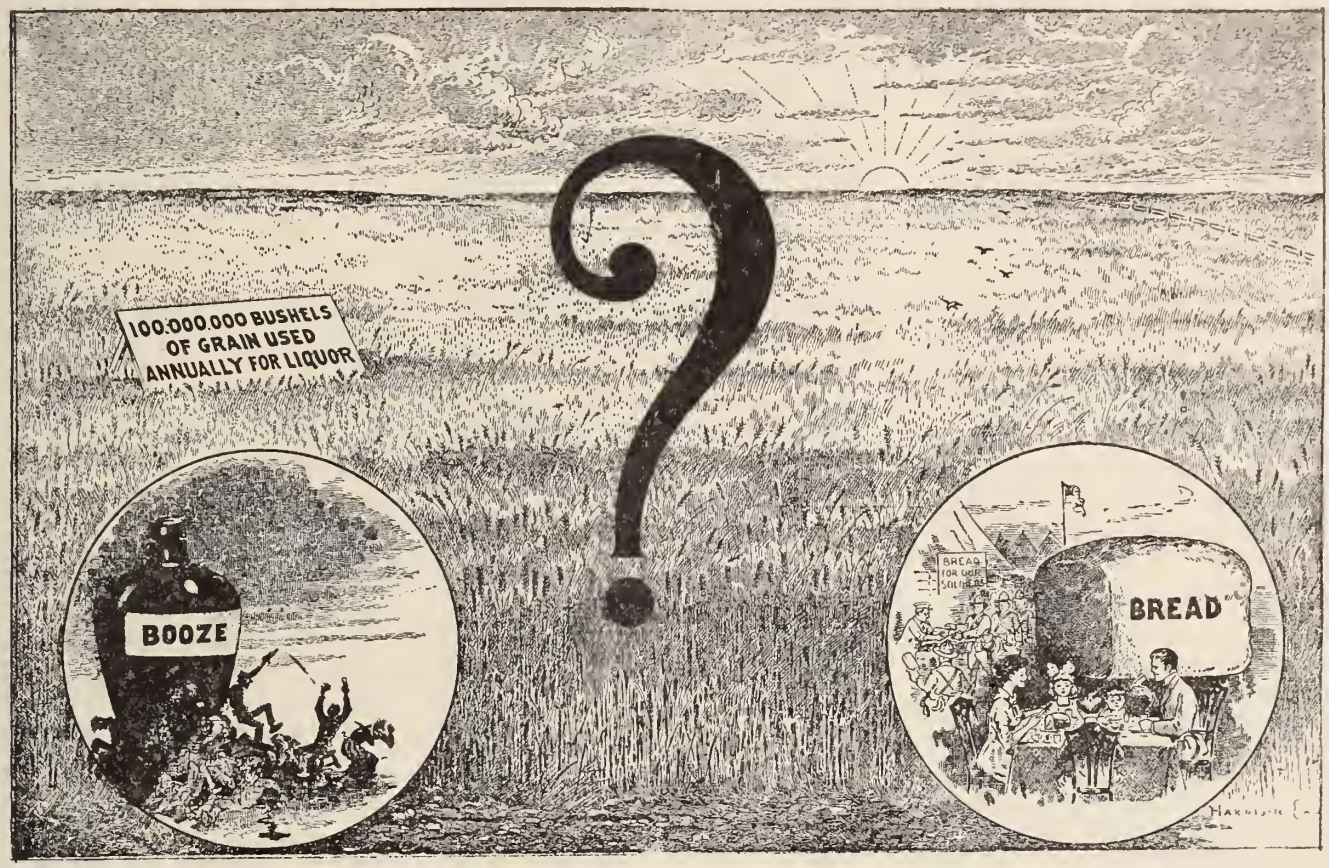
NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Jennie Smith, National railroad evangelist, 319 E St. N. E. Two squares east of Union Station, Washington, D. C. Rooms at reasonable rates.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., AUGUST 16, 1917 | No. 32



—Courtesy Country Gentleman

The war is giving us, as a by-product, two new and convincing arguments against the saloon:

First, we cannot spare the food grains that are now converted into alcohol; second, we cannot in the present crisis permit anything so unpatriotic as the impairment of the strength either of those now in the Army or of those who, at present engaged in other occupations, may at any time be needed at the battle's front.

—William Jennings Bryan.

CAMPAIGN EDITION

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

HOUSE TO VOTE IN DECEMBER ON RESOLUTION FOR NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION—CONGRESSWOMAN JEANNETTE RANKIN MAKES FIRST SPEECH—FOOD CONTROL BILL PASSED

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

The resolution for National Constitutional Prohibition is in the hands of the House Judiciary Committee, Hon. E. Y. Webb of North Carolina, chairman. I have interviewed many of our leaders in the House, and all agree that the consideration of the bill will not engage the attention of the committee until the regular session next December. Many friends of the measure are absent, and the possibility of securing a two-thirds vote now is altogether uncertain. On the other hand, it gives the liquor tribe more time in which to formulate their plans; with millions of dollars at their disposal, they will work as they never have before to bring influences to bear upon legislators to prevent state ratification. We have twenty-six states we ought to be able to depend upon, and we must hold them and secure ten more. There never were more devoted, faithful women than are to be found within the ranks of the W. C. T. U. They are always ready to face any obstacle, make any sacrifice, to work and pray unceasingly with an unfaltering faith. Sisters, let us buckle on our armor anew, and like Israel's champion of old, go forth "In the name of the Lord, God of Israel." And to conquer.

It was a real satisfaction to us that during the memorable debate for National Constitutional Prohibition in the Senate, the box containing signatures representing 12,000,000 people who have appealed and voted for this measure, stood in front of the rostrum of the Vice-President. Senator Sheppard, who presented the petition at the opening of the debate, had fastened a bit of paper to the handle stating what the document represented, and all during those wonderful three days, the white strip waved its silent message.

Congresswoman Jeannette Rankin Makes First Speech

Congresswoman Jeannette Rankin made her first speech on Tuesday and was heard by crowded galleries, and every member of the House in the city was present. She was frequently applauded, and made a fine impression. She demands legislation to enable the President to take over and operate the copper mines in Arizona and Montana where strikes are now curtailing production. Miss Rankin said she had brought the copper situation to the attention of various government officials without making any progress in her efforts to bring about a settlement. "As our laws read today," she said, "there is no means of handling the situation. I am advised the President has no power by which to act. Therefore, I am introducing this resolution which I hope the committee will have ready to report to Congress when the absent members return. The conditions of the mines have grown more and more unsafe. I have had heart breaking letters from wives of some of the miners, saying that when their husbands went to work in the morning, they never knew whether they would ever return and that they lived in constant anxiety." Miss Rankin is making herself felt in Congressional circles, and is a thoroughly up-to-date woman.

Had the Senate been as expeditious in disposing of bills brought before it as the House has been, it would probably ere this have completed its labors for this session of Congress. As it is, the House is taking recess after recess, awaiting the action of the Senate. There seems no possible way to curtail speech making in the United States Senate. The flow of oratory is ever on tap. Whatever the subject, there are always Senators ready to pour forth a fund of information in a two or four hour speech. To be sure, the Senate chamber may be comparatively empty, Senators having quietly withdrawn to the seclusion of the nearby cloak rooms for a smoke, or a senatorial confab, but the Senator speaks on. If he calls attention to the fact of the absence of a quorum, and the secretary is instructed to call the roll, the Senators come trooping in, answer to their names when called, and go right back to finish their smoke or story as the case may be. This, however, is not always the case. When matters of grave importance are up for consideration they receive the strict attention they deserve.

TEXT OF PROPOSED FEDERAL PROHIBITION AMENDMENT

The manufacture, sale or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into or the exportation thereof from the United States, and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof, for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the constitution by the legislatures of the several states, as provided in the constitution, within six years from the date of the submission hereof to the states by the Congress.

The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Food Control Bill Finally Passed

The Food Control bill came from the conference committee to Senate and House and was adopted by both bodies with little or no opposition. During the debate in the House, Representative Heflin of Alabama made a bitter attack on two Republican members, namely, Representative Britten and Representative Mason of Illinois. The remarks of the speaker were of so vindictive a character that some of them were expunged from the Record. Not content with severely criticising those who do not agree with his idea of how things should be conducted, he assailed Senators "who obstructed the passage of the Food Control bill." This speech caused considerable excitement in the House, and Mr. Heflin was called to order for referring to members of Congress by name.

In the Senate also there was a peppery debate over the bill. Senator Chamberlain of Oregon, sponsor for the measure, accused Senator Gore of Oklahoma, chairman of the Agricultural Committee, with having gone after administration war legislation with a stiletto, declaring that the Oklahoma Senator had endeavored to obstruct nearly every war bill that came up. This accusation was made after Senator Gore had bitterly assailed the Senate conferees for voting for drastic changes in the food bill, and suggested that the word "recede" ought to be tattooed upon the foreheads of the Senators who had failed the Senate.

The bill was finally passed by a vote of 66 to 7. It is far reaching in its entirety. The section dealing with alcoholics reads: "From and after thirty days from the date of the approval of this act, no foods, fruits, food materials or feeds shall be used in the production of distilled spirits for beverage purposes. The matter of the use of food or grain in the manufacture of beer or wine, is left to the discretion of the President.

"Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the licensing of the manufacture of vinous or malt liquors in any state or territory or any civil subdivision thereof, where the manufacture of such vinous or malt liquor is prohibited."

"The President is authorized to commandeer any or all distilled spirits in bond or in stock at the date of the approval of this act for redistillation, in so far as such redistillation may be necessary to meet the requirements of the government in the manufacture of munitions and other military or hospital supplies."

The Senate Finance Committee formally reported the war tax revenue bill, which is estimated to yield war revenues to the extent of over $2,000,000,000. The chairman announced that he would not call it up until the conferenee report on the food bill had been disposed of.

Senator Weeks of Massachusetts has introduced a bill for the protection of the morals of the new national Army. It imposes a fine and imprisonment on persons convicted of maintaining questionable places within five miles of a fort, navy yard, or training camp.

Protection for Girls and Soldiers

The Y. W. C. A., which is organized for work with women and girls only, is putting into execution in towns and cities in the vicinity of training camps, a plan similar to that adopted by the W. C. T. U. Realizing that the attitude of young women will have a definite effect upon the soldiers, and deeming it necessary to safeguard the girls from the "lure of the khaki," an organization known as a Patriotic League for Girls is being organized in communities near the camps. It is open to all girls without regard to race or creed, the one obligation put upon the members being the signing of the pledge of the league with a promise to keep it. There will be clubs of all kinds for the girls. One of these is in the form of a camp for young workers in a factory near Plattsburg.

National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, Washington, D. C., August 9, 1917.

THE DAY OF THE DRINKING SOLDIER IS PAST

MAJOR-GENERAL JOHN J. PERSHING

There was a time when it was a natural part of a soldier's existence to drink and carouse. That day is past with the soldier sworn to defend his country's flag and representing the power and dignity of the nation. Strong muscles, clear brains, high ideals in the soldier, increase the fighting efficiency of the army, and these qualities in the citizen insure the permanency of our institutions.

Utah on the Eve of a New and Better Era

MRS. C. A. WALKER, President Utah W. C. T. U.

August 1 the prohibition law of Utah went into effect. The last days of the legalized liquor traffic were marked by disgusting scenes. More people were seen under the influence of liquor in Salt Lake City than ever before. The cafes and cabarets closed at midnight in drunken orgies. Soldiers were, of course, barred from celebrating in this manner, but as an extra measure of precaution, Col. Samson L. Faison, commandant at Ft. Douglas, had a provost guard on duty in the city. There was no trouble, however, as it is well understood that no liquor is to be furnished to men in uniform, of whom we now have about five thousand.

More than 120 saloons in Salt Lake and at least one-third as many in Ogden are closed and over fifty per cent are already rented for other business. Arrangements have been made for remodeling into a bank the barroom of the Reed Hotel in Ogden and several former saloons will in the future serve soft drinks only.

Since the prohibition law has gone into effect arrests for drunkenness have fallen off greatly, only two persons having been arrested on the night of the first day, whereas formerly the city court was crowded each morning.

On Sunday evening, July 29, a jubilee meeting was held in the First Methodist church, at which time the attorney general, Daniel B. Shields, carefully and clearly explained the law in all its phases and emphasized the fact that it is a "bone dry" law, and that persons from other states who have examined it, say it is one of the best laws so far placed on the statute books of any state in the United States. He further stated that his office is prepared to enforce the law to the limit. The temperance workers of Utah are proud of the stand Governor Simon Bamberger has taken on the great prohibition question. Months ago he called the sheriffs of all the counties to Salt Lake and instructed them to see that the law is strictly enforced.

In a signed statement to the Salt Lake Tribune the morning of August 1 the governor said:

"The enforcement of the prohibition law will be one of the best things that has ever happened in the state of Utah. One of the chief benefits will be that it will result in great individual saving among the people and develop a business-like community everywhere in the state. It will affect a class of people perfectly willing and anxious to do the right thing, but who in the past have not been able to control their appetites. The man who can control himself needs no help, but for the benefit of those unfortunates who have inherited appetites for liquor it will be an invaluable boon. It will save thousands who, in the language of professional people, are afflicted with the disease of drinking.

"Those who are now employed in the manufacture and disposal of intoxicating liquors will find other employment just as profitable as that which they now are following. This fact has been demonstrated in several of the states which are now in the prohibition list. In Colorado, where I stopped on a recent eastern trip, I was informed by business men that, in spite of having had great anxiety concerning the future, before the state went dry, there is not now a vacant building, particularly in Denver. Business men generally have told me they would not return to the former condition for any consideration. Although a great amount of intoxicating liquors finds its way into Colorado from Wyoming, the people of Colorado are doing their best to enforce the laws.

"It is now up to the good citizens of Utah to use their influence in bringing about an enforcement of the law and to see that no intoxicants are brought in from Wyoming or Nevada, the two states which certainly will go dry within the next two years.

"I believe in prohibition from business and economic standpoints, and I am convinced that it will make men more efficient in business and protect those who need protection."

The first violation of the law took place in Ogden. The offender was taken before Judge George S. Barker on two counts, the first, drunkenness, for which he was fined fifty dollars, the second, the giving of liquor to friends, which brought a fine of one hundred dollars. The attorney for the defendant tried to plead ignorance of the law, but the judge ruled that the defendant had lived in dry territory for some time and should know better. Ignorance of the law excuses no one he decided. He declared he intends to deal vigorously with all violators of the new liquor law.

Saloonkeepers and wholesale liquor dealers are busy completing an inventory of the liquors on hand, to be filed with the county clerk. Ten days are given dealers to dispose of their stock, and they are preparing to ship their surplus out of the state. One of the largest breweries in Utah is removing to Evanston, Wyoming.

There does not seem to be any pessimism in regard to the future nor any doubt as to the raising of the necessary revenue to run the city, county or state without putting any greater burden on the citizens.

While riding on a street car not long ago I heard a man ask a prominent saloonkeeper and the owner of a building in which a saloon was conducted, if the prohibition law would hurt him much. He replied that it would not, and predicted that conditions would readjust themselves in less than six months. In this case not even the enemy was downcast because of the new prohibition law.

HONOR ROLL

—of—

PROHIBITION STATES AND TERRITORY AND DATE OF GOING INTO EFFECT

Maine	1851
Kansas	1880
North Dakota	1889
Oklahoma	1907
Georgia	1908
North Carolina	1909
Mississippi	1909
Tennessee	1909
West Virginia	1914
Alabama	1915
Arizona	1915
Virginia	1916
Colorado	1916
Oregon	1916
Washington	1916
Arkansas	1916
Iowa	1916
Idaho	1916
South Carolina	1916
Nebraska	1917
South Dakota	1917
Utah	1917
Dist. of Columbia	†Nov. 1, 1917
Alaska	†Jan. 1, 1918
Indiana	†April 2, 1918
Michigan	*April 30, 1918
Montana	*Dec. 31, 1918
New Hampshire	†May 1, 1918

*Enacted 1916. †Enacted 1917.

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1917

Iowa†† Ohio New Mexico

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1918

Utah†† Missouri Florida
Minnesota Wyoming Nevada

††Now have statutory prohibition. Will vote on constitutional amendment.

South Dakota Duplicating the Record of Other Dry States

"The outlook for the enforcement of the law is very encouraging," writes Mrs. Anna R. Simmons, president of the South Dakota W. C. T. U.

South Dakota, with its prohibition law in effect less than two months, is duplicating the record of other newly dry states. A marked decrease in crime and arrests is always one of the first visible results of prohibition and South Dakota is proving no exception in this respect. Concerning the effect of prohibition in Sioux Falls, the Press of that city says editorially:

"In the month of July, 1916, when 30 saloons were doing business in Sioux Falls, there were 374 arrests by the police department. In July, 1917, the first month under statewide bone-dry prohibition there were 66 arrests.

"Of the 374 arrests made in July a year ago 166 were for drunkenness, and 40 more were of men who were drunk but who were charged with disturbing the peace. Thus at least 206 arrests of drunken men were recorded in July, 1916. In July, 1917, there were just eight arrests for drunkenness."

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC MISREPRESENTING ORGANIZED LABOR

PROF. JOHN A. NICHOLLS

Scientific and economic research, conducted with much efficiency during these later years, has given to us many startling facts showing the dangerous character of the liquor traffic. Life insurance companies recognize in it a deadly foe to human life, and with rigid regulations attempt to protect themselves from its baneful influence. Railroad companies and great industrial corporations see in it a foe to efficiency and success, and endeavor to guard themselves from its destructive influences. The world in arms cries out against it. Nations declare it to be their greatest enemy.

The traffic, hard pushed, its first trenches captured, its line of defense broken, is now trying to rally its demoralized defenders behind the ranks of organized labor. Its frantic efforts to use labor as its shield reminds one of the old fable of the monkey, the cat, and the chestnuts. The monkey liked roasted chestnuts, but was unable to take them from the fire. He therefore made friends with the cat, and then used the cat's paws to poke the chestnuts away from the flame. Result—the cat's paws were burned, but the monkey had his feast. So it is with the liquor traffic. The fires of righteous indignation now threaten it with universal destruction, and it is trying to use labor as a cat's paw to save itself from the fire. But it will not succeed. Most of the great labor leaders of the world see in the drink traffic an enemy, not a friend. They have found out that it depletes the strength of the laborer, robs workmen of their wages, and diverts millions of dollars every year from the legitimate channels of trade. They have seen that it tempts to lawlessness, incites to riot and labor troubles, and produces a great army of purposeless and unemployed. And because it is the enemy of every honest toiler the voice of labor will ere long demand its destruction. The protection of honest industry calls for its complete overthrow. Standing like a barrier across the highway of progress, it must be swept aside as an impediment to human advancement, an obstacle to every legitimate effort for the uplift of the race.

The Greatest Enemy of Labor

One day I sat in the state house on Beacon Hill, Boston, and heard the pitiful pleas of the liquor advocates, as they argued against prohibition, alleging that it was hostile to the interests of labor. There came to my mind an eventful scene, when sitting on the platform at a great Chautauqua gathering I listened to this solemn declaration, as it came from the lips of one of the most noted labor leaders of this continent: "The greatest enemy that labor has is the dark, damnable curse that gurgles from the black mouth of a bottle." No truer words were ever spoken, no stronger indictment ever framed. In the struggle for increasing wages, shorter hours of work, better homes, abolition of child labor, and the general improvement of conditions for the worker, the saloon influence has always been antagonistic. John B. Lennon, treasurer of the American Federation of Labor, has said: "I do not know a solitary principle for which the labor movement stands but that the liquor saloon is on the other side of the question." Referring to child labor he also said: "The saloon is sending more children into the factory, the mines, the mills and shops, that ought to be at school or play, than the influence of the trade union has been able to eliminate, either by direct action or by legislation." The result of this is to lower the standard of living, to reduce wages, to increase immorality, and generally to demoralize the home. And yet this traffic, so destructive of the rights of childhood, has the audacity to set itself up as the friend of labor. The more the saloons flourish, the greater the sufferings and wrongs of childhood. Any business that cannot build itself up without adding to the sum of human misery and sorrow, and that cannot flourish except by adding to the woes and griefs of childhood, ought to die, and every champion of labor's rights ought to lend a hand in digging a grave to bury it in so deep that it can never be resurrected. The destruction of the liquor traffic means the elevation of labor, and better protection of labor's rights.

Improved Labor Conditions Throughout Prohibition States

But, say the brewers and distillers, the advent of prohibition will bring about great industrial disturbances, flood the labor market, reduce wages, and cause a general upheaval along economic lines. It requires only a brief examination to show how fallacious these statements are. Twenty-six states have adopted prohibition as their state policy. In twenty-two of them it is now in operation. In none of these states has there been any industrial disturbance on account of prohibition. Instead of the labor market being flooded, with a consequent reduction of wages, the very opposite has been the case. The evidence from all sources—governors of states, legislators, employers and employes—is to the effect that great and beneficial results have followed the adoption of a prohibition law. The demand for labor has increased, better conditions have resulted, labor has been benefited, and general prosperity has been advanced. The bartenders and brewery employes have been absorbed into other and better lines of business, and the moral, social and political life of communities has been wonderfully improved.

The Labor Bulletin of Denver, Colorado, says editorially: "The law has worked a wonderful revolution for good, and at least seventy-five per cent of the trade union voters who were opposed to prohibition would vote to retain it now. There are more well fed, better clothed, and happier families in Colorado than ever before." The liquor bubble has been punctured, the truth has become known, and never again in these prohibition states will the brewers and distillers be able to make use of labor as a shield of protection from righteous and well-informed public sentiment. The grip of the liquor ring has been broken, and honest toilers have come into their own. The absurd claims of the liquor interests have been fully answered by trustworthy evidence and incontrovertible facts. The workers can no longer be deceived, and the truth is winning its way.

The more we study the economic facts connected with the liquor traffic and examine its relation to labor, the more apparent does its wastefulness appear. It is the one particular business which turns out paupers at one end, and millionaires at the other. It destroys the labor market by destroying the efficiency of the customer. A man who spends a large part of his wages for drink, is unable to add to the demand for shoes, clothes, furniture or other products of labor. He may help to build up great fortunes for the brewers and distillers, but he is not creating a demand for the products of legitimate industry. The more money goes into the dramshop, the less there is for the baker, the butcher, the shoemaker. In order to benefit labor there must be a demand for labor's products. It is not to the advantage of a community to have a few rolling in luxury, and many lacking the common necessities of life. General prosperity in the homes of the people cannot be brought about by the protection of a traffic which flourishes only to destroy. The success of a business which not only is not productive, but actually destructive, is always an injury to society, and especially so to the wage earner. The capital invested in the manufacture of liquor employs a very small number of wage earners, as compared with other manufactures. For each $1,000,000 invested in the manufacture of lumber, 726 persons are employed. The same amount invested in leather employs 580; in iron and steel, 496; in liquor and beverages, 104. A large part of the cost of production by labor of the necessities of life goes to the worker. In the manufacture of liquor very little gets back to him. The liquor traffic is not, in the legitimate sense, a true industry. It is rather a parasite, an enemy to society and an injury to its well-being, a curse to mankind. Its abolition means prosperity for wage earners and added blessing in their homes and lives.

Twentieth Century Has No Place for Alcohol

In this keen competitive age, in order to fight the battle of life well, it is absolutely essential to success that we should fight it with clear brains. Alcohol dulls the intellect, and unfavorably affects all the qualities necessary to working efficiency. The wage earner, struggling for a better social order, will find himself handicapped by the use of alcohol. Recognizing this fact, most of the

(Continued on Page Fifteen)

BEER AND ALCOHOL

EUGENE LYMAN FISK, M. D., Medical Director Life Extension Institute

Alcohol is alcohol, either in whisky or beer. It is nonsense to claim that beer is a hygienic drink. It is drunk chiefly for its alcoholic effect, and if the alcoholic effect is produced, the danger of alcohol exists. Any one who doubts that beer can produce a certain form of intoxication need only visit the saloon and watch the beer-drinker in various stages of befuddlement or excitement. If beer does not intoxicate or produce any alcoholic effect, what becomes of the "racial craving for stimulants" which it is said to satisfy? Furthermore, heavy beer-drinking, as in the case of brewery employes, adds the danger of excessive fluid intake, entirely apart from alcohol. The heavy mortality of brewery employes is sufficient evidence that beer, so far as its effect on masses of men is concerned, is not a hygienic drink.

GEORGIA SOLICITORS-GENERAL AND MAYORS TESTIFY TO BENEFITS OF "BONE DRY" LAW

MRS. AUGUST BURGHARD

Is a "bone dry" law satisfactory in its operation? Can it be enforced? Will public sentiment uphold it? Does it reduce crime? All of these questions were emphatically answered in the affirmative by the solicitors-general and the mayors of Georgia when asked in letters from the governor how the law was received and enforced in their circuits and cities. These replies were published in the message of retiring Governor Nat E. Harris to the general assembly of Georgia. Some of them are briefly quoted as follows:

From Twenty-One Solicitors-General

J. M. Lang of the Cherokee circuit: "The 'bone dry' law has very greatly reduced the commission of crime, and had a marked tendency to abate the evils of intemperance."

B. T. Castellow, Patula circuit: "Crimes have materially decreased. There have been few indictments returned. The law is being rigidly enforced, and has the approval of the public."

Robert McMillion, Northeastern circuit: "I am ultra-conservative in stating that crimes attributable to liquor have decreased in this circuit at least twenty-five per cent. Officers generally in this section are disposed to enforce the law."

R. S. Fay, Tifton circuit: "Crimes are reduced fully ninety per cent. The law is being rigidly enforced."

Chas. E. Roop, Cometa circuit: "The number of crimes now as compared with the crimes committed prior to 1916 is about one-half. The law is being enforced as well as any other law on the statute books."

Doyle Campbell, Ocmulgee circuit: "The law is working splendidly. There has been a fifty per cent reduction at least in the criminal business."

W. O. Dean, Western circuit: "The law is one of the best laws ever enacted. It has decreased crime in Georgia more than fifty per cent. There are few prisoners in jails, and we have had but one or two courts in the circuit since the law went into effect."

M. D. Dickerson, Waycross circuit: "It has reduced crime at least sixty-five or seventy per cent and has done more for the people of Georgia than any statute."

John A. Boykin, Atlanta circuit: "It is a forward step in the right direction. The law is what the country needs. There has been a great slump in crimes."

J. R. Hutchison, Tallapoosa circuit: "The law has greatly reduced crimes. It is rarely that we have a case of public drunkenness. The law is being rigidly enforced."

George M. Napier, Stone Mountain circuit: "Crimes have been materially lessened by the statute. Officers are vigilant and active. Juries will convict."

Joseph B. Wall, Cordele circuit: "There has been a very great falling off in crimes. Prosecutions for selling liquor are almost negligible."

R. C. Bell, Albany circuit: "Crimes have diminished fifty per cent."

W. A. Wooten, Oconee circuit: "It prohibits and I believe that is the object of a prohibition measure. They simply cannot get the liquor and not being able to get it, they do not drink it, and not drinking it, they do not commit those crimes attributable to its use. Crimes have been reduced by the 'bone dry' act at least seventy-five per cent. I pronounce the law an undreamed-of success. I know of numbers of men who were constant drinkers before its enactment who are now teetotalers."

Claude H. Porter, Rome circuit: "The enforcement of the law has been very beneficial and crime of all classes has been greatly reduced. Its enforcement is meeting the hearty approval of the great masses of the people."

—The Pioneer

A. S. Skelton, Northern circuit: "Public sentiment appears to be behind the law and there is very little sign of drinking now. Crime is unquestionably on the decrease. It reduces intemperance to a minimum. It is a great boon to financial and moral progress."

John P. Ross, Macon circuit: "The law has brought about largely increased sobriety among the people and correspondingly decreased the commission of crimes fairly chargeable to the drinking of intoxicating liquors. It is being enforced about as well as other laws."

E. L. Stephens, Dublin circuit: "There is no open opposition to the law. In fact, at least ninety-nine per cent of my people are delighted with it and would in no wise for a moment tolerate its evasion or change unless to make it stronger, if possible."

Walter F. Grey, Middle circuit: "Its effect has been generally good. It has reduced drinking and crime."

A. L. Franklin, Augusta circuit: "It has done a great deal of good. The number of convicts has been reduced to about one-half or more."

W. F. Slater, Atlantic circuit: "Crime of all kinds has diminished at least fifty per cent under the law. The conditions among the laboring people have undergone a revolution for the better. Good order and sobriety are noticeable. They are more industrious and economical. The crime of rape in Georgia has almost ceased since May, 1916."

E. M. Owen, Flint circuit: "It has reduced crime forty-five per cent and is being enforced."

John A. Fort, Southwestern circuit: "There has been a marked decrease in crimes since the law was enacted. It is very generally enforced."

R. C. Norman, Toombs circuit: "The effect has been very fine. Violations of the prohibition law have fallen off seventy-five per cent, and other crimes that grow out of the use of whisky fifty per cent."

Alvin V. Sellers of the Brunswick circuit and Frondren Mitchell of the Southern circuit stated that they had not been in office long enough to make a comparison. No replies were received from the solicitors-general of Blue Ridge, Chattahoochee and Eastern circuits. Doubtless they also find vastly improved conditions.

Mayors of Big Cities Testify in Favor of "Bone Dry" Law

Lack of space prevents the publication of the statistics furnished by mayors of the principal cities of Georgia, all of which show a great reduction in arrests and crimes and plainly indicate that the "bone dry" law has been an advantage.

Governor Harris' Summary of the Workings of the Law

"It is certain from the communications received from numerous sections of the state," summarized Governor Harris, "that these laws have reduced crime very materially throughout the entire bounds of the commonwealth.

"It may be a sacrifice on the part of a large number of our people to give up entirely the use of intoxicating liquors, but in time of peace as well as in time of war sacrifices are demanded. And those who are strong should be willing to forego the pleasures of drinking to insure sobriety on the part of those who are weaker. Especially is this true when by so doing the cost of courts, the fees of sheriffs and jailers and the other great expenses consequent upon the commission of crime are decreased almost fifty per cent. We do not take into consideration in this matter the weakness of our neighbors. In this government every man is his brother's keeper, and in order to secure the happiness of the greatest number the minority ought to be willing to contribute to the common good even at a small expense to themselves."

WHEN THE SENATE VOTED ON SUBMITTING THE PROHIBITION AMENDMENT

Sparks from Senatorial Eloquence

During the three days' consideration in the United States Senate of the joint resolution providing for a prohibition amendment to the federal constitution the champions of prohibition answered convincingly and eloquently every argument advanced by the representatives of the liquor interests. Some of these utterances are quoted.

Labor Pays the Taxes

Senator Jones of Washington satisfactorily disposed of the statement recently made by the brewers that "Prohibition would produce anger, resentment, and disaffection among millions of American workers." "In whose interests were these words uttered?" thundered Senator Jones. "Not in the interests of labor, but of the brewers. It is a base libel upon American workingmen. They are as loyal and patriotic a class as we have. They will make the greatest sacrifices for their country, and surely they will resent this base slander. Was this spoken for their good? What can they hope from a traffic that will use them so? Labor protests against its unjust burdens. It complains of the smallness of its share of the proceeds of its toil, but does it realize how it is being used to its own detriment by the liquor traffic? Does it realize that the liquor interests are seeking to place upon it a tremendous tax burden for the years to come? They pay to the government two or three hundred millions in taxes. From whom does this come? Not from the pockets of the saloon man, the brewer, or distiller, but largely from the pockets of the laborer. What do the liquor interests propose to do now? They magnanimously accept an increase in their taxes. They say they will cheerfully pay four or five hundred millions in taxes to the government. Where will they get this amount? From the laborer. Of course they are glad to pay if some one will put up the money. How does labor like this cheerful imposition of two or three hundred millions additional taxes upon its earnings? No one points out to labor any benefits that come to it from the use of liquor. The most that has been claimed is that a glass of beer does no harm, but the brewers have even abandoned this in the face of the almost universal testimony of experts, scientists, and physicians that alcohol in any form is a noxious poison and that beer is a most harmful drink."

Kansas Settles the Question

No Senator presented more convincing arguments in favor of the amendment than did Senator William H. Thompson of Kansas, whose documentary testimony from city, county and state officials of the "sun-flower" state fills over twenty-three pages of the Congressional Record of July 31. After introducing letters from one hundred honorable men charged with official responsibility, located in every section of Kansas, each and all enthusiastic in praise of prohibition, Senator Thompson said:

"If prohibition has been such a bad thing, why is it that the sentiment for it has been growing until now it extends everywhere? Things which are a detriment to society and humanity soon die out rather than extend to other communities. Although in the beginning Kansas stood as the one great oasis in the old American desert, why is it now that on three sides, in Oklahoma, Colorado and Nebraska—the people have adopted the same identical law, and even in Missouri wherever the border counties touch Kansas, except those containing large cities, every county and city is dry under the local option law of that state, and the whole state at the last election, except for the county of St. Louis alone, would have adopted complete prohibition? The one thing that has interfered with the complete operation of the law, and the best effects therefrom, has been the liquor in wet localities, which all points conclusively to the real remedy which is to prevent the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor everywhere."

Senator Kenyon's Catechism

Senator Kenyon of Iowa propounded the following interrogations the answering of which would drive liquor politicians to desperation:

"Why do we prohibit the boys in the Army and Navy from having booze and permit those who remain at home to have it?

"If liquor is a bad thing for the boys in the trenches, why is it a good thing for those at home?

"When they are willing to die for us, should we not be willing to go dry for them?

"Will a sober nation not win the war more quickly than a drunken nation?

"When the food controller asks everyone in the country to conserve the food supply, why must the food supply going into beer be excepted?

"Is it not as much waste of foodstuff to put it into beer as to put it into whisky?

"If more foodstuff goes into beer than into whisky, why do we prevent foodstuff going into whisky and permit it going into beer?

"Will rebellions occur in the cities, as we have been told, if the workers do not have their beer?

"Sixty per cent of the nation, territorially, is dry. Are not the feelings of the people living in that territory entitled to any consideration?

"If the beer drinkers are going to rebel unless they get their beer, will the temperance people rebel unless they get prohibition?

"Does the rule work only one way?

"Why do not the temperance people claim that they will rebel also? No one has heard nor will hear any such thing.

"The temperance people will be for the nation no matter if beer and whisky be forced on them. Their patriotism does not depend on having their own way.

"Is patriotism purchased by beer worth while, anyway?

"If some one were to take as much foodstuff as goes into booze and dump it into the sea, what would the people of the nation say?

"If some one should advance the argument that this was necessary in order to appease certain people who believed in dumping foodstuffs into the sea, and that if they did not do it it would arouse riots, would we accede to their request?

"If some learned Senator, speaking as if the Almighty had delegated to him supreme wisdom and in a tone indicating that such wisdom would perish from the floor when he retired to the cloakroom, should so claim, would we be sufficiently impressed?

"Should not hereafter all bulletins issued requesting the people to conserve the food supply urge them also, in the interests of public peace, to have all the foodstuff possible made into beer?

"Is it reasonable to ask the temperance people of the country to conserve and save every particle of food and at the same time permit some of it to go into booze?

"Is beer more essential to the American people than bread?

"What kind of people are those who are not willing to give up their liquor to help their country?

"Is the food conservation to be for the benefit of many, or is it to be limited in order that the few may have their drinks?

"Have we reached a point in this country where the war can not be won unless people who drink are permitted to tickle their stomachs with wines and beer?

"Will beer patriots win the war anyhow?

"Are the interests of brewers in this country more important than the winning of the war?

"Are we willing to sacrifice everything except beer in the country to win the war?

"With the great demand in this country for labor and the high wages paid, could there ever be a better time as far as the laboring men are concerned, for the transition from a wet to a dry nation?

"When there is a shortage of labor in the important and necessary work of carrying on the war, why waste labor in making booze?

"If booze is essential to win the war, why stop selling it to soldiers?"

Liquor Politics a National Peril

Senator Sheppard of Texas advanced an unanswerable reason for exterminating the liquor traffic from our national life when he declared:

"The constant activity of the liquor interests in the politics of the country is another peril to free institutions. They understand that their business has no inherent constitutional right of existence, that it continues purely by tolerance, and that it may be destroyed by an aroused electorate at any time. They know that the agitation against it will persist so long as humanity is able to protest against the traffic in broken hearts and ruined homes. Therefore self-preservation keeps them always on the alert. They are thoroughly organized for the making and unmaking of men and legislatures and Congresses. There can be no satisfactory solution of legitimate public questions so long as this formidable force measures men by their attitude on liquor and endeavors by the lavish use of money to bring about their success or defeat."

Monarch of All Vices

Senator Sherman of Illinois in one of a number of brilliant attacks on the liquor traffic gave the following telling characterization of the giant evil of this country:

"Drunkenness is the monarch of all human vices. Other evils are its mere satellites. It permeates and poisons and rots every department of life and every avenue and faculty of the human body. Once in a distant age intoxicating liquor was the supposed instrument of fellowship and good cheer. It is now the debased and adulterated instrument for the exploitation of society for profit and the promotion of personal vices. It has grown to astounding proportions. The longer it continues the greater its evil and the more potent its strength. It has entrenched itself with human avarice and become its ally to exploit the pitiable weakness of humanity to accumulate fortunes. The men who have made it their instrument of pecuniary gain have assumed to control political parties, to threaten candidates, to decide elections, to administer civil government, to make new laws, to promote profitable evils and contemptuously to break existing laws they cannot repeal."

Explaining Porto Rico's Prohibition Victory

PAUL BARNHART

Editor's Note—The story of the recent victory for prohibition in Porto Rico has been told in THE UNION SIGNAL. While on a recent visit to National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Mr. Paul Barnhart, who assisted in the campaign on the island as the representative of the National W. C. T. U., at the request of the editors of THE UNION SIGNAL furnished the following interesting account of the way "they did it." The facts given should be of value to states now engaged in prohibition campaigns.

The people living in Porto Rico believed it essential to do thorough work in the recent prohibition campaign because they knew the proposition up to date had never been brought to a vote in any Latin land, and they felt keenly the honor of having their island the first Spanish speaking territory to vote on whether money revenue or the protection of its children should be the aim of a democratic government. Because of this the foremost workers in the campaign were those of Latin blood. The ample supply of literature furnished by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, even though most of it was in English, brought to the attention of the Latin leaders the fact that prohibition was a winning policy and made them see that if the arguments of the liquor men were valid it was very strange that state after state kept voting dry after ample opportunity to know and study conditions. When the leaders discovered that the liquor men were quoting Nebraska, for instance, as an argument against prohibition, whereas the fact was that being convinced of the benefits of prohibition that state had gone over into the dry column, it gave the prohibition movement in the island a mighty impetus.

The permission given by the educational department of the government to the teachers to enter into the prohibition campaign as they saw fit on the ground that prohibition was not a political issue and that teachers would not be considered as mixing up in politics if they took part in the battle and voted dry, helped tremendously. To the Hon. Paul Miller, head of this department, is due a high tribute of praise because of his firm stand in the matter.

—The Searchlight of Canada

The attorney-general of the island is a statesman for whom a bright future looms up. He displayed great acumen in drafting the laws and executive orders and in preparing the form of the referendum blanks, drawing them up in such shape that when the prohibition committee on the island heard of frauds in the referendum petitions it was possible to trace these frauds without the slightest difficulty. The governor, Hon. Arthur Yager, authorized the attorney-general to issue to all the prosecuting attorneys in Porto Rico instructions to take up immediately any complaints of fraud which could be prosecuted, and the firm attitude of the governor during the last days, which was made possible by this careful work on the part of the attorney-general, showed the people that the government intended to have a square election. The co-operation of the prosecuting attorneys and the detective bureaus, under orders of the chief of police, in the investigation of these frauds during the last week of the campaign, proved conclusively to the liquor men that there was no use of wasting money in illegal purchase of votes and judges as they had planned to do.

The half-page advertisements which the daily papers put out during the last week when they realized the size of the prohibition movement, warning those who were talking of fraud, combined with the attitude of the government during the last days, demonstrated that in spite of the public utterances of the treasurer of the island regarding the imperative need of liquor revenue the government had not sold itself out to the liquor trade.

The splendid work of the prohibition committee, headed by Dr. Francisco Matanzo, in organizing the political campaign, making the preliminary investigation of frauds, organizing speaking campaigns, publishing literature in Spanish to fit the needs of the moment (in lots of 40,000 of a kind), adopting the pictorial idea in cartoons drawn by Latin artists but based on the cartoons used in the Michigan campaign and others of last year, distributing literature through the efficient and rapid work of the post-office department, arranging for the slides in moving picture shows, supplied by this committee, etc., etc., all had immense weight.

The fact that the prohibition workers were able to announce that their speakers received not one cent of remuneration when it was common talk that certain leaders of the liquor side were paid $15,000 for three months' work, enabled the quick-witted Latins to see that the argument of the liquor men was money and the argument of the prohibitionists, children and home.

The splendid preliminary work done by such women as Miss Annie Robbins and Mrs. Edith Hildreth, now acting president of the re-organized island W. C. T. U., of which the wife of the governor, Hon. Arthur Yager, has consented to be tho honorary president, and the wife of the secretary of the interior, second honorary president; the co-operation of the noble ladies of the best Catholic families and those of other beliefs as well, in making possible the establishment of a central office, thereby winning the respect of the government and praise of the populace for its full equipment of W. C. T. U. and Anti-Saloon League literature and supplies, as well as the supplies which this committee of ladies had printed locally, did great things in stemming the tide. Providence made it possible for this office to be opened next door to the largest political headquarters on the island so they who went to get their political instruction had to pass it.

The action of the Socialists, the only party brave enough to openly adopt prohibition as a plank, did much to persuade the working people and their leaders to work in absolute harmony with the leaders of the W. C. T. U. and the Latin prohibition committee. This they did through their publications and in their arrangement of house front decorations consisting of cocoanuts with crosses hanging underneath, these emblems being displayed on the day of the election from a good share of the homes interested in this movement.

The social prestige of Mrs. Hildreth as the wife of the doctor in charge of the largest hospital on the island was used to splendid effect in gaining the co-operation of those of the best ranks of society of every belief, and her election as president of the island W. C. T. U. was a well merited sign of recognition. Mrs. Hildreth was active in the supervision of the mailing of literature and in the preparation of Spanish literature, and every doctor on the island was furnished with an ample supply of campaign material. The indignation of the public over the discovery of the tricky methods of bribery, perjury, fraud and forgery on the part of the nineteen or twenty Spanish distillers, who had a campaign fund of $165,000 and offered groups of men as high as $6,000 or $8,000 if they would simply desist from the campaign and individuals as high as $2,000 if they would keep silent, caused a revulsion in the minds of the people and the Latin Porto Rican public rang true.

The arguments of the liquor men that prohibition was being forced upon them by the Americans and that Americans were introducing in the island customs worse than the Porto Ricans had ever had, were easily answered and the people responded that Americans were trying to save the island from the pitfall that America had fallen into under the license system. The disgraceful drunkenness of two such eminent men as American ex-attorneys-general of the island government enabled Americans to say that Porto Ricans ought to make such things impossible.

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, The Union Signal, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under. THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, August 16, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

NEXT ISSUE WILL BE AUGUST 30

In accordance with the plan previously announced of publishing only fifty numbers of the official paper this year, the next issue of THE UNION SIGNAL will be a combination number dated August 23-30, and will be issued the week of August 30.

The expense of publishing the paper has increased enormously during the past few months and virtually all religious and reform papers have raised their subscription price. THE UNION SIGNAL will endeavor as long as possible to continue at the $1 a year rate for the weekly edition, and 35 cents a year for the monthly Campaign Edition, but the management deemed it necessary to cut down the expenses somewhat by eliminating two numbers during the vacation season.

EXPLANATION FROM THE PUBLISHING HOUSE

Owing to the unprecedented demand for Testaments, the Bible houses are unable to print them rapidly enough to supply the needs for war work, and the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House cannot, therefore, fill its orders promptly. It asks that all who have sent in orders for Testaments exercise patience under this necessary delay. The books will be forwarded to them at the earliest possible moment.

It is impossible to secure the Testament with Psalms at the price of twelve cents. This edition has been exhausted and all available paper is used in printing the Testaments which are furnished at twelve cents each.

All orders for Testament and Psalms (12 cent edition) will be filled with Testaments, thereby avoiding delay in notifying customers of this change before filling the order.

CONGRESS' UNFINISHED TASK

The present session of Congress will go down in history as one that had presented to it an unusual opportunity to solve stupendous national and international problems. How fully it measured up to its privilege it is difficult at the present time to determine. While acknowledging our profound gratitude to the stalwart champions in both Houses who stood for our cause we confess to disappointment that Congress did not see fit to dispose of our great national evil, the legalized liquor traffic, in a definite way, or at least to give to the states a chance to vote on the question of its extermination.

The limitations of the so-called prohibition section of the food control bill to distilled liquors; the generous period afforded distillers to continue the manufacture and withdrawal at the rate of one million gallons a day from bond; the giving to the President of the power at his discretion to prohibit malt liquors and to commandeer for munition purposes distilled liquors in stock or in bond, have minimized to a vanishing point the value of the bill as it relates to the liquor question.

It cannot be other than a cause for regret that the administration seems not only to think it impossible to get along without the liquor revenue, but to consider it necessary to increase the taxes upon a vice of the nation in order to pay the expenses of the war.

We confidently believe, however, that if the House of Representatives shall adopt the referendum resolution passed by the Senate, even with the six-year limitation clause, we shall succeed in securing the ratification of the necessary thirty-six states. The work that lies before us is plain. We have twenty-six states of which there can be no question as to the ratification at the first opportunity offered by a legislative session, and we must concentrate our forces to hold these states and secure ten more. The liquor interests will lose no time in beginning their work of corrupting the members of the law-making bodies and their attempts must be checkmated. As stated last week, if the House adopts the resolution during the December session, a ratification resolution will be presented to the legislatures of about a dozen states in 1918, to all the other states in 1919. Under a six-year limitation clause Alabama, the only state where the legislature meets but once in four years, would have but one opportunity for ratification or rejection of the amendment. Six states meeting annually would have six opportunities and forty-one meeting biennially would have three chances to vote on this vital question.

We have one decided advantage in our struggle to secure thirty-six state legislatures to ratify our measure, namely, that when once a favorable vote is secured in any state legislature it will stand and cannot be changed by a subsequent legislature. On the other hand if a state legislature fails to ratify the amendment, any succeeding legislature within the six years has the chance to overturn this action by a vote for ratification of the federal amendment. The liquor trade will make its supreme endeavor to secure thirteen states to stand solidly against ratification in order to defeat the enactment of our amendment.

Since there is a strong probability that the House of Representatives will act favorably on the national amendment at the opening of the December session we ought at once to decide our plan of campaign to aid in influencing the state legislatures to ratify at the earliest possible moment after opportunity is given.

Let every state incorporate in its program of work for the next twelve months an effort to learn how every member of its legislature stands and will vote on the federal prohibition amendment, and begin a course of education and agitation to convert any who may be doubtful.

"BONE DRYNESS" APPRECIATED

One would imagine from the comments of the liquor organs that they believe the going into effect of the federal "bone dry" amendment and the state laws of similar purport would entirely overturn the prohibition movement. Mida's Criterion in its last issue remarks, "The states that are now on a prohibition basis (as a result of the federal law) are appreciating what it means to be 'bone dry'!!!" Unwittingly the liquor journal has uttered a profoundly significant truth. These states are appreciating, in the true sense of the word, the real value of "bone dryness," and as always and ever in the history of prohibition, having recognized the value of such a policy they accept it as a desirable part of their civic equipment, and glory in its effectiveness. Kansas has the reputation of longest standing for dryness, and it has come to be a commonplace to say that you cannot converse with a Kansan five minutes without calling forth exuberant declarations concerning the remarkable brand of prosperity and happiness that its high-grade aridity produces. Apparently the so-called "bone dryness," interpreted through the experience of states that have tried it, means not only the drying up of the liquor traffic, the brewery, the distillery and the saloon, but of drunkenness, disorder, crime, poverty and disease, the natural consequences of the use of liquor. If anybody doubts the oft-repeated assertion of the prohibition advocates that the eradication of the liquor traffic is a panacea for the ills that afflict the city and the state, let him read the reports of the solicitors-general, mayors and other state and city officials of Georgia on page 5 of this issue. With practical unanimity they tell the story of the cleaning-up process that accompanied the enforcement of the "bone dry" law. Of course the conclusion of the whole matter, as arrived at by the official of one particular circuit, is this: "At least ninety-nine per cent of the people are delighted with the law and would in no wise for a moment tolerate its evasion or change it unless to make it stronger if possible."

THE OVERBURDENED RAILROADS

One of the burning questions of the hour, even with the thermometer in the nineties, is the probable price of a ton of coal next November. Mr. Hoover, of food control fame, warns us that "Coal comes from a distance and our railways are overburdened hauling war material." "Help relieve them by burning fewer fires," he urges. "Use wood when you can get it." No doubt every patriot will gladly respond to this appeal, but as he economizes during the summer months on hot weather luxuries to save money to buy coal next winter, he cannot refrain from meditating on the glaring inconsistency of the demands being made. He is urged to exercise great care and economy in the use of fuel for the sake of the overburdened railroads while hundreds of carloads of malted and distilled liquors are being hauled every day over the various transportation lines, thus preventing prompt and continuous shipment of coal from the mines to the consumer.

He wonders whether any statistician has estimated how many men, freight cars, drays and horses, how much rolling stock and transportation equipment are at present employed in carrying beer and whisky and other alcoholic liquors from the breweries and distilleries to the consumer, and how much coal or foodstuffs could be handled by this same force of workers and equipment if utilized in the worthy enterprise of supplying the people with coal. We would like an answer from Mr. Hoover and the administration.

W. C. T. U. WORKERS RESPOND ENTHUSIASTICALLY TO CALL TO PATRIOTIC SERVICE

The Patriotic Service plans recently issued by the General Officers of the National W. C. T. U. have met with an enthusiastic response from white ribbonors north, south, east and west. "The best thing the National has put out" is the way one state president characterizes them. An attempt to review even briefly the work being done under the ten sections outlined in the plans would be impossible. Reference can only be made to some of the especially significant activities which have been reported to us.

1. Nation-wide Prohibition as a War Measure. Petitions in the form of brief letters appealing for the passage of war prohibition measures are going and will continue to go to the members of both Houses of Congress until that body adjourns.

2. Soldiers and Sailors. (a) Comfort bag shops have been established at the four great distributing points for the great naval training stations: San Francisco, Chicago, Providence, R. I., and Baltimore, Md. To these centers the comfort kits made by white ribboners in every state of the Union are being sent by the thousands. In every city, town, village and rural district groups of women gather every week or oftener to make and fill these bags. Assurance of the appreciation of the recipients comes to National Headquarters in many letters from workers. The captain of a New York regiment told his boys to be sure to take good care of their bags whatever else they lost, for in emergency the contents might be the means of saving their lives before other help could be procured. General Pershing is reported to have written from France concerning the bags with which his troops were outfitted: "You cannot know how much these 'surprise' bags signify to an American over here in France carrying the flag of his country. They cause the soldier to remember that the people at home are behind him." "I wouldn't take $100 for the bag given to me in the Spanish-American War," said a Kentucky soldier.

(b) Many recreation homes for the soldiers and sailors when on leave of absence are in contemplation. The home now being maintained by the District of Columbia W. C. T. U. at Washington is proving a real re-creative social center for the boys, where they rest, read, write letters home, counsel with the wise house mother and breathe in the atmosphere of home. "You have made a mistake in the name you put over the door of this place," remarked a visiting soldier the other day to the matron, pointing to the words, "Recreation Rooms." "It should be called instead, 'Soldier's and Sailors' Home, Sweet Home.'" On Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher's recent tour of the military camps and naval stations, she received assurance from many unions in the vicinity that they intended soon to establish rest rooms similar to that in Washington. When the troops mobilize at the sixteen cantonments in the fall the W. C. T. U.'s in communities nearby will take care of the needs of the boys in the same way.

Do not forget that the boys in camp need good reading matter. Send your home boys the home papers. Use the words, "Military Camp," on the address, for example, "Military Camp, Ayer, Mass.," thus insuring prompt delivery, as special arrangements are being made to handle this mail. When you have finished reading your magazines put a one-cent stamp upon them, address them to "A Soldier in France," hand them to any postal employe, and they will be forwarded to the American boys across the water.

(c) The making of the many-tailed bandages continues to be a popular occupation. "No idle fingers" is the slogan this summer among white ribboners and leisure moments are well occupied. In the making of jams, jellies and the canning of fruits and fruit juices the boys who are being called to the front and those in possible need of such delicacies in hospitals are being kept in mind. One generous white ribboner purchased a barrel of sugar and has offered to supply any woman who will promise to use it in making a carton of jelly or jam. Local unions located near bridges, water works, or other places guarded by home guards, are taking upon themselves the responsibility of providing the boys with good, home-cooked meals to lessen the tedium of lonely vigils.

3. Relief Work. (a) Busy as are our women of this country in work for the soldiers they are not unmindful of the continued need of the hungry children of war-stricken Europe. Individuals and unions are adopting French and Belgian orphans, donating or securing from other sources the ten cents a day necessary for their support. One enterprising woman asked of Chase & Sanborn 100 coffee cans with a slit in the top and placed them each labeled in plain black type—"Do your bit. $36.50 will support a French orphan for one year"—in stores, offices, restaurants, etc. The Bluefield (W. Va.) union and the state W. C. T. U. of West Virginia have each adopted a Belgian baby. (b) Continuous neighborhood co-operation with the wives of men who have responded to the call to the colors and who are thereby financially embarrassed is being kept up, and support outside of industries will be secured through the proper agencies for soldiers' wives with young children.

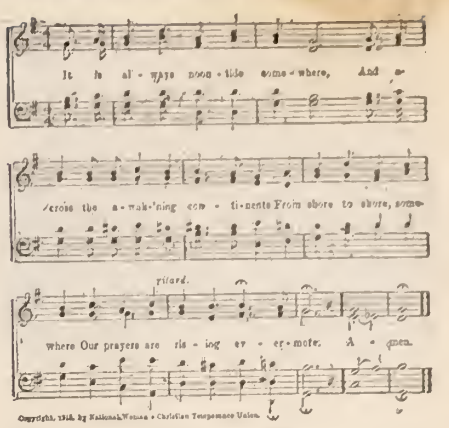
4. Moral Education. Quiet and unostentatious efforts are being put forth in every community for the conservation of the moral forces of our nation at this time. It is realized that the less publicity given to this work the more effective it will be. Appeals are being made to both young women and young men through literature, the spoken word, and the use of the white cross pledge, urging them to maintain the highest standard of purity of thought and life in these trying days. Not only must the boys be protected through co-operation with chaplains, Y. M. C. A.'s and other agencies, but the girls must be warned against hanging about the camps; mothers must be aroused to the peril to their daughters in frequenting these places, and the aid of Protestant pastors, Catholic priests and Jewish rabbis enlisted in helping to safeguard thoughtless girls in their social relations with the soldiers.

5. Women in Industry. Already women are being called upon to take positions vacated by men who have enlisted. It has therefore become the duty of white ribboners to see that these women are employed on fair and just terms; that they are not overworked or overstrained, and that, other women's organizations co-operating, they are properly protected by clean, healthful environment.

The food conservation problem in most sections of the country has now reached its second stage. The call for cultivation of vacant lots met with immediate and generous response. The question today is what to do with the products of these gardens; with the over-supply. The answer is being furnished in definite, practical ways. The women of the cities are offering their services and, in many cases, their automobiles, also, for the harvesting and the distribution of the farm and garden products. They are conducting demonstrations of drying and canning processes; are exhibiting home-made dryers,

(Continued on Page Ten)

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



AT THE NOONTIDE HOUR

At the sacred noontide hour let the white ribboners of the land unite in prayer daily for our country and all other countries, that all may come to see the true Christian and humanitarian point of view in this world crisis; for the protection of "our boys" from the physical and moral deterioration from drink and vice that follow in the wake of war; for our President and his advisers that divine wisdom may rule every decision, that lasting peace may speedily come and the will of the Father of all peoples be done throughout the earth.

THE OLD, OLD SONG OF HOME

The old, old song that echoes
On the far winds of the night—
That sings above the war drums
And the tumult of the fight;
That sweeps across the cities
Where the flags of triumph fly,
And whispers in the twilight
Where the wounded wait to die;
The song of all the millions
Who have held one dream at bay
Of a road beyond To-morrow
That will lead back home some day.

—Grantland Rice

THE GOD OF THE WAYSIDE WEED

Oh, worship the God of the mountains,
And worship the God of the seas,
And the God of the miracle music
Of the wind-swept harps of the trees;
Oh, worship the God of the heavens
Who holdeth the stars as they speed,
But worship, oh, reverently worship
The God of the wayside weed!

Lo, down at your feet in the grasses
God's finger has written His name,
His truth in the gold-hearted daisies,
His joy in the buttercup's flame;
He fragrantly utters His sweetness
In the clover bloom's honey-crammed cells,
And chimeth His name in soft music
On the moneywort's golden bells.

Oh, not for the praise of the mighty
He has written His name plain and low—
For the child-heart, the sad-heart, the weary,
For those who must toil as they go;
Our God of the common places
Is the God of the humblest need,
And the lowest may carry his burden
To the God of the wayside weed.

'Tis easy, 'tis easy to worship
The God of the wayside weed,
For the common way sings of His glory,
The common way speaks to our need;
Out from our glad hearts oft rushes
A hymn of new faith, hope and trust,
'Tis easy, 'tis easy to worship
The God who brings beauty from dust!

—Alice J. Nichols

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

W. C. T. U. WORKERS RESPOND ENTHUSIASTICALLY TO CALL TO PATRIOTIC SERVICE

(Continued from Page Nine)

with which it is said every home should be equipped; are establishing community centers for the sale and distribution of these dried and canned fruits and vegetables; and are giving publicity through the papers to this information that all the women may know how to conserve the food supply for the coming winter. "If every person with a garden would realize that every pound of food he allows to go to waste lessens our future supply just that much, and would make a special effort to distribute every pound of surplus, the united effort would mean a vast increase in our supplies of non-perishables next winter."

6. Americanization. One state leader suggests that every local union make a "vigorous drive for the foreign population of her community to secure them as allies in the great battle for righteousness." Some of the methods for attaining this end are the gathering together of the little people of these overseas families, teaching them to sing patriotic songs; organizing the older boys of musical gifts into a band or orchestra and when trained securing their participation in W. C. T. U. affairs; having a special care for the families of aliens who have enlisted in our Army, or may have joined the armies of the Allies across the seas. "These foreign born women will carry the burden of our industries the next six months," says a well informed social worker. This may be our opportunity to win them for our blessed cause. Let the W. C. T. U. in every city be a melting pot of friendliness and love that shall make these strangers feel that America is their home and that they are a part and parcel of this great land of the free and home of the brave.

7. Co-operation with the United Committee on Temperance Activities in the Army and Navy. The W. C. T. U. is working with seventeen other reform organizations in preparing the soldiers and sailors to meet the temptations of strong drink. Specially prepared stereopticon slides visualizing the menace of liquor drinking, showing how it unfits a man for soldierly duties, the recent utterances of great generals and statesmen, and reproduction of patriotic posters, will be presented in entertainments. Stereomotorgraphs are to be installed in the various military camps and cantonments. New York and New Jersey are raising funds for this purpose. Bulletin boards will be erected for the posting of patriotic posters; a specially prepared soldiers' manual filled with general information of value is to be distributed; and during the fall and winter, inspirational and educational lectures on temperance by men and women of national reputation will be given. An investigation is now in progress to learn the facts concerning the serving of wine and beer rations to our troops in Europe. For the immediate expenses of all this work $100,000 is needed.

8. Finance. Various schemes for raising money to carry on these different departments of work are being worked out by white ribboners. Some find it possible to secure the necessary funds through direct appeal. In this way, by voluntary contributions, the requisite amount for the National W. C. T. U. ambulance to be sent to France is being obtained, the money being sent from the different states to the National W. C. T. U. treasurer. Missouri has divided itself into four sections, each section being assigned special work. Two sections are uniting in raising a fund to supply temperance song books and Testaments for Jefferson Barracks. The Federated unions of St. Louis recently raised a substantial sum for the Ambulance Fund and other funds for the soldiers and sailors, by holding a lawn fete or garden party, at which refreshments were served and a fine patriotic program given, with music by one of the city bands. Others get the desired result through medal contests or concerts; wheatless food sales; community market gardens; war-time dinners; "melting pots" in which all kinds of trinkets, jewelry or salable articles can be placed; allied bazaars; food conservation exchanges of recipes.

9. Community Interest. The summer months afford many opportunities of getting the people of a community together for patriotic service. The Southern California W. C. T. U. invites the women of all other organizations to a public meeting, where their mutual patriotic service interests are discussed, and ideas exchanged. An Americanization picnic, with musical features by different nationalities, affords a fine opportunity to become acquainted with neighbors who speak a different language and to educate them in American ideals.

10. Membership. "When our local unions engage enthusiastically in work for the soldiers and sailors they gain in influence and in membership," reports one state president. Reports from every direction indicate that this is the experience of all local unions. Everybody is vitally interested in patriotic service; it furnishes a point of contact anywhere and everywhere, as every man and woman, boy and girl, has some relative, friend, or acquaintance who is in the Army or the Navy, who is "somewhere in France" or "somewhere in America" getting ready to give his life if need be in defense of the great principles of democracy. One day visitors at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station heard of the comfort bag plan, inquired its promoters, and thus learned of the comfort bag work being carried on by the W. C. T. U. Immediately they called and offered to assist; and through this one line of work, have become interested in our organization. Today is the opportune time to enlist the women of your community in the W. C. T. U.; to invite them to become members; to give them the privilege of having a part in the magnificent enterprises the W. C. T. U. is carrying on; to urge them to join us not only for the period of the war, but to become a permanent part of the great movement to free this nation and every nation on the face of the globe from the liquor traffic.

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do you know the answers to these questions? They may be found in this number of THE UNION SIGNAL.

The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. Tell the effect of prohibition on the labor situation in Seattle.

2. Compare the number of men employed by the liquor traffic for each $1,000,000 invested with the number employed by legitimate industries for an equal capitalization.

3. Explain the economic facts that underlie the harmfulness of the liquor traffic to the cause of labor.

4. Tell something of the experience of Utah with the prohibition law, which went into effect August 1.

5. What does one of the best known American generals say concerning the value of total abstinence to our nation's defenders?

6. What is the almost universal testimony of solicitors-general and mayors of Georgia concerning the benefit of "bone dry" prohibition?

7. How are the various states cooperating in the National W. C. T. U. plans for patriotic service?

8. Tell something of conditions in license Boston as they appeared to the Chicago aldermanic committee which investigated the workings of the Massachusetts model license law.

9. What favorable aspects of the campaign in New Mexico point to victory for prohibition at the November election?

10. What did Senator Sheppard of Texas say in the Senate discussion on National Constitutional Prohibition concerning the liquor traffic as a peril to free institutions?

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO STATE PRESIDENTS

In order that we may conserve time at the National W. C. T. U. Convention and make our meetings a success, we are asking each state president to decide upon the topic she would like to have discussed and state, if she will, whom she would like to have open the discussion. Please inform the secretary, Mrs. Abbie B. Hillerman, Sapulpa, Oklahoma. We shall also be pleased to receive suggestions as to methods by which we may be able to get from our meetings in the shortest space of time the greatest possible good.

MRS. E. L. CALKINS, Chairman
ABBIE B. HILLERMAN, Secretary

MASSACHUSETTS WHITE RIBBONERS HOLD CONFERENCE AT AYER

MRS. ELLA HOOVER THACHER WARMLY WELCOMED

ELIZABETH P. GORDON

To the tune of "Yankee Doodle," the "Tipperary of the American revolution," soldier boys in khaki uniform recently have been marching to Ayer. These twentieth century minute men passed many a historic farm house from which issued in the old colonial days the heroes of Lexington and Bunker Hill. On each side of the well traveled road shaded by lofty elms and friendly maples, stretch broad acres fragrant with new mown hay and waving grains. Corn, potatoes and cabbages in a high state of cultivation and even some house lawns plowed into potato plots indicate that the old Bay State is doing well her part in the production of food to feed the world.

"Break ranks," came an officer's command one hot day as a weary company of recruits on the way to Ayer were passing an attractive house. A devoted W. C. T. U. woman, a returned missionary from Burma, presides with her husband over this country home. The boys joyfully accepted the white ribboner's invitation and trooped into the kitchen not only to drink the pure cold water but also to receive motherly aid for minor aches and pains.

Boston Welcomes Ella Hoover Thacher

Arriving in her own car with a chauffeur who is a Christian boy, a member of her family and a helper in her meetings in Washington, Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, National W. C. T. U. superintendent of the department of Work Among Soldiers and Sailors, was warmly welcomed at W. C. T. U. headquarters by Mrs. Katharine Lent Stevenson, president of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. She was made happily at home in Miss Caroline Borden's residence on Commonwealth avenue—a home which has been much appreciated by prominent educational and philanthropic leaders the world around.

